To many readers of this journal, the devoted Evangelist and his gifted wife, whose portraits appear on this page, are very well known. Not a few of them have had personal communications with them, and Mr. and Mrs. Re Qua have frequently expressed their grateful appreciation of the kind gifts, and hearty encouragements which they have received since they commenced their arduous work from those who have read of it in these columns. To all such and to others who realize the grandeur of consecration and self sacrifice the portraits and illustrations published herewith will be welcome.

Unconverted persons are often puzzled by the lives of Christians, but nothing is so great to them as missionary labor. That any man capable of earning a livelihood in a civilized country, and especially any man with refined tastes and the prospects of gaining distinction, should voluntarily abandon home and friends and civilization and go out into certain hardship and probable danger, simply to preach the gospel to the ignorant and degraded heathen, seems an act of lunacy. Yet hundreds of men and women have gone, and are still going, who are neither lunatics nor fanatics. They are Christians to whom the glorious Gospel of Christ is a grand reality, and they delight in sacrificing themselves, that they may carry it to those who sit in darkness and are perishing for lack of it. They are not deceived as to what they are doing; they know that their work can bring them neither fortune, nor fame, nor worldly advantage of any kind ; but they count all that the world can give as nothing compared with the delight of working for Christ and proclaiming the life-giving message to dying men. "The love of Christ which constraineth" is the key to their lives. It is a motive principle, the power of which the world has never gauged and cannot understand. Its effects produce astonishment, sometimes contempt and ridicule, but it works yet, more mightily than any of those principles to which the world yields respect. It is this principle alone which explains the work to which Mr. and Mrs. Re Qua have consecrated their lives.

Our American Heathen

are as difficult a problem to the Church as they are to the Government. The Indians have suffered so much at the hands of the whites that they have, not unnaturally, conceived a prejudice against the white man's religion, as well as his civilization and his government. The efforts made to evangelize them have been for the greater part unsuccessful and have met with a resistance not so much active as sullen. Yet, where the Indian's heart has been reached, notably in cases where devoted and consecrated ladies have given themselves to the work, the results have been such as to assure us of the hopefulness of more extended effort. A solemn sense of the responsibility of every individual Christian for the benighted condition of the red men forced itself on Mr. Re Qua during his residence in Illinois, as it has on many Christian men in other States, and it grew at length so intolerable, that, cost what it would, he determined to give himself to the work of missionary labors among them. He believed that by going into their midst and living among them he could reach their hearts, and trusting in God alone for sustenance, he went, and is now laboring at his post. Such men are rare, for an undertaking of that kind needs courage and endurance and faith of the apostolic type. It will therefore be interesting to learn what manner of man he is.

W. F. Re Qua was born thirty-one years ago at Whitewater, Wis., where at that time his father, Rev. J. D. Re Qua, was stationed as minister, of the Methodist Episcopal Church. While an infant only seven months old he was deprived of a mother's care. She went to her grave in the first blush of motherhood, the prey of consumption. Kind relatives did what they could to supply her place to the helpless babe, for about two years, when his father married a second time. The stepmother, a pious and amiable lady, then undertook the care of him, and for six years most conscientiously and affectionately watched over his development. But again, this time at the age of nine years, he was bereaved; his stepmother fell asleep in Jesus, leaving the child without maternal care.

occurred in 1873, when he was seventeen years of age. With the ardor that has characterized his subsequent life he immediately looked around for Christian employment. His energy and devotedness were noticed by his own and his father's friends, and he was urged to give himself entirely to the Lord's work. It was some time before he could attain the assurance that he was called to the ministry; but the success which followed his labors, and the fact that God was making use of such efforts as his occupation permitted him to enter upon, for the salvation of souls, convinced him that it was his duty to give himself wholly to the work of preaching the gospel. He therefore entered on a course of preparatory study at Lima, N. Y. During his studies there he was led to unite himself with the Baptist denomination, and at the end of his course he entered the Baptist Theological Seminary at Rochester N. Y.

His First Charge

was at Pavilion N. Y., though prior to that, during his theological studies he had eagerly accepted numerous opportunities for preaching, and had been encouraged by many tokens of the Divine blessing. At Pavilion he labored earnestly, and with a success so marked that invitations to larger spheres were pressed upon him. Finally he was led to accept an invitation from Aurora Ill., to become pastor of the large and influential Park Place Baptist Church in that town. It was while laboring there, in a position which might well gratify the ambition of so young a man, that the call to missionary work among the Indians was manifest to him. It was not in Mr. Re Qua's nature to act the part of Jonah and close his ears to the call. Nevertheless, it must have required an effort to obey it. Rigid self-examination, a conscientious endeavor to discover the path of duty, and much earnest prayer for guidance brought him to decision, and he resigned his pastorate. His church at first refused to accept his resignation, but after a period of reconsideration Mr. Re Qua still believed that he was called to the Indian work, and the church accordingly submitted to his decision. A farewell meeting was held, in which the community outside the church joined in expressing esteem for him and recognition of his services. From Aurora he went direct to the Indian Territory where he has since then devoted himself indefatigably to his new duties.

MRS. W. F. RE QUA.

SOME three years ago a notice of a volume of poems in this journal attracted the attention of its readers to this gifted lady. Their singular grace and purity of diction, combined with their high spirituality, rendered the selections published, as we happen to know, very precious to some suffering Christians, and those who purchased the volume were still further benefited by its pages. To them the name of Harriet Warner Re Qua has a music all its own, and the fact that she has voluntarily gone into exile with her husband, to cheer and aid him in his work, braving the terrors of the inhospitable climate and enduring the hardships of frontier life, will enhance the high estimate previously formed of her character.

Mrs. Re Qua is a direct descendant of Elder John Leland, a famous Baptist preacher, originally of Vermont. For many generations back on both sides were noted for their piety and their liberal support of Christian work. Her maternal grandfather especially, was known for the munificence with which he contributed to the cause of Christ. Any weak church, needing an edifice for worship, or struggling under a burden of debt, or unable to give its minister the remuneration of which he was worthy, found a friend in the good old man, who seemed to hold his property as a trust which he must administer for the public good.

In her girlhood Mrs. Re Qua attracted the notice of friends and teachers by her extraordinary talents. At the age of only nine years, verses of remarkable ability seemed to flow from her pen almost without effort, and she ornamented the dwelling of her parents and those of her friends with drawings and paintings which would have done credit to an artist of riper years.

of her talents and her whole being to Christ, came to her in early life. She was only thirteen years of age when the vanity of all wordly pursuits was revealed to her, and she gave herself and her future into the hands of Christ, to use them for His glory. She united with the church, and devoted herself, as she had opportunity, to Christian work. With a disposition naturally modest and retiring, she united a peculiar sensitiveness to the voice of duty, which, to her, was the voice of God. Many times. in the course of her early Christian life, she occupied positions from which she would have shrunk had she listened to the dictates of natural feeling, but in each case she received such intimations of her call, that when the opportunity came, she would have deemed herself recreant to her duty had she neglected it.

One of the most remarkable of these came after her marriage. As she sat alone one evening meditating on the Word of God, a passage of Scripture was impressed upon her with peculiar distinctness. As she dwelt upon it, it appeared to open before her into a wide vista of teaching. She had never heard it used as a text, but it seemed to teem with spiritual lessons of deep and practical power. Almost unconsciously she arranged them in their several lines, and a sermon was formed in her mind. No idea of ever preaching that or any other sermon crossed her thought, but there the sermon was, as clearly defined as any clergyman might have it on entering his pulpit on a Sunday morning. She was aroused from her meditation by the arrival of her husband from a pastoral excursion. A singular fact was, that he was the bearer of an urgent request from a distant village, that she would deliver an evangelistic address there at an approaching meeting. "The preparations of the heart in man and the answer of the tongue is from the Lord," and Mrs. Re Qua could not but realize the fact, and wonder at the mysterious way in which it had been brought about in her case. It may be added that the delivery of the sermon was much blessed of God.

From that time forward Mrs. Re Qua was a valued and active fellow-laborer of her husband in his work, and God signally owned and blessed her efforts. When he felt himself called to the work among the Indians, she placed no obstacles in his way. If God had called him to hardship and self-sacrifice, she was ready to stand right loyally by his side and give him her sympathy and wifely support. It was in this spirit that she gave up the comforts, so dear to a refined and educated lady, and went out to make her home in a rough log cabin, through which wind and snow found ready access, but which by the spirit of consecration became more noble than a palace.

The following poem, written in the early days of the family settlement in the Indian Territory, shows the spirit in which she entered on her labor:

UNDER THE CLOUD;

Under the clouds to-day,
Blinded by mists of sin,
Too dense the vapors to let one ray
Of God's pure sunlight in;
Playing with pebbles and toys,
Gathering flowers by the way
Frail as the gossamer wreaths of frost
On the smiling brow of May:
Clinging to all with a fervent clasp,
The trail heart's surest stay,
Reeds that will shatter within grasp;
They will see it all some day,
Some day—
God grant that the light be not shut out
Till the fearful judgment day!

Sowing and watering tares,
Tending them day by day,
Burdened and saddened with cumbering cares
It were nobler to fling away.
Broidering garlands of flowers,
Roses and lilies fair,
Meet for the shrine in pleasure's bowers,
With folly to bind them there.
Beautiful—ah! but the fearful cost
The gems that are flung away,
And the mortgaged soul that may soon be lost,
They will see it all some day,
Some day—
God grant that the light be not shut out
Till the fearful judgment day.

Adorning with purple and gold
Forms that will sleep at last
At the feet of the earth-worm, enshrined with mold, Thro' the march of centuries vast,
Gathering up chaff, as they go
To the Bar, with steadiest care,
As if—God have mercy!—they did not know.
The Judge of the earth was there,
Gathering up chaff and dropping the sheaves:
Bartering gold for clay;
For diamonds of truth choosing worthless leaves—
They will see it all some day,
Some day—
God grant that the light be not shut out
Till the fearful judgment day!

WORK IN THE INDIAN TERRITORY.

It has been with the utmost difficulty that information has been obtained from Mr. and Mrs. Re Qua as to their position and work in the Indian Territory. They believe that as they are working for God there, He will see that they do not lack support. From others, however, among them the Rev. Frances E. Townsley, pastor of the Fairfield Baptist Church, Nebraska, and M. Soniser, a teacher among the Choctaws, some graphic reports have been received. From Miss Townsley we learn that both Mr. and Mrs. Re Qua are fully occupied in the work they set out to do. Mrs. Re Qua visits in the Indian homes (see Illustration), teaches the children, counsels the mothers, who are eager to receive her help, and are deeply grateful to the white lady who will come into their home and talk to them of Jesus. Mr. Re Qua goes from place to place, occasionally getting a ride in a wagon, but generally doing his journeys of ten or twelve miles on foot. In the summer he preaches in the open air, under a covering of branches, while the Indians come from all quarters in their wagons to attend his service (see Illustration). Mr. Soniser is eloquent about the impression produced by the work on the Indians. They have grown, he says, to love the missionary and his wife, who have not clung to the line of railroad, but have come right into their midst to live, and are evidently poorer than themselves. They do not seem to regret the elegancies and comforts of their Illinois home, though now their only home is a poor cabin twelve feet by fourteen, by no means weatherproof.

A Work of Faith.

is the accurate definition of their labor. No society supports the missionaries; they look to God alone for support, and to Him alone their wants are made known. It is easy to see, however, that the hardships they bear so cheerfully are of no light character. It was very touching to read, a week or two ago, of their joy of receiving, from a kindly reader of this journal, a barrel of clothing, and reading between the lines, to infer that, but for its arrival, the winter would have found them poorly protected from its rigor. There is no need to make any appeal on their behalf. God, who knows their trials and their needs, and who has provided for them hitherto, is still able to supply all their wants. He has stewards in every city of this broad land, who count it an honor and a privilege to minister to the wants of His servants. "Whosoever," said the Master, "shall give you a cup of water to drink, in My name, because ye belong to Christ, verily I say unto you, he shall not lose his reward" (Mark 9: 41). Mr. and Mrs. Re Qua are safe in His hands, for of the many who love Him, and who delight to do His will, there are some who will take care that the self-denying work to which they have given themselves, does not fail for lack of funds. Our readers may be fully assured that any offering they may be able and willing to make, will be thankfully received by Rev. W. F. Re Qua, McAllister, Ind. Ter.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

Drifting Down the Stream—The Rev. Mr. Graham said at a convention in Glasgow: "There is an old saying I used to hear in my youth—'There is no standing still in Zion,' and I think there is a great deal of truth in it. We are either going forward or falling back. I have seen a man rowing up a stream where there was a strong current. If he stopped rowing, or even slackened his speed, see what happened! He drifted slowly but surely down the stream. So it is in the Christian life. There is no standing still. Let a Christian who has been striving after God cease to strive or slacken his effort, and soon, like the man in the strong current, he is drifting down to untold dangers.

On Speaking Terms with Jesus—Mr. Gardiner relates: "A young Christian woman, while talking to her neighbor one day, earnestly asked her, 'Do you know Jesus?' 'Oh, yes!' was the reply. 'But do you know Him to speak to?' persisted the questioner. 'Well, no; not exactly.' Then the missionary let her see that it was not knowing Christ at all, unless she knew Him personally, as a Saviour and a Friend to whom she could go and speak, to whom she could tell her troubles and ask for advice. Too many people, unfortunately, are content with knowing Christ distantly, as the Saviour of the world; but as the ever present God, the helpful Friend they have never known Him."

Giving Up for Christ—The Rev. Mr. Figgis observed: "Sometimes when one is asked to give up all for Christ, it means the giving up of a pursuit or pleasure which is then life's happiness. Three or four years ago it fell to my lot to be the instrument in God's hands to point out to a Christian brother that such a sacrifice was necessary. But two or three weeks ago I met that same person again, and he was praising God and counting it all as gain, and rejoicing that he had been allowed to give up something for Christ. The Lord must have a full surrender if we are to consecrate ourselves to Him. In return, He gives us all that He has. He gives Himself. Where is the comparison? And with what fulness of joy and sweet contentment He fills us."

Conquering a Fit of Shivering—The Rev. Mr. Haslam related: "Years ago a friend came up to me, and, placing his hand upon my shoulder said, 'Are you willing to give up all to God, no matter what it be?' At this unexpected question quite a shiver and a trembling went through me. 'Ah,' he said, 'I see you are not prepared to do this; I am sorry I put the question; and he at once changed the subject. After he had left, I said, half-aloud, 'Lord, I am sure I can trust Thee. Why did I not say 'Yes?' I went to my own room, and there I gave myself up unreservedly to the Lord, but while I did so, again that shiver and trembling passed through me, but I knew it was only the old nature fighting against the Spirit, and I came off conqueror. After this I was very happy, and why should I not be? I was one of God's own children, and no one else has any right to be happy. Next day, I said, 'Lord, I am going out to walk, and if it is Thy will I should like to meet that friend to-day again, and I should like him to ask me the same question!' I went out and walked for an hour, and did not meet him, and was just about to enter my home when he came up to me. I do not know whether it was my countenance that was changed, or what it was, but he stepped up to me, and again placing his hand upon my shoulder, he said, 'Are you willing to give up all to the Lord, no matter what it be?' 'Yes,' I said, 'and thank Him, too.'"

The Fire that Falls from Heaven—Mr. Figgis said: "Never shall I forget a servant of the Lord, a most devoted Christian, who had been used of God in many countries, and, among others, had pointed an anxious Lord Chancellor to Christ. He came to our town of Brighton, and gathering the ministers together he said to them, 'I know that many of you are very careful about your ministry and very careful about your orthodoxy. But has the fire of God fallen upon you as it fell upon the sacrifices of Abel and Elijah, showing they were accepted by the Lord. Has the fire fallen upon you? If it has not, let us first look if we have prepared the sacrifice and put ourselves upon the altar, for until we have offered the sacrifice God cannot accept it.' It is through such people, dead to themselves but living in Christ, that God does His noblest and greatest work."

A Rash Captain's Folly.—Mr. Forbes Remarks: "During a great storm at Aberdeen a steamer was trying to make the harbor, across the mouth of which there extended a high bar. The tide was low, and although the waves were large there was very little water on the bar. When the steamer was sighted, the pilots at once put out, warning the captain to put back; but he was determined to enter the harbor that night. And on he drove the ship. On and on she came buried in foam, until she had almost reached the breakwater. On her deck could be seen the forms of the passengers and crew as they pleaded with the captain to put back. But he was obstinate; on he drove to destruction. The vessel grounded on the bar and was dashed to pieces, and scarcely one of the whole shipfull was saved. That captain, by his mad folly, destroyed not only himself, but also those who sailed with him. Many thus go headlong to spiritual destruction, and find out only when it is too late, that those were right who warned them of the danger ahead; let those persons who make light of the warnings of Christian men take heed before it is too late."

A Frozen Sparrow Revived.—Mr. Haslam also: said "A few years ago we had a very severe winter; everything seemed to be bitten by the severity of the frost, and, in many cases, the birds were frozen to death. One day, while passing along the road that leads to my home, I saw a little bird lying on the frozen ground. 'Ah,' I exclaimed, 'there is another of these poor little creatures fallen a victim to the cold,' and, as I stooped to lift it, it had just strength enough left to flutter into a hedge close by. I put out my hand and lifted the little creature, and it lay quite still, as if dead. But I kept breathing upon it until I was rewarded by a slight flutter in my hand. Still I breathed my warm breath upon it until vitality was quite restored, and I thought how glad the children would be, and how we should keep it warm, and how I should love and cherish the tiny creature until the cold weather was over, and it would sing to me a glad, happy song in return. But as life came back, it struggled to get free, but I held it firm, for I knew what was best for it. Still it continued to struggle, until, at last, it flew out of my reach. Foolish little bird, to free itself from one who wanted to cherish it, and to go away to be frozen to death in the next blizzard. That is just what God wants to do with you, whose spiritual life is almost frozen to death. He longs to have you in the hollow of His hand, where no harm can come near you."

THE COMING GLORY.

Dr. Talmage's Sermon Preached Last Sunday Morning, January 1, 1888.

"Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love Him." 1 Cor. 2 : 9.

1888. How strange it looks, and how strange it sounds! Not only is the past year dead, but the century is dying. Only twelve more long breaths and the old giant will have expired. None of the past centuries will be present at the obsequies. Only the twentieth century will see the nineteenth buried. As all past, and all our lives on earth will soon be ended, I propose to cheer myself, and cheer you, with the glories to come, which shall utterly eclipse all the glories past; for my text tells us that eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, anything like the advancing splendors.

The city of Corinth has been called the Paris of antiquity. Indeed, for splendor the world holds no such wonder to-day. It stood on an isthmus washed by two seas, the one sea bringing the commerce of Europe, the other sea bringing the commerce of Asia. From her wharves, in the construction of which whole kingdoms had been absorbed, war-galleys with three banks of oars pushed out and confounded the navy-yards of all the world. Huge-handed machinery, such as modern invention cannot equal, lifted ships from the sea on one side and transported them on trucks across the isthmus and sat them down in the sea on the other side.

The revenue officers of the city went down through the olive groves that lined the beach to collect a tariff from all nations. The mirth of all people sported in her Isthmian games, and the beauty of all lands sat in her theatres, walked her porticoes, and threw itself on the altar of her stupendous dissipations.

Column and Statue and Temple bewildered the beholder. There were white marble fountains into which, from apertures at the side, there rushed waters everywhere known for health-giving qualities. Around these basins, twisted into wreaths of stone, there were all the beauties of sculpture and architecture; while standing, as if to guard the costly display, was a statue of Hercules of burnished Corinthian brass. Vases of terra-cotta adorned the cemeteries of the dead—vases so costly that Julius Cæsar was not satisfied until he had captured them for Rome. Armed officials, the Corintharii, paced up and down to see that no statue was defaced, no pedestal overthrown, no bas-relief touched. From the edge of the city a hill arose, with of columns, towers and temples (one thousand slaves waiting at one shrine), and a citadel so thoroughly impregnable that Gibraltar is a heap of sand compared with it. Amid all that strength and magnificence Corinth stood and defied the world.

Oh! it was not to rustics, who had never seen anything grand, that Paul uttered this text. They had heard the best music that had come from the best instruments in all the world; they had heard songs floating from morning porticoes and melting in evening groves; they had passed their whole lives among pictures and sculpture and architecture and Corinthian brass, which had been molded and shaped until there was no chariot wheel in which it had not sped, and no tower in which it had not glittered, and no gateway that it had not adorned. Ah, it was for Paul to stand there amid all that, and say: "All this is nothing. These sounds that come from the temple of Neptune are not music compared with the harmonies of which I speak. These waters rushing in the basin of Pyrene are not pure. These statues of Bacchus and Mercury are not exquisite. Your citadel of Acrocorinthus is not strong compared with that which I offer to the poorest slave that puts down his burden at that brazen gate. You Corinthians think this is a splendid city; you think you have heard all sweet sounds, and seen all beautiful sights; but I tell you eye hath not seen nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man the things which God hath prepared for them that love Him."

You see my text sets forth the idea that, however exalted our ideas of Heaven, they come far

Short of the Reality

Some wise men have been calculating how many furlongs long and wide is the new Jerusalem; and they have calculated how many inhabitants there are on the earth; how long the earth will probably stand; and then they come to this estimate: that after all the nations have been gathered to Heaven, there will be room for each soul—a room sixteen feet long and fifteen feet wide. It would not be large enough for me. I am glad to know that no human estimate is sufficient to take the dimensions. "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard," nor arithmetics calculated.

I first remark that we can get no idea of

The Health of Heaven.

When you were a child, and you went out in the morning, how you bounded along the road or street—you had never felt sorrow or sickness. Perhaps later you felt a glow in your cheek, and a spring in your step, and an exuberance of spirits, and a clearness of eye, that made you thank God you were permitted to live. The nerves were harp-strings, and the sunlight was a doxology, and the rustling leaves were the rustling of the robes of a great crowd rising up to praise the Lord. You thought that you knew what it was to be well, but there is no perfect health on earth. The diseases of past generations came down to us. The airs that float now upon the earth are not like those which floated above Paradise. They are charged with impurities and distempers. The most elastic and robust health of earth, compared with that which those experience before whom the gates have been opened, is nothing but sickness and emaciation. Look at that soul standing before the throne. On earth she was

A Life-long Invalid.

See her step now, and hear her voice now. Catch, if you can, one breath of that celestial air. Health in all the pulses—health of vision; health of spirits; immortal health. No racking cough, no sharp pleurisies, no consuming fevers, no exhausting pains, no hospitals of wounded men. Health swinging in the air; health flowing in all the streams; health blooming on the banks. No headaches, no sideaches, no backaches. That child that died in the agonies of croup, hear her voice now ringing in the anthem! That old man that went bowed down with the infirmities of age, see him walk now with the step of an immortal athlete—forever young again! That night when the needle-woman fainted away in the garret, a wave of the heavenly air resuscitated her forever. For everlasting years to have neither ache nor pain nor weakness nor fatigue. "Eye hath not seen it, ear hath not heard it."

I remark, further, that we can, in this world, get no just idea of

The Splendors of Heaven.

John tries to describe them. He says "the twelve gates are twelve pearls," and that "the foundations of the wall are garnished with all manner of precious stones." As we stand looking through the telescope of St. John, we see ablaze of amethyst and pearl and emerald and sardonyx and chrysoprasus and sapphire, a mountain of light, a cataract of color, a sea of glass, and a city like the sun.

John bids us look again, and we see thrones, thrones of the prophets, thrones of the patriarchs, thrones of the angels, thrones of the apostles, thrones of the martyrs, throne of Jesus—throne of God. And we turn round to see the glory, and it is thrones! thrones! thrones!

John bids us look again, and we see the great procession of the redeemed passing; Jesus, on a white horse, leads the march, and all following on white horses. Infinite cavalcade passing, passing; empires pressing into line, ages following ages. Dispensation tramping on after dispensation. Glory in the track of glory. Europe, Asia, Africa, North and South America, pressing into lines. Islands of the seas shoulder to shoulder. Generations before the flood following generations after the flood, and as Jesus rises at the head of that great host, and waves His sword in signal of victory, all crowns are lifted, and all ensigns slung out, and all chimes rung, and all hallelujahs chanted, and some cry, "Glory to God most high!" and some, "Hosanna to the son of David!" and some, "Worthy is the Lamb that was slain"—till all exclamations of endearment and homage in the vocabulary of heaven are exhausted, and there comes up surge after surge of "Amen! Amen! and Amen!"

"Eye hath not seen it, ear hath not heard it." Skim from the summer waters the brightest sparkles, and you will get no idea of the sheen of the everlasting sea. Pile up the splendors of earthly cities, and they would not make a stepping-stone by which you might mount to the city of God. Every house is a palace. Every step is a triumph. Every covering of the head a coronation. Every meal is a banquet. Every stroke from the tower is a wedding-bell. Every day is a jubilee, every hour a rapture, and every moment an ecstacy. "Eye hath not seen it, ear hath not heard it."

I remark further, we can get no idea of

The Re-unions of Heaven.

If you have ever been across the seas and met a friend, or even an acquaintance, in some strange city, you remember how your blood thrilled, and how glad you were to see him. What will be our joy, after we have passed the seas of death, to meet in the bright city of the sun those from whom we have long been separated. After we have been away from our friends ten or fifteen years, and we come upon them, we see how differently they look. Their hair has turned, and wrinkles have come in their faces, and we say, "How you have changed!" But oh, when we stand before the throne, all cares gone from the face, all marks of sorrow disappeared, and feeling the joy of that blessed land, methinks we will say to each other, with an exultation we cannot now imagine, "How you have changed!"

In this world we only meet to part. It is good-by, good-by. Farewells floating in the air. We hear it at the rail-car window, and at the steamboat wharf—good-by. Children lisp it, and old age answers it. Sometimes we say it in a light way—"good-by," and sometimes with anguish in which the soul breaks down. Good-by! Ah! that is the word that ends the thanksgiving banquet; that is the word that comes in to close the Christmas chant. Good-by, good-by. But not so in heaven. Welcomes in the air, welcomes at the gates, welcomes at the house of many mansions—but

No Good-by.

That group is constantly being augmented. They are going up from our circles of earth to join it—little voices to join the anthem—little hands to take hold in the great home-circle—little feet to dance in the eternal glee—little crowns to be cast down before the feet of Jesus. Our friends are in two groups—a group this side of the river, and a group on the other side of the river. Now there goes one from this to that, and another from this to that, and soon we will all be gone over. How many of your loved ones have already entered upon that blessed place? If I should take paper and pencil, do you think I could put them all down? Ah, my friends, the waves of Jordan roar so hoarsely we cannot hear the joy on the other side when that group is augmented.

A little child's mother had died, and they comforted her. They said, "Your mother has gone to heaven, don't cry;" and the next day they went to the graveyard, and they laid the body of the mother down into the ground; and the little girl came up to the verge of the grave, and, looking at the body of her mother, said:

"Is This Heaven?"

Oh! we have no idea what heaven is. It is the grave here—it is darkness here—but there is merry-making yonder. Methinks when a soul arrives, some angel takes it around to show it the wonders of that blessed place. The usher-angel says to the newly arrived, "These are the martyrs that perished at Piedmont; these were torn to pieces at the Inquisition; this is the throne of the great Jehovah; this is Jesus." "I am going to see Jesus," said a dying boy; "I am going to see Jesus." The missionary said, "You are sure you will see Him?" "Oh, yes; that's what I want to go to heaven for." "But," said the missionary, "suppose Jesus should go away from heaven—what then?" "I should follow Him," said the dying boy. "But if Jesus went down to hell—what then?" The dying boy thought for a moment, and then said, "Where Jesus is there can be no hell!" Oh, to stand in His presence! That will be heaven! Oh, to put our hand in that Hand which was wounded for us on the Cross—to go around amid the groups of the redeemed, and shake hands with the prophets and apostles and martyrs, and with our own dear, beloved ones! That will be the great re-union: we cannot imagine it now!

Our Loved Ones

seem so far away. When we are in trouble and lonesome, they don't seem to come to us. We go on to the banks of the Jordan and call across to them, but they don't seem to hear. We say, "Is it well with the child? is it well with the loved ones?" and we listen to hear if any voice come back over the waters. None! none! Unbelief says, "They are dead, and they are annihilated," but, blessed be God! we have a Bible that tells us different. We open it and we find they are neither dead nor annihilated—that they never were so much alive as now—that they are only waiting for our coming, and that we shall join them on the other side of the river. Oh, glorous re-union, we cannot grasp it now! "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love Him." Oh, what it will be! I see, every day, profound mysteries of providence. There is no question we ask oftener than Why? There are hundreds of graves in Greenwood and Laurel Hill that need to be explained. Hospitals for the blind and lame, asylums for the idiotic and insane, alms-houses for the destitute, and a world of pain and misfortune that demand more than human solution. Ah! God will clear it all up. In the light that pours from the throne, no dark mystery can live. Things now utterly inscrutable will be illumined as plainly as though the answer were written on the jasper wall, or sounded in the temple anthem. Bartimeus will thank God that he was blind; and Joseph that he was cast into the pit; and Daniel that he denned with the lions; and Paul that he was hump-backed; and David that he was driven from Jerusalem; and that invalid, that for twenty years he could not lift his head from the pillow; and that widow, that she had such hard work to earn bread for her children.

The Song

will be all the grander for earth's weeping eyes and aching heads and exhausted hands and scourged backs and martyred agonies. But we can get no idea of that anthem here. We appreciate the power of secular music, but do we appreciate the power of sacred song? There is nothing more inspiriting to me than a whole congregation lifted on the wave of holy melody. When we sing some of those and tunes, they rouse all the memories of the past. Why, some of them were cradle songs in our father's house! They are all sparkling with the morning dew of a thousand Christian Sabbaths. They were sung by brothers and sisters gone now—by voices that were aged and broken in the music—voices none the less sweet because they did tremble and break.

When I hear these old songs sung, it seems as if all the old country meeting homes joined in the chorus, and city church and sailor's Bethel and Western cabins, until the whole continent lifts the Doxology, and the sceptres of eternity beat time in the music. Away then with your starveling tunes that chill the devotions of the sanctuary, and make the people sit silent when Jesus is marching on to victory. When generals come back from victorious wars, don't we cheer them and shout, "Huzza, huzza"? and when Jesus passes along in the conquest of the earth, shall we not have for Him one loud, ringing cheer?

"All hail the power of Jesus' name!
Let angels prostrate fall,
Bring forth the royal diadem,
And crown Him Lord of all."

But, my friends, if music on earth is so sweet, what will it be in heaven! They all know the tune there. All the best singers of all the ages will join it—choirs of white-robed children, choirs of patriarchs, choirs of apostles. Morning stars clapping their cymbals. Harpers with their harps. Great anthems of God roll on! roll on!—other empires joining the harmony till the thrones are all full, and the nations all saved. Anthem shall touch anthem, chorus join chorus, and all the sweet sounds of earth and heaven be poured into the ear of Christ. David of the harp will be there. Gabriel of the trumpet will be there. Germany, redeemed, will pour its deep, bass voice into the song, and Africa will add to the music with her matchless voices. I wish we could Anticipate that Song.

I wish in our closing hymn to-day we might catch an echo that slips from the gates. Who knows but that when the heavenly door opens to-day to let some soul through, there may come forth the strain of the jubilant voices until we catch it? Oh, that as the song drops down from heaven, it might meet half way a song coming up from earth.

They rise for the Doxology, all the multitude of the blest! Let us rise with them; and so at this hour the joys of the Church on earth and the joys of the Church in heaven will mingle their chalices, and the dark apparel of our morning will seem to whiten into the spotless raiment of the skies. God grant that through the mercy of our Lord Jesus we may all get there!

THE LATE EX-SECRETARY MANNING.

IN our last week's issue the critical condition of Mr. Daniel Manning was reported. The sad intelligence of his death is now recorded. He continued to sink slowly but surely, and on December 24 he died, calmly and peacefully, like a wearied man falling asleep. He was buried at Albany on December 27, the President and his Cabinet, with Governor Hill and a large number of distinguished men attending, as a mark of respect for the deceased statesman.

Mr. Manning's career was a typical one. At starting he seemed to have everything against him, and in any other country in the world would have been considered a very fortunate man if he had been able to save enough money out of his weekly earnings to support him in sickness and old age. Here, the genius, industry and perseverance he possessed enabled him to rise, until he held the proud position of second officer in the Cabinet, at the head of the department in which are conducted the vast financial concerns of the nation.

Mr. Manning was born in Albany, N. Y., August 16, 1831. He was therefore in his fifty-seventh year when he died. He was of English, Irish and Dutch extraction. His parents were so poor that they found it necessary to send him to work when he was only eleven years of age. He found employment as office boy in the establishment of the Albany Atlas, where he swept the office, ran errands, and was at the beck and call of every one on the premises. But the boy meant to rise, and he did his work faithfully. His evenings were given to study, and he soon learned to read and set type. In a few years he rose from grade to grade, until he was foreman of the composing room. The paper was merged into the Argus, and then Manning distinguished himself in a new line. He had taught himself short-hand, and obtained a place on the Argus staff of reporters. The same faithful, painstaking character distinguished him there, his reports of the State Senate proceedings being remarkably accurate.

He became, while engaged as a reporter, intimately acquainted with prominent politicians at Albany—an acquaintance which was maintained after he left the reporters' desk and became managing editor of the Argus. In 1873 he assumed sole charge of the Argus, and was elected President of the company, which position he held to within a year or two of his death. When the fight against the Tweed Ring was begun, Mr. Manning identified himself with Samuel J. Tilden, Charles O'Connor, and other anti-Ring Democrats. He became a fast and trusted friend of Mr. Tilden, and was a prominent member of the Democratic State Convention in 1874, at which Mr. Tilden was nominated for Governor. The Albany Argus was unflagging in its advocacy of all the measures of reform which were started and pushed forward by Governor Tilden. Mr. Manning had been a member of the Democratic State Committee since 1876. He was its Secretary in 1879 and 1880, and its Chairman from 1881 to 1883.

On the election of Mr. Cleveland to the Presidency, Mr. Manning, with whom he had been intimately associated in Albany, was made Secretary of the Treasury. He devoted himself to his duties with untiring assiduity, often laboring, long after the clerks had left, far into the night. His health began to suffer; less, however, from overwork than from the bad sanitary condition of the Treasury building, in which most of his hours were passed, and which still exists, in spite of the warnings and complaints sent to Congress on the subject. There he contracted the disease which has proved fatal to him. On March 23, 1886, he swooned in his office, and, from that time on, never recovered his health. He resigned and went to Europe for rest and change of scene, but gained little benefit. He returned on June 12 last, and made an effort to resume business. It was futile, however; he was soon prostrated, and went to his home in Albany to die.

A PARALYTIC HEALED.

THE following testimony, recently given, is published in Thy Healer:* "It is little more than six weeks ago since I heard of Divine Healing. I had been very ill. For the last thirteen years I had never been well, but for the last three or four years I was increasingly ill through weakness of the nerves, and about six weeks ago I had a stroke of paralysis. I went as soon as possible after that to the sea-side, but came back none the better. I heard of Divine Healing. I said it was too good to be true. I went to see a lady, who, they said, had been healed by the Lord. She said it was not absolutely necessary for me to go Bethshan, for I could be healed where I was; but she advised me, notwithstanding, to go. 'You can get your body healed here,' she said, 'but if you want your soul benefited, go to Bethshan. As to your body, just give it to Jesus now.' For many years I had given Him my soul. She said, 'Come, kneel down, and I will pray with you.' I was past praying for myself, and could not. She said, 'Take Him now.' I answered, 'I will try.' 'Never mind trying, but take Him.' I said, 'I will give myself to Him as I go home in the car,' and I did so, and He healed me. And now since I have been to Bethshan it has been heaven upon earth."

A BISHOP AMONG THE CHIPPEWAS.

A VISITATION among the Indians in Minnesota, recently made by Assistant Bishop Gilbert, is described in the Churchman. He seems to be indebted largely to the Indian women for his means of locomotion, and he gives a graphic account of their services. He says: "A number of Indians from Leech Lake accompanied the party in their canoes, going to attend the Indian convocation which had been appointed at Red Lake. Many of the canoes were manned entirely by women. It was quite a sight to see the flotilla emerge suddenly on some lake and swarm over it, the olive-complexioned, dark-eyed women bending to the paddle, their long, black hair bound in two braids falling from their bonnetless heads, the look of eagerness in their eyes, and the sides of the canoes all in motion from the paddles, giving it the appearance, at a little distance, of a vast centipede, swiftly making its way over the waters. When they came to a portage they were as quick as the men to pick the canoe out of the water and, inverting it over the head, to carry it across the portage, though it weighed perhaps eighty pounds. Others came along packing a great load on their backs, and perhaps on top of the highest part of the load a baby clinging, both mother and baby equally at home. When night came camp was made, the men and women lighted their fires a little apart, but when the time came for family prayers before lying down, the men went over to the women's fire, and held a joint service. The Ojibway hymn rang out among the listening woods, and the prayers for pardon, peace and protection ascended toward the clear sky."

A CONFLICT AVERTED.

IN the interior of the great island of New Guinea, are many tribes who have never seen a white man and are wholly uncivilized. Mr. Savage, the well known missionary of New Guinea, reports his meeting with one of these tribes—the Tugeri. They are a predatory, wandering tribe, who approach the coast only when driven by necessity and then for the purpose of plunder. Their coming is greatly dreaded by the more peaceable natives, some of whom have been Christianized. Last year they attacked a village called Saibaia, but were driven off after a fierce conflict. Recently they returned in greater force, meaning to surprise the town, but their approach was discovered by their camp-fires, and the Saibaians armed themselves for defense. Mr. Savage urged the Christians to make signs of peace and to approach the hostile party without arms. The Tugeri received them with a show of friendship, both parties however, fearing treachery. Yet is was not long before they were mingling freely, shaking hands and exchanging presents. They separated without any trouble. Another meeting was urged by the missionary, which again resulted in a friendly conference. But the Tugeri were greatly alarmed at the sight of Mr. Savage, whom they had not seen before. He was feared more than the guns and hatchets of the Saibaians, At first he held out a piece of calico, but no one dared to come near. "After more than a quarter of an hour's coaxing," says Mr. Savage, "one plucked up courage enough to try the experiment of taking a piece of calico. He would come a little way, then stand perfectly still and look in blank bewilderment, as though he would say: 'Shall I, or shall I not?' At last, by several such stages, he came near enough to snatch the piece of calico from my hand, and retreated as fast as his legs would carry him." Before the interview closed the Tugeri all came up to touch the skin of the white man, and anything he asked for was gladly given him.

Subsequently the Tugeri withdrew, making many signs of friendship, and Mr. Savage believes that the way is now open for the carrying of the gospel to another tribe in New Guinea.

NOTES OF THE PROPHETIC CONFERENCE AT ADELAIDE, AUSTRALIA.

Pastor H. Hussy spoke of the reasons for holding Second Advent Conferences. He said that it was unnecessary to give special prominence to this subject in the days of the Apostles, as it then occupied a leading position in all their teaching. Since then it had been sadly neglected, and by many professing Christians entirely rejected. We mourned over the corruptions that had crept into Christianity, as predicted by Christ and His Apostles, but rejoiced in the fact that the Lord Jesus was coming again, according to His promise, and coming to restore all things. We therefore not only loved the Lord, but loved His appearing, and felt it to be for our spiritual welfare to speak to one another about this great and glorious event. We met to strengthen and confirm each other's faith in the promise of the Lord's return, which was very necessary, as we were frequently brought into contact with those who treated the subject with indifference, if not contempt.

Another object we had in view in these conferences was to endeavor to remove any difficulties out of the way of those who sincerely desired to accept this truth, that they might rejoice with us in the glorious prospect that it opened up.

The subject introduced by Pastor Finlayson was, "The Cleansing of the Blood of Christ, and the Purifying Effect on the Hearts of Believers of the Hope of His Appearing." As God is a pure and holy God, freedom from sin is absolutely necessary in order to communion with Him; and as He can only take delight in His people when they are pure, He has made provision for this state of purification as well as cleansing.

Among the special effects produced by the "blessed hope" might be mentioned preparedness for service or for the Lord's Coming, which was widely different from preparedness for death. Again, the affections were purified by looking for the coming of the Lord Jesus, as they could not be by any other means. It then became not so much a question of what the world thinks of those who are looking for Christ's coming as what the Lord thinks of them. This "blessed hope" purifies Christians from the world, and separates them from it, so that they occupy a Nazarite position.

Pastor T. A. Fieldwick, gave an eloquent address on "Christ as Prophet, Priest and King." In dealing with the first part of his subject, he said that Christ is the author and subject of prophecy, and foretold His own death and resurrection, the destruction of Jerusalem, and other events. Secondly, Christ as a Priest is partly earthly, and is partly heavenly. He had to offer a sacrifice, and He offered Himself; and having finished the earthly part of His office He has, as our great High Priest, gone to appear in heaven for us.

Thirdly, as to the distinctive kingly office of Christ. He will make and administer the laws of His Kingdom, and these must be promptly and implicitly obeyed. Some have an idea that Christ is reigning as King now, but instead of such being the case, Satan is represented in Scripture as being the Prince of this world. Satan offered Christ the kingdoms of this world on certain conditions, but He would not accept them on the terms mentioned. He said: "My Kingdom is not of this world (or age)." He is gone to receive His Kingdom from His Father, and will return by-and-bye to take possession of it. Christ is never said to be King over His Church, which is to be united to Him and associated with Him in His Kingdom.

Christians are now being prepared, by the discipline they are passing through, to be with Christ, the governing body, during His Millennial reign. According to God's gracious promise we are constituted kings, but the kingdom, like the Church, is at present a mystery, which will not be revealed and established till the revelation of Christ from heaven. Christ is now waiting at His Father's side till He comes with His Bride, the Church, to set up His Kingdom; and that glorious event will be the Jubilee of Israel and of the world, as set forth in the ninety-eighth, ninety-ninth, one-hundredth and other prophetic Psalms.

Pastor A. E. Green gave a stirring address on "Our Lord's second coming a motive to earnest and Evangelistic effort;" and in introducing the subject, he said it is frequently asserted that believers in the Second Advent of Christ are not practical soul-winners. If this could be substantiated it would be a very serious charge, but while this might be true in a few instances, he considered the reverse was the case generally. To Israel of old was entrusted the important work of manifesting God to the world; but Israel, by rejecting Christ, had lost that position, and this task was now given to the Church. The Church is warned in Rom. 7 of the danger of neglecting her duty in testifying of Christ, and she has to bear witness both to the first and second coming of the Lord Jesus. The commission given to the Church was to "preach the Gospel to every creature," for the gathering of the Church out of the world; and Christ will not come again until the Bride is complete. He may come at any moment, and we must therefore strive to win souls by evangelistic effort to hasten His appearing. Our part in the first resurrection depends upon our testimony, as set forth in the parable of the ten virgins, five of whom had their lights burning, and were witnessing, in order to save. Our reward and position in the Millennium depends upon our faithfulness, as taught by the Apostle Paul in II Tim. 4: 1–8; I Cor. 3. 8, 14, 15; and I Thess. 2: 19. The apostles used the truth of Christ's second coming as a motive to zeal and earnestness in the work of evangelization, and believed that their reward depended upon the faithful discharge of their duty in this particular. The first preachers of the Gospel were firm believers in the return of their Lord according to His promise, and the most successful evangelists of the present day, such as Moody, Hudson Taylor, Pentecost, Muller, Guinness and Varley were all thorough and ardent premillennarians.

Pastor F. Boyling concluded with an interesting and very practical address on "The reason for the Lord's delay as stated by the Apostle Peter." The speaker quoted from the Apostle's Second Epistle (3:9), in which it is said that God is long-suffering, "not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance." The Lord, he said, is swift to save, but slow to punish, and as instances of God's long-suffering and readiness to pardon the penitent he mentioned the preaching of Noah to the antediluvians and Jonah to the Ninevites. God's long-suffering is peculiar to Himself, and has never been ascribed to the heathen deities. In certain cases afflictions are used by God as a means of saving some; and as a striking proof of the Lord's long-suffering, Christ is now tarrying at the right hand of God that sinners may be saved and that all may come to repentance. Christ has waited long, but it is quite certain that He will not wait for ever.

The Conference was a successful one, both as regards the number that attended, and the addresses that were delivered. The portions of Scripture read, and the hymns that were sung, had a direct bearing upon the subject of the Lord's Advent; and probably the only regret, if any, was that such gatherings did not take place oftener.

JESUS WALKING ON THE SEA.

By Mrs. M. Baxter.

ALTHOUGH the time of quiet which Jesus had proposed for His disciples and Himself had been so quickly interrupted, yet He had not forgotten it; and, having provided for the multitude, "He constrained His disciples to get into a ship, and to go before Him unto the other side, while He sent the multitudes away." How came it that the multitudes could be prevailed on to depart, when, but a day or two before, they had followed Him on foot out of the cities? In the first instance, Jesus recognized His Father's will in the interruption, and submitted to it with joy. The people had needs which He was to satisfy. The whole multitude now knew Him as the Healer of the sick, and as the Great Provider, and they went away satisfied. Only God can judge when it is best for an evangelist to leave a place where a blessed work of God is going on. When He sends the multitudes away, they do not go away empty. When they were gone, Jesus returned to His

with His Father. To Him prayer was not a duty which was to occupy a certain hour of the day; it was His very life, and all He did or said was but the carrying out of the plans received in secret from His Father, the speaking out of the words which He had received from Him. If our work were more the result of our intercourse with God, there would be more done for eternity than there is. O, that we understood more, that every bit of spiritual work which we do is really done by God, and not by us. We really have spiritual gifts, but "all these worketh that one and the self-same Spirit." Let us not conceit ourselves that we are the doers, the workers: God works, and no man or no devil can hinder Him. But He lets us be intelligent, willing, co-operating sympathizing instruments in His hand. If, through our self-sufficiency, we reverse this order, and, in our conceptions, we are the workers, and God is the Helper, no wonder a great deal of the work comes to naught, and has to be undone.

Jesus was still busy with His Father, while the disciples were crossing the lake in their little ship. Jesus Himself had provided for their rest, and yet it seemed as though everything were against it. There was no rest, "for the wind was contrary," and their boat was tossing continually. How understand this? Again and again, when we have received from the Lord's hand a precious time of rest from work, that very time has been filled with sore temptations, family or business trials, or with some attack of sickness, and friends have been ready to say we were doing wrong not to be at work. But friends are not always, not even often, the true interpreters of God's thoughts. He wants us to learn how to take counsel with Him, and to give Him the credit of doing all things well. It is often when the pressure of work is less, that more, not by happy feelings, and a sweet sense of nearness to Him in prayer, but by the tossings of inward or outward trial, and by His deliverance out of it. It was far on in the night; the darkness and the absence of Jesus made the storm seem all the more severe. But right through that darkness His eye of love was upon them, and, towards morning, He "went unto them, walking on the sea." Their first impulse was to look on His presence as an additional trial; they thought He was a spirit, "and they cried out for fear." Things had reached a climax, and He said, "Be of good cheer; it is I, be not afraid." "A word spoken in due season, how good is it." (Prov. 15: 23). This was the word they needed, and yet there was a doubt in their hearts. It was contrary to natural law, and to all their past experience, for a man of solid flesh and blood to walk upon the water; and neither their own sight nor the voice of Jesus, fully convinced them that it was He. O, how often, in times of severe trial, in which all the experience of the past has been against us (for in this special form of trial, temptation or sickness we always have gone under), how impossible it seems that we should ever be raised! But

Where Is Jesus?

God has "set Him at His own right hand in the heavenly places, far above all principality and power and might and dominion, and every name that is named, not only in this [age], but also in that which is to come, and hath put all things in subjection under His feet." If all things are under His feet, and God "hath raised us up together, and made us sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus" (Eph. 1: 20-22; 2: 6), then that which is under His feet is under ours also. All praise be to Him! Perhaps a glimmer of this truth may have flashed into the mind of Peter when he said, "Lord, if it be Thou, bid me come unto Thee, on the water, And He said, Come." Here was sufficient warrant for Peter to venture.

But what a lesson for us! If Jesus is above and superior to it, He is altogether Master of the circumstances which try and toss us; then we have a right to come to Him with all these things under our feet, as they are under His. He reigns, and where He is, there shall also His servant be (John 12: 26). He is greater than the trial; so can we be. God does not want us to be unreal; to call evil good, and good evil. He has never said that sickness, poverty, famine, death, are anything else than evils in themselves. but He wants us to see Him above them, and to hear Him say, "It is I, be not afraid." He would not have us think that the trial comes necessarily from Him. Satan was permitted to afflict Job, but he could do only just what God permitted, and no more. God wants us to see that wherever the trial comes from, He is at hand, close by, to deliver.

Peter came down out of the ship; it was

and it pleased God. Had Jesus not said, "Come," it would have been unjustifiable presumption, but the word of Jesus made it obedience in Peter. To his great joy, he found that the waves which had been tossing him were now like solid ground under his feet. It was the presence of Jesus, the Maker of the world which suspended for a moment His own laws. Peter was doing impossibilities. There would be more of doing impossibilities in the lives of us all, if we took by faith more fully the place Jesus has given us with Him above circumstances; and if we looked at Him rather than the trials which toss and tire us. It was glorious for Peter to be thus walking on the water, which he had feared would drown him. He was drawing nearer Jesus when he saw the wind boisterous. In order to see it, he had looked off from Jesus, the wind's Master, and thus his conquering faith gave way, and he lived in the power of human experience again. Occupied with experience, it overcame him; faith gave way; he was afraid, and he began to sink. Yet one resource was left him, he cried, "Lord, save me." Instantly, the hand of power was stretched out; Jesus caught him, "and said unto him, O, thou of little faith, wherefore didst thou doubt?" It was a question with Peter, whether the wind or Jesus was to be most regarded. Reader, are you under some heavy trial, and it seems as though there were no way out? Some one whom you have trusted for years has proved untrue, and you have lost your confidence in him; you feel nothing can undo it; your heart is broken. Or, it may be that, in the work of God, some terrible inconsistency has crept in, the name of Christ has been brought into reproach; the thing is done, and nothing can undo it. It may be there is trial in your family; a dear son or daughter has been brought under the influence of an evil companion, some habit of sin has been formed, and your heart is broken; it seems as though prayer were unanswered. Perhaps it is something nearer still—husband or wife has caused untold suffering. Or it may be that in business some unexpected blow has fallen, and you are involved in difficulties which affect others, and you would rather be in a poorhouse than wrong anybody.

What is to be Done?

You cannot alter the circumstances, but you can walk with Jesus above them all. O, child of God, take courage; Jesus says, "Come," Jesus says, "It is I, be not afraid." What will happen? When you and Jesus walk upon the waves of trial together, and come together both into the ship, the wind will cease. In some way or other the Lord will lift the trial, or make it so blessed that it ceases to be a trial. "Then they that were in the ship came and worshipped Him, saying, 'Of a truth Thou art the Son of God.'" This was the first acknowledgment of Jesus as the Son of God, and it was the consequence of His miraculous power. How can blind, shortsighted men presume to say that the exercise of His divine power is not needed in this day when scepticism abounds!

Arrived in the land of Genesaret, the people heard of Jesus. Numbers of those who were healed and fed upon the mountain-side had had time to tell other sick and needy ones of all the helping which they had received. No sooner did they hear that He had landed than "they sent out into all that country round about, and brought unto Him all that were diseased, and besought Him that they might only touch the hem of His garment; and as many as touched were made perfectly whole."

The Touch Recognized Jesus.

A little boy of nine years old, son of one of the Gospel Union evangelists, was suffering from skin disease which covered his arms and chest. His father had been reading at family prayer about Naaman. It was Saturday night, and when the little boy had his bath, he said, "Mamma, I shall dip seven times in my bath, and I am sure God will make me well." He did so; and sure enough, in a day or two the disease, which had been long upon him, was gone. The little boy had touched Him.

CURRENT EVENTS.

A Hearty and Sincere New Year's Greeting is tendered to all its subscribers and readers, by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, on this, its first visit to them in the year of our Lord 1888. Without pride or egotism, it counts with confidence on a cordial welcome. Never in its past history have its friends and subscribers been so unanimous as this year, in their assurances of approval and high appreciation. Down to the time of writing these words, although some thousands of letters from readers have been received, there has not been one among them containing words of condemnation or hostile criticism. When we consider that differences of opinion are inevitable, and that "offences must come," this singular unanimity is very remarkable, and it cannot but be regarded as an evidence that the readers are persons of a high type of Christian character, who, recognizing unity of spirit, are not offended by divergence in minor details. It is also gratifying, because it is an evidence that the blessing and guidance of God, which has been earnestly sought by the proprietors, managers, and editors constantly, throughout the past year, have been given. Many cases of conversion are reported as having followed the reading of the pages of the paper, and many ministers state that the aid they have derived from its teachings and suggestions has had the best results. For all this, thanks are due to the Supreme Source of all blessing. Profoundly conscious of that fact, clearly aware of its own weakness and deficiencies, and sensible that its large and rapidly increasing circulation involves more weighty responsibilities than ever, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD earnestly asks the prayers of all its readers during this new year. The editor especially desires to make this a personal request. God has given him the privilege of editing every number of the paper, without exception, that has been issued in America during the past ten years, and his experience has deepened his sense of dependence on Divine wisdom for the future. He therefore earnestly asks his readers, while accepting best wishes for their happiness and prosperity during the year on which we have entered, to remember THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in their prayers.

The Proceedings of the Fishery Commissioners, up to the time of their adjournment for the holidays, were kept secret, and various rumors more or less favorable to a settlement were circulated. The latest, which was published last week, has a basis of probability in it, and certain events in Canada, combined with an utterance of Sir Charles Tupper, lend confirmation to it. It is to the effect, that the English and Canadian commissioners have decided to agree to a proposal made by Mr. Bayard during the conference, to refer to arbitration the two main questions at issue, namely: First, whether Canada shall give our fishing vessels the commercial rights which we accord to their fishing vessels, and, secondly, whether the three-mile limit shall follow the indentations of the shore. Mr. Bayard is said to be confident that any arbitrators who might be chosen, would give the United States all the Government claims; but litigants who carry their cases to court usually have that confidence. If England and Canada consent to the arbitration, it may be inferred that they do not consider an adverse decision a foregone conclusion.

The Proposals Before the Senate, for the erection of Government buildings in various cities, indicate the ideas most likely to prevail in Congress as to the best method of reducing the surplus. It is proposed to erect thirty-six new buildings, and to raise the limit of expenditures in several others in course of erection. The amount of money these projects call for is $10,241,000. In three instances over a million dollars are asked for on account of a single building, and in one of those cases the city in which it is to be erected has only eighty thousand inhabitants. It is probable that some of these appropriations will be refused and others reduced, but if the spirit manifested in the projects prevails, these proposals and a River and Harbor bill constructed on the same lines will relieve Congress of the work of dealing with the surplus in any other way. It is evident already, that the gigantic surplus is having the effect predicted in directly inciting Congress to extravagant expenditure.

The Restriction of Immigration, which is the object of four separate bills now before Congress, was discussed on December 29, at Detroit Mich., by Senator Palmer, who is the author of one of the bills. He said that in his scheme the details are left, measurably, to the Secretary of State, who, if he finds one system not stringent enough, may adopt another. In a word, the bill is desired as an entering wedge for legislation which will be added as the exigencies of the times may demand. From the circular reports received from our consuls in Hungary, one can learn that men marry in Hungary upon an express stipulation that they go to America and earn enough money with which to return and support their families. This, it will be readily seen, is everything but conducive to the welfare of this country. Senator Palmer's bill has an advantage over the others in that it prohibits the landing of Mormons. The Senator thinks that existing laws are sufficient to regulate the German, Scandinavian and British immigration, but they do not enable us to exclude immigrants of other nationalities who are no more homogeneous than the Chinese.

The Defects and Mismanagement of the Navy, are so often and so justly the subject of comment, that justice demands an acknowledgment of its good qualities, when that is possible. An occasion of that kind now occurs. The gigantic derelict lumber raft, mentioned in these colums last week, constituted so serious a danger to commerce while drifting in the track of incoming steamers, that the Government telegraphed to the Brooklyn Navy-yard an order to the United States Steamer Enterprise to go in search of it. The Enterprise was expected to be in the yard for three weeks longer, and the Captain was acting as President of a Board of Inquiry in an important matter, so that some delay in obeying the order would have been excusable. Yet, to the credit of the captain and the navy-yard the Enterprise started on its quest within two hours of the receipt of the telegram, and succeeded in finding the fragments of the raft.

A Gigantic Strike on the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad was imminent all through last week. Some journals asserted that it would involve sixty-five thousand men in idleness, but that estimate was evidently too large, as no district of the Knights of Labor in Pennsylvania has so many members. The trouble arose at Port Richmond, where certain employees were ordered to move flour consigned to the Philadelphia Grain Elevator Company. The men refused, and were discharged, whereupon twelve hundred men struck. An appeal was taken to the executive committee of the Knights of Labor, who, after a heated discussion in which marked difference of opinion was manifested, ordered a general strike. On Tuesday, December 27, the difficulty was believed to have been arranged and the strike was declared off. But the next day it was resumed, the men claiming that the Company had not kept faith with them. On Thursday last, a convention of the employees was held and sat all night. A general strike was then ordered, which if obeyed, will paralyze freight business on the road.

Another Revolution is Threatened in Hawaii. A dispute has arisen as to the exercise of the King's veto. The Legislature has passed a resolution, "that it was the sense of the Assembly that the act of the King in vetoing two bills relating to the abolition of the office of Governor was unconstitutional," and a committee of thirteen from the Assembly and a committee of the Cabinet waited upon the King and notified him of the fact. A letter received in New York from a member of the Legislature says, "I am glad that we are all through with the day's excitement in the Legislature. We nearly all went armed, as it was reported that we were to be mobbed by the King's followers. Upon assembling, we found two more bills returned to us with the King's veto. They were the Liquor and Police bills, which had been passed by the Legislature. According to the new constitution, the King cannot veto any bill unless by and with the advice and consent of the Cabinet. His doing so would be an act of war against that body and the Legislature. I am so glad that the war-ships are here; without them we would have trouble." Other correspondence is to the same tenor, and King Kalakaua's fall appears to be generally expected in the Islands.

A Judicial Reduction of Irish Rentals is announced in the Gazette, the Government's official organ. On December 27, it published an order signed by Commissioners Lytton and Wrench, prescribing reductions of rents throughout practically the whole of Ireland, ranging from six to twenty-two per cent. The average being fourteen per cent., the aggregate reduction is estimated at $10,000,000. The reduction is permanent and applies to arrears since 1881. Such a concession, if it had been made a few years ago, would have been welcomed in Ireland with general gratitude; now, however, it is said to be received everywhere with indifference, except by the persons interested.

The Rumors of Approaching War in Europe continued to cause uneasiness throughout last week. The Russian press, which has assumed a bellicose attitude, has done more to increase the disquietude than even the concentration of troops on the Austrian frontier. This is due to the fact, that there is a rigid press censorship in Russia, and a journal publishing articles of which the Czar disapproved would be in danger of prompt suppression. There is, therefore, greater significance in Russia than elsewhere in the utterances of the leading journals. Among those that were published last week was an article, evidently inspired by the Government, which stated that a war between Russia and Austria would not necessarily involve Germany, and that the Russian Government has obtained the knowledge that the terms of the treaty of alliance leave Germany free not to interfere unless Austria is threatened with a collapse which would involve territorial losses. It also asserted that England would not interfere unless the integrity of Turkey were threatened. If Russia is convinced of these two facts, war is almost certain, as she would have little difficulty in vanquishing Austria alone. The Crimean War resulted from a similar impression; Russia ventured to a point from which she could not honorably retreat before learning the strength of the combination against her.

Canvassers Wanted to Sell, from House to House, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Any man, woman or youth may easily add to their income every week by selling the paper in their spare hours in their own neighborhood. One man has sold one hundred copies on a Saturday. For terms address Manager of CHRISTIAN HERALD, 63 Bible House, New York.

Contributions to the Fund for Supplying colored ministers in the South with this journal have been received, since our last acknowledgment, to the amount of twelve dollars. They are, from Bridgton, Me., $1; Chester, Mass., $1; Wyoming, Pa., $3; Lowell, Mass., $2; Franklin Park, N. J., $2; Camden, N. Y., $1; Sterling, Mass., $1; Bozeman, Mont., $1. These amounts will bring joy into the homes of twelve worthy ministers, who have been hoping and praying that they may have the paper another year. There are many others who are anxiously awaiting similar news.

The Late Mrs. John Jacob Astor Did Not forget, in her will, the causes she had supported during her life. The list of bequests published on Thursday last includes $25,000 to the Domestic and Foreign Mission Society of the Protestant Episcopal Church; $25,000 to the Woman's Hospital of the State of New York; $25,000 to St. Luke's Hospital; 25,000 to the Young Women's Christian Association; $25,000 to the Children's Aid Society, as a fund to be invested, and its interest used to send street waifs out West and settle them on farms; and a further sum of $10,000 to the same Society, for the support of Mrs. Astor's favorite school on the East side of New York.

An Excellent Example to Wealthy Men is set by ex-Gov. Alger, of Detroit, Mich. He has made Christmas of 1887 more joyous to many families by his munificence. He began his work on December 26, by fitting out five hundred newsboys, selected on account of their good conduct, with a suit of clothes and a warm shirt each. His next act was to supply one thousand of the most needy families in the city with a ton of coal; or, if they do not use coal stoves, a cord of hard wood; and, in addition, a barrel of flour. The families thus assisted are those who have been brought into a suffering condition through no fault of their own. In one case a wife and eight children had been deserted by a drunken husband, who left the city weeks ago. The family were on the point of starvation. In one house a cripple was vainly striving to keep a dependent family from want. The list presents an almost frightful array of cruel and base desertions, of sickness and disability, helpless old age, and deplorable want, but no more than a similar investigation would disclose in any large city in the land.

A Naive Suggestion by an Unemployed Country youth was made recently in New York. A Wall Street journal says that one of the most wealthy merchants in the city received a call, a day or two before Christmas, from a young man in search of employment. The applicant having presented his letter of introduction, sat waiting for the great man to open the conversation. The merchant, really desirous to forward the wishes of the youth, asked him what kind of position he would like. "Well," said the applicant, looking round at the somewhat luxurious office, "I think I should like just such a position as yours." The great man replied: "Yes; it is a very pleasant position, but it took me many years to get it." He might have added that those years were years of toil and trial. Young Christians are often distressed by doubts of their conversion, when they hear some experienced brother describe his joys. They forget that it is the result of long years of trial and suffering. (Rom. 5: 3–5.)

A Mysterious Subterranean Phenomenon is reported from Pennsylvania. A press despatch from Tusseyville, on December 28, states that the people have been alarmed by strange noises, which came from the ground between two mountains known as Thick Head and Sand Mountain, south of Tusseyville. All the previous week the noises were distinctly heard, like the distant rumbling of thunder. The most remarkable was observed by a person who was on Thick Head, when the rumbling began in Sand Mountain, just opposite. At first it was deep, but low, and increased in violence, until it became as the tumult of a mass of rocks rolling down a mountain side. The person who heard the sound says that it rolled down the mountain from top to bottom, increasing in volume and speed as it went down, and terminating in a loud crash at the bottom, but no movement was perceptible on the surface of the mountain. These and other mysterious phenomena, occurring in other lands, are premonitions of the approaching final convulsion, and Christ said that such warnings would be given. (Luke 21: 25.)

A Flying Leap Through the Air was Unexpectedly taken by a farmer at Bridgewater, N.Y., a few days ago. A large oak tree stood on a high bluff on his farm overlooking the Housatonic. The heavy rains washed the soil away around it, and one day the top became too heavy for the roots to hold up, and it fell over away from the river. The farmer found it lying almost upon the ground, and, as coal is high, he determined to cut it up for his fireplace. He began at the top and lopped off some of the smaller limbs and brush. Then he mounted the trunk and cut away on a larger limb. He had just severed it when he was astonished to find himself flying through the air directly over the river. The tree, relieved of its weight, had sprung back into its original position, and, acting as a spring-board, had given him an aerial trip that might have been fatal. As it was, he fell into the icy waters of the Housatonic and escaped with a chill. The tree seems likely to stand and grow again, its roots being firm in the soil. So it is sometimes in our churches. A member seems to be utterly overthrown by worldly prosperity or by some sin, but if his root is in Christ, the loss of property or the removal of the burden of transgression is followed by restoration to his original position before God (Hos. 6: 1, 2.)

An Amusing History of an Immigrant's wanderings, is given by the New York Times. It states that on December 28 a German immigrant reached Monticello, N. Y., after having spent nearly three weeks in getting there from New York City, which is only a four hours' ride by railway from that place. When he landed from the German steamer he inquired his way to Monticello, and as his money was getting low, and the distance comparatively short to a vigorous young man, he resolved to make the journey on foot. After walking four days he found himself in Philadelphia. He was there two days before he could get his bearings. Then he walked back to New York, and from there to Middletown, where he was within twenty miles of his destination. He was directed to the right road, but after tramping about for a couple of days, he turned up in Matteawan, Dutchess County, on the east side of the Hudson. At Matteawan he was again turned toward Monticello, and two or three days of wandering brought him to Goshen. There he was put on the road to Monticello, and he finally reached that place. There are many Christians who could tell an analagous story of their spiritual experience, when they were trying to win salvation by their own exertions, instead of accepting Christ's finished work. (Rom. 10: 6–8.)

The Romantic Recovery of Sight by a Blind girl, was reported in the New York Sun on December 29. It states that a young lady, a distant relative of the late President Arthur, has for about a year been totally blind. She was of a highly nervous temperament, and after completing her education fell into a bad state of health. She went to Europe for rest and change of scene, and to some extent regained vigor. There she became engaged to a young Scotchman, a member of the largest publishing firm in Glasgow. She returned to America in the summer of 1886 and went South, to nurse her grandfather, who was in his last illness. After his death she became despondent, and was in that condition in August, when the Charleston earthquake occurred. The nervous shock it gave her had the strange effect of producing dimness of vision, and finally, total blindness. The most celebrated occulists and specialists in nervous disorders were consulted, but could do her no good. To her friends they said that she was doomed to lifelong blindness. The girl, learning this fact, sent a message to her Scotch lover, releasing him from the engagement. The manly young Scotchman came over by the next steamer, and went straight to her home. He told her that he would not consent to the engagement being broken. He declared that he loved her and would marry her, whether she remained blind or not. His conduct produced such a burst of joy in the girl's heart, that it seemed to transform her whole being. She became bright and cheerful, and regained her physical health rapidly. The most astonishing effect, however, was on her eyes. She began to perceive the difference between light and darkness, and gradually to discern conspicuous objects. She is now able to see as well as ever she could. The influenee of the soul over the body, which physicians cannot trace, but of which this and other cases give clear proof, is evidently mightier than we know. Its most blessed effects, however, are those produced on persons wandering in the darkness of sin and unbelief. With them, as with this girl, love is the agent. When they realize that God loves them, even in their dark state, they come to Him and receive light and life (II Tim. 1: 10).

BRIEF NOTES.

The English Baptist Union has appointed a deputation of ministers to wait on Mr. C. H. Spurgeon, to ask him to reconsider his withdrawal from the Union.

The Rev. B. Fay Mills has promised to conduct a series of Union Evangelistic services in Philadelphia, during this month.

The Swedish Evangelical Lutheran Mission of Chicago has dedicated its new building. The Rev. F. P. Goodwin, Professor D. C. Marquis, the Rev. F. A. Noble, and the Rev. Arthur Little took part in the exercises.

The services conducted by Messrs. Crossley and Hunter, in Toronto, have produced much good in the city. One church where they labored, reports an addition of more than one hundred persons for membership.

A Pittsburg pastor writes: "The Moody meetings in this city were a great success, estimated by the size of congregations, the apparent interest, and the numbers visiting the inquiry rooms. Of the inquirers a good many were members of churches who were living careless lives.

The Presbyterian ministers, of Pittsburgh, have adopted a resolution, declaring their disapprobation of Sunday newspapers. The resolution calls upon all lovers of law and order, and of a religious Sabbath, to withdraw their patronage from papers that publish Sunday editions.

The Rev. Dr. James Powell, Corresponding Secretary of the American Missionary Association, died at his home, in Brooklyn, of apoplexy, on December 27. On Sunday, December 25, his forty-fifth birthday, he delivered two addresses in Brooklyn—one in Dr. McLeod's church, and one to the children in Dr. Meredith's church.

When Dr. Munhall's evangelistic meetings closed in Toronto, seven hundred and three inquirers' cards were received, and of these, two hundred and fifteen asked for Methodist churches, one hundred and seventy-one for Presbyterian, one hundred and twenty-five for Episcopalian, ninety-three for Baptist, and thirty-two for Congregational.

Mrs. Wilder and her daughter are on their way back to India. Mrs. Wilder is the widow of the well-known missionary, and the mother of one of the young men who have been visiting the colleges in the interests of foreign missions. They go to the field where Mr. and Mrs. Wilder spent thirty years, and where the daughter was born. They are self-supporting missionaries.

The Evangelical Alliance, at its assembly in Washington, authorized the issue of a circular, suggesting that Christians of all evangelical denominations in each city, meet regularly for conference and to organize plans for city visitation. Such visitation to include a knowledge of the sick and deserving poor, the number and location of saloons and places of ill repute, and all the evil influences that affect the moral character of the community.

Mayor Howland, of Toronto, in a recent address in New York, describing the immunity of that city from the control of the saloons, ascribed it to two causes. First—a property qualification which shuts out from the ballot-box a class of citizens who are easily handled by the saloons; and secondly, that women who possess the necessary amount of property are allowed to vote.

The Citizens' Law and Order League, having for its specific work to secure obedience to the laws for the prevention of pauperism, insanity, and crime produced by the sale of intoxicating liquors, will hold its sixth annual meeting in the city of Philadelphia on the 21st and 22d days of February, 1888. All persons desiring information as to the purpose of the League or in relation to the national meeting, are requested to address the Secretary at 28 School Street, Boston, Mass.

NOT BOUND YET.

A New Sermon by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

"Wherein I suffer trouble as an evil doer, even unto bonds; but the word of God is not bound." II Tim 2: 9

The Grave turned from a Blind Alley into a Tunnel—Paul's Self Forgetfulness—Bound but Rejoicing in an Unbound Gospel—I. How the Gospel is Unbound—It can be Preached—Many Attempts to Bind it—Can Reach the Heart—A Conversion on Shipboard—A Soul Saved Through a Collision at Sea—An Infidel's Prayer Test—Can Comfort the Depressed—Will be Fulfilled—II. Why it is not Bound—A Hungering World—The Terrible Cry in the Bread Riots—John Bunyan's Answer—III. Can Work Apart from the Worker.

YOU will observe, if you read the verse which precedes, which indeed it would be wrong to dissever from the text, that the doctrine of the resurrection of our Lord Jesus Christ was the sheet-anchor of Paul's comfort, as it was the great substance of his preaching. "Remember that Jesus Christ of the seed of David, was raised from the dead according to my gospel: wherein I suffer trouble, as an evil doer, even unto bonds; but the word of God is not bound." Perhaps we do not give sufficient prominence to the doctrine of the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead. Possibly, also, for this reason, we do not fully grasp the idea of "the power of His resurrection." Our Lord's death was not the close of His career; He still passed onward. From the cross to the sepulchre was still forward. With weeping and mourning they laid Him in the tomb: surely that was the finis of His course. Ah, no! He passed into the grave, it is true; but He also passed through it. The grave had hitherto seemed a cul-de-sac, a blind alley, from which

There was no Exit

All the footsteps pointed to entrance, but none to return. It looked like a dread abyss swallowing all, and offering passage-way to none. See what our Lord Jesus has done! He has made a tunnel of it for all His redeemed to pass into the kingdom: we enter at the grave to emerge in the resurrection into eternal life. In this lies part of the power of His resurrection, that He has opened the kingdon of heaven to all believers. It looked like an iron door, or gate of death, but He has unhinged it, yea, He has taken it quite away. The grave was once "a charnel-house to fence the relics of lost innocence," but it is so no longer, the imprisoning stone is rolled away. By passing through death our Lord has made a thoroughfare for us. We take death and the grave in transit now; they do not hinder our advance to glory, and immortality, and eternal life. Our course is ever onward whatever may lie in the way.

In the strength of that truth, Paul, when he found himself in prison,

Expected to Come Out of it; when he saw great difficulties in the way to heaven, he expected to go through those difficulties, and to come out with gain at the further end thereof. This helped to cheer him in his darkest moments. His brave heart thus spoke within him, and said, "What if I should be even dead and buried, I shall rise again; and if the gospel should seem dead and buried, yet it will rise again; and if the particular cause which I am advocating in Rome should seem dead and buried, yet it must come to life again. I take courage from the great truth, that the Lord Jesus Christ rose from the dead."

I like much this self-forgetting sentence of the apostle, "I suffer trouble, as an evil doer, even unto bonds; but the word of God is not bound." He is shut up in the gloomy dungeon at Rome. No hideous dens could be worse than Roman dungeons usually were, No prison is a desirable place, but a Roman prison was a very vestibule of death, Paul is not only in prison, but in bonds; his right arm is chained to the left hand of a soldier; he cannot do anything except under the inspection of his enforced companion, who, kindly as he may be disposed, cannot be so closely bound to him without causing him much discomfort. One would not like to be chained to the best man that ever lived, and much less to a rough Roman soldier. Paul is in bonds; as he writes, his fetters clank; but he makes light of it, and finds more than sufficient comfort in the reflection, "I suffer as an evil doer, even unto bonds; but the word of God is not bound."

I. First, then, in what sense is it true, that "the word of God is not bound?" That is, at this time, true in many senses; and first, it is not bound so that it cannot be preached. Paul could preach it even when in bonds, and he did preach it, so that the gospel was made known throughout Cæsar's palace, and there were saints in the imperial household. Many came to and fro into the Prætorian guard-room, and heard the word from the mouth of the apostle. You may be quite sure that he never neglected to make known the message of the gospel to all that visited him in his prison, so that the word of God was not bound even with respect to himself. And, dear friends, whatever saddens us at this hour, we rejoice that the word of God still finds a tongue and a voice wherewith to speak to the multitudes, Nineteen centuries after Paul, we have still an open Bible and a free pulpit. Blessed be God for this!

There have been a great many

of God, but yet it has not been bound. The preachers of the holy faith of Christ have been hunted to the death; they have "wandered about in sheep-skins and goat-skins, destitute, afflicted, tormented," but the word of God has not been bound. When Hamilton was burned in Scotland, there was such an impetus given to the gospel through his burning that the adversaries of the gospel were wont to say, "Let us burn no more martyrs in public, for the smoke of Hamilton's burning has made many eyes to smart until they were opened." So, no doubt, it always was. The word of God is not bound by the binding of the preachers.

"The word of God is not bound" so as to be no longer a living, working power among men. Sometimes the enemies of truth have thought that they had silenced the last witness, and then there has been an unexpected outburst, and the old faith has been to the front again. A desperate and subtle attempt is now being made, but it will be assuredly foiled through the wisdom of God. Yet, if it should come to this, that they should get rid of all the preachers of the gospel—of the men who would thunder out God's word like Boanerges, or speak it out in tender tones as Barnabas—if the last of the faithful testifiers were consigned to the tomb, God would be sure to raise up another generation to publish his truth, so that the word of God should not lack a spokesman in the midst of the earth. The devil's work is never done: one word from the Lord, and it is all undone in a trice.

Another sense must be remembered: the word of God is not bound so that it cannot reach the heart. You may have, perhaps, dear friend, some very obdurate relative about whose salvation you have very great concern. You have prayed long, and have used the means within your reach perseveringly; you have also used extraordinary means, and you have looked for an immediate result. But as yet the hard heart does not melt; as yet you see no tear of repentance, and hear no cry of faith. Do not give anybody up in despair: while God is almighty, have hope for the chief of sinners.

A Conversion On Ship Board.

Had we not, a little while ago, an instance of one whom we were praying for at a prayer-meeting, and that night, while we were praying, it was a moonlight night, and as he was walking the deck of the ship, the Lord met with him? When no tongue was able to reach him, the memory of what he had heard at home came over his soul, and he was humbled before God. I was telling, just a little while ago, at our prayer-meeting, a very singular instance of how, just lately, three or four sermons on Sunday evenings have been made most useful to a young friend. He was going away to Australia unconverted, and without God. He went on board to depart, and when the vessel steamed out of dock, it ran into another ship, and he was obliged to wait and spend almost a month here, whilst the vessel was being repaired. The Lord met with him on those Sunday nights, and he has gone now, leaving in his mother's heart the sweet persuasion that he has found his mother's God. The God of all grace has ways of getting at human hearts when to our thinking every avenue is fast closed.

But sometimes we are apt to think a case is more hopeless still, when in addition to natural depravity, and the absence of the means of grace, there springs up a scepticism, perhaps a downright derision, of the word of God, and of things sacred. One is apt to think then, "It is all over now; it is of no further use praying for such an one." I am not so sure that the case is any the worse for being openly declared.

Nothing is More Deadly

than absolute indifference; and sometimes, when a man begins to avow himself an infidel, it is only that his conscience is troubling him, and he is obliged to take some drug wherewith to stifle it; no drug is more handy for his use than avowed infidelity. A profession of scepticism is often nothing more than the whistling of the boy as he goes through the churchyard, and is afraid of ghosts, and therefore "whistles hard to keep his courage up." They try to get rid of the thought of God, because of that ghost of conscience which makes cowards of them all. Even blasphemy and infidelity yield to the conquering touch of sovereign grace.

I knew a man who had lived a life of carelessness and indifference, with occasional outbursts of drunkenness and other vices. This man happened one day, on Peckham Rye, to hear a preacher say that if any man would ask anything of God, He would give it to him. The assertion was much too broad, and might have done harm; but this man accepted it as and resolved that he would ask, and thus would see if there was a God. On the Saturday morning of that week, when he was going early to his work, the thought came upon him, "Perhaps there is a God after all." He was ready to swoon as the possibility struck him, and there and then he offered the test petition, concerning a matter which concerned himself and his fellow-workmen. His prayer was granted in a remarkable manner, and he came then to be a believer in God. He is more than that now, and has found his way to be a believer in all that God has spoken, and has found peace through believing in Jesus Christ. It struck me as wonderful that this man, who never had any religious care at all before, should, on a sudden, be turned to serve the living God, The preacher on Peckham Rye never had a more unlikely hearer, and yet he succeeded with him. Oh, pray for them, pray for them, for though you cannot reaeh them, "the word of God is not bound."

Still further, it is not bound as to its power to comfort the soul. I have—perhaps you have in your measure—to deal with persons under conviction of sin, with others who are suffering through ill-health, or mental decline, with some who groan under Satanic temptation, and various forms of mental trial causing awful depression of spirits, We have spoken to certain of them many times, without being able to bring them light and comfort. We put the gospel very plainly to them, and try to place it in different lights, hoping that somehow or other they may see hope. Alas! we are often unable to touch the wound of their spirit. The captive is too closely shut up in prison for us to set him free. But here is a blessed truth: "The word of God is not bound." Perhaps we put too much of our own explanation with the Lord's own word; perhaps we have thought that clever illustrations were needful, and so have overlaid the truth with our poor imagination. When we have come to the end of our explanations and our illustrations, it may be that the word which is not bound will come in, and give liberty to the captives.

Thus I have given you several senses of the text. There is another one. The word of God is not bound in the sense that it cannot be fulfilled. I now allude principally to the of God's word. If there is a promise of deliverance to you, and you cannot see the way in which you are to be delivered, you may not, therefore, doubt the promise, for that would dishonor the Lord who spake it. The word of God is not bound; the word of God will cleave its own way, and reach its own destination. Thou art come, perhaps, to thy last penny, but He hath said, "I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee." Thou hast come to thy last grain of strength, but He fainteth not, neither is He weary, and He hath said, "As thy days, so shall thy strength be." And so shall it be. Oh, that we could believe the promises of God! We do not half believe them, brethren.

There is yet one other sense. "The word of God is not bound," so that it cannot endure and prevail unto the end. I know there are those who think it dead, and therefore they are anxious to attend its funeral, and bury it out of sight, while the new theology shall dance on its grave. They call us poor old fogies for believing in the old gospel, and tell us to go home and order our coffins, and leave the world to these wiser men. They begin to crow as if their work of defeating us had been unquestionably done. We are out of date; we are dead; we are extinct! Perhaps so! Perhaps so! But we think they will be mistaken in their imagination, for the word of God is not defeated after all. Philosophy and heresy are in league, and they gather their armies in haste. The Lord shall make them as the sheaves of the threshing-floor. Wherefore, let us be of good comfort, brothers, and rest quite sure that, though we are beaten, the word of God is not beaten, and that though we are in a minority, and our preaching at a discount, it does not matter—"The word of God is not bound."

II. For a moment or two I have further to enquire, what are the reasons why the word of God is not bound? It is not bound, because it is the voice of the Almighty. If the gospel be indeed the gospel of God, and these truths be a revelation of God

Onnipotence is in Them.

Moreover, the Holy Ghost puts forth His power in connection with the Word of God, and as He is divine He is unconquerable. He comes as a rushing, mighty wind, and who can stay Him? He comes as fire, and who can stand before His flaming vehemence? If you wanted another reason less strong than these two, I should say, "How can it be bound while it is so needful to men?" There are certain things which if men want they will have. I have heard say that in the old Bread Riots, when men were actually starving for bread, no word had such a terribly threatening and alarming power about it as the word "Bread!" when shouted by a starving crowd. I have read a description by one who once heard this cry: he said he had been startled at night by a cry of "Fire!" but when he heard from those that were hungry. it seemed to cut him like a sword. Whatever bread had been in his possession he must at once have handed it out. So it is with the gospel; when men are once aware of their need of it, there is no monopolizing it. None can make "a ring" or "a corner" over the commodity of heavenly truth.

It cannot be hid, because there are so many that want it. They are pining, these myriads of London, these myriads all over the world; and though they hardly know it, yet there is a cry coming up for ever from them for something which they can never find, except in Christ. You may set up altars, and put up your gimcrackeries, but they won't have them instead of the gospel. You may preach your speculations, and tell them "modern thought" has done away with the old gospel, but as soon as the Holy Spirit shows them their state by nature, and their future danger, they sweep all this rubbish away.

I have one thing else to tell you. The Word of God is not bound, because, when once it gets into men's hearts, it works such an enthusiasm in them that you cannot bind it. The converted man must talk to his work-mates about it. You may say, "It would be very irregular for you to hold a meeting; it would be out of all character for a mere workingman to stand up on the village green;" but he is very likely to do it. In our own land there was of God, for those who knew it felt compelled to spread it. There is Master Bunyan; they have put him in prison, and his family is nearly starving, and they bring him up, and they say, "You shall go out of prison, John, if you won't preach. Go home and tag your laces, that is what you have to do, and leave the Gospel alone; what have you got to do with that?" But honest John answers, "I cannot help it. If you let me out of prison to-day, I will preach again to-morrow, by the help of God. I will lie here till the moss grows on my eyelids, but I will never promise to cease preaching the Gospel." The love of Christ is such that, when it once pours into a man's heart, it must run out at his lips in loving testimony.

III. Now I come to the close. One or two other facts run parallel to the text. Paul is bound, but the Word of God is not bound. Read it thus: the preacher has had a bad week, he is full of aches and pains, he feels ill: but the Word of God is not ill. We preach if we are unhealthy ourselves. In this let the invalid rejoice. Dear suffering worker, your work shall not suffer, for it is a sound Gospel which you preach, though you yourself are hampered by a poor, weak body! "What will become of the congregation when a certain minister dies?" Well, he will be dead, but the Word of God will not be dead. God buries His workmen, but His work goes on. One light goes out, but another torch flames forth. Star by star sinks beneath the horizon, but another star appears on the other side to make glad the night. The Word of God is not dead when the preacher is dead. "Oh, but the worker is so feeble!" The Word of God is not feeble. "But the worker feels so stupid." But the Word of God is not stupid. "But the worker is so unfit." But the Word of God is not unfit. You see it all comes to this: the preacher is bound, but the Word of God is not bound: the worker is feeble, but the Word of God is not feeble.

But you bitterly and truthfully lament that Christian men are nowadays very devoid of zeal. "All hearts are cold in every place;" the old fire burns low. But the Word of God is not cold, nor lukewarm, nor in any way losing its old fire. "Such and such a congregation is as frozen as the North Pole." Yes, but the word of God is not frozen: divine truth is not turned into an iceberg.

Do Not Fret Yourself

into despair as to the condition of the church, since the Lord liveth. "Yes," says one, "but I am disgusted with the cases I have lately met with of false brethren." Yes, but the word of God is not false. "But they walk so inconsistently." I know they do, but the word of God is not inconsistent. "But they say they have disproved the faith." Yes, they have disproved their own faith, but they have not disproved the word of God for all that. The word of God is not affected by the falsehood of men.

"Oh, but," says one, "it is an awful thing to think of the spiritual ruin of so many that are round about us, who hear the gospel, and yet after all wilfully refuse it, and die in their sins." Truly this is a grievous fact: they appear to be bound by their sins like beasts for the slaughter, but the word of God is not bound or injured. O sinners, you cannot overcome God's word! You have defeated its influence of love upon yourselves, but it is not defeated after all. I pray you, cease to fight against the Lord; for the word of God is not bound. However much you may try to bind it, you shall find that it has its liberty, and it will in the next world have liberty to accuse and to condemn if you will not give it liberty now to persuade and to save you. God bless you, dear friends, for Christ's sake! Amen.

THE GEORGIA LADY'S MARRIAGE WITH A WOUNDED YANKEE.*

I HEARD a great many of the facts [about the marriage of the Yankee soldier to the daughter of the old and proud Georgia family] from old Aunt Fountain, one of the Tomlinson negroes, who for some reason or other was permitted to sell ginger cakes and persimmon beer under the wide-spreading china-trees in Rockville on public days and during court-week. I made no attempt to coax Aunt Fountain to tell me about Trunion [the Yankee bridegroom] for I knew it would be difficult for her not to talk about him. She waited awhile, evidently to pique my curiosity; but as I betrayed none, and even made an effort to talk about something else, she began:

"Well, Suh, you ax me 'bout Marse Fess Trunion. I know you bleege ter like dat man. He aint b'long ter we-all folks, no furder dan he my young Mistiss' ole man, but der ain' no finer white man dan him. No, suh, dee ain'. I tell you dat pintedly. I say dis about Marse Fess Trunion, ef he aint got de blood he got de breedin'. Ef he ain good ez de Tomlinsons, he lots better dan some folks what I know. I pick dat man up myse'f en I knows him mos' good ez if he wuz one er we-all."

"What do you mean when you say you picked him up?" I asked, unable to restrain my impatience.

"Well, suh, de fus time I see Marse Fess Trunion wuz turreckerly atter de Sherman army come 'long; dem wuz hot times, suh, cold ez de wedder wuz. Dee wuz in-about er million un um, look like ter me, en dey dess ravage de face er de yeth. Dey tuck all de hosses, en all de cows, en all de chickens, yes suh, dey cert'n'y did. Man come 'long en 'low aunty, you free now,' en den he tuck all my ginger cakes w' at I been bakin' 'g'inst Chris'mus; en den I say,' ef I wuz free ez you is, suh, I'd fling you down en take dem ginger-cakes 'way fum you.' Yes suh, I tole him dat, it make me mad fer to see de way dat man walk off wid my ginger-cakes, I got so mad suh, dat I foller 'long atter him little ways but dat ain' do no good, kaze he cum to whar dee wuz some yuther men, en dee 'vide up dem cakes till dee want no cake lef', den I struck 'cross de plantation en walked 'bout in de drizzlin' rain till I cool off."

"Well, suh, I ain' walk fur fo' it seems like I year some un talkin'. I stop I did en listen, en still I year um. I ain' see nobody, suh, but still I year um. I walk fus' dis away and den dat away, en den I walk 'roun' en 'roun', en den it pop in my min' 'bout the big gully. Well, suh, 'fo' I get dar I see hoss tracks, en dee led right up ter de brink I look in, I did, en down dar dee wuz a man en a hoss, yes suh; dee wuz bofe down dar. De man wuz layin' out flat on he back, en de hoss he wuz layin' sorter up en down de gulley en right on top er one er de man's legs, en eve'y time de hoss'd scramble en try fer git up de man 'ud talk at him. Bimeby I crope up nigher de aidge, en wen de man see me he holler out, 'Hol' on aunty, don't you fall down yer!'

"I ax him, I say, 'Marster, is you hurted much?' Kaze time I look at him I know he ain de villyun wat made off wi' my ginger-cakes, den he 'low 'I speck I hurt purty bad, aunty, en de wuss on it is dat my hoss keep hurtin me mo'.

"Den I went in de big-house en tell Mistiss 'bout de man down dere in de gully, en how he done hurted so bad he he ain' kin walk. Den Mistiss, she draw herse'f up and ax w'at business dat man er any yuther man got on her plan'ation. I say 'yessum, dat so; but he done dar, en ef he stay dar he gwine die dar'.'

"Den my young mistiss—dat's Miss Lady, suh—she say dat dough she 'spize um all dez as bad az she kin, dat man mus' be brung away from dar, kase, she say, she don't keer how yuther folks go on, de Tomlinsons is bleese to do like Christun people. Yes, suh; she say dem very words. Den Mistiss, she 'low dat de man kin be brung up, en put in de corn-crib, but Miss Lady she say no, he mus be brung en put right dar in de big 'ouse in one er de upsta'rs rooms, kase maybe some er dem State er Georgy boys mought be hurted up dar in de norf, en want some place fer to stay at.

"Well, suh, I went back out in de yard, en den I went 'cross ter de nigger-quarter, en I ain' got fur till I year my ole man prayin' in dar some'r's. I know 'im by he v'ice, suh, en he was prayin' des like it wuz camp-meetin' time. I hunt roun' fer 'im, suh, en bimeby I fin' 'im; den I tell him 'bout de man down dar in de gully, en my ole man put out atter one er de hosses, en he brung 'im back; en we hitch 'im up in de spring-waggin, en atter dat man we went. Yes, suh; we did dat. En w'en we git dar, me en my ole man, we pick 'im up des like he wuz a baby. We cyard 'im home en put 'im up st'ars, en dar he stayed fer many's de day."

"Well, suh, dat man w'at I fin' out dar in de gully wuz Marse Fess Trunion. Yes, suh, de ve'y same man. Dee ain' no tellin' w'at dat po' creetur gone thoo wid. He had fever, he had pneumony, en he had dat broke leg. Our w'ite folks, dee des spized 'im kaze he bin wid Sherman army. Dee say he wuz Yankee; but I tell um, suh, dat if Yankee look dat away dee wuz cert'n'y mighty like we-all.

"By dat time, suh, de war wuz done done, en dee wuz tough times. Dee cert'n'y wuz, suh. De railroads wuz all broke up, en eve'y thing look like it gwine helter-skelter right straight ter ruin. I speck de Tomlinsons, proud ez de wuz, would er bin mightily pincht fer fin' bread en meat. But dee ain' never want fer it yit, suh, Kaze w'en me en my ole man git whar we can't move no furder, Mars Fess Trunion, he tuck holt er de place en he fetcht it right side up terrectly. He say ter me dat he gwine pay he board dat away, suh, but he ain' say it whar de Tomlinsons kin year 'im.

"Well, suh, dat w'ite man, he work en he scuffle; he hire niggers, en he turn um off; he plan, en he project; en 'tain' so mighty long, suh, 'fo' he got eve'y thing gwine straight. How he done it, i'll never tell you suh; but do it he did. He put he own money in dar, suh, kaze dee wuz two times dat I knows un w'en he git money out'n de pos'-office, en I see 'im pay it out to de niggers, suh. En all dat time he look like he de happies' w'ite man on top er de grown', suh. T' want long, suh, 'fo' we all knowed dat Mars Fess wuz gwine marry Miss Lady."

THE EARTHQUAKE IN CALABRIA.

(See Illustration.)

NEWS has been received of another severe earthquake. The inhabitants of Calabria, in Italy, a region about equidistant from the volcanoes of Vesuvius and Etna, have long enjoyed an immunity from earthquakes, which have in past times been very frequent and disastrous in that locality. The destruction now reported would appear to indicate that, during the interval of quiet, nature's forces had been gathering for a mighty convulsion. Among the towns, which are partly destroyed by the visitation are Bisignano, in the province of Cosenza, and Rogliano and Gravina. There were two shocks which were felt all over Calabria. A panic of a most distressing character occurred amongst the population, 4,000 of whom were rendered homeless. After the first shock the whole of the inhabitants took refuge in the streets, and this prevented a greater disaster.

Happily there is no reason to believe that the destruction of life on this occasion is so great as it was in 1857, or even in 1835, when many thousands of the inhabitants perished. Two hundred soldiers rendered valuable aid by erecting barracks for the temporary accommodation of the homeless, while ample relief was sent by the Municipality of Rome and the Government to the sufferers, who were in a pitiable condition. Our readers will not fail to remember that earthquakes are one of the signs which antedate the coming of Christ, and every one that occurs sounds a note of warning to those who are saying, "Where is the promise of His coming?" (II Peter 3: 4-7.)

A DISCOVERY IN A BUREAU.

"THERE is one thing in your house that excites my curiosity," said a gentleman who was spending a night with an old college friend, and sat talking with him after the other members of the family had retired.

"What is that?" asked Mr. Gifford, the host.

"I cannot understand why you have that common, worm-eaten old bureau among the handsome and elegant furniture in your library; you do not seem to have been bitten by the 'Early English craze,' and you cannot admire the bureau for its beauty, for it is as plain and ugly as it can be. Why do you keep it and give it the place of honor?"

"Ah! it does look out of place, does it not? Well, do you know, that old bureau is a precious heirloom: it has associations which I can never forget, and I hope my sons never will. My father brought it with him when he came to America from Scotland, and he told me its story, which I have repeated to my boys. I'll tell it you, too, if you care to hear it."

"By all means. I am interested in old family legends."

"That bureau originally belonged to my great-grandfather, a worthy Presbyterian of the strictest type, a truly God-fearing man. He was agent, or steward, or some such thing to a Scotch nobleman, who, though a Godless rake himself, knew the value of a man of piety in the management of his estates. Very large sums of money passed through his hands in the course of a year, as he received all the rents on the estate, and paid for all repairs to the buildings and any new barns, etc., that might be erected. Every penny however was duly accounted for at the end of the year, and the balance handed over to the nobleman. The building account, which was always the largest, was settled annually also. The builder was not a man of my ancestor's selection, for he was a wicked, unscrupulous man, but he had done some underhand work

"OUT OF THE DEPTHS."

BY LILLA M. ALEXANDER

om the depths where billows overwhelmed me, Tossed by the tempest and wave,
eipless and sinking with terror,
I cried to the Master to save.

Lord! save or I perish; around me,
Rise the billows, their crests gleaming white,
nd beyond lies a wide waste of waters,
Enshrouded in fast falling night."

Lord! carest Thou not that I perish?
I know that Thou carest, or why
Stands that cross there on Calvary's summit—
The cross where Thou camest to die."

He hears me! and lo, at His coming,
The gloom and the darkness retreat;
And the waves that in fury were raging,
Grow calm at the touch of His feet.

nd the blackness that shrouded the heavens,
Is rolled like a curtain away:
or the smile of His face like the sunlight,
Turns night to the gladness of day.

I can smile at my fears and my terrors,
Now that He standeth so near—
Now that the storm has abated,
And the sea lieth shining and clear.

I am safe for His arms are about me,
I am safe for He calls me His own;
Oh! love that no mortal can fathom,
Oh! depths of compassion unknown.

Yet His eyes with a gentle reproving
Are fill d as He turns them on me;
"Why did'st thou doubt, oh thou weak one?
Was I not caring for thee?"

"Why did'st thou fear 'mid the darkness?
Could'st thou not trust in My grace?
For the heart that I count truly faithful,
Will trust tho gh the clouds hide My face.

THIS IMPORTANT WORK.

Please notice that this is the only Commentary upon the whole Bible published at a moderate price. It is, therefore, within reach of the masses, while no Commentary published is so highly commended or so well adapted for the home, the teacher or the preacher when a practical, concise, critical and spiritual work is desired.

Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, London, England.

I think it is the best Commentary upon the whole Bible which has been issued within the last fifty years, and I should be very sorry to be deprived of the pleasure of consulting it.

NEW AND COMPLETE

Bible Commentary,

Critical, Explanatory, and Practical.

BY

JAMIESON, FAUSSET & BROWN.

In 4 Large Vols., of about 1,000 Pages each,

With numerous Illustrations and Maps.

It is far in ADVANCE of the Older Works.

It is CRITICAL, PRACTICAL and EXPLANATORY.

It is COMPENDIOUS AND COMPREHENSIVE in its Character.

It has a CRITICAL INTRODUCTION to each BOOK OF SCRIPTURE, and is by far the most PRACTICAL, SUGGESTIVE, SCIENTIFIC and POPULAR Work of the kind in the English Language.

We present this work to our Christian readers with the conviction that it will be welcomed as a most valuable addition to the Biblical literature of the day, and will be found to posses

ADVANTAGES OVER ANY OTHER SIMILAR WORK IN THE FOLLOWING IMPORTANT PARTICULARS:

1st. Its Thoroughness. This Commentary is not written by one writer only, as is the case with Clark, Henry, Scott, and others, but by three of the ablest scholars of the present day, thus enabling each author to devote all his skill, time and energy to a limited portion of the Bible, instead of the whole, and these have quoted extensively from the works of no less than one hundred and fifty of the most eminent Biblical writers of the present and the past.

2d. Its Modernness. New light is continually being thrown upon the Scriptures by the researches of travelers who have visited every region on which the light of revelation originally shown, by investigation in science, the expository labors of scholars and critics, and the discovery and deciphering of ancient inscriptions, monuments, and manuscripts, thus rendering the commentaries of former days comparatively useless

3d. Its Compactness. The text and the comments are not printed in separate parts, as is usually the case, but are intermingled so as to form one continuous history. There are no blank spaces, nor is the book filled up with unnecessary portions of the text It is what it purports to be—a Commentary—not a Bible. "It is literally packed," says Bishop Wiley, "full of good things."

4th. Its Brevity. Dr. Smith, editor Chicago Standard, says, "I have, in several instances, seen a sermon in a sentence."

5th. Its Liberal Spirit. It is more unsectarian than any other Commentary. "The names of the authors are a sufficient guaranty against any denominational traits in it." These authors are each of a different denomination. The hearty recommendation of the leading men of all denominations gives this still greater emphasis.

6th. Its Scripture References. These are more numerous than will be found in any Commentary extant. Parallel passages are given wherever they are needed. Scripture is thus explained by Scripture, and the Commentary will thus be found to answer the purpose of a Concordance to a very great extent.

7th. Its Illustrations and Maps. These are sufficiently numerous to decidedly enhance its value and attractiveness; while the great majority of Commentaries have no illustrations.

8th. Its Cheapness. No Commentary of its size and merit was ever sold for anything like the price.

The unqualified commendations of this Commentary, from the highest sources, together with its already extensive and rapidly increasing sale, have given it a position in the religious world superior to that of any similar work, and prove conclusively that it will soon be universally adopted by Sabbath-School Teachers and Bible readers generally, to whom its use has now become indispensable.

The work is printed from new electrotype plates, on fine toned paper made expressly for this work, and sold at the following extremely low prices:

In Extra Fine English Cloth, sprinkled edge, the full set.....$8 00
In Half Morocco, the full set.....10 00

nly touched it. Immediately, a broad red face ppeared at the peephole, and then bars and olts seemed to be drawn inside, a key turned he lock, and finally the great door swung back; lisclosing to view a paved courtyard, and a wilderness of redbrick walls towering so high as to hide the sky above.

On one side of the courtyard, close to the entrance, was the porter's lodge, and, on the other, a little building about the same size, where new patients were taken in on arrival, to have their admission orders verified and their bundles examined, so that no spirits, or eatables, or anything contrary to rules and regulations should pass into the building, etc. The Infirmary porter, a stout, red-faced personage in a blue uniform and brass buttons, came to the cab-door and regarded the new-comers with stern, official eyes.

"Have you the order?" he asked, in loud, resounding tones; his voice was quite a match for the Infirmary door-bell.

"Yes," said Tom.

"Able to walk?" he asked.

"No," replied Tom, glancing round at Bridget, who was leaning back in the cab, nervous and trembling, dismayed at the great strange place she had come to, and the sharp, stern tones of the porter. Yet she still had one little comfort at her heart, "Baby was going in with her!"

In less time than it takes to write it, a chair was brought out to the cab, and Bridget was carried on it into the office opposite the porter's lodge. Tom followed with the baby, and Jemmy Wiggles with his cab drove away.

The office was a small room with a bare stone floor, and nothing in it save a desk, and a fire burning sluggishly in the grate. A hard-featured woman in a dark gown and a close cap was here to receive Bridget. She went through her work, as laid down by the Board of Charities, with as quick despatch as possible. A friendly welcome to be given was not one of the things set down by those gentlemen in the rules. She was merely to be in her place when new patients arrived, to examine their bundles, and say which ward they were to be taken to. So she did not even pass a "Good-day" to Bridget, but took her bundle from Tom, and began overhauling it. The porter went to the desk and looked at the admission order, and entered some things in a book. And Bridget sat pale and nervous in the chair, while Tom, still holding the baby, stood by and talked to her in a low, troubled voice.

"There's visitin' days, ain't there Bridge?"

"Yes," nodded Bridget.

"The children, and me, and Mrs. Job 'll be able to come and see you," said Tom miserably. Then he turned to the hard-featured woman, and asked, "What days are the visitin' days, ma'm?"

The woman frowned on him. She had divined the state of the family: an unhappy wife, and child, and a drinking husband. Tom's face told the tale. "Sundays are the usual visiting days," she barked out, "but the Infirmary's closed to visitors for the present, by order of the Board, owing to the prevalence of small-pox, and won't be open again till further notice. There it is on the walls," nodding at a printed card on a nail; "you can read for yourself!"

Bridget heard the hard news; she would never see Poll or Sue! No friend, then, would be allowed in to see her, to tell her how the home was getting on! She would never get a friendly hand-clasp or hear a friendly voice!—all this rushed across her mind and chilled her. Yet there was ever that little comfort at her heart, "Baby was going in with her."

The bundle having been examined, and the proper entries made in the day-book by the porter, the hard-featured woman rang a bell that clanged in the distance, and roughly intimated to the husband and wife that the time had come to say "Good-bye," and that they had better be quick about it.

Tom kissed Bridget; he leant forward to give her the baby, but, before it reached the mother's outstretched arms, an arm clad in blue cloth and brass buttons thrust itself forward and placed a barrier between mother and child.

"There's no order for the child," said the stern, hard voice of the porter.

"It's not weaned," urged the mother faintly but quickly.

"What's its age?" inquired the porter.

"What's the little 'un's age, Bridge?" inquired Tom, with an anxious air, but Bridget seemed not to be able to speak, "Eleven months, just about, sir," he said, turning to the porter.

"Over age!" said the official, still making a barrier with his arm. "Children over nine months not admitted with their mothers. Read the rules!" nodding over his shoulder at another printed card on the wall.

"Sir! sir!" began Tom imploringly.

"The Board's rules, not mine!" said the porter, cutting him short. "You'll have to take the child back, sir!"

"Here's its things," said the hard-featured woman, handing to Tom the few tiny garments that she had cast from the mother's bundle; the poor little ragged nightgowns and shirts that Mrs. Job had been at such pains to wash yesterday night.

Tom looked at Bridget, expecting her to make some sign, to burst out in passionate entreaty and tears, and, if entreaty and tears did not avail to gain entrance for her little one, to refuse, with the determination of which he knew she was capable, to enter the Infirmary herself. But, to his astonishment, she did neither of these things; she only went very pale, and an anguished look passed over her face.

Surely, not—now that he was to take the baby home, he thought she would make that last appeal to him that he had been expecting in the cab. He knew with what despair she would think of the baby in his custody. But Bridget said not a word; she made no appeal.

"Victoria Ward," said the porter to the two Infirmary officers who appeared at the office door, in answer to the bell, to carry Bridget away. "Now, sir," to Tom, "time's up!"

Tom, hanging his head in misery, held the baby out for Bridget to kiss, and as he did so, almost as if it knew what was taking place, the baby made what I may call the pitiful lip—mothers know it well—that is, when the tiny infant lips, pressed closely together, are drawn down at the sides, and the whole little face works with tears that it seems trying to suppress. Mothers rush at their babies then and hug them up, and kiss them, and call them all the "darlings" and the "pet lambs" in the world.

Bridget saw the pitiful lip and felt the keen pain of other mothers, but she made no attempt to take her baby. She kissed it twice passionately, with her eyes closed—she dared not look at it—and then, with a smothered sob, covering her face with her shawl, she leant back in the chair, and Tom saw her borne away.

Half an hour later Bridget found herself lying in a vast, light, high place, as wide and as long, it seemed to her, as Tripe Court itself. There were windows as lofty, she imagined, as the side windows of St. Peter's Mission Church, running from end to end of the whitewashed walls on either side, and under the windows, rows of narrow beds, as white, they looked to Bridget, as the driven snow, each bed with a head upon its pillow, and at the foot a little red shawl, folded square, giving a bright patch of color to the long, regular lines of snowy counterpanes. There were miles, it seemed to Bridget, of bare boards, without a speck on them, and down the centre of this wholesome floor, in the wide spaces between the rows of beds, there were placed at intervals large, spotless, wooden tables, having, as their one ornament, in the centre, a mug or jug of simple, bright-colored flowers. There was a stove at either end, and the air was pleasantly warm, though the large ventilators in all the windows were open. On the walls hung large illuminated texts, and pictures in plain frames representing scenes in the life of our Saviour.

Two or three old women, in gray almshouse clothes and close caps and felt shoes, were passing to and fro, fetching and carrying; and, more noticeable still, flitting in and out amongst the snowy beds, were two young women in black gowns and linen bib aprons and white caps, whose stiff little edging of gauffered frills set off becomingly the fresh-complexioned faces underneath. These were "Sister Anne" and "Sister Mary," nurses; and the place where Bridget found herself was the Victoria Ward, the largest in the workhouse Infirmary.

Here were gathered together all sorts and conditions of women, and contrasts of every kind were to be found in close proximity to each other. Here in this bed was the brown, battered-faced old woman, accustomed to sell apples and oranges in the street, balancing a basket on her head, her lips, nose and mouth all widened out in straight lines, as if the weight of the basket had flattened her features generally. There in the next a young, fresh-faced girl, an actress, who had fallen from a height in one of the theatres and injured her spine; in the bed next to her a degraded-looking Frenchwoman, whose language and behavior at times shocked everybody: next to her a silvery-haired elderly woman, who had been once, before sickness broke her—oh, the sorrow of it!—a governess in a nobleman's family. She was there, with all her instincts fine and gentle still; and wonderful memories of old grand times in the past—of which she never spoke. The nurses and doctors knew, however, she was different from the rest, though she lay between the same coarse sheets, and ate the same food and fared exactly like the others. There was her voice to tell them, for one thing—no truer indication of breeding is there than the voice—and there were her long, refined hands, and that subtle something about the gently nurtured which asserts itself without effort of its own, no matter what its company or what its surroundings; in the prison, in the barrack-room, in the workhouse, detection is sure. Next to the governess a wrinkled old creature they called "Biddy," a match seller, who had spent half her life in prison for drunkenness. She was eighty now, and blind and light-headed; so she was here; and so on.

A strange, mixed crew, representing nearly every class, and full, as I have said, of striking contrast—the old and young, the lovely and the unlovely, the murmuring and unthankful and the patient and grateful (very few of the latter), and almost every other contrast save rich and poor; only one of those estates was represented here, and that largely; everybody was poor, but nobody was rich. Poverty was the common ground on which everybody met; poverty had mixed them up together in this way, regardless of social distinctions and natural preferences. However taciturn and reticent any one might be about themselves, the inquisitive and curious about them could be certain of this much, that one, at least, of their ailments was named poverty. Poverty here was an accepted fact, there was no blinking at it or hiding it, and though in this case it dwelt in such a large, beautiful, healthy building, it made its grim presence felt in the deep undertone of sadness and discontent which pervaded the atmosphere of the place.

An Illustrated Work on the Unfulfilled Prophecies of the Bible, by the Rev. M. Baxter, entitled, "Forty Coming Wonders," may be had from the office of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 63 Bible House, New York, by remitting 75 cents. It is a book of 528 pages, is handsomely bound in cloth, and contains fifty full-page pictures and diagrams representing the scenes described in the prophecies of Daniel and in the book of the Revelation. It also contains a résumé of the opinions of other expositors, and extracts carefully collated from the works of all the most eminent writers on prophecy from the earliest ages of the Christian era down to those of recent date. It thus forms the most useful and complete guide the student can have on entering the study of that portion of the Word of God. The book may be obtained for seventy-five cents from any bookseller.

for the nobleman of a bad kind, in one of that lord's escapades, and was therefore in favor. My ancestor had peremptory orders to give all building work into his hands, therefore, and he did so, paying the whole year's account on the day after Christmas-day.

"One year, however, the old gentleman was absent on that day. His eldest son had decided to come to America to try his fortune, and my ancestor wanted to go with him to the vessel to see the last of him. He did not return until three days afterward, for travelling was slow in those days. He arrived home late at night and went straight to bed. Whether the agitation of parting with his son had affected him, or the unaccustomed travelling, I do not know, but that night he had a fit of apoplexy, and the next morning he was dead.

"Now the extraordinary fact was discovered that there was a deficiency in his accounts amounting to about three thousand dollars. For over thirty years there had not been a penny wrong, yet now there was this large sum! His widow was sure it would be explained, but no clue to the mystery was found. People shook their heads over it, and were afraid the old gentleman had yielded to temptation in his last days. The builder especially was severe. He wanted his money, he said, and he supposed the old man had given it to his son to start him in America. That idea was so plausible that it was generally accepted, except by our family, who knew that he was incapable of dishonesty. The builder talked to the nobleman, and convinced him, and the end of it was that all the belongings of our family were sold to make good the deficiency. All except that old bureau, and a few other poor sticks of furniture. The family name was disgraced, but every member of it was convinced that vindication would come some day.

The Discovery in the Old Bureau.

It did come, but not for several years, and the widow was dead then. The second son, my grandfather (the eldest was drowned on his voyage here), had a hard life. He clung to the old spot, because running away seemed like admitting the truth of the slander. He was a cabinet-maker, but work was dull; and one day when he had nothing to do, he determined to put the old bureau in good shape and sell it to help him pay his rent. He had scarcely begun his job, when in removing one of the shelves he released a spring, and a secret door in the back flew open. That surprised him. He had used the bureau for years, yet had never suspected that there was a door there. He looked in, hoping there might be money there, but there was nothing but a few papers. He took them out and examined them; then he uttered a loud shout of joy, which made his wife drop her work and rush to his side. The vindication so long expected was in his hand. A letter from the builder and a receipt for three thousand dollars showed that the old man, knowing that he would be away on the usual day of settlement, had paid the building account before starting on his journey; and the unscrupulous builder, counting on the receipt being lost, had concealed the fact. My grandfather was overcome with joy. The money was recovered, and that of course was welcome; but what he cared for most was the vindication of the family name. It was in that same old bureau yonder that the papers were found, and now you know why I treasure it."

A BITTER PARTING.

THE Infirmary, as I have said, lay quite a long distance off, altogether apart from the poorhouse, and in another parish. The way to it from Tripe Court was for many a mile through dingy streets and populous districts, with cartracks intersecting the roads, and omnibuses innumerable, and heavy traffic of all kinds, and a din such as only citizens know, but towards the end—the last mile or two—of the journey, as one got nearer the Infirmary, the character of the road changed, and the air seemed to get purer and the atmosphere lighter. One found one's self in a quiet neighborhood, full of rows and rows of two-storied newly built houses.

The poorhouse Infirmary was a brand-new red-brick building, having been recently erected at a great cost, and the site chosen for it out here on account of its healthiness and the cheapness of the land. It was lofty and vast, built on four sides of a square, and with a broad piece of ground all round it laid out in turf.

The windows were large, running from end to end, tier upon tier, of this great building, each pane of glass shining and clean to let the genial sun in when it shone, and each window having its ventilator for the fresh air to enter by. The Infirmary stood upon ground that was one of those "only the other day fields," and fields there were still on two sides of it, for there was no other building beyond it. On spring days, wafts of serene country air seemed to enter at the doors and windows, and the patients could see real primroses and buttercups and daisies spangling the quiet grass.

As Bridget's hack dro up to the gates, the su which had been tryi for the last half-hour penetrate the dull wint sky, suddenly shone ou lighting up the great an gular red-brick pile, whic towered so conspicuousl above everything else.

On the road, after the had left Tripe Court far be hind them, Tom, looking very miserable, turned to Bridget and expressed hi sorrow for what had happened, protesting that it should never happen again, declaring he would "cut" the drink, and begging her forgiveness.

Bridget was too suffering to speak much, or, indeed, even to listen. She scarcely heeded his words: those promises had been made so often only to be broken, and she had not the least more faith that they would be kept now. Tom half expected that to-day, leaving home and the children, she would make one last appeal to him; he would have been better satisfied if she had, for not doing so showed him how far gone in despair was Bridget's heart. He remembered the time when she used to appeal to him, when she used to go down on her knees before him and weep, and beseech him to give up that which was ruining him, body and soul, and making a wreck of their happiness and home; but that was long ago—Tom did not care to count how many years. Bridget never did s now; tears and beseechings she had found al vain, and she had learnt her sad lesson of having to work and to bear and to suffer in silence.

And yet another lesson: that one that has its fulfilment exemplified almost every day in our police-courts, when bleeding and bruised wives, egged on by relatives who think the limit of long-sufferance has been reached, come to take out a summons against their brutal husbands, but who are ready at the first sign of contrition—the first penitent word—"to make it all up," and to forgive and clasp the hand that dealt them the cruel blow overnight. Yes. Bridget has learnt the lesson of forgiving "until seventy times seven." She always forgave Tom, no matter how many times he transgressed in the week. And true to her old habit, she did so again to-day. Heedless of his other words, in the bewildering din of the streets, she heard his prayer for forgiveness, and, in token that he had it, she nodded her head and said, "All right, Tom."

The sun shone out, I have said, just as Jemmy Wiggles's cab drew up before the Infirmary gates, which were unlocked and opened by a man wearing a cap with "Gate-keeper" written on it, and who came out from a kind of sentry-box stationed just within. The cab, with melancholy party, passed through into th enclosure up a broad roadway that led to the main entrance of the Infirmary—a huge prison-like door, with heavy nails in it, and a grated peep-hole. Jemmy Wiggles flung the reins on his horse's back and got down from his seat. He rang cautiously a formidable-looking bell at the side, and, when he had done so, he appeared quite startled, for it did not make the little tinkle-tankle of door-bells generally—it made a noise like a railway-bell, and went resounding and echoing all over the place, and yet he had

The Emperor of Germany, His Eldest Son, Grandson and Great-Grandson.

THE HOHENZOLLERNS.

THE group depicted on the first page is one that is sufficiently remarkable to arrest attention. It represents the four generations of the German Imperial family, in the line of succession to the Imperial throne. In the centre the aged Emperor, now more than ninety years old; on his right, his eldest son, the Crown Prince, whose character and achievements have endeared him to the whole German nation, and whose mysterious affliction, whether it be cancer of the throat, as is feared, or some less fatal malady, has called forth public sympathy in a most astonishing degree. On the Emperor's left is his grandson, Prince William, the next heir but one to the throne, and on his knees the babe, Prince Frederick, the son of Prince William and the great grandson of the Emperor. Truly a most remarkable group.

THE most prominent events in the career of the aged Emperor of Germany stand in sharp contrast with each other. In his long life of ninety years he has passed through vicissitudes of the most momentous character, not to himself only, but to Germany and all Europe. He was born on March 22, 1797, and is the second son of Frederick William III., King of Prussia, and the grand-nephew of Frederick the Great. The first authentic glimpse we have of him is one of gloom and sadness. Its date is in the late October, 1806, when he was little more than nine years old. A dull, dreary day was nearing its close when a beautiful and noble lady with a few attendants entered Schwedt, a small town on the banks of the Oder, in the province of Brandenburg. She was flying through Prussia to the Russian frontier. Her first business on her arrival at Schwedt was to seek out another party which had preceded her. It was composed of a tutor and two boys. She found them, and the two boys were wrapped in their mother's arms while she caressed them and wept over them. The lady was Queen Louise, the wife of Frederick William III., King of Prussia, and the younger of the two boys is now the aged Emperor of Germany. The battle of Jena had been fought a few days before that meeting at Schwedt, and it was the news that in that battle Napoleon had defeated her husband and the Prussian army which sent with her two sons toward the frontier. "In the future," said the beautiful Queen, addressing her sons—"in the future, when your mother no longer lives, call this unhappy hour up in your memories. Shed tears over your mother's memory, as I now weep over the prostration of my country. But do not be satisfied with tears. Act; develop your powers. Be men, and strive for the name of soldiers and heroes." Not long afterward, Queen Louise died broken-hearted, but her words lived in the heart of her younger son. If her sight had been prophetic, even that hour, dark as it was, would have been illumined by a vision that would have consoled her. Could she have looked across an interval of sixty-four years, she would have seen the boy she was then caressing, a white-haired, stalwart soldier-king, returning in triumph to his capital with a Napoleon a captive in his train.

Queen Louise was no ordinary woman, and it is probable that her influence exercised no little power in the formation of her son's character. While still a mere girl, she had been brought from Mecklenburg, to become the wife of the Crown Prince of Prussia, and had been introduced into a court that was a perfect cesspool of debauchery. King Frederick William II., her husband's father, was an abandoned, vicious man, whose rule in court and state was directed by a bevy of mistresses, and whose life was made up of disgusting orgies. His example was followed by his nobles, and the whole court was vicious and corrupt. The young girl in the midst of this debauchery was preserved by God from contamination, and the home over which she presided was the one pure spot in the reeking court atmosphere of Berlin. In 1797 her husband succeeded to the throne on the death of his vicious father, and a new order of court life was inaugurated.

Those were troublous times, and the boy was early introduced to scenes of warfare and bloodshed. He was made an officer in his tenth year, as he is now the oldest. He gave proof of his intrepidity even at that early age, for at the battle of La Fère Champenoise he was intrusted with the conveyance of an order to the general in command of a division, and galloped with it through a hot fire of artillery, and won his first military decoration, that of St. George, by his bravery. After a short interval of six years, during which Prussia groaned under the heel of Napoleon I., the outbreak of war once more called the Prince to the field. With his father he crossed the Rhine in 1813, and for the first time set foot on French territory. With the downfall of Napoleon in 1815, his youthful military exploits ended.

The Youngest Member of the Army,

His Exile

in 1848 is another remarkable epoch in the history of the Emperor. His father had then been dead eight years, and his brother Frederick William IV. was King of Prussia. The troubles of that time were as perplexing as those of the preceding time, but they were of a different character. The people of Prussia were agitated by the general discontent that passed through Europe like a subterranean convulsion, and they rose in insurrection. They demanded that the promise of Constitutional government, given to them by the late King, should now be kept, and Frederick William, strongly supported by his brother, the present Emperor, refused it. The people then took up arms, and on March 21, after a fight in the streets of Berlin, in which two hundred and sixteen men were killed fighting behind barricades, the King surrendered. He sent away his troops, banished his brother, who was unpopular with the people, and summoned a Constitutional Convention, which assembled in Berlin on May 22, 1848. A period of anarchy followed, in which arsenals were plundered and outrages of all kinds committed. On December 5 the Constitutional Convention was dissolved, and the King and his ministers framed a Constitution to suit themselves. The King immediately recalled his brother, and commissioned him to suppress the insurrection, which still flourished in Baden and the Palatinate. He proceeded with so much vigor, that in six weeks the King's authority was re-established throughout the country.

King of Prussia.

In 1858 the King was seized with mental illness, and, he having no children, William was made Regent. Three years later the King died, and on January 2, 1861, William succeeded him. The coronation took place on October 18.

The most momentous step William ever took, and one that has colored every event of his reign, and has changed the history of Europe, was taken the following year. He took Otto von Bismarck from a diplomatic post, and made him his chief adviser. Since that time Bismarck has been the virtual ruler of the country, and William has loyally supported, and, in a sense, obeyed him. The events of the past twenty years are fresh in the recollection of the public, and only require brief mention.

Emperor of Germany.

In June, 1866, war was declared against Austria, and after a short campaign, in which William I. and the royal princes took part, Austria was compelled to make a humiliating peace. This gave Prussia the position she had long craved, of head of the North German Confederation, comprising twenty-two States, containing a population of twenty-nine millions.

The terrible Franco-German War of 1870-71, in which Prussia and France joined in death grapple for the chief place in Europe, resulted in the complete humiliation of France, and also in the realization of Prince Bismarck's idea of a united Germany. On January 18, 1871, in the Hall of Mirrors, in the Palace of the French Kings at Versailles, King William of Prussia was proclaimed Emperor of Germany

THE CROWN PRINCE.

THE second figure, in the order of age, in the group pictured on the first page is the oldest son of the Emperor, the Crown Prince Frederick William Nicholas Charles. He was born at Potsdam on October 18, 1831, and is therefore now fifty-six years of age. While little more than a child he entered the military service, rose to the rank of general, and held numerous appointments. In 1866, when war broke out between Prussia and Austria, he had under his orders three army corps, besides the Guard Corps under Prince Augustus of Würtemberg. The Crown Prince led his army of 125,000 men from Silesia through the passes of the Sudetic Hills, an operation exposed to great difficulties, and to considerable danger. After a series of severe battles, he reached the field of Sadowa in the crisis of the battle, and decided the fortunes of the day. His march from Miletin to Koniggrätz, and his series of victories on entering Bohemia, established his reputation as an energetic commander.

In the war between Germany and France the Crown Prince bore a conspicuous part. The close of July, 1870, found him on the Rhine frontier, in command of the Third German Army, comprising in all about 200,000 men and 500 guns. To his part fell some of the most severe fighting of the campaign including the battles of Weissenburg and Woerth. His corps also played a most important part in the decisive day of Sedan. With his cousin Prince Frederick Charles, he sustained the terrific onslaught of MacMahon's forces, and conducted the difficult operation of crossing the River Meuse. He subsequently assisted in the investiture of the French capital, and remained in the vicinity of Paris until the conclusion of peace. On October 28, he was created a Field-Marshal of Prussia, and on November 8, a Russian Field-Marshal. In 1878, when the Emperor was wounded by the assassin Nobiling, the Crown Prince was appointed Regent till his father's recovery.

The Crown Prince is exceedingly popular in Germany—how popular was not known until last year, when rumors began to circulate that his life was in danger. The report that he was suffering from cancer of the throat produced the utmost concern throughout Germany, and keen anxiety manifested ever since in his state. Medical opinion is still divided as to the nature of the disease, and hopes are entertained by some of the physicians that the growth which has appeared in his throat may not be cancer, after all. The noble qualities which have distinguished his public career have been conspicuous in his sickness, and his physicians speak in terms of the highest admiration of his equanimity patience and cheerfulness.

The Prince married on January 25, 1858, Victoria Adelaide, Princess Royal of Great Britai whose portrait appears on page twenty-eight, whom he has seven children, three sons a four daughters.

PRINCE WILLIAM.

The third member of the group on the st page is the eldest son of the Crown Princ nd the Princess Victoria, Frederick William tor Albert. He is nearly twenty-nine years ge, having been born January 27, 1859. It w be difficult to imagine a greater contrast of position and character than that existing ween him and his father. It is in part du his training. Both the Emperor and Pri Bismarck have repeatedly tested their dissatisfaction with the Emperor, who is a man of peaceful temperament, with a strong leaning toward constitutional government. The Emperor's belief in the divine right of kings, and Bismarck's high-handed domestic policy, have never had the sympathy of the heir to the throne. He is completely under the domination of his wife, the Crown Princess, who is notoriously the ablest woman in Europe.

The Emperor and Bismarck perceive that when Frederick comes to the throne, Germany will be ruled on the English pattern, and the Emperor will be a purely constitutional sovereign like Queen Victoria. They have never concealed their horror of the present state of government, and they have made the Princess's life a burden to her in consequence. Among other trials she had to undergo has been the alienation of her eldest son, whom the Emperor, under the influence of Prince Bismarck's counsels, exercised his right to control and direct the education of his grandson, who in the course of nature will wear the crown of Germany. Prince William has, in consequence, been taught to abhor the constitutional principles of his mother, with which his father has been imbued. The Emperor could not change his political views, but he has endeavored, and to a great extent succeeded, in molding his grandson's character on his own model. Prince William likes England, and things English, and will be a strong personal ruler like himself.

The young man has taken his position in the Bismarck party in the Reichstag, and there is no more intensely violent Tory Junker and partisan of that section, as opposed to the Princess's or English party, than he. Should the death of his father unhappily precede the death of his grandfather, and so he follow the latter emperor on the throne, he is precisely the man to answer any demand for increased popular liberty, as Rehoboam answered that of the ten tribes (1. Kings 12: 14), and the present temper of the German people, the two not be dissimilar.

Prince William's lot is altogether an enviable one. Though of magnificent station, with the prospect of being the most powerful ruler in Europe, he is personally the prey of disease and deformity, the disease which affected his grandfather, Frederick William IV., and which has afflicted in greater or less degree the Hohenzollerns, in alternate generations, has manifested itself in his constitution. The technical name of the part affected is otitis media, wherein the tympanum and the base of the brain are involved. The Prince is subject to abscesses in the ear, which, at intervals, drain off the poison from the system. Should a time come when the poison accumulates and no abscess relieves, inflammation of the brain will set in and he will become insane, or die a raving maniac. Besides this, the Prince suffers from a deformity. His left hand and arm are almost useless to him, the latter being withered, and it is only by a great effort that he is able, at reviews and the like, to conceal its weakness from public observation.

Prince William was married in 1881 to Princess Victoria, of Schleswig-Holstein-Augustenburg, a lady of very high character, popular neither with court nor people.

PRINCE FREDERICK,

the great-grandson of the Emperor, who, in the illustration on the first page, is depicted lying in a babe in the embrace of his great-grandfather, is too young to have a history. But he is of more than ordinary interest. The two lives which stand between him and the throne are both so precarious, and it is possible that the successor of the present Emperor may be the babe he is represented as nursing. In that case, Germany would be governed, during his minority, by a Regency, and a terrific struggle would take place between the two sections of the court as to the Regency. It is impossible to read of these trials and troubles, without thankfully recognizing the republican institutions save us from such difficulties.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

Trying to Buy Salvation—The Rev. Mr. Hood at the Glasgow convention, said: "Many years ago I went to visit an old woman. I took her some cakes, and read the Bible and prayed with her. Why did I do this. Because, I am sorry to say, my heart was not right with God, and I knew it; so I tried to win His favor in this way, just as it were trying to pay for my salvation; but it would not do. I had to come and be reconciled to Him, through the death of His Son, and since then I have given myself up in full surrender to Him."

A Ruined Marquis' Gratitude.—The Rev. Mr. Graham said: "A marquis who, by an unforeseen event, had lost all his property, but who fully trusted God, on being made aware of his loss at once dropped on his knees and said, 'Oh God, I thank Thee that Thou hast done, not my will, but thine.' God's will in this case, even though it involved such a financial loss, was acceptable to His sincere follower. Some people talk of God's will being acceptable, as if it were acceptable to God, but not to them. That is puerile. When we say God's will is acceptable, we should mean acceptable to His servants, to Christians who accept His will, even when opposed to their own, joyfully."

The Latch on Our Side of the Door.—The Rev. W. Haslam observed: "When I was walking in one of the London streets a short time ago, a Paris pastor came forward and accosted me thus: 'Excuse me, but were you not in Paris some time ago?' I said 'Yes, I was,' and then he inquired, "Did you not in one of your addresses there say that the latch was on our side of the door?' 'Yes, I believe I did say so,' I replied. 'Well,' he answered, 'I always thought it was on the Lord's side, and I kept knocking and knocking and knocking, until you said those words, and what a joy came over me! I lifted the latch and let the Saviour in. Since then all has been changed, my church, my congregation, my work, and everything about me!' And the good pastor was changed too. Oh, dear friends, remember that the latch is on your own side of the door" (Revelation 3: 20.)

Father's Welcome Home—The Rev. Mr. Hood remarked: "At one period I had occasion to leave home for a considerable time, and when I returned my two girls had just come from school, and, hearing me speak in the hall, they came down-stairs to greet me. The elder came walking down coolly and calmly without the least emotion, and kept her eyes fixed upon my travelling bag all the time, while her look seemed to say, 'I wonder what father has brought for me?' Her younger sister came running down, breathless with haste, and throwing her arms around my neck, she could only say, while she clung to me, 'Father! father! father! I am so glad to have you home.' I need not tell you which of my two girls pleased me most. Ah! I think that is just what many of God's own children do. They come too frequently to see what they can get from Him. Oh, let us no longer draw nigh to Him in such a spirit, but rather let us be sending up one continual song of praise to Him who has promised to withhold no good thing from His loving children."

False Props Knocked Away.—An Evangelist said: "There was a man who was in the habit of attending my meetings, a respectable, intelligent workingman, and who possessed good reasoning faculties. I knew he was very anxious about his soul, but I did not speak to him on the subject, for I saw that the Holy Spirit was moving within him. Sometimes he would go into a great passion, but still I did not speak to him. One day he came to me, and said, 'If ever I had props before, they are all gone now.' 'Thank God,' I replied, 'and if ever you rested upon props, they were all of your own making; they never came from God.' 'Now,' he continued, 'I want to know how to come to Christ.' It was easy to deal with a man in that state of mind. 'Do you believe in the Word of God?' I asked. 'Yes, I think I do,' was the hesitating reply. 'And you believe in the Lord Jesus Christ?' 'Oh, yes, I believe in Him,' 'But,' I said, to test the man, 'how can you believe in Him whom you never have seen nor felt?' He answered: 'Just because God says it.' 'Very well,' I replied, 'All you have to do is to receive Christ who is now beside us, for, "As many as received Him, to them gave He power to become the sons of God." Then the man bowed his head a moment and prayed. Then raising it again, he said: 'Now I know that I am a son of God. It was all false propping before; but now I trust firmly on the Rock of Ages.' That man has since lived an active Christian life, and only last week he addressed a Gospel meeting."

Turned Out by an Infidel.—After Climbing up a dark staircase, a missionary entered the back room of the top floor of a large house, but its infidel inhabitant, with abusive language, quickly turned him out again, Nothing daunted, the missionary repeated his effort to gain admission. On one occasion, finding the door ajar, the missionary observed the man painting a scene for a neighboring theatre, expressed his admiration of the picture, and of the man's artistic skill, and thus gave the first blow to his opposition. He was drawn into conversation and pointed to Christ. But the man was found to be a socialist leader, and a writer for several low publications. The missionary at length agreed to his wish that he should read a socialist print, on the condition that the socialist should read the "Gospel of St. John." The proposition was on both sides carried out. The man's rudeness ceased. He had become a student of the Word of God, and the Holy Spirit having applied that word to his conscience, his sin of six-and-twenty years was quickly terminated in the presence of the missionary and his wife by a lawful entrance upon marriage bonds. The man's hearty avowal then was, "I serve the Lord Christ, and must obey Him." He mingled with his former infidel companions, and successfully directed them to Jesus. They saw and wondered at the change, and the organized infidelity of that district received a check.

"In the Jungle."—A Careless Young Officer in India joined some friends in an expedition to shoot tigers in the jungle. He had a day's sport, but, in some way, toward evening he missed his companions and was left alone. He made every effort to find his way out, but all in vain. He fired off his ammunition in the hope of finding some guide, but without success. He then realized his perilous position, but determined to part with his life as dearly as possible. Night was fast approaching, so he sought safety from the wild animals in a tree. Before he climbed it, however, he thought he would pray for God's help, though it was years since he had ever knelt down for this purpose. The young man repeated the prayer learnt in early days, until he came to one sentence. "Forgive me all my sins, for Jesus Christ's sake." At that moment it pleased God by His spirit to recall to his memory, as it seemed to him, the long course of sins he had committed It seemed all spread out before him as in a panorama. Whatever he had said or done amiss came back to him in such a way that it weighed like a mighty burden on his conscience. The perilous position in which he stood, the consciousness that he might that very night have to face a terrible death, together with the instruction of early days, was thus made the means of awakening him to the sense of his sin, and of leading him most truly to seek pardon from God. This one prayer he offered again and again, "Forgive me all my sins, for Jesus Christ's sake." Then he arose from his knees, and found it was quite dark. But some rays of light and comfort had entered his heart. But a few minutes had elapsed, and he heard the sound of a rifle, He answered it by a shout, which was heard by the friends who had come to seek for him. Thus was he saved from danger; but he returned to his tent a far different man, and eventually became a true Christian.

THE WOMEN OF AMERICA.

Women Who Fight The Battle of Life Alone.

Dr. Talmage's Sermon, Preached Last Sunday Morning, January 8, 1888.

"Every wise woman buildeth her house." Prov. 14: 1.

Single Lives Better than Bad Marriages—Women who Support Husbands and Sons—A Union of Dove and Vulture—Celibacy a Necessity for Some—The Miseries they Escape—Girls Should Learn the Science of Self-Support—Why They Fail—Things They Can Do—Shoemaking Better than Slipper-Embroidering—The Unromantic and Commonplace to be Cultivated—Two Sad Sights—Learn to Provide Life's Indispensables—Women who Have Succeeded—The Daughter of the Regiment.

WOMAN a mere adjunct to man, an appendix to the masculine volume, an appendage, a sort of after-thought, something thrown in to make things even—that is the heresy entertained and implied by some men. This is evident to them: Woman's insignificance, as compared to man, is evident to them, because Adam was first created, and then Eve. They don't read the whole story, or they would find that the porpoise and the bear and the hawk were created before Adam, so that this argument, drawn from priority of creation, might prove that the sheep and the dog were greater than man. No. Woman was an independent creation, and was intended, if she chose, to live alone, to walk alone, act alone, think alone, and fight her battles alone. The Bible says it is not good for man to be alone, but never says it is not good for woman to be alone; and the simple fact is, that many women who are harnessed for life in the marriage relation would be a thousandfold better off if they were alone.

Who are these men who, year after year, hang around hotels and engine-houses and theatre doors, and come in and out to bother busy clerks and merchants and mechanics, doing nothing, when there is plenty to do? They are and mothers. If the statistics of any of our cities could be taken on this subject, you would find that a vast multitude of women not only support themselves, but masculines. A great legion of men amount to nothing, and a woman, by marriage, manacled to one of these nonentities, needs condolence. A woman standing outside the marriage relation is several hundred thousand times better off than a woman badly married. Many a bride, instead of a wreath of orange blossoms, might more properly wear a bunch of nettles and nightshade, and, instead of the Wedding March, a more appropriate tune would be the Dead March in Saul, and, instead of a banquet of confectionery and ices, there might be more appropriately spread a table covered with apples of Sodom.

The Dove and the Vulture.

Many an attractive woman, of good sound sense in other things, has married one of these men to reform him. What was the result? Like when a dove, noticing that a vulture was rapacious and cruel, set about to reform it, and said, "I have a mild disposition, and I like peace, and was brought up in the quiet of a dove-cote, and I will bring the vulture to the same liking by marrying him." So, one day, after the vulture declared he would give up his carnivorous habits and cease longing for blood of flock and herd, at an altar of rock covered with moss and lichen, the twain were married, a bald-headed eagle officiating, the vulture saying, "With all my dominion of earth and sky, I thee endow, and promise to love and cherish till death do us part." But one day the dove in her fright, saw the vulture busy at a carcass, and cried, "Stop that! did you not promise me that you would quit your carnivorous and filthy habits if I married you?" "Yes," said the vulture, "but if you don't like my way, you can leave," and with one angry stroke of beak, and another fierce clutch of claw, the vulture left the dove eyeless and wingless and lifeless. And a flock of robins flying past, cried to each other and said, "See there! that comes from a dove's marrying a vulture to reform him."

Many a woman who has had the hand of a young inebriate offered, but declined it, or who was asked to chain her life to a man selfish, or of bad temper, and refused the shackles, will bless God throughout all eternity that she escaped that earthly Pandemonium.

Enforced Celibacy.

Besides all this, in our country about one million men were sacrificed in our Civil War, and that decreed a million women to celibacy. Besides that, since the war, several armies of men as large as the Federal and Confederate armies put together, have fallen under malt liquors and distilled spirits, so full of poisoned ingredients that the work was done more rapidly, and the victims fell while yet young. And if fifty thousand men are destroyed every year by strong drink before marriage, that makes in the twenty-three years since the war one million one hundred and fifty thousand men slain, and decrees one million one hundred and fifty thousand women to celibacy. Take, then, the fact that so many women are unhappy in their marriage, and the fact that the slaughter of two million one hundred and fifty thousand men, by war and rum combined, decides that at least that number of women shall be unaffianced for life, my text comes in with a cheer and a potency and appropriateness that I never saw in it before when it says, "Every wise woman buildeth her house;" that is, let woman be her own architect, lay out her own plans, be her own supervisor, achieve her own destiny.

In addressing these women who will have to fight the battle alone, I congratulate you on Your Happy Escape.

Rejoice forever that you will not have to navigate the faults of the other sex, when you have faults enough of your own. Think of the bereavements you avoid, of the risks of unassimilated temper which you will not have to run, of the cares you will never have to carry, and of the opportunity of outside usefulness from which marital life would have partially debarred you, and that you are free to go and come as one who has the responsibilities of a household can seldom be. God has not given you a hard lot, as compared with your sisters. When young women shall make up their minds at the start that masculine companionship is not a necessity in order to happiness, and that there is a strong probability that they will have to fight the battle of life alone, they will be getting the timber ready for their own fortune, and their saw and axe and plane sharpened for its construction, since "Every wise woman buildeth her house."

As no boy ought to be brought up without learning some business at which he could earn a livelihood, so no girl ought to be brought up without learning

The Science of Self-Support.

The difficulty is that many a family goes sailing on the high tides of success, and the husband and father depends on his own health and acumen for the welfare of his household, but one day he gets his feet wet, and in three days pneumonia has closed his life, and the daughters are turned out on a cold world to earn bread, and there is nothing practical that they can do. The friends come in and hold consultation.

"Give music lessons," says an outsider. Yes, that is a useful calling, and if you have great genius for it, go on in that direction. But there are enough music teachers now starving to death in all our towns and cities, to occupy all the piano stools and sofas and chairs and front-door steps of the city. Besides that, the daughter has been playing only for amusement, and is only at the foot of the ladder, to the top of which a great multitude of masters on piano and harp and flute and organ have climbed.

"Put the bereft daughters as saleswomen in stores," says another adviser. But there they must compete with salesmen of long experience, or with men who have served an apprenticeship in commerce and who began as shop boys at ten years of age. Some kind-hearted dry-goods man, having known the father, now gone, says, "We are not in need of any more help just now, but send your daughters to my store, and I will do as well by them as possible." Very soon the question comes up, Why do not the female employees of that establishment get as much wages as the male employees? For the simple reason, in many cases, the females were suddenly flung by misfortune behind that counter, while the males have from the day they left the public school been learning the business.

How is this evil to be cured? Start clear back in the homestead and that life is an earnest thing, and that there is a possibility, if not a strong probability, that they will have to fight the battle of life alone. Let every father and mother say to their daughters, "Now, what would you do for a livelihood if what I now own were swept away by financial disaster, or old age, or death should end my career?"

"Well, I could paint on pottery and do such decorative work." Yes, that is beautiful, and if you have genius for it go on in that direction. But there are enough busy at that now to make a line of hardware from here to the East River and across the bridge.

"Well, I could make recitations in public and earn my living as a dramatist; I could render King Lear or Macbeth till your hair would rise on end, or give you Sheridan's Ride or Dickens's Pickwick." Yes, that is a beautiful art, but ever and anon, as now, there is an epidemic of dramatization that makes hundreds of households nervous with the cries and shrieks and groans of young tragediennes dying in the fifth act, and the trouble is that while your friends would like to hear you, and really think that you could surpass Ristori and Charlotte Cushman and Fanny Kemble of the past, to say nothing of the present, you could not, in the way of living, in ten years earn ten cents.

My advice to all girls and all unmarried women, whether in affluent homes or in homes where most stringent economies are grinding, to learn to do some kind of work that the world must have while the world stands. I am glad to see a marvellous change for the better, and that women have found out that there are hundreds of practical for a living if she begins soon enough, and that men have been compelled to admit it. You and I can remember when the majority of occupations were thought inappropriate for women; but our Civil War came, and the hosts of men went forth from North and South; and to conduct the business of our cities during the patriotic absence, women were demanded by the tens of thousands to take the vacant places; and multitudes of women, who had been hitherto supported by fathers and brothers and sons, were compelled from that time to take care of themselves. From that time a mighty change took place favorable to female employment.

Among the occupations appropriate for woman I place the following, into many of which she has already entered, and all the others she will enter: Stenography, and you may find her at nearly all the reportorial stands in our educational, political and religious meetings. Savings banks, the work clean and honorable, and who so great a right to toil there, for a woman founded the first savings bank—Mrs. Priscilla Wakefield? Copyists, and there is hardly a professional man that does not need the service of her penmanship; and, as amanuensis, many of the greatest books of our day have been dictated for her writing. There they are as florists and confectioners and music teachers and book-keepers, for which they are specially and Wood-engraving, in which the Cooper Institute has turned out so many qualified; and Telegraphy, for which she is specially prepared, as thousands of the telegraphic offices will testify. Photography, and in nearly all our establishments they may be found there at cheerful work. As workers in ivory and gutta percha and gum elastic and tortoise-shell and gilding, and in chemicals, in porcelain, in terra cotta. As post-mistresses, and the President is giving them appointments all over the land.

As proof-readers, as translators, as modellers, as designers, as draught-women, as lithographers, as teachers in schools and seminaries, for which they are especially endowed, of every child, by Divine arrangement, being a woman. As physicians, having graduated after a regular course of study from the female colleges of our large cities, where they get as scientific and thorough preparation as any doctors ever had, and go forth to a work which no one but women could so appropriately and delicately do. On the lecturing platform; for you know the brilliant success of Mrs. Livermore and Mrs. Hallowell and Mrs. Willard and Mrs. Lathrop. As physiological lecturers to their own sex, for which service there is a demand appalling and terrific. As preachers of the Gospel, and all the protests of ecclesiastical courts cannot hinder them, for they have a pathos and a power in their religious utterances that men can never reach. Witness all those who have heard their mother pray.

The First Teacher

O, young women of America! as many of you will have to fight your own battles alone, do not wait until you are flung of disaster, and your father is dead, and all the resources of your family have been scattered; but now, while in a good house and environed by all prosperities, learn how to do some kind of

as long as the world stands. Turn your attention from the embroidery of fine slippers, of which there is a surplus, and make a useful shoe. Expend the time in which you adorn a cigar-case in learning how to make a good, honest loaf of bread. Turn your attention from the making of flimsy nothings to the manufacturing of important somethings.

Much of the time spent in young ladies' seminaries in studying what are called the "higher branches," might better be expended in teaching them something by which they could support themselves. If you are going to be teachers, or if you have so much assured wealth that you can always dwell in those high regions, trigonometry of course, metaphysics of course, Latin and Greek and German and French and Italian of course, and a hundred other things of course; but if you are not expecting to teach, and your wealth is not established beyond misfortune, after you have learned the ordinary branches, take hold of that kind of study that will pay in dollars and cents in case you are thrown on your own resources. Learn to do something better than anybody else. Buy Virginia Penny's book, entitled "The Employments of Women," and learn there are five hundred ways in which a woman may earn a living.

"No, no!" says some young woman, "I will not undertake anything so as that. An excellent author writes that after he had, in a book, argued for efficiency in womanly work in order to success, and positive apprenticeship by way of preparation, a prominent chemist advertised that he would teach a class of women to become druggists and apothecaries if they would go through an apprenticeship as men do; and a printer advertised that he would take a class of women to learn the printer's trade if they would go through an apprenticeship as men do, and how many, according to the account of the authoress, do you suppose applied to become skilled in the druggist business and printing business? Not one!

"But," you ask, "what would my father and mother say if they saw I was doing such Unfashionable Work?"

Throw the whole responsibility upon the pastor of the Brooklyn Tabernacle, who is constantly hearing of young women in all these cities, who, unqualified by their previous luxurious surroundings for the awful struggle of life into which they have been suddenly hurled, seemed to have nothing left them but a choice between starvation and damnation. There they go along the street seven o'clock in the wintry mornings, through the slush and storm, to the place where they shall earn only half enough for subsistence, the daughters of once prosperous merchants, lawyers, clergymen, artists, bankers and capitalists, who brought up their children under the infernal delusion that it was not high-toned for women to learn a profitable calling. Young women! take this affair in your own hand, and let there be an insurrection in all prosperous families of Brooklyn and New York and Christendom on the part of the daughters of this day, demanding knowledge in occupations and styles of business by which they may be their own defence and their own support if all fatherly and husbandly and brotherly hands forever fail them. I have seen the one a woman in all the glory of her young life, stricken by disease, and in a week lifeless in a home of which she had been the pride. As her hands were folded over the still heart and her eyes closed for the last slumber, and she was taken out amid the lamentations of kindred and friends, I thought that was a sadness immeasurable. But I have seen something compared with which that scene was bright and songful. It was a young woman who had been all her days amid wealthy surroundings, by the visit of death and bankruptcy to the household turned out on a cold world without one lesson about how to get food or shelter, and into the awful whirlpool of city life, where strong ships have gone down, and for twenty years not one word has been heard from her. Vessels last week went out on the Atlantic Ocean looking for a shipwrecked craft that was left alone and forsaken on the sea a few weeks ago, with the idea of bringing it into port. But who shall ever bring again into the harbor of peace and hope and heaven that lost womanly immortal, driven in what tempest, aflame in what conflagration, sinking into what abyss? O God, help! O Christ, rescue!

My sisters, give not your time to learning fancy work which the world may dispense with in hard times, but connect your skill with

The Indispensables of Life.

The world will always want something to wear and something to eat, and shelter and fuel for the body, and knowledge for the mind, and religion for the soul. And all these things will continue to be the necessaries, and if you fasten your energies upon occupations and professions thus related, the world will be unable to do without you. Remember, that in proportion as you are skilful in anything, your rivalries become less. For unskilled toil, women by the million. But you may rise to where there are only a thousand; and still higher, till there are only a hundred; and still higher, till there are only ten; and still higher, in some particular department, till there is only a unit, and that yourself. For a while you may keep wages and a place through the kindly sympathies of an employer, but you will eventually get no more compensation than you can make yourself worth.

Let me say to all women who have already entered upon the battle of life, that the time is coming when woman shall not only get as much salary and wages as men get, but for certain styles of employment women will have higher salary and more wages, for the reason that for some styles of work they have more adaptation. But this not through any sentiment of gallantry, not because woman is physically weaker than man, and, therefore, ought to have more consideration shown her, but because through her finer natural taste and more grace of manner, and quicker perception, and more delicate touch, and more educated adroitness, she will, in certain callings, be to her employer worth ten per cent. more, or twenty per cent. more than the other sex. She will not get it by asking for it, but by earning it, and it shall be hers by lawful conquest.

Now, men of America, be fair, and Give the Women a Chance.

Are you afraid that they will do some of your work, and hence harm your prosperities? Remember that there are scores of thousands of men doing women's work. Do not be afraid! God knows the end from the beginning, and He knows how many people this world can feed and shelter, and when it gets too full He will end the world, and, if need be, start another. God will halt the inventive faculty, which, by producing a machine that will do the work of ten or twenty or a hundred men and women, will leave that number of people without work. I hope that there will not be invented another sewing machine, or reaping machine, or corn-thresher, or any other new machine, for the next five hundred years. We want no more wooden hands and iron hands and steel hands and electric hands substituted for men and women, who would otherwise do the work and get the pay and earn the livelihood.

But God will arrange all, and all we have to do is to do our best and trust Him for the rest. Let me cheer all women fighting the battle of life alone, with the fact of thousands of the day. Mary Lyon, founder of Mount Holyoke Female Seminary, fought the battle alone; Adelaide Newton, the tract distributor, alone: Fidelia Fisk, the consecrated missionary, alone; Dorothea Dix, the angel of the insane asylums, alone; Caroline Herschel, the indispensable reinforcement of her brother, alone; Maria Takrzewska, the heroine of the Berlin hospital, alone; Helen Chalmers, patron of sewing-schools for the poor of Edinburgh, alone. And thousands and tens of thousands of women, of whose bravery and self-sacrifice and glory of character the world has made no record, but whose deeds are in the heavenly archives of martyrs who fought the battle alone, and, though unrecognized for the short thirty or fifty or eighty years of their earthly existence, shall through the quintillion ages of the higher world be pointed out with the admiring cry, "These are they who came out of great tribulation and had their robes washed and make white in the blood of the Lamb."

Let me also say, for the encouragement of all women fighting the battle of life alone, that their conflict will soon end. There is one word written over the faces of many of them, and that word is Despair. My sister, you need who comforted the sisters of Bethany in their domestic trouble, and who in His last hours forgot all the pangs of His own hands and feet and heart, as He looked into the face of maternal anguish, and called a friend's attention to it, in substance saying, "John, I cannot take care of her any longer. Do for her as I would have done, if I had lived. Behold thy mother!" If, under the pressure of unrewarded and unappreciated work, your hair is whitening and the wrinkles come, rejoice that you are nearing the hour of escape from your very last fatigue, and may your departure be as pleasant as that of Isabella Graham, who closed her life with a smile and the word "Peace."

Appeal to Christ,

The daughter of a regiment in any army is all surrounded by bayonets of defence, and, in the battle, whoever falls, she is kept safe. And you are the daughter of the regiment commanded by the Lord of Hosts. After all, you are not fighting the battle of life alone. All heaven is on your side. You will be wise to appropriate to yourself the words of sacred rhythm:

One who has known in storms to sail
I have on board;
I hear my Lord.

He holds me; when the billows smite
I shall not fall.
If short, 'tis sharp; if long, 'tis light;
He tempers all.

A GOD-DIRECTED SHILLING.

IN a recently published autobiography of an earnest clergyman, not a famous one, but one who sincerely tried to do the will of the Master, and tread in His footsteps, the following incident is related: "On one occasion I had been visiting among some of my poorer parishioners, when suddenly I bethought me that I had not lately been to see one of the most regular attendants upon my ministry—a hard-working and God-fearing woman, Ann Davis by name. It was about 5 o'clock on Saturday afternoon; I was very tired, my dinner hour not far distant, and barely time sufficed me to return home punctually for the meal. 'I must go and see her on Monday,' I thought. 'I have not time to do so to-day.' Simultaneously, however, there arose in my mind a strange and unaccountable persuasion that I must pay her a visit, not only that day, but that very hour. In a few minutes, without in any way being able to explain why, I found myself standing at the door of my lowly friend's cottage, and knocked at once for admittance. After some slight delay, Ann Davis herself descended from the little chamber above, and I, already half repenting my mission in my anxiety not to be late, hastened to greet her thus: 'I can't stay this afternoon, Ann, for I am already late, but I had not been to see you for some little time, and I did not like to leave you so long without knowing how you and William were getting on.' Slipping a shilling into her hand, I was about to retrace my steps as quickly as I had come, when to my utter surprise poor Ann, unable to utter a single word, suddenly burst into tears. After she had somewhat composed herself, she related to me how her faith had been greatly tried that day, because her husband was at work away from home, and had failed to send her the expected post-office order which should provide for her and the children during the coming week. 'You see, sir,' she said, 'I have nothing in the house, and William had made me promise years ago that I would never go into debt, however much we were pressed. I was feeling low and dull about it, and had just gone up-stairs to beg the Lord to look in mercy upon us and send me something to feed the children with to-morrow, when you knocked at the door and gave me this shilling.' 'My God shall supply all your need,' involuntarily escaped my lips, and I then related to Ann how I had felt constrained to come and see her, though so pressed for time."

A CHINESE GATE-KEEPER'S APPLICATION.

A PRIVATE letter from Mr. Price, of Tai-ku, contains news of a remarkable conversion, the first fruit of the Shanse mission. Its publication was secured by the editor of the Missionary Herald. Mr. Price says: "Last Sunday (August 28), after the Chinese service, a man came to me and said: 'I repent of my past false deeds and habits; I believe in Jesus, and desire to receive baptism.' You will know how rejoiced we all were when I tell you this is the first application of this kind in the history of the Shanse Mission, and that we had been praying for this man for some time. In the afternoon the man came to my room and gave a very interesting and satisfactory account of his conversion. Everything connected with his experience showed earnestness, sincerity, and faith in the Saviour. Later in the week Mr. Clapp talked with him, and was delighted with his manner, and convinced that he had really passed from death unto life.

"This man has been in and about our mission for nearly three years. He was brother Stimson's gatekeeper for a long time, and during that time daily received religious instruction. At one time Mr. Stimson thought he was under conviction, but he did not have the boldness to come out and bear the persecutions he knew he would meet in serving the Lord. His name is Lao Wang. He has a wife and four children, whom he is now seeking to lead to Christ. He is a man of personal influence, cordial and free in his manner, and wins friends wherever he lives. He has a pretty good knowledge of Scriptural truth, reads pretty well, and I doubt not God will use him to bring others to Himself. Others will turn unto the the Lord, many of them, I confidently believe; but we shall never forget that the breaking away of the clouds, the first triumph of the gospel in this heathen city, was due to Lao Wang, who came out alone and confessed his Saviour, and thus became the first convert in the Shanse Mission."

A MISSIONARY'S ESCAPE.

THE value of medical work, in connection with missions, was proved in China during the excitement produced by the tension between China and France in the Tonquin war. Among the most prominent missionaries was Dr. Wenyon, who had charge of the Fatshan Hospital. He went to Tonquin during the war to relieve the wounded soldiers. He says: "I had a body-guard of Chinese soldiers, who watched me as if I had been a child. If I went ashore from my boat to pluck a flower on the banks of the river, they were after me in a moment; and, when walking through native villages and towns, they marched before me, kicking the pigs and dogs out of the way, and shouting to the people to 'clear the road,' making such a disturbance that I often wished we could go out for our walks alone. One morning, in the interior of the province of Kwang-si, Mr. Anderson and I managed to slip ashore without the soldiers, and at length came to a large town, which we entered. We had not been long in the town before we wished we were safely out of it, or that we had the soldiers with us. The people crowded round us in a most menacing manner, and the cry, 'Kill the barbarian devils!' was heard on every hand. Struggling through the mob towards the river, a tradesman standing in the doorway of his shop caught sight of us, and at once called out, 'Dr. Wenyon.' 'What!' I said, 'do you know me!' 'I should think I do,' he replied. 'You cured my arm at the hospital in Fatshan. Come in, and have a cup of tea!' That simple episode acted like a spell, and changed at once the conduct of the mob from riot and ridicule to order and respect, and we got back safely."

A PARALYZED CRIPPLE'S TESTIMONY.

MRS. M. BAXTER has received the following narrative, which she publishes in her monthly magazine, Thy Healer,* from a lady who, four years ago, was brought to Bethshan in an apparently dying condition, but who was healed there, and is now still living and in good health.

"I was brought to Bethshan by a man who never expected to conduct me anywhere but in a hearse to the cemetery. I had suffered for seven years, for two of which I was in my bed in great agony. This leg (the right) was withered; this arm (the right) was paralysed, and I had an internal cancer as well—that is what they said at the London Hospital. I had a doctor at home; but as he did not do me much good, I tried another. I lived at Wanstead, and was one night carried to Plaistow from Canning Town to a doctor there. I was taken by night, so as not to be seen. They all said it was a hopeless case. I was a Christian, and knew Jesus, but never thought that Jesus would heal me. I never thought such a thing, and never heard of such a thing, until a dear man who had been to Bethshan said to me: 'Mrs. Clarke, don't you think the Lord will heal you?' 'No, no,' I said, 'God's will is for me to lie here.' After this my daughter was one day sitting by the side of my bed reading the Bible and THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. She turned to me and said: 'Mother, don't you think it is possible that the Lord can heal you?' 'Yes,' I answered, 'I know He can do it, for He can do all things.' There are a great many who think that, but they do not try Him. Then, when I was alone with God, I said: 'My Father, am I Thy child?' I seemed to hear His voice asking me: 'Daughter, what wilt thou that I should do unto thee?' I answered: 'That I might recover the use of my limbs. In a moment after that I slept, and never woke until the morning, and then I felt well. I called my husband. I said, 'I am well.' 'Nonsense,' he said. However, I felt I was healed, and I went on trusting the Lord. Then a friend wrote for me to Bethshan, and a lady came to see me on the next Saturday. She said: 'You have been in bed so long; do you think you can come to Bethshan? Remember, there are no doctors or nurses there?' However, I came on the next Wednesday. My husband sent for a man to bring me to Bethshan in an arm-chair in his cart. He brought me to Bethshan, and two men carried me in, and laid me on a chair bed. All the people looked at me. I looked, as they said afterward, a dying woman. Three days after I came here, there was a lady that came and wanted to see me. I told her what the Lord had done for me. She wondered. But I had been to the Great Physician."

AN AFRICAN KING MOLLIFIED.

THE work in the West African field has recently passed through a crisis, which seemed at one time to threaten its existence. The danger and deliverance are described in a letter from Mr. and Mrs. Fay to the Missionary Herald. The two missionaries were visiting a village called Kuwa, when their camp was rudely broken up by messengers from the new king of Bihé. They were ordered to leave directly, and told that the village should be plundered and burned if they did not obey. For the sake of the villagers they did obey, and on reaching home received a letter from the king's quarters demanding "why the whites were running all over the country without permission," and ordering them to appear at the palace the next day. "We began to think," say the missionaries, "that we had caught a Tartar, so instead of taking fifteen pieces of cloth, which they had intended as a fitting present for a new king, Messrs. Fay and Sanders took twenty pieces and started for the palace. You may imagine their pleasure when they found the king a lank individual, apparently without much strength of will, and the Tartar element entirely due to a nephew of his. Against this fellow all the headmen are united, as he intends to control the king, and they want that duty themselves. This being the case, they were all ready to disagree with the king. The old man was therefore very meek, and only said he was glad to see the missionaries, and that their present was satisfactory. The headmen were loud in their protestations of friendship. Even Cisambu, who pulled up a fence-post to club Mr. Sanders the last time he was there, came to shake hands as friendly as possible. We hope now that we can keep on good terms with the chief."

A FIGHT WITH A BEAR.

A LIFE and death struggle in a forest is described in a press despatch from Gazzan, Pa. It states that two city sportsmen arrived there two weeks ago, to hunt foxes and pheasants in the Clearfield woods. When they stated their intention they were warned by the native hunters that they would find bigger game than foxes in the woods and had better be prepared for bears. The city men, however, ridiculed the idea, and said they did not believe a bear had been seen in those woods for a quarter of a century. They accordingly set out early in the morning with their guns and kits. Late the same night they returned in a most deplorable condition. One of them had his arm broken, and both had their clothes torn to ribbons, and the flesh on various parts of their bodies severely lacerated. They stated that, after penetrating the wood to the distance of five miles, they separated to set traps, and that while one of them was so engaged he was startled by the appearance of a large she-bear. He fired at her, but the light cartridge in his gun irritated the beast without seriously harming her. Then ensued a desperate struggle, in which the hunter defended himself with his axe. He succeeded in disabling the bear, but in falling she fell upon him and broke his arm. His companion returned, and in trying to get his friend from under the bear, he aroused the beast from the insensibility which a blow of the axe had produced, and she attacked him. He received several dangerous wounds from her claws before he succeeded in killing her. The young men admitted that it would have been better for them, if they had given heed to the warning of the men who knew the woods. They had been too self-confident. The same fault often brings disaster on young people, especially those who set out to "see life" in our great cities. They are overcome of temptation and fall victims to the great enemy of souls (Prov. 28: 26).

THE SEVENTY SEPTENNARIES.

By the Rev. John Storie, F. R. S. T.

Daniel 9: 20–27.

Daniel's Anxiety and Perplexity—He Had Studied Prophecy—Knew From Books That a Crisis was Approaching—Sought to Understand It—His Solicitude for His People—The Revelation of the Three Periods—I. Relate to the History of Israel—II. The Six Momentous Events to Occur in the Seventy Sevens—III. The Date of Their Commencement—IV. The Pause in the Continuity—Between the Sixty-ninth and Seventieth Septennary—Not Described Because Not Relating to the Jews—V. The Last Awful Septennary.

WHEN this revelation was made to Daniel, his mind was perplexed and anxious as to the future of his people. Questions are pressing on his mind, as a Jewish patriot and prophet, at once practical and prophetic. The seventy years of captivity now closing, are they to end the tribulation, the degradation and the exile of his people? Is the time come when his people are to be restored to their own land; God's covenant with them revived; and their city and temple rebuilt, to be the seat of the Messiah's throne and the glory of the whole earth? A future glad and grateful! Yet he knew that while the longing of his own heart, and that of a few of the faithful of his people, was toward the city of their fathers and the temple of their God, a second and a third generation had become rooted in Babylon, which was their birthplace. If their expatriation is now to end,

What Means Will God Employ

to hasten or constrain their return? Will He lead them back by the hand of a second Moses, or will the Messiah in glory head their returning bands? He knew that their captivity had not wrought that repentance which could sanctify them as the chosen of heaven; and how then could God fulfil to them His great promise; raise up from the house of David the promised King; and give to Him and to Israel the power and dominion now? He knew, too, that ere the kingdom of the Most High could be established on the earth, four great Gentile powers were to sway the world; that of these the Chaldean alone had fallen; and that three more—the last of them the basest and the worst, were yet to rise to trample and oppress it. What then—if the imposed captivity of seventy years is now to end—

What is in God's Future?

What for Israel? What for the nations? Is a second period to intervene of rebuke and trial, of rebellion and chastisement, ere His own people are ready for the Messiah and the nations ripe for judgment? And if so, what? And how long? Thus doubting, sad at heart, feeling his own sin and the sin of his people, in difficulty and in the dark, the prophet seeks light and guidance from his God; and in answer to that prayer he receives following, in respect to the future of his people, its crime and sorrows, the times of the Gentiles, the last persecution of Israel, and the final consummation: "Seventy sevens have been cut off upon Thy people and upon the Holy City, to consummate and end the transgression, and to seal up sins, and to cover iniquity, and to bring in everlasting righteousness, and to seal up vision and prophet, and to anoint a Holy of Holies. Know, therefore, and understand: from the going forth of the decree to restore and rebuild Jerusalem unto Messiah, the Prince shall be seven sevens and sixty and two sevens. The street shall be restored and built, and the wall (or fosse), but in the pressure of Troublous Times.

The Marvellous Revelation

And after the sixty and two sevens shall Messiah be cut off; and there is nought for Him. And the people of a prince—the coming one—shall destroy the city and the sanctuary and its end (or his end) shall be in the overflowing (that is of divine wrath); and unto the end is war, a decree of desolation, and He (that is, the Prince who shall come) shall confirm a covenant to the many, or the majority (that is of the Jewish people) for one seven; and in the middle of the seven he shall cause sacrifice and oblation to cease; and upon the wing (or over the summit) of abominations, shall come the desolator even until the consummation, and that which has been determined shall be poured upon the desolate."

I. Here we are to note that the entire prediction relates to the future of Israel and their city Jerusalem. Seventy sevens are determined upon Thy people and upon Thy Holy City. This is

The Key to the Prophecy

—and we are to observe, next, that the word rendered in our version weeks is in the Hebrew sevens, a simple numeral. When used by Daniel in a previous passage to express a week of time, it has added to it the word days: "In these days I was mourning three weeks, three sevens of days" (Daniel 10: 2). But at this time, not days but years are in the prophet's mind. "I, Daniel, understood by books the number of the years whereof the Word of the Lord came to Jeremiah, the prophet, that he would accomplish seventy years in the desolation of Jerusalem" (Daniel 9: 2). These years of the captivity are now ending: is the sin and chastisement of his people to terminate with them? No! The revelation now made to him declares; not yet; not at the end of this expiring seventy; not till the end of seven times seventy more. The words then are to be read, seventy septennaries, or four hundred and ninety years, have been cut off upon Thy people and the Holy City.

II. While these seven times seventy years are running their course,

The Six Greatest Events

in all time, the most awful in that conflict between heaven and hell, which is proceeding here, are to be decided. These are: first, to consummate transgression; that is, to fill up the permitted measure of sin and transgression; to concentrate and complete all that the powers of hell can put in force within the scope and limits of humanity; to bring to a final climax the supreme manifestation of all this in the rejection and crucifixion of the Son of God by Israel, in the final apostacy of the Gentile churches, and in the rise, dominion, incarnation and defiance of heaven by the man of sin. Second, to seal up sins, that is, to arrest, restrain and terminate the sins of men; to deliver the world from their presence and their curse: to bury them as in a tomb, and to shut up man's great enemy in the abyss, so that he may no longer darken the earth or tempt the nations. Third, to cover iniquity; that is, to so expiate iniquity by a great and adequate atonement, that it shall be hid from the sight of heaven. Fourth, to bring in everlasting righteousness; that is, to bring into this fallen world a righteousness, which is to put man in right normal relations with God, and to introduce that reign of covenant grace, during which His law shall be within the hearts of men, and His spirit poured upon all flesh. Fifth, to seal up vision and prophet, that is to lay them past, to store them amid the archives of heaven with the stamp and inscription as confirmed, authenticated, fulfilled. Sixth, to anoint a Holy of Holies, or, as the words may be literally rendered, a holiness of holinesses; that is, to consecrate with the unction from on high a hallowed city and a hallowed race, with a sanctuary that the Messiah is Himself to rear.

These are the six grand issues which these seventy times seven years are to bring to completion. They reach on in their course to the fulfilling of prophecy to the consummation, the regeneration, to the restitution of all things.

III. Of these seventy septennaries, or four hundred and ninety years, is given: the going forth of the command to restore and rebuild Jerusalem. This then is the date we seek; the date of the going forth of the command to restore and to build the sacred city which which gave the Jews again renewed existence as a nation, and a centre and stronghold in their own land. Of this decree the date is known.

The Commencing Date

IV. It is now to be carefully noted, that these four hundred and ninety years do not proceed, in unbroken sequence to their close. They divide into Three Periods.

There is first a period of seven septennaries, or forty-nine years; a second of sixty-two septennaries, or four hundred and thirty-four years; and then a final and severed period of one septennary, or seven years. The first period of forty-nine years probably covers the time of rebuilding the city and raising its walls. On this immediately follows the second period of four hundred and thirty-four years. These two together give an extended period of four hundred and eighty-three years. It begins with the going forth of the royal command, and ends with the greatest crime in the history of man. "And after the sixty and two weeks shall Messiah be cut off; and there shall be nothing for Him." This is the event that is to mark the end of that period; the closing event of that fateful time; the event that is to stamp a character indelible on this, the four hundred and eighty-third year from the date of that decree.

V. One septennary, the last, still remains. It does not immediately follow on the sixty-nine. It is held in reserve. There is of the times; a long pause—a pause that has lasted now for more than eighteen centuries, when Messiah is rejected and cut off by Israel, his covenant with them is suspended, and the times of the Gentiles commence. It is the suspension foretold by Hosea (Hos. 3: 4–5). It is the commencement of the parenthetic dispensation revealed to Paul (Romans 11: 25). During these long centuries there has been an entire cessation of God's dealings with Israel as a covenant people; as to prophecy, its voice is almost entirely silent; the Gospel has been preached to the nations; the Jews scattered; the city and the sanctuary destroyed, and wars have desolated the land.

In the days of Titus this desolation began; through all these Gentile ages it has continued, and so frequent have been the captures of Jerusalem, by Roman and Persian and Saracen and Turk, that the ancient city, buried beneath successive layers of ruin, is now found from fifty to eighty feet below the level of the soil. But this parenthetic dispensation is now surely near its close. This awful week, the last septennary of time, is about to begin. The Anti-christ will arise in power; the Messiah will be seen in parousia in these terrestrial heavens, and the events described in the Book of Revelation will be consummated.

CURRENT EVENTS.

The Treasury Statement Issued Last Week contains figures that should prompt patriotic Congressmen to an effort to reduce public burdens. Of the fifty-four millions applied to the reduction of the public debt during the past half year, nearly three millions was spent in premiums. That is to say, the Government paid that amount for the privilege of anticipating payments not due. Tax-payers who contributed to the surplus may wisely consider that fact. Their money has been used, not only to pay the public debt, but to pay the creditors of the Government a bonus to receive their money before the stipulated time. It is true, that the Government does not lose by the transaction in the end, because it saves the interest, but it is an anomalous condition of affairs, which cannot be continued without loss and inconvenience. The Revenue increased during the half year, over the corresponding period of 1886, by more than eleven millions, nearly one-half of which was in the Internal Revenue. The increase in pensions was eleven and a half millions.

The Admission of Four New States Besides Utah to the Union is pressed in Washington. They are the four Territories of Dakota, Montana, Washington and New Mexico. Of these, Dakota is fully qualified by population to become a State, but Montana, in 1880, had less than 40,000 inhabitants, and Washington had only about 75,000, but has been developing with considerable rapidity. New Mexico is believed at present to have no chance of admission, as it is stated that neither by the extent nor the character of its population is it prepared to become a State. The consideration that will weigh with Congress, however, will be the balancing of political parties, especially in the Senate and Electoral College.

The Speaker's Appointment of the Standing Committees of the House, as announced on Thursday last, has given rise to much discontent in his own party and among Republicans. Complaint is made that Mr. Carlisle has paid too much attention to the principle of seniority, and that, in many cases, a man has been reappointed, simply because he held the same position in a former Congress, though, while holding it, he demonstrated his unfitness for the position. It must, however, be remembered that no Speaker yet has ever succeeded in making up committees so as to give complete satisfaction. The strong pressure brought to bear on the Speaker, to change the Chairmanship of the Appropriation Committee, failed, and Mr. Randall is once more installed there. That appointment is one of the strongest evidences that compromise in the Democratic party is to prevail. Mr. Mills, of Texas, is made Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, which is a disappointment to Mr. Cox, of New York, and his friends. The appointment of Mr. Bliss to the chairmanship of the Committee on Pensions causes no little surprise; but the most extraordinary selection is that of Mr. Clements, of Georgia, for the chair of the Committee on Civil Service Reform. The significance of this appointment appears, when it is remembered that Mr. Clements has gone conspicuously on record, as an advocate of the repeal of the law. He was the author of the minority report in the last Congress, in which he boldly declared that the law was "at variance with the genius and spirit of our institutions," and expressed his conviction that the offices and their emoluments should go to the dominant party. New York has gained two chairmen by the new distribution, though she has now no representative on the two committees of Ways and Means and Appropriations.

A Remarkable Speech by Senator Sherman was delivered on January 4 in the Senate, which, it may be presumed, will become very familiar as a campaign document next fall. It was devoted to an exhaustive examination of the principles enunciated by the President in his message. Mr. Sherman admitted the danger of the gigantic surplus, but joined issue directly with the President, on the question of the best way to deal with it. He censured the President for his refusal to approve the River and Harbor Bill and for his veto of the Dependent Pension Bill, which he characterized as withholding "from Union soldiers appropriations made for their relief." He also condemned the House for its failure to spent money on coast defences, the increase of the navy and the commercial marine, for postal communication with the South American States, and for "the encouragement and support of schools." Mr. Sherman's plan appears to be to apply the surplus to projects of general usefulness, rather than to reduce taxation and so prevent a surplus accumulating.

The Great Strike of Miners in Pennsylvania went into effect on January 3. Over thirty thousand men and boys quitted work. Those working for individual mine owners joined in the strike, though the employers in several cases agreed to pay the rate demanded. The men replied, however, that it was resolved to bring the Reading Company to terms, and that could only be done by united effort. It is thought, however, that if the strike is protracted the individual colleries will be able to resume work, as the men will not be likely, in the depth of winter, to be obstinate in a purely sympathetic strike. The Reading Company stated, at the close of last week, that in all thirty-eight thousand of their employees were on strike, twenty thousand miners and eighteen thousand railroad hands. That would imply that ten thousand of the striking miners belong to individual colleries. The magnitude of the strike astonishes the employers and the public. It was not expected that the men would stand together so firmly and obey the order to strike so promptly. The fact, however, imparts some encouragement in the prospect of intervention. Many large consumers of coal, especially the iron works, must suffer seriously by a coal famine, and some will have to shut down. This will throw other men out of employ, and it is hoped that the men thus idle and the employers being losers too, will bring influence to bear respectively on each side of the Reading trouble, and effect an arrangement.

The Governor of New York, in his Message to the Legislature last week, made two suggestions of more than local interest. The first was, to change the date of local elections from the fall to the spring of the year. The object of the change is obvious. When both local and national elections take place on the same day, there is an opportunity for deals and corrupt bargains that smart politicians know how to use. It is notorious that, in more than one important election, arrangements were made by which large blocks of votes were split up, the politicians who were anxious for the control of the city and careless about national affairs trading votes for the national candidates in exchange for votes for local candidates. If the elections take place on different dates it will not be so easy to arrange such bargains. Governor Hill's second suggestion relates to court administration, and springs out of the Jacob Sharp case. He proposes that the Court of Appeals shall have power to sustain a conviction, if satisfied of the guilt of the accused, although admitting that improper evidence was received at the first trial. At present, if the Court of Appeals holds that the Judge of the Court below erred in allowing certain evidence to be given, it must grant a new trial.

The Socialistic Remarks of Cardinal Manning, which caused so widespread a sensation when cabled to this country last week, appear to have given as great a shock in Europe as here. It is felt that the Cardinal has given direct encouragement to acts of lawlessness. In contending that natural right to food prevails over laws of property, he has endorsed the principles of the socialists, and has given the sanction of his position and influence to robbery and spoliation in all cases in which the thief can plead hunger. The starving people of London did not need such an incentive to violence, and it may lead many of them into trouble with the police. The Cardinal's remarks will not be a surprise, however, to students of prophecy, who will recognize in them a sign of the times. The Rev. M. Baxter, and other expositors of prophecy long ago expressed their belief that in the last years of this age the Romish Church will be the ally of socialism.

The Publication of the Forged Documents which imposed on the Czar, took place last week. They are letters purporting to have been written by Prince Ferdinand, of Bulgaria, to the Countess of Flanders and other persons, stating that he had promises of Germany's secret support, and that, but for that encouragement, he would not have accepted the Bulgarian throne. When these documents were shown to the Czar, they naturally irritated him against Germany, but in the recent interview between the Czar and Bismarck, the latter denied the truth of the statements, and Prince Ferdinand denounced the letters as forgeries. Though the publication has had a good effect on the situation, it has not checked the movement of Russian troops. Cable despatches state that the Black Sea fleet is being equipped for active service. Four gunboats have been sent to the Kilia arm of the Danube, and a numerous flotilla of vessels designed for river service is being concentrated at Odessa. The formidable extent of these preparations gives rise to the suspicion that the Czar contemplates a sudden descent upon Bulgaria, while making provision for defence against Austria.

An Election of a Member of Parliament at Winchester caused some excitement throughout England and Ireland on January 5. A Conservative is generally elected by that constituency, but strong efforts were made by the Liberals to gain the seat. Large sums of money were spent in printing, and eminent orators, English and Irish, made speeches in favor of the Gladstone candidate. He also had the support of the Temperance party, as his opponent was a brewer. In spite of these advantages, however, he was defeated by the Conservative, who had a larger majority than his predecessor scored in 1886. The event has caused gloom through the Liberal party. It is regarded as an indication that the popular reaction is not so general as was supposed.

The Pacific Assurances Interchanged on New Year's Day in Europe are being eagerly scanned, and their value appreciated. Among the more important is the statement that President Carnot of France instructed M. Herbette, the French Ambassador at Berlin, to assure Emperor William that while he remains at the head of the republic of France, no French Government will be permitted to adopt a warlike policy. A despatch from Vienna to the Cologne Gazette says that William also received a message from the Emperor of Austria in which this passage occurred: "God grant that the unsettled political situation may speedily be cleared, so that our peoples may be reassured and the blessings of peace preserved."

Contributions to the Fund for Supplying colored ministers in the South with this journal, were received last week to the amount of $45.-70. They were from Philadelphia, Pa. $1.50; New Grand Chain, Ill. $1; Trenton, N. J. $1; Norwood, Minn. $1; New York, N. Y. $25; Centreville, Mass. $2; Marysville, Kan. $1; Sandusky, O. $4.95; Southport, N. Y. 75c; Seaward, Me. $4; New York, N. Y. $1; Nassau, Bahamas, 50c; Poughkeepsie, N. Y. $2. On behalf of the many ministers to whom these sums will be the means of blessing we most heartily thank the donors. We cherish the hope that the comparatively small sum now needed, to send the paper to every minister whose term has expired, will be received.

Especial Attention is Called to the Meeting of the New York Society for the Suppression of Vice, which is to be held in the Hall of the Young Men's Christian Association on Twenty-Third Street and Fourth Avenue, on Tuesday next, January 17, at eight o'clock. This will be a very important meeting, as the sneers and jibes of the secular press have been recently directed against the Society with renewed virulence, on account of the seizures of obscene pictures by Mr. Comstock. It may be hoped that Christian men will, by their presence, give the Society the encouragement it ought to have.

Dr. Talmage's Acceptance of a Military Appointment was announced last week. He was chosen to succeed the late Rev. Henry Ward Beecher as chaplain of the famous Thirteenth Regiment of Brooklyn. In the course of his letter of acceptance, Dr. Talmage said: "The honor would be appreciated by any one who has interest in good citizenship. I thank you for the high compliment, and accept the position. It calls me back to an office which I held twenty-five years ago in war times, when, as chaplain, I went out with a regiment from Philadelphia, and, for a time, gave up preaching and a pulpit, in that city, for preaching by a drum-head stand at the front, and mingled in the sad scenes of field and hospital service. So, I am glad that your call does not find me a novice for the position. I shall enter fully into all that pertains to the welfare of the regiment, and feel a joy in administering to men of all sects and denominations of religion, the boundary line between them so insignificant that I am at home anywhere."

An Indirect Reproof in Church and a Retort were overheard on January 1. In each of two adjoining pews of Grace Church, that morning, were a young lady and her friend. One of the young ladies was evidently not accustomed to attending the services of the Protestant Episcopal Communion, for she had no prayer-book, and made none of the responses nor changed her posture as her fellow worshippers did. This conduct stirred the anger of the lady in the next pew, who said to her friend, in a whisper clearly audible in the next pew: "Why do these people come to church to stare about and take no part in the service? It is scandalous." The lady thus reproved, who was not staring about, but had her head bowed reverentially, bridled up instantly and remarked to her escort that people who paid so much attention to others could not be taking a very heartfelt part in the service themselves. There is reason to fear that neither lady profited much by that service. The spirit of criticism, and the disposition to condemn those who differ from us, are violations of the apostolic injunction. (Rom 14: 4-7.)

The Mysterious Discovery of a Dead Æronaut is reported in a press despatch from Owensborough, Ky. A few days ago a large balloon was seen by the people of that town sailing overhead. Its shape could only just be made out, as it was so high above them. It was noticed, however, that it was descending, and some hours after its first appearance its downward course became more rapid. About nightfall it was so near the earth that its shape and general appearance could be discerned. The next day a party went in search of it in the direction where it was last seen. They found it in a swamp, ten miles south of Hamesville. They were horrified to find near the air-ship the emaciated remains of a man who had evidently been its solitary voyager. As there were no wounds or bruises on the body, it was evident that the man must have died before the balloon touched the ground, and his general appearance indicated that he had died from want of food and air. Who he was and where he came from could not be discovered. It is supposed that he lost control of the balloon, and it ascended to a great altitude, where human life could not be sustained. Many souls have been lost by an analogous course. Those who soar into metaphysical speculation, instead of devoting their minds to practical usefulness, are liable to lose themselves in their mental wanderings, and their faith perishes (1 Tim. 6: 3–5).

A Story of a Flag was Related to a Reporter of a Southern journal on January 3. The man who told it is a native of Nashville, Tenn., but during the past twenty years has been in business in New York. He spent the holidays in his native State, and was much interested, in going through it, by observing the various signs of improvement and development. He was especially gratified by the appearance of the thriving town of South Pittsburg, but he had one grave fault to find with it. The town did not show its patriotism. To one of the citizens he said: "You have not got a flag-pole in your whole town. The men down there in your shops don't know that there is such a thing as the Stars and Stripes, so far as you have shown them." "We've been too busy to pay much attention to decorations," interposed South Pittsburg's representative, looking around with evident pride at the business buildings that his town boasts. "Too busy!" said the visitor, "well I am not;" And stepping into a telegraph office he wired to New York for a one hundred dollar flag, and superintended the erection of a tall flag-pole in readiness for the arrival of the Stars and Stripes. There are many Christians whose lives resemble that town. They have been too busy making money to take their stand openly on the Lord's side. Christ demands of all His followers that they confess Him before men. (Luke. 12: 8.)

A Mutually Disappointed Bride and Bridegroom met at Castle Garden, New York, on Thursday last. When the steamship Bolivia, from Gibraltar, discharged her passengers, a young Italian girl, extremely bright and pretty, stepped ashore. She said she had come over to be married to Signor Pellegrino, a fellow-countryman, who was in business in Brooklyn. She had never seen him, but his aunt and her mother had arranged the match. Pellegrino and his aunt were on hand to meet the girl. The signor wore his every-day clothes, which, as his occupation is that of a cellar-digger, were not too clean. The aunt was a withered old woman of forbidding appearance. When the girl was introduced to the two, she refused to carry out her part of the arrangement. An appeal was made to the Italian Consul, when it was disclosed that Pellegrino had sent forty dollars to Italy for a wife, and the girl's mother had accepted the money, paying twenty-four dollars of it for her daughter's passage out. The girl is disappointed at not being married, and Pellegrino is disappointed because, having purchased her, she will not be his wife. He cannot be made to understand that his immoral bargain will not be recognized in the United States. It may be hoped that the poor girl will meet with Christian friends here, who can tell her of another purchase by One who so loved His bride that He purchased her, not with corruptible things, but with His precious blood. (Eph. 5: 25.)

Crawling Through Fire was the Way by which an engineer saved his life, on December 30, at Glendale, Pa. He is employed at the Glendale Iron Works, and, on that day, had to examine the interior of one of the large boilers there. He took with him a can of crude petroleum, which he placed in the boiler, near the open end, while he worked at the other end of the boiler. By some mysterious cause, the oil in the can was exploded, and caught fire. That end of the boiler was at once filled with the flames of the burning oil. The engineer crouched down in his end of the boiler, with his back to the flames, supposing that he could hold out against the heat and smoke of the fire until the oil was all consumed. The heat became so intense and the smoke so dense and suffocating, however, that he saw that he must either escape from the boiler at once, or meet with a terrible death. The only way was to crawl through the flame and smoke between him and the opening in the boiler. Holding his breath to avoid inhaling the flame, and covering his eyes to protect them from the fire, at last he reached open air, when he fell unconscious. Sometimes the only way to eternal life seems to be through an ordeal as appalling. It is so in the case of drunkards, morphia habitués, and vicious men, whose deprivation of indulgence involves awful suffering. Though they have a stronger inducement to make the effort than even this engineer, too often they do not realize its value, and shrink from the ordeal. (Matt. 18: 8, 9.)

BRIEF NOTES.

Mr. Philip Phillips, "the Singing Pilgrim," will hold meetings next week, January 16, 17, 18, in the Seventh Street Methodist Episcopal Church, New York.

Mr. Moody has promised to hold conventions in several cities of Iowa next month. Ottumwa, Burlington and Cedar Rapids are among the places named.

Major Whittle is commencing services this week at Fort Madison, Iowa. After the close of which he expects to go to Cedar Rapids and Marshalltown.

By the formation of Societies of Christian Endeavor from among the young people of localities in New England, a number of almost dead churches in rural districts have been revived, and have become stronger, than ever.

Dr. John Hall, in a recent address, called attention to the fact that there are 100,000 inhabitants south of Fourteenth Street in New York City, and eleven churches less in the area than there were ten years ago.

Dr. L. W. Munhall and Prof. and Mrs. Towner are laboring at Baltimore, Md. The results of their labors in Ohio are becoming more apparent since their departure. Large as the blessing was seen to be while they were there, its full extent was not perceived as it now is.

Reports from Columbia, Mo., show that the work of the Rev. H. W. Brown and Mr. E. C. Avis was much blessed there. At Fayette, Mo., also large additions have been made to the churches of all denominations through God's blessing on the services.

The evangelistic services conducted by the pastor, Rev. Francis Edward Smiley, at the Wharton Street Presbyterian Church, Philadelphia, have resulted in a great blessing to the church. The church is now too large for its building, and arrangements are being made for the erection of a larger one.

Henry F. Williams, lately State Secretary of the Young Men's Christian Associations of Minnesota, and formerly State Secretary of Ohio, has been appointed by the International Committee, its secretary in the Railroad Department of its work, in place of Edwin D. Ingersoll, who is compelled by sickness to resign.

Two American missionaries, laboring in Japan, would be glad to receive back numbers of this journal, if any subscribers have them to spare. The Japanese are learning English, and the missionaries find that THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is much appreciated by them. They may be mailed to the Rev. H. Loomis, Yokohama, Japan; or to the Rev. Charles Ely, D.D., 5 Ysukiji, Tokio, Japan.

The town of Wakefield, Wis., has been burned to the ground as the result of the playfulness of a monkey. Having been given the freedom of a theatre by the proprietor, the monkey about midnight applied the oil of a kerosene lamp to his hair, and then setting fire to himself scattered the flames, the entire building becoming ignited in a few moments. Within an hour the business portion of the town was in ashes.

Evangelist B. Fay Mills will open a series of meetings in Philadelphia, on Sunday next. Ten churches have united in inviting him—two Methodist, one Baptist, one Episcopal, one German Reformed, one Evangelical Southern, one Congregational and three Presbyterian. From February 20 to March 13 he hopes to be in Providence, where two Congregational, two Methodist and two Baptist churches have joined in the invitation.

Canvassers Wanted to Sell, from House to House, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Any man, woman or youth may easily add to their income every week by selling the paper in their spare hours in their own neighborhood. One man has sold one hundred copies on a Saturday. For terms address Manager of CHRISTIAN HERALD, 63 Bible House, New York.

SMALL-RAIN PREACHING.

"As the small rain upon the tender herb." Deuteronomy 32 : 2.

A Mighty Preacher—I. His Tender Sermon—Full of Doctrine—And Rebuke—Does not Black the Eyes to Improve the Sight—Declares God's Wrath—Jonathan Edwards Interrupted—Should be Done Tenderly—The Tenderness of Christ's Preaching—The Vigor of Man and the Affection of Woman Combined—A Model for Preachers—A Welcome Complaint—Difference between Irrigation and Inundation—II. A Penetrating Sermon—Hearers Needing Dictionaries more than Bibles—Ballooning in Theology—III. Results Expected—Means Adapted to the End—The Hit-or-Miss Preaching.

THIS is the language of the great prophet Moses: "My doctrine shall drop as the rain, my speech shall distil as the dew, as the small rain upon the tender herb, and as the showers upon the grass." We read of Moses that he was a prophet mighty in word and deed: he combined with his incomparable teaching an unequalled degree of marvellous miracle-working. He was equally great as a law-giver and as an administrator. This was found in no other prophet till our Lord Jesus Christ himself came. The other prophets were, many of them, mighty in deed, but not in word; And others mighty in word but not in deed. Samuel spoke mightily in the name of the Lord, but his miracles were few. Elijah was a great doer, but few of his words remain. The combination of the two was peculiar to Moses, and afterwards to him of whom Moses had said aforetime, "The Lord thy God will raise up unto thee a Prophet, from the midst of thee, of thy brethren, like unto me; unto Him ye shall hearken." Yet we perceive that this might of word, which dwelt in Moses, displayed itself frequently in a mild and gentle utterance: in the text, he declares that his doctrine should drop as rain, and distil as dew, and that it should be "as the small rain upon the tender herb." The highest power is consistent with the lowliest tenderness. He that is mightiest in word is mighty, not so much in thunder and earthquake and fire, as in a silent persuasiveness. God is often most present where there is least of apparent force; the still, small voice had God in it when it was written "The Lord was not in the wind."

I intend to make three observations upon my text. Moses says that his doctrine should be as the small rain upon the tender herb.

I. Our first observation is, Moses meant to be tender. Moses intended, in the sermon he was about to preach, to be exceedingly gentle.

He Would Water Minds

as tender herbs, and water them in the same fashion as the small rain does. He would not be a beating hail, nor even a down-pouring shower, but he would be "as the small rain upon the tender herb." And this is the more remarkable, because he was about to preach a doctrinal sermon. Does he not say, "My doctrine shall drop as the rain"? Time was when a doctrinal sermon seemed to be most appropriately preached with clenched fists. I trust we are learning better, and that we try now to let doctrine distil as rain, and drop as dew, "as the small rain upon the tender herb."

It is at certain turning-points of the road our duty to contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints, but we are to recollect that our contentions are the contentions of love, and that it ill becomes the man who holds the truth of a loving Saviour to hold it in bitterness, or contend for it with rancor. You will possibly think that I have been guilty in this matter, but I cannot make such a confession to any large extent. I have felt no bitterness; and when I have spoken forcibly, I have yet restrained myself from harder things which I might truthfully have brought forth. Yet, I regret that I have been forced into controversy for which I have no taste, and in which I have no pleasure. I have been driven to it: I have never sought it. To spread the gospel I should choose the gentler method: it is only to defend it that I have to draw the sword. Fight for truth, yea, be willing to live or die for truth; but if you wish to spread it, you will do it best by letting it drop as rain, and distil as dew, gently and tenderly, "as the small rain upon the tender herb."

It is equally remarkable that this discourse was

A Sermon of Rebuke.

He rebuked the people, and rebuked them, too, with no small degree of sternness. Yet he felt that he had rebuked with the utmost meekness, and had still been as the soft dew and gentle rain. Ah, brethren! upbraiding must be done in tenderness. Rebukes given in an unkind spirit had better not be given at all. Wisdom does not learn her exercises among the athletes, but among calm scholars. We do not black people's eyes to make them see, nor bully them into peace, nor kick them into heaven. To strive, and cry, and lift up, and cause clamorous voices to be heard in the streets is not Christ's way. Not a syllable have we to say against zeal, even when it breaks over all bounds of propriety; but it is the zeal which we value, and not the outbursts by themselves. We question greatly whether too often physical force is not mistaken for spiritual power; and this is an error of a mischievous kind. Dear brethren, it is well to observe this: that, though it was a doctrinal discourse, it was tender; and though it was a rebuking discourse, with Moses for preacher, yet it was "as small rain upon the tender herb."

Yet once more, in this discourse, this swan's song, this final deliverance of the great judge in Israel, he was about to

of God; for here we read words like these: "A fire is kindled in mine anger, and shall burn unto the lowest hell, and shall consume the earth with her increase, and set on fire the foundations of the mountains. I will heap mischiefs upon them; I will spend mine arrows upon them;" and so on. Never stronger, sterner language: but even this was made to drop as the small rain. And if ever there is a time when the sluices should be pulled up, and the floods of sympathy should flow, it is when we preach the wrath of God. I am certain that, to preach the wrath of God with a hard heart, and a cold lip, and a tearless eye, and an unfeeling spirit, is to harden men, and not to benefit them. If we preach these terrors of the Lord persuasively, we have hit the nail on the head, for what saith the apostle: "Knowing therefore the terror of the Lord, we persuade men?" Gently, as a nurse persuadeth a child, though in the background is the rod, to Jesus, till we win them. I remember one servant of God who could not help interrupting the great New England minister by crying out, "Mr. Edwards, Mr. Edwards, is He not a God of mercy after all?" I hope I should never, under any circumstances, give occasion for such a question. Though the Lord is a God of vengeance upon such as refuse His Son, and reject His grace, yet is He abundant in mercy, tenderness, and longsuffering, and delighteth not in the death of any, but that they should turn unto Him and live. Therefore let us give space for mercy to persuade while justice threatens.

We Would Woo Men

Now, beloved friends, if Moses meant to be tender, how much more truly was Jesus tender! The representative of the law aimed at tenderness: how much more the incarnation of the gospel! He who came with ten broken commands to threaten men was tender: how much more He who comes with five wounds, founts of eternal pardon, to persuade men! How winning is the meek and lowly Lamb of God! The Sermon on the Mount, I have sometimes thought, was such as an inspired woman might fitly have preached, it is so full of heart, and so exceedingly pitiful. For the most part, throughout His ministry, though masculine to the last degree, yet there is a softness, a pathos of love; as if in the person of Christ we had both man and woman, as in the first Adam at the creation. Jesus is the head of the race, completely combining in His own person all the vigor of the man, and all the affection of the woman. Oh yes, our Lord's manner was gentleness itself.

Furthermore, His style of speech was compassionately considerate, even as the dew seems to consider the withered grass, and the small rain to adapt itself to the tender herb. In His teaching He evidently thought of the feeble, and suited Himself to those depressed by grief. You find to make the speaker seem wise. There are difficulties about His doctrine inherent to the nature of truth, but they are never aggravated by His style. For the most part, in the early days of His preaching to the outside multitude, He gave them little more than moral truth, for that was all they were able to bear. It sometimes amuses me to see how certain "modern thought" men prove themselves to belong to the outside many, and not to the inner circle of disciples; for they take the Sermon on the Mount, and extol it as the summit of the doctrine of Jesus, whereas it was only His discourse to the multitude, and not such spiritual teaching as He gave to His apostles when alone. There were gleams and glintings of the divinely spiritual truth flashing out of the moral truth like flames from a fire; but for the most part He gave the crowd that which it could receive, and not that which would have been above their heads.

The Lord was very careful as to the manner of his teaching, and as to the matter of His teaching, too, even to His chosen. "I have yet many things to say unto you," said He, "but ye cannot bear them now." There was a gradual development in His teaching as He saw the minds of men were prepared to receive the truth which He should speak; from which method of wisdom and prudence let His disciples learn a lesson.

So we learn that Moses meant to be tender, and Jesus was tender. What else do we learn? Why, that all the servants of Jesus Christ ought to be tender: for, if Moses was so, much more should we be. I know there are many here who are preachers of the Gospel. Dear brethren, let us endeavor, with all our might, to be always considerate towards those whom we address. Let us think of them as tender herbs, for many are so in their weakness, sorrowfulness, instability, and ignorance. I am persuaded that when we preach, and assume that our people know a great deal more than they do. I am sure we need frequently to go over again the elements, the fundamentals, the simplest doctrines, of the gospel to our congregations; for, though there be some that are fathers, for whom we are grateful, yet it is true to-day, as it was in Paul's day, we have not many fathers; and we ought not to preach with an eye to the few fathers, but with an eye to the many children. We shall do well if the babes in grace are fed by us, and to do this our preaching must be "as the small rain upon the tender herb." We must try to the utmost of our ability to be very plain and simple, for many will not understand us even then. I was greatly brought against me the other day, to which I plead guilty, and I expect I shall plead guilty to it for many a day to come. Some one said, "Mr. Spurgeon gives us meat, but there's no gristle; he cuts out all the bone." They wanted a bit or two of hard bone, just to try their teeth on. Alas, many have broken more than a tooth over the novel teaching of "modern thought!" Now, I have never been particularly earnest, when feeding my flock, to seek out the poisonous pastures, just to see how much of injurious fodder they could bear without sickening. No; I have had regard to those who are not yet able to discern the differences in spiritual things, and therefore I have led them to those ancient pastures where the saints were content to feed in days gone by.

When I have been travelling, especially in southern France and Italy, I have come upon places where the river has burst its banks, and covered all the land with water: then, instead of blessing the fields, it has swept everything out of them, and buried them in mud, and killed the crops. There is a great difference between irrigation and inundation; and some preachers forget this. A sermon may sometimes act in that fashion to some of God's dear, tender ones; it may be a perfect deluge of doctrine, sweeping up by the roots those not very deeply rooted in the faith. God's children cannot all of them receive a mass of doctrine all at once, but they have a fine appetite, and if you give them time, they will gradually appropriate, masticate, and inwardly digest all the truth of God, so that they will be nourished up thereby, and made to grow. Let every minister of Christ remember this, and patiently instruct his hearers as they are able to bear it.

And so, dear friends, I will say one thing more upon this point, which is, let every Christian remember this, for every Christian is to try and bring souls to Christ. We are all to be teachers of the Gospel, according to our ability; and the way to do it is to be "as the small rain upon the tender herb." Perhaps, dear friend, you say, "Well, I should be small rain, without any great effort, for I have not much in me." Just so; but yet that small rain has a way of its own, by which it makes up for being so small. How is that? say you. Why, by continuing to fall, day after day. Any gardener will tell you that with many hours of small rain, there is more done than with a drenching shower.

Constant Dropping Penetrates, saturates and abides. Little deeds of kindness win love even more surely than one bounteous act. If you cannot say much of Gospel truth at a time, keep on saying a little, and saying it often. As you learn, teach; as you get, give; as you receive, distribute. Be as the small rain upon the tender herb. Be content to drop a word or two to-day, and another word or two to-morrow. Soon you may safely say twice as much, and in a week's time you may hold a long and distinctly religious conversation. It may soon happen that where the door was rudely shut in your face, you will become a welcome visitor, whereas had you forced your way in at first, you would have effectually destroyed all future opportunity. There is a great deal in speaking at the right moment. We may show our wisdom in not doing and in not saying, as much as in doing and saying. Time is a great ingredient in success. To speak out of season will show our zeal, but not always our sense. We are to be instant out of season as well as in season, but this does not involve incessant talking. I commend to everyone who would be a winner of souls by personal effort, the symbol, "as the small rain upon the tender herb."

II. The second head is, Moses hoped to be penetrating; "as the small rain upon the tender herb." Now, small rain is meant to enter the herb, so that it may drink in the nourishment and be truly refreshed. The rain is not to drench the herb, and it is not to flood it; it is to feed it, to revive it, to refresh it. This was

What Moses Aimed At.

Beloved, this is what all true preachers of Christ aim at. We long that the word which we speak may enter into the soul of man, may be taken up into the innermost nature and may produce its own divine result.

Why is it some people never seem to take in the word? I suppose, first, because some of it may be above their understanding. If you hear a sermon, and you do not know at all what the good man is about, how can it benefit you? If the preacher uses the high-class pulpit-language of the day, which is not English but a sort of English-Latin, produced rather by reading than by conversation with ordinary mortals; why then, the hearer usually loses his time and the preacher his labor. One said to me, "If I went to such and such a place I should not want my Bible, but I should need a dictionary, for otherwise I should not know what was meant." May that never be the case with us! When people cannot understand the meaning of our language, how can we expect that they can drink in the inner sense?

Ballooning in Theology

is all very fine, but it is of no use to poor souls down here below, who cannot hope to be allowed a place in the car. Many do not drink in the sacred word, because it seems to them too good to be true. This is limiting the goodness of God: God is so good that nothing can be too good to be looked for from Him. Many persons do not receive the gospel promise to the full, because they do not think it is true to them; anybody else may be blessed in that way, but they cannot think it probable that they shall be. Though the gospel is particularly directed to sinners, to such as "labor and are heavy-laden," and to such as need a Saviour, yet these good folks think, "Surely grace could never reach to us. Oh, how we lose our labor and fail to comfort men, because of the unbelief, which pretends to be the child of humility, but is really the offspring of pride! The small rain does not get at the tender herb, because the herb shrinks from the silver drops which would cherish it.

III. I shall conclude with this third reflection, that Moses hoped to see results. You may, perhaps, say that you do not see this in the text. Will you kindly look again? "As the small rain upon the tender herb." Now, observe, in looking about among mankind, that whenever wise men expect any result from their labors, they always go to work in a manner suited and adapted to the end they have in view. If Moses means that his speech shall bless those he compares to tender herbs, he makes it like small rain. I see clearly that he seeks a result, for he adapts his means. There is a kind of trying to do good which I call of doing it. When a person wants to water plants, and they are tender herbs, if he looks for results he does not drench them: that would look as if he had no real object, but simply went through a piece of routine. Moses meant what he was doing. Finding the people to be comparable to tender herbs, he adapted his speech to them, and made it like the small rain. Now, what will be the result if we do the same? Why, brethren, when a man's discourse is like small rain to the tender herb, he sees the weak and perishing one revive and lift up his head. The herb was withering at first, it lay down as you see a newly planted thing do, faint and ready to die; but the small rain came, and it seemed to say, "Thank you," and it looked up, and lifted its head, and recovered from its swoon. You will see a reviving effect produced upon faint hearts and desponding minds. You will be a comforter, you will cheer away the fears of many, and make glad the timid and fearful. What a blessing it is when you see that result, for there is so much the more joy in the world, and God is so much the more glorified!

When you water tender herbs, and see them grow, you have a reward. It is delightful to and increase of grace in those who are under our care. This has been an exceedingly sweet pleasure to me. I quote my own instance, because I have no doubt it is repeated in many of you. It has been a great delight to me to meet men serving God, and preaching the gospel gloriously, who were once young converts, and needed my fostering care. I know men, deacons of churches, fathers in Israel, that I recollect talking to twenty or twenty-five years ago, when they could not speak a word for Jesus, for they were not assured of their own salvation. I rejoice to see them leaders of the flock, whereas once they were poor, feeble lambs. I carried them in my bosom, and now they might almost carry me. I am glad enough to learn from them, and sit at their feet.

Once more, we water plants that we may see them bring forth fruit and become fit for use So shall we see those whom God blesses by our means become a joy to the Lord Himself, yielding fruits of holiness, patience and obedience, such as Jesus Christ delights in. Let us quit clouds and skies, and condescend to men of low estate. Let us come down from communing with the philosophers of culture, and the apostles of a new theology, to the ordinary people who live around us, and cannot comprehend these fine fictions. Let us come down to the streets and lanes, and do what we can for the poor, the fallen, the ignorant. Let us go with Jesus, in the gentleness and sweetness of His divine compassion, to the little children in years, and the babes in grace. So shall we be like Moses; so shall we be, better still, like the Lamb of God, to whose name be glory for ever and ever. Amen.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

THE DYING 'LONGSHOREMAN.*

I HEARD a brother minister tell a story of a poor, ignorant 'longshoreman, whom he visited on his dying-bed, and who was tormented by the thought of the grave, and of the fearful change which would pass upon his poor body. The minister quoted to him, "I will write upon him My new name," and, "His name shall be in their foreheads." A light came into his eyes. His harsh features were glorified. "I'm going, then," said he, "into the next world like a new-born baby; and God, He is my father; and He'll christen me with a new name; and He'll name me after Himself, just as if I'd never lived before; and neither saints nor devils will know anything of old John and his sins." And then, raising himself with the remnant of his fast failing strength and lifting his hands, he cried out, "O, but that's glorious! I thank my God!" Brethren, death has not been a curse if it has enabled you to say, "Therefore will I remember Thee."

So, then, the past is behind us. The dawn of the New-Year reddens the hill-tops. As we look back, let us remember God. How can we help it as we review this year, so crowded with His mercies? I had almost said, how can we remember anything else? We are wishing each other "A Happy New-Year." We have its happiness in our own hands. We have only to put our hand in God's and the thing is done.

The Single-Handed Struggle.

On a lonely road a man is wont to take up with whatever companion he can find; and if God set you to walk that lonely path of yours so that you might find and walk with Him, you know whether He did you a service or not. You know whether the days when you had no company but God were the most miserable days of your life. Sometimes in your travels you have found in the chance acquaintance of your solitary days a man so true and wise and helpful, that you have even changed your own route that you might journey farther in his company; and it would not be strange if, when you had come into days more fruitful in companionship and in kindly ministries of men to yourself, you should have said to the Divine Friend of your lonely hours, "Abide with me. If thy presence go not with me, carry me not up hence." In your retrospect of your lonely days, and of your single-handed struggle, as you are pleased to call it, the first prompting of your heart is to say, "I will remember Thee."

Arithmetic in Church.

A Scotch youth was telling his companion his experience in the study of arithmetic. Says he: "I plagued the master sore with wanting to understand everything before I could go on with my sums. Says he one day, 'My man, if you will aye understand afore ye do as ye're tell't, ye'll never understand anything; but if ye do the thing as I tell ye, ye'll be in the midst of it afore ye know ye're goin' into it.' I just thought I would try him. It was long division that I boglet most. Well, I went on, and I could do the thing well enough, and aye I thought the master was wrong, for I never knew the reason of all that beginning at the wrong end, and takin' down the substractin' and all that, you would hardly believe it, it was only this very day I was sitting in the kirk. It was a long psalm they were singing: long division came into my head again, and first one bit glimmering of light came in, and soon another and before the psalm was done I saw through the whole process of it. But, you see, if I had not done as I was told, and learned all about how it was done beforehand, I should have had nothing to go reasoning about, and would have found out nothing."

I think about the whole matter is contained in that little story. You will acquire divine knowledge in the same way as you acquire human knowledge, by the road of obedience. So many fail because they do not like to obey without knowing the reason why. They want God to deal with them as equals, not as inferiors. To follow this line of implicit obedience is to become children; and that, they think, is not dignified. But there is no other way so far as I know. Christ allows no other way, "Except ye become as little children ye cannot enter into the kingdom of God." No man ever understands the Bible until he has honestly tried to live it.

THE CROWN PRINCESS OF GERMANY.

(See Portrait.)

THE difficult position occupied by this beautiful and able lady is described in the sketch of her husband (on page 18). All who know her, even h r enemies, acknowledge her remarkable abilities and the majestic force of her character. A distinguished writer, who has had ample opportunities of forming an opinion, says she is clever, learned, and has diplomatic skill equal if not superior to Prince Bismarck himself, who is her great antagonist. In the contest between them she is entitled to our sympathy, for the principles which have brought her into conflict with the Chancellor and the Court are the principles of constitutional liberty and the recognition of popular rights.

The Crown Princess is the eldest daughter of the Queen of England. She was born November 21, 1840, and is now therefore in her forty-eighth year. Her education was conducted under the personal supervision of her father, Prince Albert, but she showed early in life a marked independence of character, and while following the lines of reading and study he marked out for her, made excursions on her own account into other fields of literature, which saved her from the narrowness of mind which characterized him. She is a most admirable wife and mother, and her husband's devotion to her is almost worship.

THE VILLA ZIRIO, SAN REMO.

THE CROWN PRINCE'S PRESENT RESIDENCE.

(See Illustration.)

THERE is no difference of opinion among the Crown Prince's physicians as to the importance of his breathing the mildest and most salubrious air, in his present condition. He has, therefore, on their advice, gone to San Remo, a town in the north of Italy, on the shores of the Mediterranean, where he occupies the Villa Zirio, formerly the residence of the Duke d'Aosta.

The Villa Zirio is truly a delightful residence. It is surrounded with palm and orange trees, and Oriental vegetation, and the place is illuminated and warmed by continued sunshine, while the health-giving breezes from the Mediterranean are wafted through its open windows. There with his devoted wife, his younger children, and about thirty attendants, the Prince is spending the winter.

SIR MORELL MACKENZIE, M. D.,

THE CROWN PRINCE'S PHYSICIAN.

(See Portrait).

THE responsibility of a physician was never more clearly perceived, than it is in the person of the distinguished specialist, whose portrait appears on this page. When the Crown Prince of Germany was first seized with the affection of the throat, the most eminent physicians in the Fatherland pronounced his malady cancer, and advised an operation, which would have destroyed his voice and might have killed him. They believed, however, that his life would have been saved to his country by the operation. If the operation was not performed, then they said he must surely die. The Crown Princess naturally shrank from subjecting her husband to treatment which must make him dumb for life, and might precipitate the calamity it was intended to avert. She therefore summoned Dr. Mackenzie, the English physician, and under his advice, the operation was not performed. The German doctors denounce both him and the Crown Princess, and declare that the only chance of prolonging the Crown Prince's life has been rejected. Still, Dr. Mackenzie remains calm and confident, and it remains to be seen whether the result will justify him or the German doctors.

Dr. Mackenzie is not so young as he looks. He was born in 1837, and is therefore, now fifty-one years of age. He received his professional education at the London Hospital Medical College, and afterwards studied in Paris and Vienna. As a student, he had a most brilliant and successful career. In 1863, he founded the Hospital for Diseases of the Throat, in London, and in the same year obtained the Jacksonian Prize from the Royal College of Surgeons, for an essay on Diseases of the Larynx. He was soon afterwards elected assistant-physician to the London Hospital, becoming in due course full physician, and was appointed Lecturer on Diseases of the Throat, an appointment which he still holds. Dr. Mackenzie visited this country in 1882. While in Washington, he was the guest of Dr. Carroll Morgan, of that city. In a recent interview, Dr. Morgan described Dr. Mackenzie as "cool, keen, intellectual and ambitious, of perfect self-possession and great skill.

HAZELTINE'S REMORSE.

IN the early morning hours of a winter's day a young man quitted the office of a daily journal, and, without staying to join in the conversation of his brother scribes, around the city editor's desk, hurried down stairs into the street. He could not restrain his impatience for his car to start, and when it reached the nearest point to his home, he swung himself off and ran as for his life. He stopped at a little frame house, in which an upper window was brilliantly lighted, and was admitted by an old woman, whose garb plainly told that she was a hired nurse.

"How is she now?" was his eager question.

"No better, Mr. Hazeltine," was the old woman's reply. "Just talk, talk, talk, all the time; furrin language mostly, and always as fast as her tongue can go."

The young man addressed as Mr. Hazeltine hurried up-stairs, and stood beside the bed of the sufferer. She was his wife, and as he looked down at the flushed face and beautiful disordered hair, a look of unutterable anguish passed across his face.

"Doctor said nothing more could be done," said the nurse, who had come in and stood beside the distracted husband. "He's coming in again in the morning, but, seems to me, she wont live to see him."

"I'll just go and get a wash, nurse," said Mr. Hazeltine, "and then I'll come and relieve you. I guess you are tired."

"No more than you be, sir; you must be most weared out, work and watch all the time; you'll kill yourself."

"Oh, don't mind me; I shall be all right if she lives."

He went into another room and tried, by the copious application of cold water, to refresh himself for his watch by the sufferer's bed. On his way back to the room, he stopped suddenly, and returned. Shutting the door he knelt down and prayed earnestly. It was more than three years since he had prayed, and now it seemed less like prayer than agonizing self-abasement—wrestling like Jacob's that anxious night by the brook Jabbok. How much he had to confess and deplore! Three years before that night he was a student, preparing for the work of the ministry. Full of hope and energy, a young man of great promise, from whom the professors of his college and his many friends expected great things, he had gone to a famous health resort for a brief rest and recuperation, before entering upon his life work. There he fell under the fascination of a beautiful woman, whose loveliness of form and feature dazzled him and infatuated him. His one passion was a love of music, and the lady was an acomplished musician. This riveted his chains, and when, joined with her musical talents, she showed much sparkling wit and brilliant conversational power, he became her slave, He exerted himself to win her favor, and succeeded. Without knowing anything of her antecedents, or any more of her personally than he had seen in a few brief weeks, he married her. It all seemed like a dream, so rapidly had his passion carried him along.

A few days convinced him that the work to which he had consecrated his life was no longer possible. His wife was not only irreligious, but a scoffer. Yet her personal charms held him captive, and, for her sake, he proved false to his God. He easily secured a position on a city newspaper, where his talents secured him a good income, and, giving up prayer and all religious observances, he abandoned himself blindly to a life of pleasure.

That was Hazeltine's past. It lay stretched before his mental gaze, in those chill morning hours, in all its hideous shame and wickedness. He loved his wife, ah, how dearly! Yet she was dying now, and he had never tried to win her to Christ. Nay, more: by his example he had confirmed her in her contempt for religion and her disbelief in its power. This agony was his punishment, and it was almost more than he could bear. He rose, at last, and with a blanched face went to the room in which his wife lay, hovering between life and death. The rapid, delirious talk had ceased when he entered, and the beautiful face lay still in exhaustion on the pillow. It was a sad scene; even the hired nurse was shedding tears. It seemed as if every breath must be the last.

"I am going to pray for her, nurse," said the young husband. "God alone can save her."

The old woman covered her face, and Hazeltine, taking one of his wife's hands in his own, knelt down and prayed earnestly that God would recall the fleeting spirit, that opportunity might yet be given for repentance and regeneration. Never, in his life, had his whole soul been so poured out in agonizing pleading, and when he rose, it was with a firm conviction that his prayer was answered. Almost before he had regained his feet, his wife opened her eyes and looked at him. For the first time in many days he saw there the light of recognition. The crisis was past.

Hazeltine's Prayer in the Crisis of His Wife's Illness.

Very tenderly and lovingly Hazeltine nursed his wife back to life. He told her of the prayer which preceded the change in her illness, and she was awed. He told her, too, as he had not done before, his own history, and of the terrible backsliding of his life. Whether it was harder for the backsliding husband or the irreligious wife to enter into life with God, it would not be easy to say. They both sought forgiveness, humbly and earnestly, and to all who so seek, it is not denied.

By Brenda.

CHARITY'S CHILDREN.

BRIDGET had never lived before in any place so grand and clean and healthy as the Infirmary, yet she heard more murmuring and saw more discontent there than she had ever done in Tripe Court. It was a new experience to her, as to many more under that roof, though there were some who had been there for years, and would never leave it until they were carried to the grave. She was no philosopher, only a poor hard-working woman, yet she was gifted with a woman's penetration, and perceived the truth that philosophers have always insisted upon, that human felicity does not depend so much on outward circumstances as on the disposition of the man or woman. There are some who bear their ills so cheerfully, and are so thankful for the mercies they have, that they are happier than others whose lot is almost without a cross. So it was in the Infirmary. It was not the greatest sufferers nor the most hopeless who repined most.

Content was found here and there, it is true, but they were isolated cases: discontent was the rule of this great almshouse hospital. Dire necessity had brought nearly everybody under its broad roof. They had fought against coming till the brokers at home had seized the bed underneath them, till the last crust had been eaten, till the last penny had been spent, till their last friend had deserted them, till, as in Bridget's case, they were unable to do another stroke of work; and though, in comparison to the home they had left, the Infirmary was almost a palace, and its food sumptuous to the starvation fare they had left behind them, there were few who would not have returned to that home if they could, with all its squalor and all its misery and all its starvation, just because it was home.

This Infirmary was a beautiful place; what could they want better as a residence? Why, some people wondered, could not they settle down, and accept it as home? Yes, but places do not make homes; homes are made up of loved, familiar presences; of little children's prattle and sweet caresses; of little hopes, little joys, little troubles, little disappointments, and all the greater vicissitudes of life, shared with and borne by hearts whose sympathies and interests are identical with our own. The people here found themselves in a palace of strangers, and therefore did not feel it to be a palace, much less a home, but rather a place of punishment, into which the hard treatment of an unkind world had at last forced them. And so the greater number of them lay with sore, rebellious hearts, murmuring against God's decrees and chastisements, and longing, oh, longing so! to be back in the little old, dirty, familiar spot, where the frosts used to bite them, and hunger pinch them; yet it was home.

Bridget Mite, laundress, was, like all the rest, unreconciled to the parish's magnificent hospitality, deeply lonely in its crowd, and feeling exactly as if she had come to a place of punishment. Parted from her baby—the most dreadful thing that could possibly happen to her, she thought—poor Bridget felt that the last drop in her most bitter cup had been added—sorrow could go no farther—and there was a despair at her heart when she was carried away, after parting with husband and child, that only God knew the depth of. She had reached the darkest point in all her dark life: on the ocean of her troubles the last little ray of light had gone out; she was left lonely amidst the waves, only the sound of their restless surging, in her ears, and no gleam in the east.

No, no gleam in the east yet; but sunrise was nearer at hand than it seemed possible it could be. It is always darkest before dawn, and over the waste of dreary waters God was leading her, by her very helplessness, into safe anchorage and transcendent light. It is often so in God's dealings with men and women, especially with those who are naturally strong and energetic, and independent in character, and who, finding the world going against them, try to fight it, and shape their own destiny, not discerning that their chastening is from God, and therefore never learning the lesson it designs to teach—

"· · · · The soul's surrendered choice,
The settling of the will,
Lying down gently on the Cross
God's purpose to fulfil."

Not very often till they are divested of everything earthly, and they feel themselves crushed and ruined, and they are obliged to own themselves helpless and undone, will men and women give up the blind struggling and contending with the world, and yield themselves, still and submissive, into God's hands, there to be treated as it seems to Him best.

For the first few hours after her arrival in the Victoria Ward of the Infirmary, Bridget was in too much pain of body to think much. She was undressed at once and put into one of the snowy little beds. She was given a tumbler of milk to drink, of which she was glad, for she was feverish and thirsty. Then the doctor came and examined her injured limb, and after that she was conscious of having lotions and bandages applied by one of the fresh-complexioned nurses in white bib apron and cap. The jolting in Jemmy Wiggles's cab, and the movement of the journey generally, had increased the inflammation in Bridget's leg, and she lay with puckered brow and tightly closed eyes and mouth, trying to keep in the groans that now and then escaped her, when the sharp stabs of pain came, and made her wince.

She felt feverish and hot, and longed for a drink again—oh, that milk they had given her before, how delicious it was! so cold and refreshing to her parched lips! But she was suffering too much to ask for anything. It was all she could manage to do, to lie there quietly and stifle her groans; from a feeling of shyness she desired to make no noise. Bridget was a sensitive woman, and wished to avoid the attention of the strangers around her. She opened her eyes once, and saw they were all observing her from their pillows opposite. She closed her eyes again, now tighter than ever, and was conscious of a new, keen sensation, that of publicity, which is indeed veritable pain to some natures, to the sensitive and home-loving.

Presently dinner came; old women in poor-house clothes brought it in on large trays—steaming boiled mutton to-day, for the majority, and potatoes and huge hunches of bread, and beer; for some, beef-tea and chicken, and barley-water. They carried a portion to each bedside in turn, and those who were able sat up and partook of it, wearing the little red shawl that lay folded at the foot of the counterpane. A nice little bedtable was supplied to each patient, and those of them who were too ill or too old to sit up, were fed with spoon or drinking-cup by the nurses. There was nothing lacking at this feast in quality, quantity and comfort—all were good; yet there was not general content. Sisters Anne and Mary sang grace, but few joined in it, few closed their eyes and said "Amen."

The world's spirit of rapacity and greed now showed itself. Certain of the women scanned their neighbors' plates, and angry voices were heard complaining that their own plates were not so full. "They'd have their food weighed;" "They'd complain to the Board;" or, "The beer was short measure—Mrs. Brown's there was up to the brim, theirs didn't touch it, though it was frothed;" or, "Why should Peggy Lee have chicken and they not? Doctors had ordered it? Then doctors favored her, and they'd complain to the Board;" and so on all about the ward. The complaints were made to, sometimes hurled at, the nurses, who took them for the most part patiently; they were so accustomed to hear the food grumbled at, and the relative quantities questioned, it seemed hardly worth while to take any notice.

Dinner was brought in turn to Bridget, but she could not eat anything; she drank the barley-water offered, and that was all. More hours passed, afternoon hours, in which most of the patients dozed—those of them who could. Some, like Bridget, were in too much pain to sleep; others, principally the very aged, seemed somehow unable to do so, though they were trying their best, and were weary enough, as was evidenced by their frequent yawns, ending in a kind of worn-out groan, that very old people indulge in when they are tired. The little women in gray clothes took chairs close to the stove, and soon their close-capped heads were nodding, first to one side and then to the other, in sound sleep. Sisters Anne and Mary wrote letters at the table; and so the afternoon passed.

Twilight came, the gas was lit, then everybody who had been sleeping woke up, and the same women who had clattered in with the dinner now clattered in with the tea on large trays. Mugs full to the brim of steaming tea, and plates of thick slices of bread-and-butter, were served out at each bedside, bed-tables were put across, red shawls put on again. There was less grumbling at this meal than at dinner, though the quality of the tea was denounced by some as "rubbishy trash. They'd have it out with the Board, see if they wouldn't!" and so on, in the old style of ungrateful murmuring at good provision. Bridget again ate nothing, but drank the tea to the last drop. Her hot, flushed face attracted the attention of the woman who brought it to her.

"Are you so hot?" she said, wonderingly, screwing up her little squinting eyes at her. "Do you feel bad?"

"Yes," nodded Bridget.

"Well, the doctor 'll be round again soon," said the woman, shuffling away in her felt shoes to somebody else.

More hours passed, during which the doctor did come again, and ordered fresh treatment for Bridget. The lotion was to be changed to one more soothing; the leg was to be dressed in a different way, and she was to have a draught that would quiet her nerves. At last a great bell rang somewhere in the building, an aggressive, hurry-scurry sort of bell. That was the signal for the gas being lowered, and all the attendants leaving the ward save one in poor-house garb, and Sister Mary, who were on duty yet for a few more hours. Then silence reigned, and night fell on the Victoria Ward, bringing to most of the strangely assorted company gathered there, night's blessed accompaniment, sleep.

Then the company dreamed: the battered-faced old apple-seller that she had made a good bargain with her oranges, which she had boiled to look worth twopence; the fresh-faced actress, that she was in the theatre, poising herself to take the dangerous leap which had resulted in fall and injury; the Frenchwoman, that she was in the gay, lighted streets of her capital again, revelling in the glare and the glitter and the falseness of its show. The silver-haired elderly woman, the ex-governess, lay with a smile on her lips—ah, poor lady! she was doubtless living over again, in her dreams, some of those old grand times in the past; she was back, perhaps, under the shade of the broad chestnuts in a nobleman's park, on a summer's afternoon, the birds singing overhead, and the deer feeding away there in the glades. Who would have guessed that those gentle white hands would one day lie on the coarse sheets of a poor-house! that that graceful girl would one day be taking her sleep beside a crazy old creature of the gutter, whose dreams were all of gin-palaces and adroit evasions of the police!—for "Biddy," the drunken old cigar-light seller, lay in the next bed.

Yes; the kind, soft angel, Sleep, passed swiftly through the ward, and touched most pillows, yet not all. She passed over some, amongst them Bridget's. No sleep came to hers. At the fall of night she grew to be in less pain: the doctor's orders had been carried out, the lotion and the draught soothed her, the flush left her cheek, and the stabs in her leg gradually ceased; but still she did not sleep. With the soothing of her bodily, her mental being awoke into activity, and the stabs came to mind and heart instead. She began thinking of them all at home, and when she did that, a thousand questions pressed on her brain to disturb and harass her. Had Tom got safe back with baby? and if so, how were they managing? Would Polly remember, she wondered, to put the shawl over the head of baby's cradle when they laid it down, to keep the draught out? Would anybody remember to stop up the great hole in the wainscotting that that big rat came out of the other day? Had she made it plain to Tom about the money, and those debts that were owing her? What food would they give baby? Would Poll have the sense to ask Mrs. Job—would they know how to soothe it if it cried?

Ah, her poor little precious, darling baby! She heard its cry in her ears; she felt it in her arms, pressed close up against her. Whenever she looked down through the silent night she saw its little pale face, and its little bright black eyes looking up at her out of the darkness. She thought of it as she saw it last, making "the pitiful lip." Then—there was no one to see her now, everybody was asleep, and darkness covered her—poor Bridget began crying softly to herself. But not everybody was asleep; some one else lay wakeful, too, on her bed, a woman next to her, on the left, who caught the sound of Bridget's sobs. She rose up on her elbow, and leant over towards Bridget's bed.

"Ma'am," she whispered low, "can I do anything for you?"

"No, thank you," sobbed Bridget, turning her head to see who had spoken. She could not make out much, just a very small face bent towards her in the darkness, and a little hump in the bed, as if the figure on it were very small.

"You feels a bit lonely and strange, ma'am?" whispered the neighbor. "The first night and all, away from home. You leave husband and children, perhaps?"

"Yes," sobbed Bridget, "and a baby not weaned, and I don't know how it'll get on to-night, or who'll take care of it time I'm away.

"Do you know them verses, ma'am," pursued her neighbor, "that begins 'There is an eye'?"

Bridget nodded "No."

"Well, then, I'd like to say them to you. There's a wonderful deal of comfort in 'em, I always think."

And the woman repeated in a low, husky voice the beautiful hymn beginning:

"There is an eye that never sleeps
Beneath the wing of night;
There is an ear that never shuts
When sink the beams of light.

"There is an arm that never tires
When human strength gives way;
There is a love that never fails
When earthly loves decay."

She paused after saying it. Bridget only sobbed, not having got much comfort out of the words. She was not a religious woman—she would have said she had no time for being that. The faith she once had, as a child, and as a woman before trouble overwhelmed her, seemed dead within her, and she had left off praying a long while ago.

"I," said the little woman softly to Bridget, "will wield that power for you to-night. I will pray that that eye, that arm, that love, may reach and be around your little baby to-night, and I'm just as sure that no harm will be allowed to happen to it, and that it will be taken care of, as I am that there is a God in heaven." Bridget was conscious the next minute of a kiss on her forehead. The little woman had shuffled with difficulty out of bed to give it to her. "There," she said, shuffling back again, "I should be scolded if I were caught, but I couldn't help it. I would have given anything—twenty pounds if I had had it—for somebody to have kissed me the first night I came in; I was like you, ma'am, fit to break my heart, and nobody spoke to me a kind word."

It was only a stranger's kiss! not like that of kith and kin—yet the touch of human lips was a comfort to poor Bridget. She dwelt on the thought, too, that some one was going to pray for her baby, though her faith in prayer and in Jesus, our great High-Priest and Intercessor, was so faint and cold. And by and by Bridget's sobs grew hushed, and at last she too fell asleep and dreamed.

JESUS AND THE AFFLICTED.

By Mrs. M. Baxter.

S. S. Lesson for January 22. Matt. 15 : 21-31. Golden Text, James 5 : 13.

Ver. 21. Jesus Goes into Phœnicia—On the Coast of the Mediterranean—Ver. 22. A Gentile Woman a Descendant of the Canaanites—Analagous to Our Indians—Her Knowledge Shows how Far Christ's Fame had Spread—Prayed for Mercy on Herself, Though the Affliction was on Her Daughter—Her Faith—Did not Doubt Christ's Power—Recognized His Messiahship—Demoniacal Possession Distressing—Men Possessed Now and Not Grievously Vexed—Ver. 23. Christ's Silence a Test of Faith—The Interposition of the Disciples—Sprang from their Own Discomfort—Vers. 24-27. The Importunity of the Woman, an Example—Proof Against Humiliation and Repulse—Ver. 28. Her Request Granted—Her Faith Honored—Vers. 30-31. The Effect of the Miracles—People Glorified God.

"MANY are the afflictions of the righteous: but the Lord delivereth him out of them all" (Ps. 34 : 19). Many speak of affliction as though it must necessarily mean sickness. But this is a wrong use of terms. To afflict is, "to visit with calamity, to grieve, to torment," and affliction means "calamity, sorrow, grief;" whereas sickness means the state of being sick, disease, illness, malady, nausea." The Word of God distinguishes between the two. Our blessed Lord led His disciples to expect and to endure afflictions. In the world ye shall have tribulations (John 16 : 33). "It is enough for the disciple that he be as his Master, and the servant as his Lord" (Matt. 10 : 25). Paul charged Timothy to "endure afflictions (II Tim. 4 : 5); and James says, "Take, my brethren, the prophets, for an example of suffering, affliction and of patience" (James 5 : 10). Yet the same blessed Saviour who thus taught His disciples to endure affliction, always took away sickness, and taught them to do the same. And the apostle James gives definite directions to the sick and the afflicted when he says, "Is any among you afflicted? let him pray. Is any merry? let him sing psalms. Is any sick among you? let him call for the elders of the church, and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord, and the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up; and if he have committed sins, they shall be forgiven him" (James 5 : 13-15). Thus we see that, while sickness is one kind of affliction, it is one for which

which it glorifies Him for us to accept. It was so habitual with Jesus to heal disease wherever He went that it was always expected of Him. Our last chapter closed with a great work of healing among those who touched the hem of His garment in the land of Gennesareth; "as many as touched were made perfectly whole." From thence, after a conversation with some delegates from the Scribes and Pharisees of Jerusalem, who had come down to Galilee, not to learn but to question the work of Jesus, He "departed into the coasts of Tyre and Sidon." It was no caprice which led Him there. He had a work to do, and He went there, as elsewhere, in obedience to His Father. Jesus and the needy one soon came in contact: a woman of Canaan came out of the same coasts, and cried unto Him, saying, "Have mercy on me, O Lord, Thou Son of David! my daughter is grievously vexed with a devil." Some people believe that this terrible scourge of possession with a devil existed only in our Lord's time. No one who has witnessed delirium tremens or morphia delirium, nor yet the insanity which comes from uncontrolled pride or selfishness, or unsubdued temper, can have any such idea. Those who have been thus possessed will always say, "I was under the power of the devil and could not help myself." Let anyone visit the cell of the murderer, or speak with the lost of either sex, when the Spirit of God begins to show them the reality of things, and you will hear their

to the actual power of Satan over their souls and their bodies. Jesus would never have added to His charge to His disciples for all time, "In My name shall they cast out devils" (Mark 16 : 17), if this world has no devils to cast out. The poor woman said, "Have mercy on me." The enemy cannot have power over one member of a family without the whole house being affected by it. Sometimes it may take the form of the most fearful depression; every condemnatory passage of Scripture is brought to the mind of the poor victim, and the face is only an index of the deep hoplessness and gloom which the enemy brings upon the soul. Sometimes it is an unclean spirit, and then hearts are broken with the shame and sin brought into the family. Sometimes it is a blaspheming spirit, and then the poor victim, even when trying to pray, is filled with wicked thoughts against God. Thank God, James tells us to resist the devil, and he will flee from us (James 4 : 7); he is a conquered foe. But there are some who are so under his power that they cannot resist him, and God will hear the prayers and respond to the faith of others for them.

When the poor woman thus prayed, Jesus "answered her not a word!" How unlike Him it seemed! But Jesus did Nothing Without a Purpose.

While He had it in His heart to save the daughter, He would exercise the faith of the mother, and teach His disciples by it. Thousands of times blessings have been lost by God's children, and Jesus has lost an opportunity of glorifying Himself, because they have not had patience to wait out the fulfilment of His purposes. The disciples became impatient, and said, "Send her away; for she crieth after us." Perhaps they felt it would be more convenient to them and better for the cause of Christ, if her case were dealt with quickly. How often have we been under the same impression! When the eyes of many were on an abandoned drunkard or profligate, how we have sometimes wanted to hurry God into doing His work quickly for the credit of His cause! And when some more than usually bad case of cancer or lameness, or of advanced consumption, came for healing, how often have we heard one and another pray for instantaneous healing, as though God's cause would fail if it were not done just then. And perhaps the very eagerness to bring God into our narrow thoughts was that which hindered Him. He looked for faith, which would have rested the case with Him in quiet certainty. He found, instead, restlessness and anxiety, which manifested the very opposite to faith. Jesus answered, "I am not sent but unto the lost sheep of the house of Israel."

I am Not Sent.

Jesus did nothing without authority. He always followed, and never led His Father, although He could say, "I and My Father are One" (John 10 : 30). But the woman had a fixed conviction that Jesus could not in the end turn away from her plea, and she acted on it, and came "and worshipped Him saying, Lord, help me." True, she was not one of "the lost sheep of the House of Israel," but whatever she was, Jesus was still the great Physician, Jesus had brought the tidings that God "loved the world." He had told men that the Son of Man was not come "to destroy men's lives, but to save them." And so, in spite of present appearances, in spite of His own very words, she acted on what He had proved Himself to be—a Friend, a Physician, a Saviour, to all who came to Him. This was faith. The woman rested in what He was, not in what she was. From first to last, her claim upon Him was His own character, and that only. He was the Son of David, and, as such, she first besought Him; as such she claimed that He would help one who was outside the fold of Israel. But she was to meet with a stronger rebuff. "He answered and said, It is not meet to take the children's bread and to cast it to dogs." She had not shown herself a dog, and had she yielded to one bit of personal feeling, she might have felt deeply wounded. It was true the Jews did call the Gentiles "Gentile dogs," but it was unlike Jesus to speak thus. Yet no such thought seems to have occupied her mind. On the contrary, she said "Truth, Lord," thus taking the place of the dog which He had assigned her; "Truth, Lord; yet the dogs eat of the crumbs which fall from their master's table." She met every rebuff by faith in Him. And the heart of Jesus was glad; He loves to be trusted and His heart went out to the persistent mother when He said, "O woman, great is thy faith; be it unto thee even as thou wilt."

"Even as Thou Wilt,"

This is the kind of "good measure, pressed down, and shaken together, and running over," that God loves to give in answer to prayer, where hearts are empty enough of self to bear it. "And her daughter was made whole from that very hour." Why are answers to prayers delayed? This is a question so often asked, so often badly answered, or not answered at all. In this case, it was to bring out the faith of the Syro Phœnician woman. When Daniel was fasting three full weeks, the answer to his prayer, which was started on its way as soon as he began to pray, was delayed all the time he continued to mourn and fast, exactly "one and twenty days," i. e., three full weeks (Dan. 10: 2, 12). Why? Because it is wrong to fast? certainly not, but because he had been taught (Dan. 9 : 23) that God heard at the begining of his prayer, and thus he should have learned to trust. God educates us in faith by everything which happens. If we are disappointed that the answer does not come at the time or in the way which we have pictured to ourselves it should come, do not let us therefore lose faith in God. Faith believes "that He is, and that He is a Rewarder of them that diligently seek Him" (Heb. 11 :6). If "He is" all that He says He is, we can afford to see things turn out contrary to our expectations; it will be an opportunity for Him to verify His own Word in His own way.

"Jesus departed from thence, and came nigh unto the sea of Galilee; and went up into a mountain, and sat down there." He loved the quiet and purity of mountains. "And great multitudes came unto Him, having with them those that were lame, blind, dumb, maimed, and many others, and cast them down at Jesus' feet." It was no easy thing to bring such up the mountain side. Many would needs be carried or brought on asses. But so sure were they of healing, that they would make any effort to get transported to where Jesus was; they must meet Him, this was the one necessity. There they lay all round Him, and He healed them, "insomuch that the multitude wondered, when they saw the dumb to speak, the maimed to be whole, the lame to walk and the blind to see; and they glorified the God of Israel." We need only to have really to do with Him, and our sick ones would be healed as certainly now as then. We thank Him for thousands who have been already blest in soul and healed in body by His hand alone.

AMEN.

I cannot say,
Beneath the pressure of life's care to-day,
I joy in these:
But I can say
That I had rather walk this rugged way,
If Him it please.

I cannot feel
That all is well when dark'ning clouds conceal
The shining sun:
But then I know
God lives and loves; and say, since it is so,
"Thy will be done."

I cannot speak
In happy tones; the tear-drops on my cheek
Show I am sad;
But I can speak
Of grace to suffer with submission meek,
Until made glad.

I do not see
Why God should e'en permit some things to be,
When He is love;
But I can see
Though often dimly, through the mystery,
His hand above.

I may not try
To keep the hot tears back; but hush that sigh.
"It might have been;"
And try to still.
Each rising murmur, and to God's sweet will Respond—AMEN.

THE TALMUD.

What It Is and What it Knows about Jesus and his Followers. By Rev. Bernhard Pick, Ph.D. Ideal Edition, Small Pica type, cloth, 50c.; postage 6c.

One of the most interesting and valuable of recent contributions to religious literature. It answers popular curiosity as to what the Talmud is, and gives to students information of transcendant value, not heretofore accessible.

"The Talmud is the slow growth of several centuries. It is a chaos of Jewish learning, wisdom and folly, a continent of rubbish with hidden pearls of true maxims and poetic fables."—PHILIP SCHAFF.

"Here, then, we find a prodigious mass of contradictory opinions, an infinite number of casuistical cases, a logic of scholastic theology, some recondite wisdom, and much rambling dotage; many puerile tales and oriental fancies; ethics and sophisms, reasonings and unreasonings, subtle solutions, and maxims and riddles."—BENJAMIN DISRAELI.

"It has proved a grateful task to wander through the mazes of the Talmud and cull flowers yet sparkling with the very dew of Eden. Figures in shining garments haunt its recesses. Prayers of deep devotion, sublime confidence and noble benediction, echo in its ancient tongue. Sentiments of lofty courage, of high resolve, of infantile tenderness, of far-seeing prudence, fall from the lips of venerable sages. No less practicable would it be to stray with an opposite intention, and to extract venom, instead of honey, from the flowers that seem to spring up in self-sown profusion. Fierce, intolerant, vindictive hatred for mankind; idle subtlety; pride and self-conceit amounting to insanity; indelicacy pushed to a grossness that renders what it calls virtue more hateful than the vice of more modest people: all these strung together would give no more just an idea of the Talmud than would the chaplets of its lovelier flowers."—Edinburgh Review.

HISTORY of the JEWS.

The Jews Since the Destruction of Jerusalem. Brevier type, double leaded; cloth, 15c.; postage 3c.

"A very interesting and valuable sketch, exceedingly well written, of the political condition, numerical strength, and employments of the Jewish people in the different countries, since their dispersion at the destruction of their National Capital."—The Guardian, Philadelphia.

"This monograph may be regarded as the fullest treatment of this subject in the briefest compass. We have found it fascinating reading, and share more and more as we proceed in the author's strong and just sympathy for this outcast and oppressed race."—Christian Evangelist, St. Louis.

Apocryphal LIFE OF JESUS.

By REV. BERNHARD PICK, Ph.D. Ideal Edition, Small Pica type, cl., 50c.; post. 6c.

"Dr. Pick has done a good service in translating these extra-canonical narratives. They form a highly interesting addition to Christian literature, and the accompanying notes increase their value."—Lutheran Observer, Phila.

"These narratives are of decided value as a foil to set off the brightness, beauty, and simplicity of the Gospels. When one reads the infinite absurdities of which even good men have been guilty, when trying to supplement the silence of scriptures on the childhood and youth of our Lord; and compares, with such human attempts, the inspired narrative, these apocryphal Gospels become at once evidential in value."—Presbyterian, Wilmington, N. C.

YOUNG men who are disposed to regard the profession of religion as a bar to success in life, often need encouragement in fighting their battle with the tempter, who would have them postpone confessing Christ, until they have secured all this world has to give. While it is true that the Christian man is not promised success in life, as a consequence of his discipleship, but is entitled to expect divine support under the trials of life, rather than immunity from them, there are to be found conspicuous instances of men "making the best of both worlds." It is well that such cases should not be overlooked, if only as an answer to the charge that real vital religion renders a man unfit for business life. One such case, remarkable above the average, both in high spirituality on the one side, and financial and honorable achievement on the other, has recently occupied public attention to a considerable extent in Great Britain. It may interest our readers to know something of the man and his life, and they will not forget that such success as he has had is more remarkable there than here, as the opportunities for rising in an old country are far less numerous than in a new one.

John James Harwood, whom his fellow-citizens have honored by electing him

is a man whose private life, when he was a working plasterer, was distinguished by his devotion to Christ and His cause, and who, in his exalted municipal position, has lost none of his sanctity by his elevation. It is no small distinction in a country, where birth and rank count for so much, to be chosen to fill the office of Mayor in the second city of the kingdom; but it is an almost unique honor to have filled it with so much capacity as to be invited a second, and now a third, time to rule the city. Rightly estimated, the honor conferred upon him entitles him to greater respect than does the grandest title which aristocrats inherit. And this has come to him while consistently living a Christian life and engaging in numerous spheres of Christian usefulness.

Mr. Harwood was born at Accrington in 1832, and, therefore, is now fifty-five years of age. About 1853 he entered the employ of a Mr. Ward, a plasterer and painter in Strangeways, Manchester. After four years' work he was appointed foreman, which position he held for four years more, when he was admitted as a partner into the firm. The partnership with Mr. Ward lasted just another term of four years, and then Mr. Harwood took the business entirely to himself, and, by his assiduous and painstaking attention and energy, soon made it one of the largest of its kind in Europe.

"Seest thou a man diligent in his business? He shall stand before kings; he shall not stand before mean men," is most applicable to the career of Mr. Harwood. Up to a recent date he might have been found at his place of business at six o'clock every morning. Many of the principal buildings in Manchester have been plastered and decorated by his firm, including all the large railway stations and the Exchange, around the dome of which is inscribed in bold characters the beautiful words, "A good name is rather to be chosen than great riches, and loving favor than silver and gold." Mr. Harwood might have adopted those words as for his success has been achieved by hard and honest work, not by speculations of any kind. Nor has it been by sordid love of money as his chief good; more than once he has shown that he esteemed other things above lucre. When the present palatial Town Hall was built, he was offered the plastering and decorating, but as the English law forbids any member of a corporation to accept a municipal contract, he would, if he had taken it, have had to resign his seat in the Council; but though it involved the loss of a large and lucrative contract, he refused to do so, preferring the honor and opportunity of serving his fellow-townsmen to monetary gain.

Mr. Harwood's success in public life dates from 1866, when he was elected to a seat in the Town Council, which he retained with growing popularity until 1881, when he was appointed an alderman. An influential Manchester journal says: "Mr. Harwood has been, from the first, a most industrious member of the Council, and few men have exercised greater influence upon the municipal affairs of the city during a corresponding period of service." Another local journal remarks: "From the outset he has made his mark as a speaker in the Council. He is always well informed, speaks to the point, and has an impressive style of delivery. It was a matter of course that a man possessing this combination of debating power and capacity for hard work should take front rank." After such cordial testimonies as these, it is not surprising to learn that Mr. Harwood was in 1884. His first term of office added so materially to his high reputation, that when his successor died on the very eve of the Jubilee celebrations, Alderman Harwood was recalled to fill the vacant chair. And, at the expiration of his second term of office, the man whom, for his conspicuous merit and solid ability, his fellow-citizens delight to honor, received at the recent election the distinction of a third term of the chief magistracy. The Methodist Evangelist says: "We believe he is the first Methodist who has ever occupied the civic chair in that city. Seldom has there been an instance in which high character and sterling worth, utterly unsupported in the first instance by influence or wealth, have been so conspicuously triumphant. The crown of all this, in our estimation, is the fact that he has found the pearl of great price." Mr. Harwood enjoys equal to which he belongs. He is a member of the New Connection Methodists, an evangelistic body of Christians. For many years he was greatly attached to the denominational interest at Bethesda Chapel, Pendleton. As soon as he was married, he and his wife, who was an industrious worker, began to put something away in the savings bank every week. At the end of two years a new church project was floated. Among those who laid their gifts upon the altar were the mayor and his wife, who presented their bank-book, with the whole of their two years' savings, towards this project. Removing to another part of the town, Mr. Harwood joined Salem Chapel, Strangeways, where he has been, not simply "an outside buttress of the Methodist New Connection Church," but an inside pillar, and, in spite of his extensive business and municipal engagements, an active worker. He has been a Sunday-school teacher, superintendent, class-leader, local preacher, trustee and circuit steward for upwards of twenty-five years, and won universal esteem. As he is much appreciated, having an earnest manner and a voice full of sympathy and sweetness. A number of illuminated addresses, which have been presented by various public bodies, adorn the walls of Mr. Harwood's house, but the one that will be of most interest, perhaps, to our readers was presented to him by his own church, in the year 1884, and reads as follows: "We, the Officers and Teachers of Salem Sunday-school, Strangeways, Manchester, beg respectfully to assure you of our gratification and joy, at your elevation to the Mayoralty of the City of Manchester, by the unanimous vote of the Council, a position for which your long and varied public services qualify you. Your connection with our school for twenty-five years, during twenty of which you have filled the honorable position of Superintendent, and the various benefactions and other acts of kindness which you have shown, entitle you to our esteem and gratitude, which we would hereby cordially express. The character you have always borne, for constant industry, thorough integrity, and Christian virtue, has been such as to afford a high example to the young, with whom you, as superintendent of the schools, have been brought in contact, and we trust that the force of that example will be long felt. We pray that God, who has guided you hitherto, may guide you still, and that, during your period of office, you may be enabled by Him to signally serve your generation, according to His Holy Will."

Another Testimony

is given by the superintendent appointed by the church council, to the oversight of the district in which Mr. Harwood lives and works. He notes with joy and gratitude, that social and municipal distinctions have not diminished his zeal, nor drawn him into habits inconsistent with his religious profession. He says: "In his public life, especially as Mayor of Manchester, the true Christian has shown forth distinctly. There is no parade of piety—he hates all parade—but there is an undertone in all his utterances which cannot be misunderstood. He is a man of deep religious feeling, which is heightened by an unusually distinct faith in an overruling Providence—a faith largely the outcome of experiences. Both he and his wife are and their children are, in this respect, following in their steps. He is a man of strong convictions as to the duties of others, as well as his own, but he is full of kindness, and never turns his back upon a friend." Such a man is an honor to any community. He is a living proof that Christianity is adapted to the life of modern days, and that a man in serving God does not necessarily lose earthly honors and distinctions.

THE CITY OF MANCHESTER.

Cottonopolis, as this great centre of the cotton industry is sometimes called, is a city very familiar by name to citizens of the United States, with whom it has, for the last century, had extensive commercial transactions. The picture on the first page, below the portrait of Mayor Harwood, represents Piccadilly, the chief street of the city, as seen from Market Street, presenting on the right hand side a view of the Infirmary, an institution conducted with much kindliness and skill, and which, under God, has been found to be a real blessing, by thousands of the sons and daughters of suffering.

The history of Manchester goes back to a very early period of British story. The Romans certainly had a station there; and on the authority of an existing sepulchral monument found on the spot, it appears that was garrisoned by the first cohort of the Frisian auxiliaries attached to the 20th Legion, stationed at Chester. It must have been a place of some importance in Roman times. Many relics of Roman occupation have been found, especially in the localities which bear the significant names of Castle field and Camp field, of inscribed altars and other stones, coins and medals, of Consular and Imperial dates, a bronze statue, and many fragments of pottery, etc.

That the Saxons, in their turn, were induced, by the natural advantages of the site, to form a settlement here, would be sufficiently proved by its name of Mameceaster or Mamecestre—the shape which the name retains from the Domesday survey down to the fourteenth century.

In 1579, Sir Thomas West, with the concurrence of his son, sold the manor to John Lucye, a citizen of London, who held a mortgage of £3,000 ($15,000) upon it; and Lucye resold it for £3,500 to Nicholas Mosley, Esq., Alderman of London, in whose family it continued for about two centuries and a half, until, on the incorporation of the town, Sir Oswald Mosley, Bart., sold the manor to the Corporation.

Its Religious History

has been a troubled one. In the Church arrangements of the Presbyterians, Manchester was the first Classical division of the county of Lancaster. The Congregationalists rapidly gained strength in the town and neighboring districts. Warden Heyrick got up a petition to Parliament, signed by 8,500 persons, praying the exercise of its authority to put down all Anabaptists, Brownists, heretics, schismatics, and blasphemers, declaring "that toleration would be the putting of a sword into a madman's hand, a cup of poison into the hand of a child, a letting loose of madmen with firebrands in their hands, an appointing a City of Refuge, in men's consciences, for the devil to fly to, a laying of the stumbling-block before the blind, a proclaiming liberty to the wolves to come into Christ's fold to prey upon His lambs, a toleration of soul-murther (the greatest murther of all others), and for the establishing whereof damned souls in hell would accurse men on earth." The Committee of Sequestrations appointed by the Independents, dissolved the Presbyterian College, and turned the Warden and Fellows adrift on paltry pensions. Cromwell summoned representatives from the town to his Parliament.

Manchester's Status,

as a manufacturing city, dates from religious persecution. The Refugees from the Netherlands, fleeing from the Duke of Alva's persecution, settled there and established the commercial prominence of the city. During the sixteenth century Manchester seems to have made rapid and great progress in the extent of its population, manufactures and size; and then there seems to have been a long interval, until, in quite modern times, the place again began to progress "by leaps and bounds."

It was first the importation of cotton in the earlier part of the eighteenth century, and next, the invention of machinery in the latter part of the century, and, finally, the application of steam-power in the earlier years of the present century, which gradually left the woollen trade behind, and made Manchester the centre of the manufacture of cotton goods; and the extension of the cotton trade into foreign markets gave rise to that wonderfully rapid growth of the town which has, at length, made it, for enterprise and wealth, the second city of the Empire. The progress it has made, during the last hundred and fifty years, is shown in on each side of the Mayor's portrait. It has lost its clear atmosphere and rural beauty, but the smoke that now floats from its tall chimneys tells the story of thriving industry and growing wealth. This is not the place to do more than make a note of some epochs in the history of the manufactures of the place—of Richard Arkwright's water-frame (patented in 1769), and James Hargreaves' spinning jenny (patented in 1770), and Arkwright's improved carding machine (in 1785), and Samuel Compton's mule jenny (about 1800); and the inventions and improvements which followed rapidly upon these, when the minds of ingenious men were once earnestly turned into this direction, cannot even be noted.

A very notable feature of the last twenty years is, that Manchester proper is no longer a manufacturing town. The mills have nearly all been transferred to the suburbs and to the neighboring towns and villages. Land is too valuable now in the town itself to be thus occupied. It is the centre of a vast manufacturing district, with more inhabitants to the square mile than in London; it is said that a circle of thirty mile radius, drawn round the City Hall, would include a population greater than the circle of London, of which St. Paul's Cathedral is the centre.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS

A Merchant's Call to Evangelize.—Mr. Allanson, an evangelist, remarked: "On one occasion, when I was sitting quietly in my office, a gentleman came in and said, 'Sir, the Lord has lately laid this greatly on my heart,' and taking from his pocket a list of names of churches, he continued, 'You do not know much about churches, but I do, and have been for years a church-member, and regret to say that in too many of them the Gospel of salvation is not preached. Now go and preach the Gospel, and if you find, as perhaps you may, that the people will not listen to you in the churches in your own district, then,' he said, handing me the list, 'here are many in districts in which you are unknown, and in which, if you give yourself up to the Lord, you could do a glorious work for Him.' I took the list as a direct call from God, and began to do the work of evangelizing. And God did bless my work. Many hardened sinners were led to see their need of Christ, and received Him; and as for myself, I was filled to overflowing with my unspeakable joy."

A Kiss Returned For a Blow.—A Christian worker observes: "Before my conversion I was met by a man, who accosted me with the question, 'Do you know that the Lord can save you?' The whole-heartedness of the man struck me. He continued, 'Do you know that the Lord can not only save, but can also make you a good, pure, holy man?' I looked at him; then, raising my hand, I struck him on the face with my clenched fist. 'You are a fool,' I cried; 'do you know to whom you are speaking? Do you know that I am a confirmed drunkard, a man who has come from a drunkards' retreat, and that I have not changed my clothes for three days? Do you think that the Lord can save me? Man, you are a fool.' The next minute his arms were around me, and, clasping me tight, he whispered, 'Yes, sir, Jesus loves you!' He was but a poor workingman, and one whom, if I had met him under any other circumstances, I should have scorned. I was touched with his kindness. Tears filled my eyes as I accompanied him to a hall, where I was pointed to Christ, and where I gave myself to Him. I who had never done a good, unselfish action in my life stepped into the kingdom of God three-parts inebriated, simply resting on the text, John 3: 16."

Quelling a Riot.—The Following Incident is related of the late Rev. Henry Barne: A mob threatened to disturb the peace of Tiverton, and the town authorities, having vainly endeavored to maintain order, sent up an urgent appeal to him, "Would he come down and disperse the crowd?" Mounting his horse, he was quickly on the outskirts of the fray. Seated high over the heads of the infuriated mob, he was master of the situation, and for a few minutes surveyed the scene unobserved. Then with his keen, far-seeing eye, which took in everything at a glance, he at once singled out the ring-leaders of the riot. Satisfied in his own mind as to their identity, and promptly resolved as to what he should do, he dismounted, flung his bridle to a bystander, and boldly going forward into the midst of the tumult, with his active, muscular frame, and powerful brawny chest, collared his men—one with either hand—and in spite of their resistance, so cowed them by his authoritative bearing, that he compelled them to walk down the street in this humiliating position, not halting a moment, until he had safely lodged them in the cells of the town jail; the fickle crowd meantime following behind, laughing and applauding, and evidently relishing the whole thing.

Sweet Memory of a Dead Child.—Captain Hatfield remarks: "Last Sunday, in a meeting at which I was asked to speak, I was told that there was a gentleman who sought an interview with me. I went down the passage, and there, at the door, a gentleman stepped forward and said, 'Captain Hatfield, I believe.' And then he went on to tell me that the last time I was speaking in that meeting his little girl was there, and that I had spoken to her, and the result was that she had found her Saviour. She went home full of the glad news and told it to her parents. 'Her mother and I,' said the gentleman, 'were hard and stern with her. We told her not to speak of such nonsense, for we did not believe in it at all. Still my child did not get disheartened. She said but little on the subject, but her life just shone for Jesus. Hers was but a short life, but a very peaceful and beautiful one. She has died, sir, but not in vain, for when her spirit went up to God, I determined to find out the source of my child's happiness. So I came here to-night to see the man who led her to Jesus. And,' said the bereaved father, with tears in his eyes, 'I, too, have found the Saviour to-night. My wife would not come with me, for she still says she does not believe in these things, but I hope she will soon change her mind as I have changed mine.'"

From a Preacher to an Apostate.—"At One of the fashionable spas in Germany," says the late Rev. H. Barne in his autobiography, "I met with a family of a gentleman, who was at that time an avowed sceptic. In former years he had been regarded as a zealous preacher of the gospel, but had abandoned the Church of his fathers, on account of certain theological doubts and difficulties which had arisen in his mind. Strange to relate, two years afterwards, when I had been appointed chaplain of the Taunton Union, and there became acquainted with an old man—one of its inmates—whom I found to be an earnest, humble and deeply taught Christian; I learned from him in one of my ministeral visits that he had been first brought to know the Saviour under the teaching of that very clergyman—then a sceptic—who had crossed my path during my sojourn abroad. Here was an instance of one who formerly had been the instrument of bringing another to the knowledge of the Truth, now an apostate. In the early period of his life to be made the means of converting a fellow sinner from the evil of his ways; that sinner to become a monument of grace, to the praise of God's glory; yet he himself, in the latter days of his career—it was to be feared—a castaway. It is an awful fact to realize that Judas was numbered among the twelve apostles, 'and obtained part of their ministry,' yet notwithstanding, he went out from them, because he was not one of them, falling 'by transgression, that he might go to his own place.'"

The Fatal Door.—The French Chevalier, Gerard de Kampis, was a very rich and a very proud man. Soon after the completion of his magnificent castle, he wished to have a housewarming, and accordingly all his great neighbors were invited to a great feast. At the conclusion of a sumptuous repast, his guests made speech after speech, in which the host was lauded, and told that he was the most fortunate man alive. As the Chevalier loved flattery, it may be imagined how proud and delighted he was. One among the guests, however, said nothing for a time. When each man had made his speech, he uttered the following singular observation upon the happiness of the host: "Sir Knight, in order that your felicity should be complete, you require but one thing; but this is a very important item." "And what thing is that?" demanded the Knight, opening wide his eyes. "One of your doors must be walled up," replied his guest. At this strange rejoinder, several of the guests began to laugh, and Gerard himself looked as much as to say, "This man has gone mad." Wishing, however, to have the clue to this enigma, he continued, "But which door do you mean?" "I mean that through which you will one day be carried to your grave," replied the other. These words struck both guests and host, and made the latter reflect most seriously. The proud man remembered the vanity of all earthly things. He became completely altered, and made good uses of his riches in the service of man and for the glory of God.

WORLDLY MARRIAGES.

Dr. Talmage's Second Sermon to the Women of America, Preached last Sunday Morning, January 15, 1888.

"And there was a man in Maon whose possessions were in Carmel, and the man was very great, and he had three thousand sheep and a thousand goats." 1 Sam. 25 : 2.

MY text introduces us to a drunken bloat of large property. Before the day of safety deposits and Government bonds and national banks, people had their investment in flocks and herds, and this man, Nabal, of the text, had much of his possessions in live-stock. He came also of a distinguished family, and had glorious Caleb for an ancestor. But this descendant was a sneak, a churl,

A Sot and a Fool.

One instance to illustrate: It was a wool-raising country, and at the time of shearing a great feast was prepared for the shearers; and David and his warriors, who had in other days saved from destruction the threshing-floors of Nabal, sent to him, asking, in this time of plenty, for some bread for their starving men. And Nabal cried out: "Who is David?" As though an Englishman had said, "Who is Wellington?" or a German should say, "Who is Von Moltke?" or an American should say, "Who is Washington?" Nothing did Nabal give to the starving men, and that night the scoundrel lay dead drunk at home; and the Bible gives us a full length picture of him, sprawling and maudlin and helpless.

Now that was the man whom Abigail, the lovely and gracious and good woman, married—a tuberose planted beside a thistle, a palm-branch twined into a wreath of deadly nightshade. Surely that was not one of the matches made in heaven. We throw up our hands in horror at that wedding. How did she ever consent to link her destinies with such a creature. Well, she no doubt thought that it would be an honor to be associated with an aristocratic family; and no one can despise a great name. Beside this, wealth would come, and with it and mansions lighted by swinging lamps of aromatic oil, and resounding with the cheer of banqueters, seated at tables laden with wines from the richest vineyards, and fruits from ripest orchards, and nuts threshed from foreign woods, and meats smoking in platters of gold, set on by slaves in bright uniform.

Before she plighted her troth with this dissipated man, she sometimes said to herself: "How can I endure him? To be associated for life with such a debauchee I cannot and will not!" But then again she said to herself: "It is time I was married, and this is a cold world to depend on, and perhaps I might do worse, and may be I will make a sober man out of him, and marriage is a lottery, anyhow." And when, one day, this representative of a great house presented himself in a parenthesis of sobriety, and with an assumed geniality and gallantry of manner, and with promises of fidelity and kindness and self-abnegation, a June morning smiled on a March squall, and the great-souled woman surrendered her happiness to the keeping of this infamous son of fortune, whose possessions were in Carmel; "and the man was very great, and he had three thousand sheep, and a thousand goats."

Behold here a domestic tragedy repeated every hour of every day, all over Christendom—marriage for worldly success, without regard to character. So Marie Jeanne Philipon, the daughter of the humble engraver, became of history, the vivacious and brilliant girl, united with the cold, formal, monotonous man, because he came of an affluent family of Amiens, and had lordly blood in his veins. The day when, through political revolution, this patriotic woman was led to the scaffold, around which lay piles of human heads that had fallen from the axe, and she said to an aged man whom she had comforted as they ascended the scaffold, "Go first, that you may not witness my death," and then, undaunted, took her turn to die—that day was to her only the last act of a tragedy, of which her marriage day was the first.

Good and genial character in a man, for a woman's happy marriage. Mistake me not as depreciative of worldly prosperities. There is a religious cant that would seem to represent poverty as a virtue, and wealth as a crime. I can take you through a thousand mansions, where God is as much worshipped as He ever was in a cabin. The Gospel inculcates the virtues which tend toward wealth. In the millennium we will all dwell in palaces, and ride in chariots, and sit at sumptuous banquets, and sleep under rich embroideries, and live four or five hundred years, for, if according to the Bible, in those times a child shall die a hundred years old, the average of human life will be at least five centuries.

The whole tendency of sin is toward poverty, and the whole tendency of righteousness is toward wealth. Godliness is profitable for the life that now is, as well as for that which is to come. No inventory can be made of the picture-galleries consecrated to God, and of sculpture and of libraries, and pillared magnificence, and of parks and fountains and gardens in the ownership of good men and women. The two most lordly residences in which I was ever a guest, had morning and evening prayers, all the employees present, and all day long there was an air of cheerful piety in the conversation and behavior. Lord Radstock carried the Gospel to the Russian nobility. Lord Cavan and Lord Cairns spent their vacation in evangelistic services. Lord Congleton became missionary to Bagdad. And the Christ who was born in an Eastern caravansary has lived in a palace.

What Riches Can Do.

It is a grand thing to have plenty of money; and horses that don't compel you to take the dust of every lumbering and lazy vehicle; and books of history that give you a glimpse of all the past; and shelves of poetry to which you may go and ask Milton or Tennyson or Spencer or Tom Moore or Robert Burns to step down and spend an evening with you; and other shelves to which you may go while you feel disgusted with the shams of the world, and ask Thackeray to express your chagrin, or Charles Dickens to expose Pecksniffianism, or Thomas Carlyle to thunder your indignation; or the other shelves where the old Gospel writers stand ready to warn and cheer us, while they open doors into that City which is so bright the noonday sun is abolished.

There is no virtue in owning a horse that takes four minutes to go a mile, if you can own one that can go in a little over two minutes and a half; no virtue in running into the teeth of a northeast wind with thin apparel if you can afford furs; when you can honestly be rich. There are names of men and women that I have only to mention, and they suggest not only wealth, but religion and generosity and philanthropy, such as Amos Lawrence, James Lenox, Peter Cooper, William E. Dodge, Lord Shaftesbury, Miss Catherine Wolfe and Mrs. Astor. A recent writer says, that of fifty leading business men in one of our Eastern cities, and of the fifty leading business men of one of our Western cities, three-fourths of them are Christians.

The fact is, that about all the brain and the business genius is on the side of religion. Infidelity is incipient insanity. All infidels are cranks. Many of them talk brightly, but you soon find that in their mental machinery there is a screw loose. When they are not lecturing against Christianity they are sitting in bar-rooms, squirting tobacco juice, and when they get mad swear till the place is sulphurous. They only talk to keep their courage up, and at best will feel like the infidel who begged to be buried with his Christian wife and daughter, and when asked why he wanted such burial, replied: "If there be a resurrection of the good, as some folks say there will be, my Christian wife and daughter will somehow get me up and take me along with them."

Men may pretend to despise religion, but they are rank hypocrites. The sea-captain was right when he came up to the village on the seacoast, and insisted on paying ten dollars to the church, although he did not attend himself. When asked his reason, he said that he had been in the habit of carrying cargoes of oysters and clams from that place, and he found, since that church was built, the people were more honest than they used to be, for before the church was built he often found the load, when he came to count it, a thousand clams short. Yes, Godliness is profitable for both worlds. Most of the great, honest,

Permanent Worldly Successes

are by those who reverence God and the Bible. But what I do say is that if a man have nothing but social position and financial resources, a woman who puts her happiness by marriage in his hand, re-enacts the folly of Abigail when she accepted disagreeable Nabal, "whose possessions were in Carmel; and the man was very great, and he had three thousand sheep, and a thousand goats."

If there be good moral character accompanied by affluent circumstances, I congratulate you. If not, let the morning lark fly clear of the Rocky Mountain eagle.

The Sacrifice of Woman on the altar of social and financial expectation is cruel and stupendous. I sketch you a scene you have more than once witnessed. A comfortable home, with nothing more than ordinary surroundings; but an attractive daughter carefully and Christianly reared. From the outside world comes in a man with nothing but money, unless you count profanity and selfishness and fondness for champagne and general recklessness as a part of his possession. He has his coat collar turned up when there is no chill in the air, but because it gives him an air of abandon; and eyeglass, not because he is near-sighted, but because it gives a classical appearance; and with an attire somewhat loud, a cane thick enough to be the club of Hercules and clutched at the middle, his conversation interlarded with French phrases inaccurately pronounced, and a sweep of manner indicating that he was not born like most folks, but terrestrially landed. By he insinuates himself into the affections of the daughter of that Christian home. All the kindred congratulate her on the almost supernatural prospects. Reports come in that the young man is fast in his habits, that he has broken several young hearts, and that he is mean and selfish and cruel. But all this is covered up with the fact that he has several houses in his own name, and has large deposits at the bank, and, more than all, has a father worth many hundred thousand dollars and very feeble in health, and may any day drop off, and this is the only son; and a round dollar held close to one's eye is large enough to shut out a great desert, and how much more will several bushels of dollars shut out!

The marriage day comes and goes. The wedding ring was costly enough, and the orange blossoms fragrant enough, and the benediction solemn enough, and the wedding march stirring enough. And the audience shed tears of sympathetic gladness, supposing that the craft containing the two has sailed off on a placid lake, although God knows that they are its waters brackish with tears, and ghastly with ghastly faces of despair, floating to the surface and then going down. There they are, the newly married pair in their new home. He turns out to be a tyrant. Her will is nothing, his will everything. Lavish of money for his own pleasure, he begrudges her the pennies he pinches out into her trembling palm. Instead of the kind words she left behind in her former home, now there are complaints and fault-findings. He is the master, and she the slave.

The worst villain on earth is the man who, having captured a woman from her father's house, and after the oath of the marriage altar has been pronounced, says, by his manner if not his words: "I have you now in my power. What can you do? My arm is stronger than yours. My voice is louder than yours. My fortune is greater than yours. My name is mightier than yours. Now crouch before me like a dog. Now crawl away from me like a reptile. You are nothing but a woman, anyhow. Down, you miserable wretch!" Can halls of mosaic, can long lines of Etruscan bronze, or statuary by Palmer and Powers and Crawford and Chantry and Canova, can galleries rich from the pencil of Bierstadt and Church and Kenset and Cole and Cropsey, could flutes played on by an Ole Bull, or pianos fingered by a Gottschalk, or solos warbled by a Sonntag, could wardrobes like that of a Marie Antoinette, could jewels like those of a Eugenie, make a wife in such a companionship happy?

Imprisoned in a Castle!

Her gold bracelets are the chains of a lifelong servitude. There is a sword over her every feast, not like that of Damocles staying suspended, but dropping through her lacerated heart. Her wardrobe is full of shrouds for deaths which she dies daily, and she is buried alive, though buried under gorgeous upholstery. There is one word that sounds under the arches, and rolls along the corridors, and weeps in the falling fountains, and echoes in the shutting of every door, and groans in every note of stringed and wind instrument: "Woe! Woe!" The oxen and sheep, in olden times, brought to a temple of Jupiter to be sacrificed, used to be covered with ribbons and flowers—ribbons on the horns and flowers on the neck. But the floral and ribboned decoration did not make the stab of the butcher's knife less deathful, and all the chandeliers you hang over such a woman, and all the robes with which you enwrap her, and all the ribbons with which you adorn her, and all the bewitching charms with which you embank her footsteps, are the ribbons and flowers of a horrible butchery,

As if to show how wretched a good woman may be in splendid surroundings, we have two recent illustrations, in Great Britain. They are the focus of the best things that are possible in art, in literature, in architecture, the accumulation of other estates, until their wealth is beyond calculation, and their grandeur beyond description. One of the castles has a cabinet set with gems that cost two million five hundred thousand dollars, and the walls of it bloom with Rembrandts and Claudes and Poussins and Guidos and Raphaels, and there are Southdown flocks in summer grazing on its lawns, and Arab steeds prancing at the doorways on the "first open day at the kennels." From the one castle the duchess has removed with her children, because she can no longer endure the orgies of her husband, the duke, and in the other castle the duchess remains, confronted by insults and abominations, in the presence of which I do not think God or decent society requires a good woman to remain.

Two Ducal Palaces

Alas for those ducal country-seats! They on a large scale illustrate what on a smaller scale may be seen in many places, that without moral character in a husband, all the accessories of wealth are to a wife's soul tantalization and mockery. When Abigail finds Nabal, her husband, beastly drunk, as she comes home from interceding for his fortune and life, it was no alleviation that the old brute had possessions in Carmel, and "was very great, and had three thousand sheep, and one thousand goats," and he the worst goat among them. The animal in his nature seized the soul and ran off with it. Before things are right in this world are to be expurgated. Instead of being welcomed into respectable society because of the amount of stars and garters and medals and estates they represent, they ought to be fumigated two or three years before they are allowed, without peril to themselves, to put their hand on the door-knob of a moral house. The time must come when a masculine estray will be as repugnant to good society as a feminine estray, and no coat of arms or family emblazonry or epaulet can pass a Lothario unchallenged among the sanctities of home life. By what law of God or common sense, is an Absalom better than a Delilah, a Don Juan better than a Messalina? The brush that paints the one black must paint the other black.

But what a spectacle it was when last summer much of "watering-place" society went wild with enthusiasm over an unclean foreign dignitary, whose name in both hemispheres is a synonym for profligacy, and princesses of American society from all parts of the land had him ride in their carriages and sit at their tables, though they knew him to be a portable lazaretto, a charnel house of moral putrefaction, his breath a typhoid, his foot that of a Satyr and his touch death. Here is an evil that men cannot stop, but women may.

of your parlors, have no recognition for them in the street, and no more think of allying your life and destiny with theirs than "gales from Araby" would consent to pass the honeymoon with an Egyptian plague. All that money or social position a bad man brings to a woman in marriage is a splendid despair, a gilded horror, a brilliant agony, a prolonged death; and the longer the marital union lasts, the more evident will be the fact, that she might better never have been born. Yet you and I have been at brilliant weddings, where, before the feast was over, the bridegroom's tongue was thick, and his eye glassy, and his step a stagger, as he clicked glasses with jolly comrades, all going, with lightning express train, to the fatal crash over the embankment of a ruined life and a lost eternity.

Woman, join not your right hand with such a right hand. Accept from such an one no jewel for finger or ear, lest that sparkle of precious stone turn out to be the eye of a basilisk; and let not the ring come on the finger of your right hand, lest that ring turn out to be one link of a chain that shall bind you in never-ending captivity. In the name of God and heaven and home, in the name of all time and all eternity, I forbid the banns! Consent not to join one of the many regiments of women who have married for worldly success without regard to moral character.

If you are ambitious, O woman, for noble affiancing, why not Marry a King?

And to that honor you are invited by the Monarch of heaven and earth, and this day a voice from the sky sounds forth: "As the bridegroom rejoiceth over the bride, so shall thy God rejoice over thee." Let Him put upon thee the ring of this royal marriage. Here is an honor worth reaching after. By repentance and faith you may come into a marriage with the Emperor of universal dominion, and you may be an Empress unto God forever, and reign with Him in palaces that the centuries cannot crumble, or cannonades demolish.

High, worldly marriage is not necessary for woman, or marriage of any kind, in order to your happiness. Celibacy has been honored by the best Being that ever lived and His greatest apostles—Christ and Paul. What higher honor could single life on earth have? But what you need, O woman, is to be affianced forever and forever, and the banns of that marriage I am this moment here and now ready to publish. Let the angels of heaven bend from their galleries of light to witness, while I pronounce you one—a loving God and a forgiven soul.

One of the most stirring passages in history with which I am acquainted, tells us how Cleopatra, the exiled Queen of Egypt, won the sympathies of Julius Cæsar, the conqueror, until he became the bridegroom, and she the bride. Driven from her throne, she sailed away on the Mediterranean Sea in a storm, and when the large ship anchored, she put out with one womanly friend in a small boat, until she arrived at Alexandria, where was Cæsar, the great general. Knowing that she would not be permitted to land or pass the guards on the way to Cæsar's palace, she laid upon the bottom of the boat some shawls and scarfs and richly dyed upholstery, and then lay down upon them, and her friend wrapped her in them, and she was admitted ashore in this wrapping of goods, which was announced as

A Present for Cæsar.

This bundle was permitted to pass the guards of the gates of the palace and was put down at the feet of the Roman general. When the bundle was unrolled, there rose before Cæsar one whose courage and beauty and brilliancy are the astonishment of the ages. This exiled queen of Egypt told the story of her sorrows, and he promised her that she should get back her throne in Egypt and take the throne of wifely dominion in his own heart. Afterward they made a triumphal tour in a barge that the pictures of many art galleries have called "Cleopatra's Barge," and that barge was covered with silken awning, and its deck was soft with luxuriant carpets, and the oars were silver-tipped, and the prow was gold mounted, and the air was redolent with the spicery of tropical gardens, and resonant with the music that made the night glad as the day.

You may rejoice, O woman, that you are not a Cleopatra, and that the One to whom you may be affianced had none of the sins of Cæsar, the conqueror. But it suggests to me how you, a soul exiled from happiness and peace, may find your way to the feet of the Conqueror of earth and sky. Though it may be a dark night of spiritual agitation in which you put out into the harbor of peace, you may sail, and when all the wrappings of fear, and doubt and sin shall be removed you will be found at the feet of Him who will put you on a throne to be acknowledged as His in the day when all the silver trumpets of the sky shall proclaim: "Behold the bridegroom cometh;" and in a barge of light you sail with Him the river whose source is the foot of the throne, and whose mouth is at the sea of glass mingled with fire.

THE LAST OPERATION.

AMONG the testimonies to Divine Healing published by Rev. A. B. Simpson in his Word, Work and World is the following: Mrs Stahl came to Berachah Home, New York, in October last, suffering from severe spinal trouble, which had been so painful, that years ago an operation was necessary. The relief was only slight. Fifteen times since then she had needed surgical treatment, which, though exceedingly painful, she gladly accepted, as it brought a temporary relief from the acute agony that made it necessary. Hearing through Rev. Mr. Haugh that the Lord had so marvellously healed him, she was brought to New York to hear more of the truth of Christ as a healer. On the previous Friday she was carried into the Tabernacle, and lay, during the service, on pillows in one of the pews. She accepted with a child's faith the teaching which was given, and in a few days she went up and down stairs a healed woman, rejoicing in God as her physical life. At the recent Convention she gave her testimony clearly, and all could see from her shining face that Christ had been revealed to her in spiritual as well as physical power.

DARK PROSPECTS FOR ENGLAND IN 1888, 1889 AND 1890.

By Rev. M. Baxter.

The Last Happy Christmas—Coming Difficulties and Reverses—Three Thrones of Mark—The Present Situation of Protestant Europe—The Edge of the Abyss—The Sixth Vial near its Termination—The Impending Social Revolutionary Earthquake—European War Inevitable—Loss of Ireland and India—Lord Salisbury's Warning.

CHRISTMAS DAY, 1887, on the eve of which these words are penned, will be the most happy, prosperous and auspicious anniversary of the Birth of Christ, that Britain will ever again witness, before the End of this Age in April, 1901 Each of the succeeding nine Christmases, until 1897, when Antichrist's three and a half years universal desolation begins, will find Britain increasingly overwhelmed by on all sides, like the victim in the historically famed torture-chamber, the walls of which were daily contracted by machinery, until the hapless prisoner within was crushed by their remorseless pressure.

Ruskin, in his 'Stones of Venice,' has well remarked: "Since the first dominion of men was asserted over the ocean, three thrones of mark, beyond all others, have been set upon its sands —the thrones of Tyre Venice and England. Of the first of these great Powers only the memory remains; of the second, there remains only the ruin; the third, inheriting their greatness, may, if it forget their example, be led through prouder eminence to less pitied destruction. The exaltation, the sin, and the punishment of Tyre, have been recorded for us in some of the most touching words ever uttered by the prophets of Israel. But we read them as a lovely song, and close our ears to the sternness of their warning."

Prophetic students well know the blackness and depth of

upon the edge of which all Christendom, and especially Protestant Christendom, now stands —for numerous expositors agree that the closing years of this 19th century, will most probably be the closing years of the present Gentile dispensation, introductory to the Millennial dispensation of 1,000 years—and that we are now living just before the termination of the Sixth Vial of Revelation 16, in this historical fulfilment, when the mystic Euphrates or Turkish Mohammedan empire is drying up, and consequently, the Jews are returning to Jerusalem in increased numbers, and "the three evil spirits" of Spiritualism, Revolutionary Democracy, and Mohammedan and Romanist fanatical conspiracy "are going forth from Dragon, Wildbeast, and False Prophet, to gather the nations to the war of the Great Day of God Almighty toward Armageddon." Then will follow the Seventh Vial during the few years preceding 1901, and there shall be a political and throughout the world, "such as was not since men were upon the earth, so mighty an earthquake, and so great," and which will in fact be Daniel's final "Time of Trouble, such as was not since there was a nation even to that same time," predicted in his twelfth chapter, and which is the same as "the Great Tribulation such as was not since the beginning of the world, no, nor ever shall be" foretold by Christ in his eschatological discourse in Matthew 24, immediately to precede His future Advent in the clouds of heaven.

The astonishing circumstance is, that we are now enjoying so much peace and prosperity up to the very latest year, 1888, to which it is possible, according to prophecy, for European peace to be preserved unbroken. There is such a long series of Prophetic Events to be accomplished, before the End of this Age in Passover Week, April 1901, that the first event of the whole series, viz.,

Gigantic European Wars,

gradually changing twenty-three kingdoms into ten kingdoms, by 1891, cannot possibly begin later than 1889, the centenary of the French Revolution, and is in the highest degree likely to begin in 1888, because it is contrary to all precedent in History that twenty-three kingdoms could be changed into ten, in so short a space as two years, which is all the interval there would be from 1889 to 1891. Then Napoleon has afterwards to rise to reign over Syria, and make a covenant with the Jews on April 21, 1894. (Daniel 7. 24.)

Now as England, being inside Cæsar's Roman Empire countries, must be one of the Ten Confederated Kingdoms by 1891, and must be separated from Ireland, which does not belong to Cæsar's Roman Empire, by that time, therefore, we can only infer that England will be so disastrously involved in European wars between 1888 and 1891, that "its difficulty will be Ireland's opportunity," and when the whole of the British soldiers, including all available regulars, militia, reserve men, and volunteers, shall be imperatively needed elsewhere, Ireland, being entirely evacuated by British troops, will rise up, as in 1782, and demand another Grattan's Parliament, which will practically render it independent of England. A great issuing in its independence, likewise, will be the accompaniment or result of Ireland obtaining complete Home Rule. This was remarked by Lord Salisbury, at Derby, on December 19, 1887, who said that the loss of Ireland would be found to involve the loss of India. And the utter military unpreparedness of England to defend India, and at the same time to take part in a general European war, is strikingly shown by a noted statesman in the Fortnightly Review for November and December. That statesman shows that Germany has 5,000,000 of armed and trained soldiers; France and Austria each have 2,000,000 or 3,000,000: but Britain has not got more than 500.000. In

in 1888 or 1889, France is predicted by Daniel to defeat Germany and gain the Rhine as its boundary line. How will England be then able to resist 3,000,000 French soldiers, flushed with victory, and with loud cries of "A Londres," swooping down on London, and levying an indemnity of $500,000,000 or more, which they will certainly be disposed to do, if England is allied with the defeated Germany in that war—an alliance which at present seems more probable than an Anglo-French alliance.

If, on the other hand, England is allied with France in that war, it may escape invasion. But we cannot understand how England can lose the Highlands of Scotland above the Roman Wall by 1891 (if it is to do so, as some maintain, because the Highlands did not belong to Cæsar's Roman Empire any more than Ireland did), except it be the result of so great a catastrophe as a successful invasion of Britain.

London has been compared to Jerusalem in ancient times, as the great centre of Bible, tract and missionary influence, and its destiny may be similar to that of Jerusalem, which was captured by foreign invaders long before its final destruction.

The Rev. Samuel Garratt, in his "Midnight Cry," says, "When we see what God did to Jerusalem, how can we help asking ourselves, What will He do to London, where there is so much true Christianity, and at the same time so much impiety? Will London be made desolate? We have been stripped, by steam navigation, of that naval defence in which we once trusted to be to us instead of bulwarks and towers. No one who does not shut his eyes, doubts that there is the will, if there is the power, to deal the fatal blow. Are we better than Jerusalem? And if not, why should we not share her fate? Sure I am that unless God be with us, none of our plans will save us. Without God London may become a desolation."

Lord Salisbury forcibly referred, in his speech at Derby, on December 19, to the

in Europe, and the necessity of England being prepared for coming conflicts, and also to the ruin staring farmers in the face from the importation of cheap corn from foreign countries. He said: "In sad and sober truth, it is impossible that the vast European armaments, constantly growing, can continue to watch each other without creating some well-founded solicitude in those to whom the peace of Europe is a matter of the deepest interest. These great, heavy overcharged clouds, charged with the electricity of war, near each other, come closer and closer. Who is he who shall be bold enough to prophesy that at any given time the thunderclap shall not ensue? I say that the mere existence of these growing armaments is a constant and steady danger, and that he would be a bold man who would extend his prophecies to many years from this time. I believe that, more intensely than ever the rulers, all rulers, of Europe at this time are deeply anxious for peace. But there are great waves of popular sentiment sweeping over the nations of Europe, and no man knows what impulse they may give to the councils of the rulers whom they seem to obey, but whom they in reality govern. I wish to draw a moral for ourselves. In past times danger announced itself afar. If there was a prospect of war, there was a preliminary diplomatic trouble which gave ample opportunity for preparation, That state of things has passed away. If the thunderclap of war should ever break, it would give you no warning, and if by any untoward chance you should be involved in it, your fate will depend upon the preparation you have made in time of peace."

A HOTEL-KEEPER'S COMPLAINT.

AMONG the reminiscences called forth by the death of ex-Secretary Manning, whose portrait appeared in this journal two weeks ago, is an amusing incident related of his relations with the proprietor of the Arlington Hotel, in Washington, where Mr. Manning had a suite of rooms, before going to housekeeping.

The hotel-keeper, who is an Albany man by birth, and knew Mr. Manning well before the latter became Secretary of the Treasury, went one night, after twelve o'clock, to Mr. Manning's rooms, where the Secretary, with five clerks, was working hard at the Treasury documents. He knocked loudly at the door and was bidden enter.

"What do you want?" gruffly inquired the Secretary, annoyed at the intrusion.

"I want you to behave yourself," as gruffly replied the hotel man.

"Why, great Scott!" the Secretary retorted, evidently jumping at the conclusion that a fuss had been made in some other room, and that the landlord had mistaken the parties. "There is no noise here. What does this thing mean?"

"It means business," savagely replied the landlord. "I want these clerks to bundle up their papers and get out of here at once. It is after midnight, and here you are, working as if the safety of the republic demanded that you should kill yourself in this outrageous way. I have known you, man and boy, for over forty years, and I don't propose to become particeps criminis in your suicide, nor do I care to suffer the injury to my hotel which your death and funeral under such circumstances would entail upon it. I want you to behave yourself, or else you must seek other quarters!"

The genial Secretary laughed aloud at his landlord's earnestness, and directed the clerks to go home. Then the twain sat down, and the genial Secretary listened to the landlord's expostulation, and to a long lecture on the wickedness of overwork and violation of the rules of health. He promised reformation, but shortly thereafter went to house-keeping, and was removed from the restraining influences of the Arlington's proprietor.

Mr. Manning might have resented the landlord's expostulation as officious interference, had he not perceived that his conduct was prompted by genuine disinterested concern for him. It would be well if ungodly men were similarly discerning, when Christian friends, moved by fear of a far more terrible catastrophe, plead with them to give less attention to business and more to spiritual health. (Ezek. 2 : 7.)

THE ECCLESIASTICAL COBBLER.

IN an address delivered in New York on January 8, Dr. McGlynn, the excommunicated Roman Catholic priest, whose portrait and life appeared in this journal on February 3, 1887, gave utterance to some weighty warnings about the pope, whom be dubbed "The Ecclesiastical Cobbler." He said, that at the present time the pope's influence on American politics was mischievous. An alliance existed between one of his representatives here, and a political organization to get votes through the confessional. In the days of Tweed an arrangement had been made one Sunday evening, by which the Roman Catholic schools got money out of the State Treasury through a similar bargain. Finally he said, "The more politics you take from Rome, the less religion you will get. The pope's entrance into politics has been

The Curse of Every Nation.

"God forbid that the hated thing should be revived. The flatterers of the pope are making him an intolerable nuisance. Is it necessary for the office of Peter, that his successor to-day shall be the greatest enemy of his country, that the see of Peter should incur the hatred of the patriotic loving Italians, because the kingdom of the pope was the only obstacle to Italian unity?

"What," Dr. McGlynn asked, "has the pope to do with politics? A great many years ago—it is nineteen hundred years ago—there stood upon the earth a Man, who alone of all men dared to say of Himself, 'I am the way, and the truth, and the life.' The Son of God said, 'Learn of Me, because I am meek and humble of heart.' That man said, 'Blessed are the peacemakers, for they shall be called the children of God.' That man said, 'My kingdom is not of this world.' When men would make Him king He fled to the mountains alone and spent the night in prayer. He was a man of sorrows, acquainted with grief. He refused to have any part and parcel in the mere temporal things of the world. The office (of the papacy) is salutary only in proportion as it is exercised in conformity with Him who would have no earthly kingdom, whose crown was a crown of thorns, who was to be exalted, not on the shoulders of men, but on the horrid, ignominious gibbet, where He proved His love for all His children."

Speaking of the character of the Apostle Peter, whose succes or the pope claims to be, Dr. McGlynn said: "You find nothing of that in him who is as great and as good as His Holiness Pope Leo XIII. We hear nothing of the incredible assertions of (pausing and smiling)—I should have said the latest of the Popes. Modern delusion, Pope worship, Pope deification, attributes to a poor old man, tottering on the brink of the grave, ignorant of the geography of most of the world, all the triumphs of the Church throughout the wide world. The first Pope did not arrogate to himself the appointment of other apostles. He permitted his colleagues to appoint one in the place of Judas. After three centuries, it was the policy of Constantine, the Emperor, to become a Christian. We Christians of to-day can see what a sad mistake it was, what a pitiful thing it was, that the Church of Christ was edged around by the temporal gifts of Constantine. From that dates the beginning of the corruption of the Church. The power which Constantine gave to the Church is the Imperial Purple. The privilege of wearing it came from Constantine or his successors. Emperors, kings and princes lavished wealth upon the Church, and it is a thousand pities that the Church accepted so perilous a gift."

The Last of the Popes

Need of the Reformation.

He dwelt upon the corruption of morals "in both clergy and laity," and attributed "the interminable confusion of the Middle Ages" to that corruption. He spoke of the Reformation. "It was this corruption which made necessary the Protestant Reformation. It is not," he said, "my business to defend the destruction of any of the good things that the Protestant Reformation destroyed. It actually took away precious doctrines and inestimable sacraments. But it could not be delayed much longer." The Papacy had become so corrupt that Alexander VI., of infamous memory, had his illegitimate children, Lucrezia and Cæsar Borgia, occupying his own palace. Cæsar Borgia was a swashbuckler, and by permission of 'his Holy Father, the Pope,' went up and down the State, slashing and killing. Lucrezia Borgia was another of the beautiful children of His Holiness Alexander VI. And at the time he ruled the Church, a flaxen haired little German boy was playing around the streets of Saxony, and his name was Martin Luther.

"It is not in the power of any Pope or council to create any new doctrine of faith. If it is new it is not a doctrine, and they convict themselves out of their own mouths. Did you see the rubbish in the newspapers, of the Pope sitting in his high chair, as an oracle of doctrine that we are bound to believe in. A man in this city actually dared, from a Catholic pulpit, to preach such rubbish as that! He said substantially that every word of the Holy Father was the utterance of the Holy Ghost. What nonsense! Will the world ever accept such rot as that? Does not that make the cheeks of you Catholics tingle and burn with shame? Let us not indulge in that brutal, fulsome, disgraceful flattery of a poor old bag of bones, seventy-eight years old, a poor, tottering, absent-minded old man, with one foot in the grave."

The significance of the foregoing observations consists in the fact that they were not made by a Protestant, but by a man who still avows himself a Roman Catholic, who was until last year a priest, and had held that office for about thirty years. He must therefore have had ample opportunity for learning the facts.

TROUBLES IN PONAPE.

THE report of bloodshed in Ponape, following the arrest of Mr. Doane, as described in these columns, has been confirmed by the publication, in the Missionary Herald, of extracts from the journal of Mr. Rand, one of the missionaries there. They recount the events which occurred while Mr. Doane was a prisoner on trial at Manila. It appears from them that the governor and other Spanish officials were really killed, as reported, though the missionaries endeavored to prevent the attack. It grew out of an attempt to arrest some natives who resisted, and, being aided by their friends, fell upon the Spaniards and killed them. Shortly afterward, a boat was on its way to the Spanish ship off the island, when a native fired into it. The fire was returned, and then the action became general. An attack was made on the governor's party, who took refuge in the fort. They held their ground till after midnight, when it was getting too hot for them, and they tried to flee to the ship, over the flats. A short distance from the shore they were all killed, the governor, doctor, secretary, captain of the soldiers, and many others. "As near as I can find out," says Mr. Rand, "about ten Ponapeans and forty Spaniards were killed."

Mr. Rand further says, that he set out to go over to meet the chiefs, and then go on board the Spanish ship, but the missionary ladies, Miss Fletcher and Miss Palmer, with the Christian natives, were decidedly of opinion that it would be unwise. He therefore sent a letter to the chiefs, begging them not to allow their people to seize the ship, and sent a message also to the ship's captain. The captain, who had always seemed a different man from the late governor, answered that he would cease hostilities whenever the natives would do so, and he prepared a paper promising the same. He offered it to the chiefs, who also signed it. Thus peace was restored before the return of Mr. Doane from Manila on the same ship which brought the new Spanish governor. In closing his account, Mr. Rand expresses himself as pleased with the first appearance of this governor. He writes: "I went with Mr. Doane to Kenan, yesterday, to try and get the tribes to return the boat, cannon, and other Spanish property taken by them in the war. We finally succeeded as to boat, one cannon, etc.; the other cannon may be returned later."

TANGLED IN ELECTRIC WIRES

THE singular death of a horse, and the narrow escape of pedestrians, in a crowded thoroughfare of New York, is reported by the daily journals. On January 8, about nine o'clock in the evening, while a Fourth Avenue car was passing the corner of Fourteenth Street, one of the horses became entangled in a length of telephone wire, which had fallen from its fastenings on the roof of the German Savings Bank across the electric light wires. The horse received a severe electric shock and began to rear and prance about in a very lively manner. The driver stopped the car and endeavored to gain control of the frightened animal, but without avail. The more the horse jumped about, the more he became entangled in the wires. The passengers in the car became frightened, and left the car hurriedly. A large crowd collected, and the driver was assailed with all sorts of advice. After fifteen minutes' delay, an inspector and lineman of the Illuminating Company appeared on the scene, and cut the wires with which the horse was entangled. The animal staggered a few steps after being released, and then fell dead. During the stoppage of the traffic, several persons among the crowd that gathered, were about to lay hold of the wire to disentangle it from the affrighted animal, and were only restrained by those who knew the character of the wire. It looked so innocent and harmless that it was a natural thing to seize it, but if any one had done so, without having on the rubber gloves that the linemen wear, they would have been killed on the spot. It is not safe to regard everything as harmless that appears so, and that may be said of other things besides electric wires. Many a young man in our large cities, has been betrayed into calamity worse than death, by the lures spread by Satan and labelled harmless (Prov. 3:5.)

A PRODIGIOUS GAS BILL.

THE payment of the largest bill for gas ever delivered to a private consumer is reported in the Missouri Republican. It states that recently a lady called at the office of the gas company about the supply of gas in her house. The secretary referred to his ledger, but could not find any record of the account, though he traced back the entries of ten years. A workman was sent to examine the meter, and to remedy the defect complained of, and it was found that the meter was worn out. Certain marks upon it gave a clue to the date at which it had been put in the house, and in that way the mystery was solved. It was found that in transferring the accounts from one ledger to another, that particular meter had been overlooked. The consumer had been burning gas for ten years, without receiving any bill or any demand for payment. An explanation was made to him, and a bill for $780 presented as an estimate of the debt owing. The consumer, being an honorable man, did not take advantage of his legal rights, but promptly paid the bill. He might naturally have thought that, as bills were not presented at the regular intervals, he would never be called upon to pay for his gas. That is the mistake some persons make about their sinful lives. When no evil happens to them, and they continue to prosper while living in sin, they think either that there is no God, or that He is careless about it. They forget than an awful record is rolling up against them, with which they will be confronted in the end, unless, through faith in Christ, they obtain remission through His blood. (Ps. 50: 21.)

CURRENT EVENTS.

The New Cabinet Nominations Were Not confirmed by the Senate last week. It was decided by the Committees to report favorably the nomination of Mr. Vilas to be Secretary of the Interior, and Mr. Dickinson to be Postmaster-General, but to report adversely Mr. Lamar's nomination to the Supreme Court bench. On the latter question the five Republican members of the Committee voted against the nomination, and the four Democratic members, Messrs. Pugh, Coke, Vest and George, in favor of it. Mr. Lamar has formally resigned his office as Secretary of the Interior, in order to relieve the Senate of embarrassment and to facilitate his successor in the Department. No special objection is likely to be made in the Senate to the Vilas and Dickinson nominations, and many Senators are disposed to vote upon them and get the calendar free before taking up the Lamar case, which Mr. Chandler, who is leading the opposition, has resolved to resist to the last. A letter, however, from Senator Stewart, of Nevada, promising to vote for confirmation, and stating his reasons for doing so, was published last week, and appears to indicate the probability of Mr. Lamar's nomination being confirmed eventually.

The Work of Making a Final Survey of the route for the Nicaragua Canal has been commenced. A lengthy letter, giving detailed reports of the expedition, was published last week. It states that the engineers have received a warm welcome at Greytown. They were met by Commissioners appointed by the Nicaraguan Government, and assured of cordial assistance and co-operation. Mr. Peary, who spoke for the Americans, thanked the commission for the reception accorded the party, and said he congratulated Nicaragua upon the nearness of the day when she would be mistress of the Bosphorus of the Western Hemisphere. Elaborate plans have been arranged for attaining the greatest accuracy in the surveys. The location of the route will be designated so minutely, with underground stations, the marking of trees and other natural objects, that there will be no difficulty in identifying any point at any future time. Weekly reports relative to provisions and instruments, progress of work, and of the efficiency of members of the party, will be made. On all hands the good-will of the Nicaraguans toward the expedition is evidenced both among Government officials and the masses of the people. The people seem to vie with one another in endeavoring to assist the engineers, and frequently during the day, while running the line of survey through and about the town, the residents send them choice fruits and aid them in various ways.

The Reform of the National Banking System promised before Congress assembled, was introduced in the Senate on January 10 by Senator Voorhees. It is stated to be an embodiment of the suggestions made from time to time by Controller Trenholm. Among its most important provisions are those which forbid that the officers of a bank shall constitute a majority of the Board of Directors; require that the Directors shall take an oath to inform themselves as to the business and condition of the bank; forbid the organization of national banks, with branches; divide national banks into two classes—those with a capital of $250,000 and less, and those having more than that amount of capital; reduce the amount of bonds required to be deposited by the smaller banks from one-quarter to one-tenth of their capital; and that by the larger banks from $50,000 to $25,000; and give more elasticity to the present laws, which limit to one-tenth of the capital of the bank loans of money, providing at the same time a penalty for making loans contrary to law.

Churches and Charitable Institutions in New York are not likely to remember with gratitude the administration of the present Mayor. The Commissioners on Thursday last had under consideration the proposal to erect a new building for a church on land granted by the city more than twenty years ago, and a second application from a hospital to occupy a vacant city lot adjoining the hospital. "Not an inch of the city's land shall ever be given to any charitable institution," shouted the Mayor, "unless for adequate compensation." It was explained that at the hospital the city's poor often received free medical advice, and that the favor asked was not a great one. The Mayor, however, was obdurate and repeated his declaration that not an inch of land should ever be given to any religious or charitable institution. The public will add to the declaration the clause which the Mayor must have meant to add, but omitted—"while Mayor Hewitt has power to refuse it." Happily the term for which the Mayor was elected will have an end, and by none is its termination so eagerly anticipated as by some who voted and worked to elect him.

A Slight Earthquake in North Carolina occasioned widespread alarm in that State on Thursday last. A press despatch from Charlotte says: "Two slight shocks of earthquake were felt here this morning. The time of the first was 9:54 A. M., and the second was eight seconds later. Signal Officer Barry says the vibrations were from north to south. The shocks were greatest in the western portion of the city. A mirror was shaken off the mantel at P. E. Linnel's house. No other damage is reported. The people are excited, fearing another disaster like that of 1886. It was felt also at Raleigh, Wilmington and Savannah, Ga. At Charleston, S. C., the disturbance was also noticed by some persons, though it was so slight as not to be felt by the majority of the people. At Columbia, S. C., buildings were severely shaken, and doors, windows, crockery and glassware rattled in a lively manner. People sleeping were rudely awakened, and many rushed into the streets. The vibrations continued about ten seconds, and were accompanied by loud detonations."

An Effort to Mediate in the Gigantic Strike of the miners and employees of the Reading Railroad Company was made on January 11 by a committee of merchants. The committee was appointed at a meeting of Schuylkill County merchants to meet the Reading management and try to settle the differences between them and the miners, as the strike entailed great damage to all the manufacturing and commercial interests in the district. Mr. Corbin, the President of the road, listened attentively to the representations of the committee, and their appeals for arbitration. He remained firm, however. He said that while he heartily sympathized with the object of the committee, which was to end the strike, the position and duty of the Company were perfectly clear. He said there was nothing the Company could submit to arbitration. The subject of the railroad strike was closed; that strike was over. The men who left the service of the Company were discharged, and would, under no circumstances, be taken back. The leaders of the striking miners, he understood, would not be satisfied even if the question of wages should be conceded. They would demand that all the new men on the railroad should be discharged, and all the discharged men be taken back. This alone would make arbitration impossible. The mining industry at the close of last week was practically suspended. Signs of suffering among the families of the men are already making their appearance, and in other districts the rise in the price of coal is entailing much privation on the poor.

The Discovery of Another Plot to Assassinate the Czar is reported in the cable despatches. Arrangements had been made for a series of Court balls and festivities in St. Petersburg, to commence on the Russian New Year's day (January 13), and to continue for two weeks. The Czar and Czarina were to come from Gatschina to lead the gaiety. Orders, however, were given early in the week countermanding the invitations. The European correspondent of the New York Herald cables that the change was due to the arrest of a railroad official who was suspected of Nihilism. Among his papers was found proof that he had kept the Nihilists informed of the arrangements for the Czar's journeys to the Capital, and clues were also obtained to the conspirators in a daring plot to kill the Czar on the very night following the arrest. A large number of persons have been arrested in St. Petersburg for participation in the plot. Among those arrested were several officers of the army who had just arrived in St. Petersburg from the provinces. Private despatches from Warsaw say that the conspiracy had its centre in St. Petersburg, and that it was of unusual magnitude as regards both the number and the position of the persons implicated.

Hopeful Reports of the Condition of the Crown Prince of Germany were cabled last week. The Emperor, in speaking of him to a deputation, said that the news regarding the Crown Prince was excellent, and that the worst fears had passed away. The hope was now justified that the Prince would be able to return to Berlin in the spring. Count Rodolinski the Crown Prince's Chamberlain, who on January 11 returned from San Remo, says that the Crown Prince's general health is better than it has been for years past.

The Removal of the Bodies of the Napoleons to a magnificent mausoleum in England, took place with imposing ceremonies on January 9. The Empress Eugenie was anxious that the remains of her husband, Napoleon III., and her son, should rest at Chiselhurst, near the mansion she has so long occupied, and where the Emperor died. The owner of all the surrounding land, however, has a prejudice against Frenchmen and Roman Catholics, and refused to sell her a plot of ground on which to erect the mausoleum she wished to rear over them. The Empress therefore bought land at Farnborough, thirty-two miles from London, where she has built the mausoleum, at a cost of half a million dollars. Large numbers of persons witnessed the removal of the bodies. A detachment of English soldiers bore the coffins to gun-carriages, on which they were taken to the railroad depot. Another detachment met the train at its journey's end, and in the same way the massive coffins were conveyed to their new resting-place.

Canvassers Wanted to Sell, from House to House, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Any man, woman or youth may easily add to their income every week by selling the paper in their spare hours in their own neighborhood. One man has sold one hundred copies on a Saturday. For terms address Manager of CHRISTIAN HERALD, 63 Bible House, New York.

Bishop Riley's Work in Mexico has on Several occasions elicited warm words of approval from the Rt. Rev. A. Cleveland Coxe, Bishop of Western New York, who thoroughly understands its character, and who has none of that tenderness toward Roman Catholicism which impels the Ritualistic clergy to look coldly on a movement distinctly aggressive on papal influence. His latest utterance, published a few days ago, is unqualified in its endorsement of the effort in which many of our readers have engaged. He said: "Some of our people, and most heartily I am with them, have resolved to aid, so far as they may, those suffering Christians in Mexico who exercise their undoubted right to regard themselves as the Reformed National Church of Mexico, and who feel that to forfeit this position would be to lose their claims upon Christendom, and also their hold upon the national conscience; to say nothing of the property which they have no right to hold if they become the mission of a foreign Church."

The Rev. Jacob Freshman's Work Among the Jews is making real progress. His annual report, issued last week, chronicles the baptism of six converted Jews, beside several others who, having begun the study of Christianity under his guidance, have removed to other cities, where they have been baptized. Several others who have given encouraging evidence of their faith, have so far held back from open confession, knowing that it will cost them discharge from employment, and ostracism by family and friends. Mr. Freshman's hands would be strengthened, in such cases, if he knew of Christian employers to whom he could send such men for temporary occupation, until they could find regular work by which they could support themselves. Mr. Freshman gratefully acknowledges the kindness of God, on whom he and his devoted wife depend for daily food. This has been given them during another year, and they have also received gifts for their work, which have reduced the mortgage on the Hebrew Christian church to $10,000. He has also been able to aid in establishing a similar work in Chicago. All who sympathize with him in his labor, can help him to maintain and extend it by sending contributions addressed Rev. Jacob Freshman, 17 St. Mark's Place, New York.

A Gift for the Crown Prince of Germany was sent from Saginaw, Mich., on January 11. An elderly German woman, belonging to the working class, entered the office of an express company, and presenting a package, asked the cost of sending it to San Remo, Italy. It was addressed to the Crown Prince, and the old woman said it was medicine which would cure Unser Fritz's throat. She was clearly in earnest, and was modest and sensible. The clerk told her that six dollars would cover the cost of transportation, and she paid the amount and departed. It was an affecting evidence of her devotion, for the six dollars must have made an appreciable inroad on her savings. We cannot but wish that a similar spirit of devotion to the Prince of Heaven was more prevalent among His subjects. They cannot benefit Him, but He has said that those who do good to His followers, because they are His, are counted to have done good to Him personally. (Matt. 25: 40.)

A Distressing Exposure Occurred in a Brooklyn home recently. A German drug-clerk, aged twenty-nine, came to live there with his wife and child two years ago. He led an exemplary life, was devoted to his wife and little one, and being thoroughly acquainted with his business and very skilful, was prospering moderately. As he had the confidence of his employers, and was much respected by all who knew him, there was general surprise when he was brought to his home on January 7 by two detectives. He had asked, as a favor, that he might be taken there before going to prison, so that he might break the sad intelligence to his wife gently. He told her that five years ago he came to this country from Germany, and obtained employment in a wholesale drug-store in New York. He drifted into bad company and robbed his employers, covering up the crime with forgery. He was detected, tried and sentenced to five years' imprisonment. In the prison his medical knowledge and intelligence were appreciated, and he was placed in charge of the drugs in the hospital, and was found very useful. His position secured him many privileges, and he availed himself of his opportunities to escape. He went to Montreal, found employment and married. Later, he came back to New York and obtained the Brooklyn situation. But that day he had been recognized on the street, and must go back to prison to serve out the remainder of his sentence. It seems very sad that, having lived a blameless life since leaving prison, he should have to go back for that old offence, but everyone recognizes the justice of his doom. It is that principle which makes the atonement of Christ a necessity for salvation. The sinner against God, though he might repent and reform, could not be sure of forgiveness for past sins if the Saviour had not died to atone for them. (Rom. 3: 25.)

A Singular Blunder Occurred at a Funeral at Hudson, O., on Jan. 7. A resident of that city, a Roman Catholic gentleman, died a few days before that date at Akron. And as it was determined to bury him at Hudson, an undertaker was appointed, and notified that the body would arrive by a certain train, which he was to meet. He made his arrangements, had a hearse in readiness, and when the train arrived took charge of a coffin that was on board, and removed it to the Roman Catholic church. It was not, however, the body which he was instructed to inter. That body did not reach the Akron depot in time to go by the train specified, but the corpse carried by the train was that of a Protestant lady who died in Akron, and was being conveyed to Macedonia, a station beyond Hudson. The funeral party was on the train, and did not discover until reaching Macedonia that the corpse was not on the train. They made inquiries, and learned that it had been taken off at Hudson. They immediately returned to that place, and found that the funeral service had been held in the Roman Catholic church, and the body was being lowered into the grave. Explanations were made, and the coffin opened, when the claim of the friends of the deceased lady was clearly established. It is well for us that, though a mistake of that kind may happen as to the body, there can be no mistake as to the destination of the soul. We are assured that "the Lord knoweth them that are His." (II Tim. 2: 19.)

A Camel Hunt in Broadway, New York, caused some excitement on January 10. Two men, one of whom has been an Arizona cowboy, were walking home about ten o'clock that evening, when they met, at Broadway and Twelfth Street, a crowd of excited persons running down-town. The cause of their fright was soon perceived. A big camel was tearing madly down the street in zigzag fashion, sometimes on the sidewalk and sometimes in the carriageway. The rolling gait of the beast seemed to demand as much room as three or four horses, and the people rushed in all directions to get out of its way. A cab containing two ladies was being driven up Broadway at the time, and the horse seeing the ungainly beast—evidently a novel experience to him—took fright and became unmanageable. It turned crosswise, bringing the cab directly in the camel's way, much to the alarm of the ladies. The camel went full tilt at the cab, nearly upsetting it. It checked his course, and the ex-cowboy, seizing the opportunity, ran forward, and grasping the camel by the nose, brought it to its knees. He held it there for some minutes, until a man came up with a halter in his hand, which he slipped over the camel's head. He said the camel belonged to a menagerie, and was being led across town, when it managed to slip its halter and run away. The scared people were astonished when they saw how easily the ex-cowboy tamed the beast which had terrified them. It is so with the great enemy of souls. The Bible teaches that he is overcome by those who, trusting in Christ, are bold enough to resist him. (James 4: 7.)

A Lawyer's Broken Heart is Assigned as the cause of his death by the physician who attended him. The lawyer was a citizen of Minneapolis, Minn. He died on January 10, and in the certificate of death his physician states that in his opinion he had no physical ailment whatever, but died of a broken heart. He graduated from Amherst College with high honors in 1878 and a brilliant career was predicted for him. After practicing his profession in Minneapolis for a few years, he made a decided success and worked most assiduously. A few months ago, however, his eyes began to grow dim, and in spite of skilful treatment he became totally blind. His savings were soon spent, and he had to apply to his friends, who cheerfully supplied his wants. But the sense of disappointment and the consciousness of his own helplessness, with the knowledge that all his life he would be a burden upon others, preyed upon his mind, and though physically in perfect health, he began to fail slowly but surely. It seemed that he did not care to live. Three weeks ago he was seen to be sinking rapidly, and on Tuesday of last week he died. His temperament is said to have been morbidly sensitive, to which his sense of dependence was intolerable. Happily for the Christian who feels himself completely helpless, his sense of dependence on his Heavenly Father has a contrary effect. Though his heart is broken, too, he lives a newer, stronger, better life. (Gal. 2: 20.)

BRIEF NOTES.

Mr. E. P. Telford commences meetings in the First Methodist Episcopal Church, Lynn, Mass., next Sunday. His three weeks' services in Dr. Knowles's church, in the same city, were very largely attended, and much good was accomplished.

A Canadian contemporary states that during a service in a certain church, recently, while the collection box was being passed around, a young man deposited a nickel therein, and detained the box while he took out four cents change. He afterward complained that one of the cents was counterfeit.

Mr. and Miss Parker, the evangelists from Mr. C. H. Spurgeon's church in London, have been holding meetings at Rahway, N. J. While they were at Salem, N. J., three services were held each day, and so much interest aroused, that revival meetings were continued by the pastors after the evangelists left.

Mr. Puttenham has been holding services at Port Hope, Canada, in connection with the Gospel Union, of which the Rev. M. Baxter is President. They were the means of stirring up the people to united effort for the winter's work. Four days' services have also been held by him at Orangeville, with much success.

Dr. J. M. Thoburn, of Calcutta, India, is holding special revival services in the Madison Avenue M. E. Church, New York. They commenced last Sunday, and continue two weeks. Service each day at three and eight o'clock. Dr. Thoburn's name is a power in the Methodist Church the world over, and many will gladly avail themselves of this opportunity of hearing him.

Dr. Alfred S. Patton, the well-known Baptist minister and journalist, died in Brooklyn, N. Y., on January 13. He was sixty-two years of age, an Englishman by birth, but had been in this country from childhood. He was Chaplain of the Massachusetts State Senate in 1862 and 1863. Exceedingly affable, genial and scholarly, he had hosts of friends and was much beloved.

Rev. E. P. Hammond is at San Diego, Cal., holding a series of meetings with most gratifying results. Three years ago San Diego had a population of 3,000; now there are 25,000. The seating capacity of the churches is only between 2,000 and 3,000. Open air meetings have, therefore, been a necessity. Efforts are now being made to secure a large tent in which the meetings may be held.

Fifty thousand dollars has been bequeathed by the late William Hilton, of Boston, to each of the following-named charities: The American Board, American Home Missionary Society, Massachusetts General Hospital, Phillips' Academy, Andover, Harvard, Amherst, and Williams—the sum to be used by these colleges for the education of needy students. Twenty-five thousand dollars each are also bequeathed to the American Missionary Associations and the Boston City Missionary Society. Ten thousand dollars each is also given to the Boston Young Women's Christian Association, the Home for Little Wanderers, and Abbot Academy.

THE SYMBOLIC CUP.

A New Sermon by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

"For this is My blood of the new testament, which is shed for many for the remission of sins."—Matt. 26 : 28.

Christ Antedating His Passion—The Lessons of the Symbolical Cup—I. The Importance of the Blood—Suggests Suffering—Tells of Love—Should be a Vivid Remembrance—Personal and Happy—To Continue till the End—II. Its Connection with the Covenant—A Remarkable Conversion of a Garroter—III. Its Connection with Remission—IV. Its Connection with Men—Shed for the Many, not the Few—An Argument with the Devil.

THE Lord Jesus Christ was then alive, sitting at the table, and yet, pointing to the cup filled with red wine, he said, "This is My blood, which is shed for many." This proves that He could not have intended that the wine was literally His blood. Surely it is no longer necessary to refute the gross and carnal dogma of transubstantiation, which is obviously absurd. Enjoying loving intercourse with His chosen disciples, He spake freely; His heart did not study accuracy so much as feeling; and so, in speech as in feeling, He antedated His great work of atonement, and spoke of it as done. To set forth the future intent of the blessed ordinance of the Lord's Supper, He must of necessity treat His death as an accomplished fact; and His complete absorption in His work made it easy and natural for Him to do so. He ignores moods and tenses; "His work is before Him."

Dear friends, I am going to preach to you again upon the corner-stone of the Gospel. How many times will this make, I wonder? The doctrine of Christ crucified is always with me. As the Roman sentinel in Pompeii stood to his post even when the city was destroyed, so do I stand to the truth of the atonement, though the Church is being buried beneath the boiling mud-showers of modern heresy. Everything else can wait, but this one truth must be proclaimed with a voice of thunder. Others may preach as they will, but as for this pulpit, it shall always resound with the substitution of Christ.

You have before you a cup filled with wine; which Jesus has just blessed, and presented to His disciples. As you look, hear Him speak of the cup as His blood; for thus He would teach us a solemn lesson.

I. Note, first, the importance of the precious blood of Christ. The vital importance of the great truth of the death of Christ as a vicarious sacrifice, is set before us in this cup, which is of His blood shed for many. Blood represents suffering; but it goes further, and suggests suffering unto death. "The blood is the life thereof," and when blood is too copiously shed, death is suggested. Remember, that in the Sacred Supper you have the bread as a separate emblem of the body, and then the wine as a separate symbol of the blood: thus you have a clear picture of death, since the blood is separated from the flesh. "As often as ye eat this bread and drink this cup, ye do show the Lord's death."

Upon the death of Christ you are invited to fix your attention, and upon that only. In the suffering of our Lord unto death, we see the boundless stretch of His love. "Greater love hath no man than this, that he lay down his life for his friends." It means something more. We have called our Lord, in our hymn, "Giver of life for life," and that is what this cup means. He gave up His life that we might live. The pouring out of His blood has made our peace with God. Jehovah made the soul of His only-begotten an offering for sin, that the guilty might be cleared. That is what the cup means: it means the dead of Jesus in our stead.

Our blessed Saviour would have us hold His death in great reverence: it is to be our chief memory. Both the emblems of the Lord's Supper set forth the Saviour's death. This peculiarly Christian ordinance teaches nothing, if it does not teach this. Christ's death for men is the great doctrine of the Church. Leave out the Cross, and you have killed the religion of Jesus. Atonement by the blood of Jesus is not an arm of Christian truth; it is the heart of it. No teaching is healthy which throws the Cross into the background. The other day, when I was inquiring about the welfare of a certain congregation, my informant told me that there had been few additions to the church, although the minister was a man of ability and industry. Furthermore, he let me see the reason for failure, for he added, "I have attended there for several years, and during all that time I do not remember hearing a sermon upon the sacrifice of Christ. The atonement is not denied, but it is left out." If this be so, what is to become of our Churches? If the light of the atonement is put under a bushel, the darkness will be dense.

Beloved, the precious blood of Christ should be had by us in vivid remembrance. He would not have us know Him after the flesh, and forget the spiritual nature of His griefs; but yet He would have us know that He was in a real body when He bled, and that He died a real death, and became most truly fit for burial; and therefore, He symbolizes His blood, not by some airy fancy, or mystic sign, but by common wine in the cup.

The dear memorials of our Lord's blood-shedding are intended for

A Personal Remembrance.

Beloved, we must come into personal contact with the death of Christ. This is essential. We must each one say, "He loved me, and gave Himself for me." In His blood you must be personally washed; by His blood you must be personally reconciled to God; through His blood you must personally have access to God; and by His blood you must personally overcome the enemy of your souls.

Once more: our Saviour meant us to maintain the doctrine of His death, and the shedding of His blood for the remission of sins, even to the end of time, for He made it to be of perpetual remembrance. We drink this cup "until He come." If the Lord Jesus had foreseen with approbation the which would be brought about by growing "culture," He would surely have arranged a change of symbols to suit the change of doctrines. Would He not have warned us that, towards the end of the nineteenth century, men would become so "enlightened," that the faith of Christendom must of necessity, take a new departure, and therefore He had appointed a change of sacramental memorials? But He has not warned us of the coming of those eminently great and wise men, who have changed all things, and abolished the old-fashioned truths for which martyrs died. Brethren, I do not believe in the wisdom of these men, and their changes I abhor; but had there been any ground for such changes, the Lord's Supper would not have been made of perpetual obligation. The perpetuity of ordinances indicates a perpetuity of doctrine.

But hear the moderns talk: "The Apostles, the Fathers, the Puritans, they were excellent men, no doubt, but then, you see, they lived before the uprise of those wonderful scientific men, who have enlightened us so much." Let me repeat what I have said. If we had come to a new point as to believing, should we not have come to a new point as to the ordinances in which those beliefs are embodied? I think so. The evident intent of Christ in giving us settled ordinances, and especially in settling this one, which so clearly commemorates His blood-shedding, was, that we might know that the truth of His sacrifice is for ever fixed and settled, and must unchangeably remain

The Essence Of His Gospel.

Neither nineteen centuries nor nineteen thousand centuries can make the slightest difference in this truth, nor in the relative proportion of this truth to other truths, so long as this dispensation lasts. Until He comes a second time without a sin-offering unto salvation, the grand work of His first coming must be kept first and foremost in all our teaching, trusting and testifying. As in the Southern Hemisphere the Cross is the mariners' guide, so, under all skies, is the death of our Redeemer the pole star of our hope upon the sea of life. In life and in death we will glory in the Cross of Christ, and never be ashamed of it, be we where we may.

II. Secondly, note well the connection of the blood of Christ with the covenant. Read the text again: "This is My blood of the new testament." The translation would be better, "This is my blood of the covenant." What is this covenant?

is that which I read to you just now in Jeremiah 31, 33: "This shall be the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel; After those days, saith the Lord, I will put my law in their inward parts, and write it in their hearts; and will be their God, and they shall be my people." See also Jeremiah 32 : 40; "And I will make an everlasting covenant with them, that I will not turn away from them, to do them good; but I will put my fear in their hearts, that they shall not depart from me." Turn also to Ezekiel 11 : 19: "I will put a new spirit within you; and I will take the stony heart out of their flesh, and will give them an heart of flesh." Look in the same prophecy at 36 : 26: "A new heart also will I give you, and a new spirit will I put within you: and I will take away the stony heart out of your flesh, and I will give you an heart of flesh." What a Magna Charta is this! The old covenant saith, "Keep the law and live." The new covenant is, "Thou shalt live, and I will lead thee to keep my law, for I will write it on thine heart." Happy men, who know their standing under this covenant!

The chaplain of a jail, a dear friend of mine, once told me of a surprising case of conversion, in which a knowledge of the covenant of grace was the chief instrument of the Holy Spirit. My friend had under his charge a man most cunning and brutal. He was singularly repulsive, even in comparison with other convicts: He had been renowned for his daring, and for the utter absence of all feeling when committing acts of violence. I think he had been called

The chaplain had spoken to him several times. but had not succeeded even in getting an answer. The man was sullenly set against all instruction. At last he expressed a desire for a certain book, but as it was not in the library, the chaplain pointed to the Bible, which was placed in his cell, and said, "Did you ever read that Book?" He gave no answer, but looked at the good man as if he would kill him. The question was kindly repeated, with the assurance that he would find it well worth reading. "Sir," said the convict, "you would not ask me such a question if you knew who I was. What have I to do with a Book of that sort?" He was told that his character was well known to the chaplain, and that, for this very reason, he recommended the Bible as a Book which would suit his case. "It would do me no good," he cried; "I am past all feeling." Doubling up his fist he struck the iron door of the cell, and said, "My heart is as hard as that iron; there is nothing in any book that will ever touch me."

"Well," said the chaplain, "You want a new heart. Did you ever read the covenant of grace?" To which the man answered, sullenly, by inquiring what he meant by such talk. His friend replied, "Listen to these words: 'A new heart, also, will I give you, and a new spirit will I put within you.'" The words struck the man with amazement, as well they might; he asked to have the passage found for him in the Bible. He read the words again and again; and when the chaplain came back to him next day, the wild beast was tamed. "Oh, sir," he said, "I never dreamed of such a promise! I never believed it possible that God would speak in such a way as that to men. If He gives me a new heart, it will be a miracle of mercy; and yet I think," he said, "He is going to work that miracle upon me, for the very hope of a new nature is beginning to touch me as I never was touched before." That man became gentle in manner, obedient to authority, and childlike in spirit. Though my friend has nothing left of the sanguine hopes he once entertained of converted criminals, he yet believes that in this case, no observer could have questioned the thorough nature of the work, and yet the only means was the doctrine of the covenant.

You will, perhaps, say to me, "Why did our translators use the word 'testament' in our Authorized Version?" They were hardly so wise as usual in this instance, for "covenant" is the better word of the two to set forth the original; but yet the idea of a testament is there also. The original may signify either or both. The word "settlement," which has dropped out of use, nowadays, was often employed by our forefathers, when they spoke of the everlasting arrangement of grace. The word settlement might take in both covenant and testament—there is a covenant of grace, but the covenant stipulation being fulfilled by our Lord Jesus, the arrangement becomes virtually a testament, through which, by the will of God, countless blessings are secured to the heirs of salvation. O my brethren, as God's covenanted ones, drink ye of the cup with joy, and renew your pledge with the Lord your God!

III. A third point comes up in the text very manifestly: The blood has an intimate Connection With Remission.

The text says, "This is My blood of the new covenant, which is shed for many for the remission of sins." Jesus suffering, bleeding, dying, has procured for sinners the forgiveness of their sins. Of what sins? Of all sins of every sort and kind, however heinous, aggravated and multiplied. The blood of the covenant takes every sin away, be it what it may; there was never a sin believingly confessed and taken to Christ that ever baffled His power to cleanse it. This fountain has never been tried in vain. Murderers, thieves, liars, adulterers, and what not, have come to Jesus by penitence and faith, and their sins have been put away.

Of what nature is the remission? It is pardon, freely given, acting immediately, and abiding for ever, so that there is no fear of the guilt ever being again laid to the charge of the forgiven one. Through the precious blood our sins are blotted out, cast into the depths of the sea, and removed as far from us as the East is from the West. Our sins cease to be; they are made an end of; they cannot be found against us any more for ever.

How is it that the blood of Jesus effects this? The secret lies in the vicarious or substitutionary character of our Lord's suffering and death. Because He stood in our place, the justice of God is vindicated, and the threatening of the law is fulfilled. It is now just for God to pardon sin. Christ's bearing the penalty of human sin, instead of men, has made the moral government of God perfect in justice, has laid a basis for peace of conscience, and has rendered sin immeasurably hateful, though its punishment does not fall upon the believer.

And for what end is this remission of sins secured? We mistake, if we think that the pardon of sins is God's ultimatum. No, no; it is but a beginning, a means to

A Further Purpose.

He forgives our sins with the design of curing our sinfulness. We are pardoned that we may become holy. God forgives the sin, that He may purify the sinner. He aims at the death of thy sinfulness, that thou mayest henceforth love Him, and serve Him, and crucify the lusts which crucified thy Lord. The Lord aims at working in thee the likeness of His dear Son. Jesus hath saved thee by His self-sacrificing obedience to justice, that thou mayest yield thy whole soul to God, and be willing to die for the upholding of the kingdom of love and truth. The death of Christ for thee, pledges thee to be dead to sin, that by His resurrection from the dead thou mayest rise into newness of life, and so become like thy Lord. Pardon aims at this.

IV. I cannot forget to notice, in closing, the connection of the blood with men. We are told in the text that this blood is for the remission of sins." In that large word "many" let us exceedingly rejoice. Christ's blood was not shed for the handful of apostles alone. There were but eleven of them who really partook of the blood symbolized by the cup. The Saviour does not say, "This is my blood which is shed for you, the favored eleven;" but "shed for many." Jesus did not die for the clergy alone. I recollect in Martin Luther's life that he saw, in one of the Romish churches, a picture of the Pope, and the cardinals, and bishops and priests and monks and friars, all on board a ship. They were all safe, every one of them. As for the laity, poor wretches, they were struggling in the sea, and many of them drowning. Only those were saved to whom the good men in the ship were so kind as to hand out a rope or a plank. This is not our Lord's teaching. His blood is shed "for many," and not for the few. He is not the Christ of a caste or a class, but the Christ of all conditions of men. His blood is shed for many sinners, that their sins may be remitted.

This blood is shed for many. A group of half-a-dozen converts makes us very glad, and so it should; but oh, to have half-a-dozen thousand at once! Why not? This blood is shed "for many." Let us cast the great net into the sea. You young men, preach the Gospel in the streets of this crowded city, for it is meant for many! You who go from door to door, do not think you can be too hopeful, since your Saviour's blood is shed for many, and Christ's "many" is a very great many. It is who ever shall believe in Him—shed for thee, sinner, if thou wilt now trust Him. Only confess thy sin, and trust Christ, and be assured that Jesus died in thy place and stead.

This is no mystery. Bread and wine are ours by eating and drinking; Christ is ours by our receiving Him. The merit of His precious blood becomes ours by that simple, child-like faith, which accepts Jesus to be our all. We say, "Here it is; I believe in it; I take it; I accept it as my own." It is yours. No man can take from you that which you have eaten and drunk. Christ is yours for ever, if you receive Him into your heart. Whenever thou hast any doubt about whether Christ is thine, take Him over again. I like to begin again. Often I find the best way of going forward is to go back to my first faith in Jesus, and, as a sinner, renew my confidence in my Saviour. "Oh," says the devil, "thou art a preacher of the gospel, but thou dost not know it thyself." At one time I used to argue with the accuser; but he is not worth it, and it is by no means profitable to one's own heart.

We Cannot Convince the Devil.

It is better to refer him to our Lord. When he tells me I am not a saint, I answer, "Well, what am I, then?" "A sinner," says he. "Well, so are you!" "Ah!" saith he, "you will be lost." "No," say I, "that is why I shall not be lost, since Jesus Christ came into the world to save sinners, and I therefore trust in Him to save me." This is what Martin Luther calls cutting the devil's head off with his own sword.

You say, "If I take Christ to myself as a man takes a cup and drinks the contents, am I saved?" Yes, thou art. "How am I to know it?" Know it because God says so. "He that believeth in Him hath everlasting life." If I did not feel a pulse of that life (as I did not at first), I nevertheless would believe that I had it, simply on the strength of the divine assurance. Since my conversion, I have felt the pulsings of a life more strong and forcible than the life of the most vigorous youth that ever ran without weariness; but there are times when it is not so. Just now I feel the heavenly life joyously leaping within me: but when I do not feel it, I fall back on this: God has said, "He that believeth in Him hath everlasting life." God's words against all my feelings! I would sing with the children, "Nothing but the Blood of Jesus." Shut your eyes to all things but the Cross. Jesus died, and rose again and went to heaven, and all your hope must go with him! Come, my hearer, take Jesus by a distinct act of faith, this morning! May God the Holy Ghost constrain thee to do so, and then thou mayest go rejoicing! So be it, in the name of Jesus.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

THE SCOTTISH PRIMER.*

THOMAS GUTHRIE tells us that as soon as the children could put letters and syllables together in the elementary schools of Scotland, they were turned into the book of Proverbs; and he traces a great deal of the sagacity and strength of the Scottish character to this early training in that richest of all ethical and philosophical books. Says he: "Think of a child being put down to read such sentences as 'Tom has a dog,' 'The cat is here,' when he might be reading such words as 'God is love,' and 'Train up a child in the way he should go.'" Do not take the Bible away from children, but do not make it a task-book. Do not gather around the memories of childhood any evil recollections regarding your severity, in compelling them to commit to memory the sacred Word. Make it the joy and privilege of their lives; show them how it is the richest of luxuries to be able to know what God has said, and to be able to quote God's wishes in God's own words.

Unconscious Usefulness.

"But the lad knew not anything" (I Sam. 20: 39). A sentence of this kind leads us to think of the unconscious ministries of life. The "little lad" supposed that he was simply finding out arrows, which were shot by Jonathan. May we not be doing work of this kind, and supposing all the time that we are occupied only with frivolous engagements? As of a matter of fact, we know very little about the mystery of life. In running an errand, we may be carrying a gospel. In sitting in a sick-chamber, we may be connecting that room of dreariness and solitude with the very precincts of heaven itself. God sends us upon errands which look trivial; we suppose that we are almost wasting our time; we think that men of our abilities might be more profitably employed; let us be rebuked by the incident before us, for no man can really tell the issue of his simplest transactions.

An Ineffaceable Epitaph.

"For Jonathan's sake" (II Sam. 9: 1). Nothing could be done for Jonathan. He had passed away; but there is always the next best thing to be done. Blessed are they whose quick ingenuity is inspired to find out the next best thing. Who does not long to have his father and mother back again, at least for one whole summer day, that he might load them with proofs of gratitude and love? They had such a weary time of it; they were but poor; they never saw splendid cities or fine sights, or heard noble music, or looked upon things great, but from a distance; they were always in the field ploughing, in the market-place bartering, or in the sick-chamber suffering. To have them back one day, month, year—a whole round year! We should live in their delight and find heaven in their contentment. Yet see to it that this sentiment, so pure, like the dew of the morning, be critically examined. The value of it will be shown by what is done now to those who are alive. We cannot do the departed any good, for they have passed beyond the human touch; but we can do deeds to the poor, the ignorant, the out-of-the-way, the suffering, which will be a happy memorial to those we have lost. Take some poor child, open its way in life, and when you have done so, set up in your heart's memory a stone, bearing the inscription, "Sacred to the memory of a loving parent." So write the epitaph of the dead, and the writing shall never be obliterated.

THE PAMPAS OF SOUTH AMERICA.

(See Illustration.)

THE vast prairies of South America, to which the name of pampas is given, occupy an area of about a million and a half square miles. They are spread over the southern and western regions of the Argentine Republic and part of Patagonia, to the slopes of the Andes. This does not include the level lands of Peru, which from their resemblance in soil and general productions, are frequently called by the same name. The word is from the Quichua language, and means a valley or plain. It is believed by geologists, that at some time, inconceivably remote, the vast plain was the bed of the ocean. Enormous boulders bearing proofs of having once been under water, are found there, and under the soil which has accumulated in the course of centuries, gravel and sand are found like that at the ocean bottom. It is thought from a careful study of the geological formation, that there must have been a sudden and gigantic convulsion, raising the level of the pampas fully fourteen hundred feet, and a subsequent gradual rise of a hundred feet more, due in part to deposits of soil and the decay of vegetation.

The pampas, as we now know them, are mere prairie land, varying in fertility and the character of the soil. In their more sterile parts, only hard plants with long thorns grow, but as they near the slopes of the Cordilleras, groups of stunted bushes are found, and still nearer, the beautiful pampas grasses appear, while in some districts, as in the province of Buenos Ayres, there is luxuriant sod, which furnishes good food for stock. No trees are met with, except those that have been planted. Lakes or pools exist, but as they depend for their supply on the varying rainfall, they are frequently dried up.

Animals like the prairie dog, called on the pampas Biscacha, abound. They scratch and burrow in the soil, and are the abomination of the farmers on the borders. Travellers, too, have frequently experienced dangerous falls by their horses, after nightfall, stepping into these biscacha-holes. The armadillo, alpaca, puma and jaguar, with serpents, poisonous and harmless, in great abundance, roam over the vast plains. A kind of partridge, of large size, abounds, and is a favorite prey of the hunters, who pursue it on horseback. Large flocks of ostriches haunt the interior plains, and so heedless are they, and so unacquainted with the character of civilized life, that they have been known to continue feeding on the line of railroad which crosses the pampas to Tucuman, after the warning scream of the engine whistle has been given, until the train has passed over their mangled bodies.

The Gaucho is the human inhabitant, or the peasant of the pampas, particularly of the River Plata country. He generally calls himself a Spaniard, but in most cases the Indian blood predominates in his veins. He spends most of his life on horseback, the lasso, by his side.

Among them are some bad characters, whose treachery and cruelty render them dangerous; but, as a rule, when they have not been drinking they are not quarrelsome. The opening of the railroad has already begun to change the character of their life, as it has brought settlers from England, Ireland and other countries, who are making fortunes by raising sheep and cattle.

As the country is being opened up, opportunities are presented for Christian usefulness. There, as everywhere else in South America, the land lies in gross darkness. Those persons who profess any religion, avow themselves Roman Catholics, and with them the profession is but an empty form. How much good might be done by earnest, devoted work by native evangelists properly trained, no mind can estimate. This is one of the projects which Bishop Riley hopes to initiate through his work in Mexico. He has already sent through South America quantities of Christian tracts in Spanish, with portions of the Bible in the same tongue, and he is longing for the time when, from the Mexican Church, converts will go forth to follow these silent messengers with the Word of Life. The responsibility of the Christians of the United States for the enlightenment of the South American continent is becoming more generally realized, and it cannot take a more practical shape than by furnishing the money necessary to make Mexico what Bishop Riley longs to see it—the centre of Christian influence and work for all the Spanish-speaking people of South America.

A MOMENTOUS MEETING AT A GATE.

"YOU will have to get rid of that stableman of yours, father; he has been drinking again," said Tom Haldane, a stalwart young man, who with his wife and little son had come over from their own farm to spend an evening at the old homestead. Two younger brothers of the speaker, as tall and strong as he, and two beautiful sisters of some seventeen and twenty summers, made up the family group gathered around the hale old farmer and his gray-haired wife.

"Oh! I am very sorry for that," said Mr. Haldane. "Will has not touched a drop of liquor for six months. He must have had some special temptation; I must inquire about it."

"That is always your way, father," said Tom. "You will inquire, and listen to a pitiful story and promises of amendment, and end by forgiving him, and very likely giving him five dollars to make up the money he has squandered. You are a great deal too easy with your men."

"I know, my son, I know. Your brothers here tell me the same thing, and, I think, Jennie and Gracie agree with them. Still, I like the gospel rule, 'Till seventy times seven.' Will has good points in him, and if he does reform, as he is trying to do, he will make a good man. A man is worth saving."

"You will never save Will, father," said John Haldane, one of the brothers. "He is too far gone. Why, how many times has he promised before? How many times have you forgiven him already?"

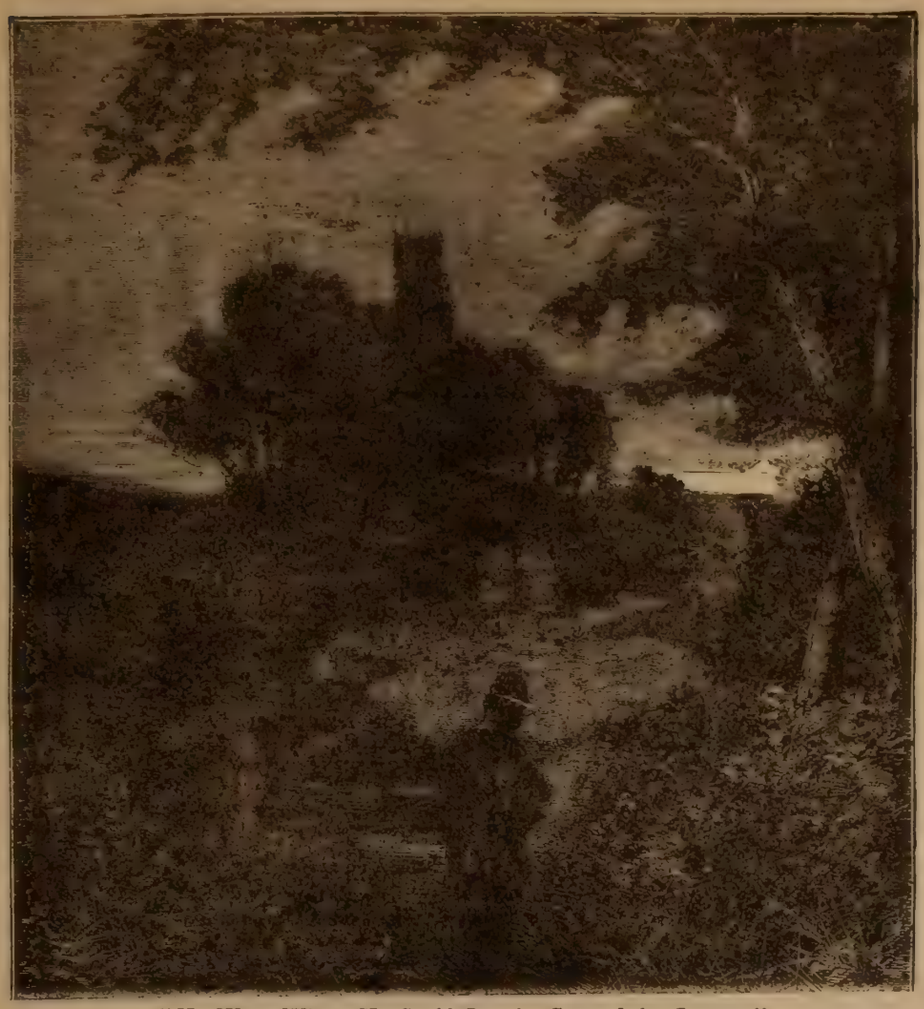
"Not seventy times seven yet, my boy. Will has failed often, I know; still, I have not lost hope of him altogether. I knew a worse case than his come out right. But that was through a good woman's love."

"What case was that you knew, father?" asked Gracie, his younger daughter, a pretty, bright-eyed girl. "You never told us about it."

"Oh, it happened a long while ago. It was a case I knew across in the old country. It made a deep impression on me at the time, and I have never forgotten it."

"Let us hear it now," said Gracie.

"You think it is romantic because I spoke of love," said her father; "but it is altogether prosaic, plain matter of fact. Well, it is soon told. The hero of it was not much of a character—a simple, rustic young fellow, such as you young fellows call 'a regular Hayseed.' But Hayseed in this case was disposed to bad and crooked ways, and had a strong propensity to drink. He seemed to be always thirsty. He was a good farm hand, and could have had plenty of work, but he fell into idle and dissolute ways, until he was the black sheep of the parish. Everyone lost faith in him, after he had tried to reform several times and failed. Even the good, kind-hearted parson gave him up. He was considered hopeless by all who knew him, except one, and that was the girl he loved. She was only a blacksmith's daughter, but she was pretty, and as good as she was beautiful. She believed in him, and for her sake he made another effort. It was in the summer-time. Work was plenty, but Hayseed's thirst was intolerable. He stuck to water, however, but his fellow-workers only laughed, and said that would not last long. But his sweetheart held to him with that fidelity that good women sometimes show. Her father had forbidden him the house, but the girl would go out at sunset to the gate of the garden, and there give him a kiss and a helpful word. That gave him heart for another day's battle.



"He Went Where He Could See the Gate of the Cottage."

"The struggle went on in that way until Whitsuntide, and then young Hayseed broke down completely. It was a time of jollity in the village, and he could not resist. His unusual abstinence, I expect, gave his appetite increased potency. Anyhow, he was worse than he had ever been, got quarrelsome, engaged in a fight, and was locked up by the constable. He was sentenced to ten days in prison. That was a disgrace that had never happened to him before. When he came out, he had not the courage to hold up his head. He could not face the village after that, and he lay down under a hedge on an unfrequented road, to decide whether he should get a rope and hang himself or go to America. He inclined to the former, for he had lost faith in himself now.

"It was near sundown, and he had not made up his mind. Anyhow, he would have one more look at the cottage where lived the girl who had held to him last of all. 'God bless her for that,' he said. He had no hope that she would come to the gate to look for him, though she would know that he was out of jail; but, as he confessed, he had no right to expect her. He made his way, however, to a field from which he could see that dear gate that was hallowed to him by associations with her. He stood, leaning on a stick and looking a last good-by to it in the distance, when to his glad amazement he saw the trim little figure he knew so well, trip lightly down the garden, and, leaning over the gate look this way and that, and he knew for whom.

"You may be sure, it did not take him long to leap the old stile and go to her side. I cannot tell you what was said, but young Hayseed came away with eyes red with tears and a strong purpose in his heart. 'If God will help me, I will try again,' he said at parting. 'He will, you may be sure, and I will keep my word,' was the reply, softly but firmly spoken.

"Well, to make the story short, he took fresh heart that night, made his way to America, turned over a new leaf, and his bright-eyed sweetheart followed a year or two after, and married him. I believe they got along very well and prospered moderately."

"Ah!" said Gracie, as Mr. Haldane finished, 'she must have had great faith in him. I guess, she must have had a pretty hard time keeping him straight after they were married. He could not have made her a good husband."

"Ha, ha!" laughed Mr. Haldane. "I can't say about that. I know she made him a good wife. You must ask your mother about the other side."

"Yes, thank God," said Mrs. Haldane, "the best husband a woman ever had, and the best thing I ever did was to go to the gate that night."

By Brenda.

BRIDGET'S FRIENDS.

FOR several days after her admission into the Infirmary, Bridget Mite lay very ill. Fever and inflammation ran high, and it seemed at one time probable that she might have to lose her leg altogether. Impure air and poor, scant food had combined to make her general condition of health so bad that the wound seemed unable to heal; mortification was feared, in which case amputation of the limb would have been found necessary.

In the intervals of her sufferings, when she was able to look about her and to notice things, Bridget discovered that Mrs. Treeby's description of the Poor-house Infirmary was all true; a fine, big, airy place, it was, "and clean," and Bridget saw the contrast between it and her own place—yet still she was unreconciled to being there. She thought of the little close, dark room, smelling of rats and mice—"her pig-stye of a place," as Mrs. Treeby had unfeelingly called it, in Tripe Court—with ardent affection, and pined to be back; not because she preferred dirt to cleanliness, darkness to light, the smell of rats and mice to the smell of flowers and fresh air—oh no, no!—but because she pined for a sight of the home faces, for a sound of the home voices, for a touch of home hands. She inquired so often of the nurses "when they thought there'd be visitin' days again" that they grew tired of making the same answer, "When small-pox is better," and at last told her not to bother them with that question again.

The only person who tried to comfort her on the point, and did not mind answering her twenty times a day if she asked about it, was that little woman in the bed on her left, who had prayed for her and kissed her, the first night of her arrival in the Infirmary. During those days that Bridget lay so ill, this little woman, Mrs. Cherry, as she was called, seemed to Bridget to be keeping watch by her. In her moments of ease Mrs. Cherry rejoiced and thanked God for her; when in her greatest pain, Mrs. Cherry encouraged her; when the nurses spoke sharply to Bridget, Mrs. Cherry smoothed down their roughness with the balm of her own kind words, and every night Mrs. Cherry repeated aloud to Bridget that hymn—and every night prayed for her home and baby, so that Bridget got quite to lean on the little woman, and if anything had happened to remove her from her side, Bridget would have felt she had lost a friend. She had her suffering times, though, with the rest: there were days when poor little Mrs. Cherry was silent, and lay with her small face pinched and white on the pillow, and every one knew she had one of her "bad turns" on. Her complaints were a diseased hip-joint, paralysis of one arm, and poverty of course.

In the afternoon hours of one day at the end of the week, when most of the patients were dozing after dinner and the ward was very quiet, Bridget turned her hot face round towards Mrs. Cherry, and asked, "How long have I been in now? Can you remember when I came?"

"To be sure, ma'am," said Mrs. Cherry, "you came in Tuesday; this is Saturday; you've been in just four days."

"Only four days!" said Bridget wonderingly; "dear, dear, it seems like four months since I left 'em all."

"Yes, ma'am, because you've been so bad and suffered such a deal, poor dear," said Mrs. Cherry soothingly, "the time do seem long at first."

"How long have you been in, ma'am?" inquired Bridget languidly.

"Seven years come next August," replied Mrs. Cherry, slowly; "I was five years in the old Infirmary before this new one was built, and I've been here two. Yes, seven years in August it'll be, and it's not likely I shall ever go out; yet there's a deal to be thankful for! I used."

she continued cheerfully, seeing that Bridget was somewhat easier, and thinking to distract her mind with a little pleasant talk—"I used to live in the Vale of Aylesbury, in Buckinghamshire. I kept a turnpike-gate there for many a year, along with my husband, and a rare pretty little place it was, on a fine white road, with lovely tall trees running along it both sides. We sold Banbury cakes and ginger-beer and candies.

"The only trouble we had was the boys. They used to come along our way after school, sometimes, and creep up to our bit of a window and tap, tap at the panes with their sticks a purpose to upset all the bottles of sweets and ginger-beer and things on the ledge. Oh! me and my husband used to get so wild; we used to run out with broom, or poker, or anythink we could catch up, and try to catch 'em. But the young rascals would dodge round the place, that wasn't much bigger than a sentry-box, as quick as cats, and keep us running round and round it at the try-to-catch game, till we were ready to drop! Oh! the boys was a plague. Bless their young hearts, how they used to laugh when the hardbake, and then the brandy-balls, and then the peppermint-sticks, and then the bulls'-eyes, and then the bottles of ginger-beer used to go crash on the brick floor inside. I can laugh now when I think of how they laughed, and the mad sort of scuffle and tumble and yelping there used to be when they saw the big stick or the poker coming round the corner at them! I wonder where them little lads are now," pondered Mrs. Cherry; "all grown men, of course—I dare say telling their children sometimes of the pranks they used to be up to at the turnpike-gate when they was boys."

"Had you ever any children, ma'am?" asked Bridget.

"Yes, four sons, and I buried 'em all same day as I buried my husband," said the little woman, impressively. "After we left the pike, we went into the oil and tallow-candle line in London, and one December night, when I was away on a visit, our house and shop caught fire, and my poor husband and four boys were all suffocated in their beds. There was all about it in the newspapers. It was the cause of this arm being paralyzed, and the commencement of all my illness. Well, people were very kind; they sent me money through the clergyman—quite a nice little sum it reached. My brother-in-law had it to invest, and somehow it got lost [Mrs. Cherry had forgiven the wrong long ago, so did not mention, what was the fact, that her brother-in-law had robbed her of the money], and after that I got into poverty, and at last had to come into the House. But there," she said again, with a bright look, and heartily, "I have so much to be thankful for. I can never go out, but in the summer-time from my bed here, when the window's open, I can lie and look at the daisies growing in the fields there, and it's so beautiful. Yes, God is very good to me, bless His holy Name."

Here was a lesson for the grumbling and discontented; this poor little woman, paralyzed and diseased, and never likely to be any better, doomed, probably, to lie on a poorhouse bed till the end of her days, praising and blessing God for the sight of a few field flowers! How true the words—

> "Some murmur when their sky is clear,
> And wholly bright to view,
> If one small speck of dark appear
> In their great heaven of blue:
> And some with thankful love are filled
> If but one streak of light,
> One ray of God's good mercy gild
> The darkness of their night."

Mrs. Cherry talked no more now. Bridget had closed her eyes, and her face was drawn again in pain.

Sunday came; church bells were heard ringing in the distance; the nurses came out in their clean white caps, there was better dinner fare, a pudding after the meat, and, to many, the lower-natured, greedy ones, this pudding made the whole point of Sunday. To those it did not much signify that visitors had been forbidden for the present; there was always the pudding to look forward to. To some, however, the point of Sunday was very different; it occurred at four o'clock in the afternoon for them. All the patients of the Roman Catholic faith were together in one ward; those in the Victoria Ward had professed themselves, on entering the Infirmary, as belonging to the Episcopal Church, such, at least, of those who claimed to be of any religion at all. And so, at four o'clock, the gas having been lit, and all made ready, one of the clergy from a neighboring church, who had acted as chaplain to the Infirmary, accompanied by four fresh-faced little boys in surplices, entered the ward and held a short service.

He began with some of the church prayers; then he prayed in his own language for the people he was amongst. This minister of consolation knew that he had "all sorts and conditions" before him, and he tried, as far as possible, to think of each one's need. He prayed for those dead in trespasses and sins, who rejected and denied Christ, that they might be converted and brought into the true fold at last; he prayed for the very aged and sick who were unable to pray for themselves; he prayed especially for the lonely ones—ah! he knew so well that loneliness was the fashion of this place—and for the broken-hearted and afflicted, that they might learn to find communion and consolation in Christ, who, Himself a Man of Sorrows, could feel for each one as no earthly friend could, since > "None ever knew such pain before,

> Such infinite affliction,
> None ever felt a grief like His
> In that dread Crucifixion."

He prayed for those who had once held the faith and lost it, those who had once known Christ, and had fallen away in the hurry and turmoil and fever of life; and he prayed that these might be restored and uplifted, pleading the words, "I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto Me," and that the music of the Gospel might lead the despairing and weary ones home. Finally, he commended all those poor people for whom he had been praying, to the care and keeping of Him who was able "to save them to the uttermost," and present them "faultless before the presence of His glory with exceeding joy." The prayer ended, the four fresh-faced little chorister-boys stood up, and, in full-throated, rich tones, sang the hymn, beginning:

> "Hark, hark, my soul! angelic songs are swelling
> O'er earth's green fields and ocean's wave-beat shore;
> How sweet the truth those blessed strains are telling
> Of that new life when sin shall be no more!"

There had been many in the ward, this afternoon, too sick or too careless to listen much to the prayers, but, at the sound of the boys' singing, every one's attention was arrested, every one lent due ear to that. The most suffering and the most careless, even the flippant Frenchwoman, listened. Poor Bridget turned her aching head round on the pillow and drank in the sounds. She had not heard anything like them for many a day, for she had long ago given up going to church. She had no time for it, she would say, in the week, and on Sundays, well, she was always too dead beat, too utterly done, to make the effort. Ah! poor Bridget; she was one of those brought before Christ in the chaplain's prayer, "who had once held the faith and lost it, who had once known Christ and had fallen away" in the hurry and tumult of her feverish life. As the hymn proceeded, her dark, anxious eyes filled with tears, and by the time the last line was sung—

"And heaven, the heart's true home, will come at last,"

they were falling in large drops down her cheek. She saw the chaplain afterwards go down the long line of beds opposite, and say and give something to each patient in turn. Then he came over to the other side of the ward, and did the same. In turn he came to Bridget's bedside and gave her a little card with the words illuminated on it, "Come unto Me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest.'

And the chaplain said, lowly bending over her, seeing her tears, and her poor, harassed, weary face, "Dear sister, tired and heavy laden, Christ has sent you this message to-day, 'Come,' and He promises to give you rest. Cast yourself and your burden, whatever it be, at the foot of the Cross this day, in obedience to His message, and contemplate Him as your risen Saviour, and find all your rest in Him." Then he passed on to the next bed, and so on all down the ward, till he reached the door where he turned and pronounced the blessing, "The peace of God, which passeth all understanding, keep your hearts and minds through Christ Jesus." Then the chaplain and the little choir-boys disappeared, and the old women in gray, came running in with the tea-trays. At the sight of the food, many tucked their cards away hurriedly under their pillows; the Frenchwoman tore up hers into atoms, but Bridget kept hers clasped tight in her hands.

It happened this Sunday night that poor little Mrs. Cherry had one of "her bad turns" on. Since tea-time her chirruping, bright little voice had not been heard in the ward, and everybody saw that her face was the color of wax as it lay on the pillow. At night she was not able to say the usual hymn to Bridget, or to pray for her; it troubled her that she could not; she thought Bridget might be depending on it, for she had told Mrs. Cherry she never prayed herself now; she had once done it, oh! yes, when she was a child, and after she was grown up a while, but not of late years; she had lost her belief in prayer and she never had any time.

In the silence of this Sunday night any one watching beside Mrs. Cherry would have seen suddenly a bright look come over her pinched little face, as if a piece of good news had come to her. Was she hearing the choir-boys singing again in her dreams? No: Mrs. Cherry was not sleeping; she was awake; what caused her face to shine at that moment was a sound she caught in the stillness, close beside her, a voice saying in a feeble, stumbling sort of way, "Come unto Me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." It was her poor friend the laundress, Bridget Mite, comforting herself with the words of the message that had been brought to her that afternoon.

As the days went on, the good, regular food, the light and pure air and cleanliness, and, above all, the quiet and bodily rest of her life in the Infirmary, told favorably upon Bridget, and she began gradually, but surely, to improve in health. She lost her severe pain, her leg commenced to heal, and she had an appetite for her food, though her enjoyment of it was ever marred by the thought of hungry faces and an empty larder at home.

With leisure to notice the cleanliness and order and airiness of the Infirmary as she lay on her bed in these recovering days, Bridget began to take herself to task for not keeping her place in Tripe Court better. She told herself she might have kept the floors better scrubbed; the Infirmary floors were only wooden, yet how beautiful they looked because they were so well scrubbed; and she might have put things tidier, and set the window open to let the air and light in to purify it sometimes. When she went back she would try to do all these things, and make the home a little nicer for "them all," meaning her husband and children, of whom she thought so often and with such affection.

Yet she no longer fretted as she had done in the first days of her entering the Infirmary. She seemed to have cast her burden somewhere, and Mrs. Cherry often heard her repeating again and again, in the still night watches, the message sent to her on that first Sunday afternoon in the Infirmary, "Come unto Me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." Poor Bridget knew it not, but the "music of the Gospel" was leading her—Home.

PETER CONFESSING CHRIST.

By Mrs. M. Baxter.

S. S. Lesson for January 29. Matt. 16: 13-28. Golden Text, Matt. 10: 32.

Ver. 13. A Mountainous Region Called the Switzerland of Palestine—A Period of Teaching for the Disciples—The Crucial Question of Christianity—All Hangs Upon That—Ver. 14. All Give Him High Estimate—Ver. 15. A Personal Question—Ver. 16. A Double Aspect—Manward and Godward—Explicit and Unqualified—Ver. 17-20. The Source of Peter's Knowledge Stated—That Belief Always a Revelation—The Confession as a Foundation—Christ as a Builder—The Living Stones Used—Peter's Confession a Characteristic of all—The Keys Used at Pentecost—Vers. 21-23. A Painful Revelation—Why He Must Go—Peter as a Mouthpiece of Satan—Vers. 24-28. The Conditions of Discipleship—The Suffering and the Glory.

THE Pharisees and Sadducees, who were always at loggerheads with one another on points of doctrine, yet found a marvellous ground of unity in opposing the Son of God. They could not deny that He "went about doing good, and healing all that were oppressed of the devil" (Acts 10: 38), for the evidence of it was continually before their eyes. They could not deny that His charity in feeding the hungry was twice done on an enormous scale, and they knew, too, that His personal expenditure was very small, for He had "not where to lay His head," (Luke 9: 58); and must work a miracle in order to pay the taxes (Matt. 17: 24-27). Therefore, they must know that the multitude were fed by divine power and not by earthly munificence. Yet, in their insolent and sinful unbelief, they came and asked of Him a sign from heaven. What more could they want! Alas, how true were His words: "His people's heart is waxed gross, and their ears are dull of hearing, and their eyes have they closed; lest at any time they should see with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and should understand with their heart, and should be converted, and I should heal them." (Matt. 13: 15.) Jesus took occasion to say to His disciples, "Take heed, and beware of and of the Sadducees." The carnally minded disciples lost time, as many of us do, by reasoning among themselves, instead of asking Jesus the meaning of what He said. They came to the conclusion: "It is because we have taken no bread." So much for the reasoning of even converted men! They were very far out in their calculations, but Jesus came to the rescue, and said unto them, "O ye of little faith, why reason ye among yourselves, because ye have brought no bread? Do ye not yet understand, neither remember the five loaves of the five thousand, and how many baskets ye took up? Neither the seven loaves of the four thousand, and how many baskets ye took up?" If the Pharisees were blind, O how doubly blind were the disciples! Was not the fact of these miracles sufficient guarantee that His disciples should not want for bread as long as they were with Him? Thus they understood that it was the doctrine and spirit of the Pharisees and Sadducees which He would have them avoid.

What was this doctrine and spirit? They did not keep their word, "They say, and do not." They expected of others what they would not do themselves. "They bind heavy burdens and grievous to be borne, and lay them on men's shoulders, but they themselves will not move them with one of their fingers." "All their works they do to be seen of men." They like to have people flatter them: "they love the uppermost rooms at feasts, and to be called of men, Rabbi, Rabbi." They, "for a pretence, make long prayers," while they have no real acquaintance with God (Matt. 23: 3-14). In fact, they are one great sham, all outside, and hollow like an empty eggshell. Jesus would have His disciples real, solid, true, substantial, in faith and practice. A religion which collapses with the removal of a favorite minister, with the pain of a little injustice, with the misunderstanding of a few friends, or with the call for a little self-denial, is only an outside thing—it is "the leaven of the Pharisees and of the Sadducees," and the sooner its owner knows the truth about himself, the better.

"When Jesus came into the courts of Cæsarea Philippi, He asked His disciples, that I, the Son of Man, am?" And they said: "Some say that Thou art John the Baptist; some Elias: and others Jeremias, or one of the prophets." Yes; anything short of the true Messiah. Men would acknowledge Jesus then, as now, to be the best of men, but they would not have it that He was the Man, God's fellow (Zec. 13: 5), the Messiah, the mighty God" (Isa. 9: 6), who should come into the world. Men's hearts are just the same now as ever; man's belief in himself is such that he wants always to reject the idea of a God who is his superior, to whom he is responsible, who is greater and wiser than he; Almighty and Omniscient. Such a God at once makes man a sinner, if he does not humble himself and take the place of the creature; and the natural heart will bring up argument after argument to disprove the existence of such a God, and to repudiate the allegiance which is due to Him.

Whom Do Men Say

One feature of the present age, perhaps the worst of all the forms of opposition to Jesus which Satan has organized, is that of supreme and contemptuous indifference. A great deal of the agnosticism of the day is of this kind. It is not only "I don't know," but it is also, "I don't care to know anything about Jesus," just as with the Pharisees of old: "As for this fellow, we know not from whence He is" (John 9: 29). In the time of Jesus, the Pharisees said of Him: "He hath a devil and is mad;" "He deceiveth the people" (John 10: 20; 7: 12); they called Him "a man gluttonous, and a winebibber, a friend of publicans and sinners" (Matt. 11: 19), and tried to prove that He was a blasphemer (Matt. 26: 65: 66). But all they said was powerless to undo the blessed witness for His Father which He bore so steadfastly. And all that man says now against Christ as a Saviour, a Sanctifier, a Healer, cannot stay the tide of glorious salvation, which is bearing on thousands and thousands of those who trust in Him. In opposition to this testimony of His enemies, the very evil spirits bore witness to Him (Mark 1: 24. (Luke 4: 41.) Pilate, who condemned Him to be crucified, was forced to acknowledge, "I find no fault in Him" (John 19: 6). The very centurion, who commanded the soldiers who crucified Him, cried out: "Truly, this Man was the Son of God" (Mark 15: 39). Such are the various witnesses as to who Jesus is!

that I am?" This is the question for us. What witness are we bearing to Jesus? There are many who bear witness to the forgiveness of their sins, the cleanness of their heart, the sweetness of their experience, the earnestness of their work, the devotion of their zeal—but O how refreshing it is to hear those whose hearts are full of Jesus, tell out, not what they are, but what He is! Peter was the first to speak, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." He was not the first to acknowledge this on earth: the demons who had come out of many cried out, and said, "Thou art Christ the Son of God" (Luke 4: 41). And yet it was not from these demons that Peter had learned it. Jesus said to him, "Blessed art thou, Simon Bar-jona (i.e., son of Jona), for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven." Our witness of Jesus will be only just what God reveals to us: a stream cannot rise higher than its source. What, then,

Do We Say of Jesus?

In the family, do all the members see in us that Jesus is love and patience and forbearance? Does our life say of Jesus, "God is love"? Do all our actions speak of the "meekness and gentleness of Christ"? (2 Cor. 10: 1.) Do men hear from us the testimony, in times of difficulty, that "the Lord will provide," that "He careth for" us, that our Father which is in heaven knoweth that we have need of all these things? (Gen. 22: 14, margin; 1 Pet. 5: 7; Matt. 6: 32.) Or do they see us desponding, hear us grumbling, find us anxious, just as though all these things which are said of God were only a poem of the imagination? Do men see in us that sin does not have dominion over us, that God has delivered us from the kingdom of darkness, and that the besetting sins, which used to conquer us, are now under His dominion, and our very desires changed by His indwelling? Can we tell, and do our lives bear out our words, that Jesus is indeed a Deliverer? "Whom say ye that I am?" A Saviour? My Saviour? A Shepherd? My Shepherd? A Provider? My Provider? A Friend?

My Friend?

Jesus taught Peter that the very gates of hell should not prevail against His church, and that the power to bind and to loose (connected with united prayer, Matt. 18: 18-20) was committed to her. And it was from this time that Jesus began to open up to His disciples the truth, so unpalatable to them, and which they never fully received till after His resurrection, that He must be a suffering Messiah. A strange revolution has taken place in the minds of believers for some ages past, and converted men, as a rule, have been occupied almost exclusively with Christ as a suffering Messiah; and the coming of the Lord with His saints in glory, to reign on earth, is believed only by the few. Yet the first disciples saw nothing else, and in the Old Testament fully nine-tenths of the prophecies of Jesus concern His reign in glory, while only about one-tenth concern His sufferings. Peter, who was not yet filled with the Holy Ghost, and was, consequently, very full of himself, was inclined to presume upon the commendation which the Lord had just given him. Poor human nature, how little encouragement it can stand! Peter actually took upon himself to rebuke the Lord, and said

"Pity Thyself.

Lord, this shall not be unto thee (margin)." Pity Thyself! Jesus would not be Jesus if He did. There was no germ of self-pity in the Lord. No; He said, "If any man will come after Me; let him deny himself (not pity himself) and take up his cross and follow Me." Self pity is taking our own part, and being sorry for ourselves, and thinking how badly treated we are, and nursing up the sore instead of letting Jesus' compassion in, and letting Him heal the wounds and put the wrong things right. If Jesus had given way to self pity, He would have come right out of the plan of His Father, and our Redemption would not have been accomplished. Jesus spoke of the suggestion as Satan's, and said, moreover, "Whosoever will save his life (seek his own interests), shall lose it; and whosoever will lose his life for My sake, shall find it." Yes; if we die to ourselves in Christ, we find a better life, so wondrously free, above the fear of man, above the fear of evil, safe in the arms of Jesus. How much have we to learn! Peter, after confessing Jesus as the Son of God, yet savored the things that were of men, and not those of God!

WHY NOT TRUST JESUS?

"Life everlasting" He offers to thee—
Pardoning grace setting sin's captive free;
Love that is infinite, perfect, divine—
Such is the portion which now may be thine.
Why not! oh, why not trust Jesus?

"Peace, passing knowledge," He giveth His own;
Joy that thou otherwise never had'st known
Will thou not come? and, in coming, be blest,
Proving the sweetness of perfect heart-rest.
Why not! oh, why not trust Jesus?

Treasures unfathomed are hid in His store,
Drawing from which thou but findest still more;
Fear not to bathe in Love's ocean so wide,
'Neath the deep waves of that ne'er ebbing tide.
Why not! oh, why not trust Jesus?

"Fulness of blessing" there dwelleth in Him—
Fulness o'erflowing that fills to the brim:
"His is the Bounty"—but thine is the need;
Grace, only grace, can the poor sinner plead.
Why not! oh, why not trust Jesus?

"Marvellous love," passing all human thought,
Love which alone could these wonders have wrought—
Such is the love that is waiting for thee,
Tenderly whispering, "Come unto Me."

Perfect in loveliness, matchlessly fair,
Peerless in beauty, beyond all compare;
Christ the unchanging, Who loves to the end—
This MY Beloved, and this is MY Friend.
Why not! oh, why not trust Jesus?

THE HOLY LAND—Illustrated.

The Holy Land and the Bible. A Book of Scripture Illustrations gathered in Palestine. Beautifully printed from Small Pica type, with numerous fine illustrations and a map. In 2 vols., small quarto, elegantly bound in half Morocco, price $2.00; postage, 30c.: the same bound in one volume, cloth, $1.25; postage, 22c. In press, ready soon; specimen pages and illustrations now ready, sent free.

In this fascinating work the author brings vividly before the reader, in graphic language, the prominent places in the Holy Land that are associated with Bible History. The work is of intense interest from beginning to end, and is crowded with information of the highest importance for the understanding of the Holy Scriptures of both the Old and the New Testament.

"I visited Palestine with the intention of gathering illustrations of the sacred writings from its hills and valleys, its rivers and lakes, its plains and uplands, its plants and animals, its skies, its soil, and, above all, from the pictures of ancient times still presented on every side in the daily life of its people. Nothing is more instructive or can be more charming, when reading Scripture, than the illumination of its texts from such sources, throwing light upon its constantly-recurring Oriental imagery and local allusions, and revealing the exact meaning of words and phrases which otherwise could not be adequately understood. The land is, in fact, a natural commentary on the sacred writings."—Author's Preface.

"It is the best connected popular exposition of the Old Testament, and deserves its immense popularity."—REV. J. MAX HARK, Lancaster, Pa.

"'Hours with the Bible' fills a place which no commentary can occupy, as it brings to bear upon the Biblical record a vast amount of information—geographical, historical, scientific—not available in an ordinary commentary. The celebrated author's style is charming, and Mr. Alden has put out the work in a style equally charming."—The Guardian, Philadelphia, Pa.

"This author is one of the most reverent and conservative of our time, following the old paths faithfully, and yet never following them blindly. He does not fear to dissent from traditional views when the text demands it, but he has no leanings toward liberal or novel theories. Taken altogether, we know no work of like design that can be commended with so little qualification. For the average reader there is nothing that compares to it."—Christian Evangelist, St. Louis.

Entering on Life. A book for Young Men. By CUNNINGHAM GEIKIE, D.D. Ideal Edition, Long Primer type, fine cloth, price reduced from $1.00 to 40c.; post. 6c. Ready.

"When such a man as the wise and gentle Dean Alford recommends a book, all is said, and said as only a few can say it. Every parent, every teacher, every friend of the race, every believer in things of good repute, must echo his convictions, and join with him in bearing witness to the good sense, the exquisite fancy, the pathos, piety, and sound moral reasoning that illuminates every page. Dr. Geikie strikes the golden mean between the merely didactic and the merely literary, his style embracing the essentials of rare culture united with a happy and elevated orthodox train of thought."—The Week, Toronto.

THE RT. REV. A. CLEVELAND COXE.
Bishop of Western New York.

His Spirit of Love and Toleration—Personal Life—Birth in 1818—Ordination in 1841—Work in Hartford—Removal to Baltimore in 1854—Elected Bishop of Texas in 1856—The Office Declined—Return to New York in 1863—The Recognition of the Universities—Elected Bishop of Western New York—Interest in Missions—Champions the Work in Mexico—His Perception of Insidious Designs—His appeal for Help.

IN a recently published answer to an appeal for direction in a painful dispute, the eminent bishop whose portrait appears on the first page, referred the appellant to the apostolic word (James 3: 18): "The fruit of righteousness is sown in peace of them that make peace." In doing so, Dr. Coxe furnished the key to his character and work. He has never cultivated the spirit of the disciples, who said (Mark 9: 38): "Master, we saw one casting out devils in thy name, and he followeth not us: and we forbade him because he followeth not us. But Jesus said, Forbid him not." Dr. Coxe has always been prompt to recognize the value of real earnest work for the salvation of souls and the promotion of Christ's cause on earth; and the fact that some who are engaged in such labor hold different views as to Church government and other details, from those held by him and the Church of which he is a pillar, does not deter him from wishing them God-speed and aiding them if they have need of help.

The Personal Life

of the Right Rev. Arthur Cleveland Coxe, D. D., LL. D., has been one of consecration and devotion to Christian labor throughout. He was born at Mendham, N. J., on May 10, 1818, and is, therefore, now nearly seventy years old. He comes of a family that has been prominent in Maryland for two hundred years. It is connected by marriage with that of the President of the United States, of whom the bishop is a cousin. He studied at the University of the City of New York, and in 1838, at the early age of twenty, he graduated with distinction.

A course of theological study at the General Theological Seminary followed his graduation from the university, and in 1841 he passed with honor, and was ordained on June 27 by Bishop B. T. Onderdonk, of New York. His first labors were at St. Ann's, Morrisania, N. Y., where he remained until Easter, 1842, when he removed to Hartford, Conn., where he became rector of St. John's. He remained there for eleven years, doing valuable and earnest work with remarkable success. In 1854, owing to personal circumstances, he felt it his duty to remove southward, and he accepted the rectory of Grace Church, Baltimore, Md. He had not been there more than two years when an effort was made to bring him into episcopal labor. He was elected Bishop of Texas. This honor, however, Dr. Coxe felt it his duty at that time to decline, and he continued his work in Baltimore for seven years longer. His talents and services, however, brought other recognitions, which were accepted. The degree of D. D. was conferred upon him by St. James's College, Hagerstown, Md., in 1856. To this Trinity College, Hartford, Conn., added the degree of S. T. D., and Kenyon College, Gambier, O., the degree of LL. D.

In 1863 Dr. Coxe returned to New York, as Rector of Calvary Church, but he had been there only two years when to the office of Bishop came to him, and at this time it could not be disregarded, He was elected Assistant Bishop of Western New York, and was consecrated on January 4, 1865. Three years later, on the death of Bishop De Lancey, he took full charge of the diocese.

Bishop Coxe has taken a deep interest in the cause of foreign missions, and, in spite of his arduous episcopal labors, and the numerous works which have issued from his pen, he has found time to act on the Mission Boards of the Church, and to promote missionary enterprises. The Greek Mission especially, had his ardent co-operation. To such a man the work Bishop Riley is doing in Mexico, could not fail to commend itself. He stood by it manfully, and all the more valiantly, when he saw it menaced by enemies of various kinds. The opposition manifested itself in so many shapes and disguises, and pursued tactics so diverse, that it was difficult to understand the underlying general principle at work in each. Bishop Coxe, however, though he has never directly expressed his opinion, appears to have detected it. When he made his remarkable address lately, on Ultramontanism, before the Evangelical Alliance, exposing, in masterly style, the ways of the Jesuits, it was not difficult to understand his in Mexico against its enemies in Mexico, and in the United States, some of whom belong to the Protestant Episcopal Church, though in some cases they are affiliated in principle, and in other cases by family relationship with the Romish Church. Such a work as that Bishop Riley is doing, in enlightening the people of Mexico, necessarily excites the deepest and most virulent animosity in the Roman Catholic Church, because the priests perceive that it not only undermines their spiritual power over the people, but deprives them of the political power, that they have so long wielded to the unhappiness of the nation. While fighting against it directly, they saw that the most effective attack upon it would be a flank charge by any friends of their own in the Ritualistic party in the Church to which Bishop Riley belongs.

Two charges on Bishop Riley's attenuated ranks were made. Remarks from persons in high places began to be uttered, questioning the propriety of intrusion on ground already occupied by the ancient Church of Rome. Another and more subtle idea was then industriously circulated. It was urged that Christian work in Mexico ought to be a mission work from the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States, and the Church in Mexico to be not national and independent, but governed and controlled by the Church here. This attack was the more dangerous because it imposed on persons who did not perceive its motive, through not understanding the prejudices and apprehensions of the Mexican people. With their dread of annexation by the United States, and their resolve to resist the first entry of the wedge, any Christian work stamped with the nationality of the United States would be misunderstood, and doomed at once. The priests in denouncing it as a foreign movement, could appeal to the patriotism of the people, with good prospects of success. They could thus divert public attention from its spiritual character, from questions of doctrine and practice to political questions, and to the insidious design which they would impute to it, of trying to undermine the political independence of the State. Dr. Riley understood the astute manœuvre and refused to become a party to it though he was not able to convince his Episcopal brethren of its true character. He lost the pecuniary support of the Church, and since then has carried on the work at his own charges with such aid as the Christian public has given him.

A Manful Appeal

on behalf of the work came from Bishop Coxe on December 11, 1887. In the course of it he said: "It has been well said, the moment you accept this work, you have the noblest mission, in point of fact, in which you have ever engaged. The Church of England and our own Church have long recognized the principle of this kind of mission, giving aid to National Churches to reform themselves; not reducing them to missions of other churches." Therefore Bishop Coxe earnestly appealed for voluntary support for them in their noble self-denial.

As many misleading statements are now being industriously circulated we publish herewith, at the request of Bishop Riley, a statement written some years ago by Bishop Alfred Lee, of Delaware, on his return to his diocese, after personally inspecting the work in Mexico.

THE CHURCH OF JESUS IN MEXICO.
ITS ORIGIN, HISTORY AND AIMS.
By the Late Rt. Rev. Alfred Lee, Bishop of Delaware.

The Dawn of Spiritual Light—The Circulation of the Word—Aguilar, the Pioneer—An Enlightenment Like Luther's—The First Congregation—His Early Death—The Call to Dr. Riley—A Post of Danger—The Romish Champion Transformed—The Work of Aguas—His Death—Dr. Riley Succeeds Him—The Character of the Church—What it May Accomplish.

SPIRITUAL light is now breaking upon Mexico, and within the last few years a movement has been in progress in that Republic, full of promise and hope. Viewed in its origin, nature and growth, and in connection with the country in which it appeared, it may be considered one of the remarkable movements of the age. It certainly has strong claims upon the attention and sympathy of the lovers of Scriptural truth and pure, primitive Christianity. Romanism, however deeply rooted in the sacred associations, early prejudices and social habits of the people, has no longer an undisputed field.

A New Communion

has arisen, presenting the faith of the Lord Jesus Christ in a widely different aspect, and from small beginnings has been rapidly spreading. Of the origin and history of this infant Church a brief outline will be now presented.

Of this plant, now growing so vigorously, it may be emphatically said, "The Seed was the Word of God." It sprang up from the bosom of the Papal Communion through the silent influence of the Holy Scriptures. When the attempt was made to seat the unfortunate Maximilian upon the throne of Mexico, advantage was taken of the new condition of things to introduce a considerable supply of copies of the Bible in the Spanish tongue. The book found readers. Some of the precious seed fell upon ground prepared by Divine grace for its reception. Among those thus enlightened was a presbyter named Manuel Aguilar. Upon him the reading of the volume produced like effects as upon Luther in the convent of Erfurth. He not only rejoiced in the discovery which was so precious to his own soul, but he longed to extend to others the blessings he had found. By him for the worship of God in the Spanish tongue and the preaching of the gospel, was gathered in the city of Mexico. The thought of Aguilar was to establish a Reformed Catholic Church, evangelical in doctrine and assimilated in model and polity to the primitive apostolic pattern. He began with a little congregation of about fifty persons, which increased steadily under his assiduous labors. But his course was a brief one. His own exertions were exhausting; and persecution, none the less malignant if restrained from actual violence, was exceedingly harassing. Within two years he succumbed, pressing, in his last moments, the Bible to his heart. Among his papers was found the translation of a little volume, in which the right and duty of every man to search the Scriptures was powerfully argued. This was published by the Rev. H. C. Riley, and proved an effective ally to his work.

The attention of the bereaved flock was directed to a Presbyter of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States, of American parentage, but of Chilian birth and education, who was ministering in the Spanish tongue to an Episcopal congregation in the city of New York. In view of the admirable fitness of the Rev. Henry C. Riley for the work in Mexico, it is no presumption to recognize the hand of God in this call. It was a startling summons to Mr. Riley, urging him to leave his kindred and congregation for and uncertain results. After examining all the difficulties and perils involved, Mr. Riley decided to give himself to the work. Constrained by the love of Christ and zeal for the extension of His kingdom, he "counted not his life dear unto himself, and none of these things moved him." He went on his own responsibility, and mainly at his own charges.

Arriving in Mexico in 1869, he re-collected, as far as practicable, the scattered flock of Aguilar, teaching both publicly and from house to house. He labored not less effectively with his pen, circulating numbers of tracts explanatory of the great doctrines of the Gospel. He soon attracted public attention, and the jealous eyes of the dominant Church watched him with inquisitorial vigilance. A Catholic society, with a layman for president, was formed with the express object of counteracting his growing influence. But, in spite of opposition, Mr. Riley's hearers multiplied. He obtained from the Government one of the sequestrated conventual churches, San José de Gracia, and prepared to transfer thither his services. The rage of his enemies waxed hot. The Romish party, unable to crush him by violence, determined to employ argument. For this purpose they selected one of the most eminent and learned ecclesiastics of the capital, a Dominican friar, and very popular as a preacher. He examined Mr. Riley's publications, with the intention of preparing a refutation. But the Lord led him by a way that he knew not. He was himself vanquished by the power of the truth. "There fell from his eyes as it had been scales." He discovered that he had been all his life in darkness, and that the work he had undertaken to oppose was of the Lord. He sought personal conference with Mr. Riley, and after painful conflict and deep searchings of heart, he joined himself to that which he had been wont to look upon as an odious sect. This open adhesion to the new doctrine was a shock to his former associates not unlike that occasioned by the conversion of Saul of Tarsus. The church of San José de Gracia was about to be occupied by the congregation under Dr. Riley's care. Loud and deep were the threats. What added fuel to the flame was the announcement that the preacher on that occasion would be none other than Manuel Aguas!

With apostolic boldness the converted friar ascended the pulpit, and before an immense audience proclaimed the gospel. The favoring hand of God averted the danger. Manuel Aguas concluded his sermon without interruption, and went forward with zeal and intrepidity in his new vocation. From that time he was united with Mr. Riley in the oversight of the church. He was elected its first bishop, and had every qualification for a leader. Trained in all the learning of the Romish school, and conversant with the system of eternal administration, he could speak intelligently upon all the points that came under discussion. Of unblemished character, as well as great intellectual powers, he commanded the respect of his bitterest enemies. Embracing the grand verities of the gospel with simple, childlike faith, and proclaiming them with fervor and eloquence, he attracted large numbers to hear the Word, and had the entire confidence and affection of the flock to whom he ministered. He seemed, indeed, precisely the man for the arduous and important charge for which he had been selected, "a chosen vessel of the Lord."

The anger and astonishment created among his old associates may be imagined, He was, of course, but his enemies could not, as a former generation would have done, consign him to the tender mercies of the Inquisition. He was challenged to a public disputation. This he gladly accepted, and named as the question for discussion, "Is the Church of Rome guilty of idolatry?" Public expectation was intensely aroused, and on the day appointed thousands wended their way to San José. Great precautions were taken by the friends of Aguas for his safety. It was with difficulty that way was made for him through the dense masses to the platform. But when he arrived, his antagonist did not make his appearance. The Roman authorities had thought better of it, and concluded not to allow the discussion. Their selected theologian, who in good faith had been preparing himself, was sent to a distant place; Aguas was alone. He had the field to himself, and he did not fail to take advantage of the great opportunity. He boldly accused Rome of the sin of idolatry, and sustained the charge by convincing proofs. Strange things were brought to the ears of many of his auditors, and the shock given to the Roman system was a heavy one.

Speedily Excommunicated,

Aguas was busy with his pen as well as in his public ministry. In particular he replied to the sentence of excommunication in a tract, which, for forcible style, is worthy to be compared with "The Provincial Letters" of Pascal.

Through the labors of Aguas, Riley and some faithful helpers, the work prospered greatly, and extended from the capital to neighboring towns and villages. A simple liturgy was prepared, and proved a very efficient aid in diffusing the principles of the gospel and building up congregations. Bible-readers, men unversed in scholastic lore, but full of faith and zeal, carried the glad tidings from village to village, experiencing often the same treatment as the first heralds of the cross, but persevering and undismayed. In the city of Mexico was made in the purchase of another of the old conventual churches—San Francisco. This is a magnificent edifice, in which an audience of two thousand might be assembled, with a chapel adjacent capable of accommodating three hundred persons, situated on the principal street of the city. The church is only inferior to the cathedral in dimensions, and of a better style of architecture. It is every way suited to be a centre of mission work. Hitherto the chapel only has been used, but efforts are now made to put the church in repair, and great advantages are anticipated from its use in public worship.

The course of Aguas, like that of Aguilar, was soon terminated. In labors he was most abundant, preaching from twelve to fifteen sermons a week, in addition to manifold cares of oversight and pastoral duty. Under these exertions, as well as the harassing effects of persecution and calumny upon a sensitive spirit, his health gave way. In 1872 he rested from his labors.

From the beginning the ideal in the minds of the leaders of this movement was a church purified from Romish errors and corruptions, but retaining the primitive constitution of the Spanish Ante-Nicene Church. The hope was cherished at the outset of obtaining the adhesion of one of the Mexican bishops, and thus perpetuating the ministry in the order which they desired, but the way was not then opened. Afterwards, having elected Aguas as their future bishop, they looked forward to the day when he could be consecrated to his office. Disappointed in this earnest desire, they still waited patiently without resorting to any other mode of ordination. So far as possible the sacraments were administered by Dr. Riley and converted presbyters. It was a memorable day, February 24, 1875, when the first ordination in Mexico was held by a Protestant bishop. The full service of our Church in the Spanish tongue was used, the sermon being preached by the Rev. Dr. Riley.

As in the era of the Reformation, the revulsion from Rome is strong and decided. Papal corruption and oppression are to them Fearful Realities.

Those who have given up friends and prospects of earthly advantage, and are hazarding their lives in the struggle for a pure faith, are not inclined to compromise with such an enemy. Two doctrines especially hold in their minds the same high position with which they were regarded by the champions of the Reformation—the Holy Scriptures, the standard of faith and practice, and the right of every man to read them under his responsibility to God; and justification by the merits of Jesus Christ, through faith alone.

The rapid increase of the "Church of Jesus," in Mexico, is fitted to awaken strong hopes for the future. It counts now (in 1875) over fifty congregations. Many of these are small, but others number from three to four hundred. and in some villages the larger part of the population is embraced. The reformation in morals is in such places very observable. It is safe to reckon that over six thousand souls are at this time under the influence of the Church. An evidence of the extent to which the work has spread, was furnished by the visit of delegations from remote congregations, some of whom have travelled many miles.

As in apostolic days, the converts are largely "the poor of this world rich in faith." The obloquy encountered, and the worldly sacrifices to be made, are great obstacles in the way of persons of high social position. It is "hard for the rich man to enter into the kingdom of God."

The Spirit of Persecution

is none the less bitter because its outward demonstrations are checked by law. There is no reason to doubt that the present Government is sincere in its desire to enforce the laws of toleration, and it succeeds in the capital as well as could be expected. But in remote districts its arm is comparatively weak, while an ignorant and fanatical populace is easily incited to violence. The "Church of Jesus," in Mexico, has had its martyrs and confessors. But the spirit of genuine Christianity is shown not only in willingness to suffer and die for Christ, but also in the return of good for evil and blessings for curses. There has been little complaint heard from the suffering Church. Indignities, revilings and outrages have been patiently borne, and, "with well-doing, they seek to put to silence the ignorance of foolish men." Like the early Christians, they are assailed by false and odious accusations.

While the evangelist is exposed to obvious dangers from fanatical bigotry, there is not the same risk for the native worker as for the foreigner. The missionary from abroad arouses national and political as well as religious prejudices. And herein is largely the hope and under consideration. It is of Mexican origin, and carried forward by native laborers. Peradventure God, in His Providence, is thus preparing the way for the extension of the pure gospel among the millions on this continent speaking the Spanish tongue. We know how inaccessible they have seemed to missionary enterprise. But let a Mexican Church be established, presenting the truth as it is in Jesus, and the light thus enkindled would extend its beams to the Antilles and the Continental Spanish American States. A great company of preachers would go forth, sister churches would spring up, and light-towers be kindled along the Atlantic and Pacific coasts. Nay, it is no extreme supposition that the radiance will extend across the ocean, and that from the countries to which Spain sent her fierce, armed propagandists in the sixteenth century, may be returned to her the much-needed influences of pure and apostolic Christianity.

Such hopes are not to be put aside as idle dreams, when we see what has already been done. A reformed Church, numbering more than fifty congregations, and celebrating its worship in grand temples in the very heart of the city of Mexico, has been gathered within the space of ten years, in the face of virulent prejudice and fanatical opposition. Surely such a work, opening such prospects, may well cheer the hearts and encourage the hopes of the lovers of truth and holiness.

To us the hearts and wishes of that which is in truth the Church of Christ, in Mexico, are now turned. We can engage with peculiar advantage in a grand and holy work. "A great door and effectual is opened unto us of the Lord." If it be added, "and there are many adversaries," this is no new experience in the history of Christ's religion.

ALFRED LEE.

BROKEN PROMISES OF MARRIAGE.

Dr. Talmage's Third Sermon

TO THE WOMEN OF AMERICA.

Preached last Sunday Morning, January 22, 1888.

"I have opened my mouth unto the Lord, and I cannot go back." Judges 11: 35.

Jephthah's Vow—An Unknown Sacrifice Promised—His Daughter's Appearance a Horror to Him—Doubts About her Fate—An Overmastering Consideration—Caution as to Promises—Painful Dilemmas—The Victims of Broken Promises—In Asylums and Cemeteries—The Sanctity of a Promise—Recognized in Business—Engagement as Binding as Marriage—Exceptions Rare—A Captain's Desertion of his Ship—Betrothal a Golden Gate—Queen Elizabeth's Amours—Other Noted Lovers—No Excuse for Blunders—Caution Indispensable for Women—Despicable Triflers of Both Sexes—Questions About Divorce—Only the Last Resort—Better Remedies—The Betrothed Engineer's Struggle on the Dykes.

GENERAL JEPHTHAH, the Commander-in-chief of the Israelitish forces, is buckling on the sword for the extermination of the pestiferous Ammonites, and looking up to the sky, he promises that if God will give him the victory, he will put to death and sacrifice as a burnt offering the first thing that comes out from the door of his homestead when he goes back. The hurrahing of triumph soon runs along the line of all the companies, regiments and divisions of Jephthah's army. A worse beaten enemy than those Ammonites never strewed any plain with their carcases. General Jephthah, fresh from his victory, is now on his way home. As he comes over the hills and through the valleys, the whole march for his men is a cheer, but for him for he remembers his vow to slay and burn the first thing that comes forth from his house to greet him after his victory. Perhaps it may be the old watch-dog that shall first come out; and who could get heart to beat out the life of a faithful creature like that, as he comes fawning and barking and frisking, and putting up his paw against his master in merry welcome after long absence? No; it was not that which came forth to meet Jephthah. Perhaps it may be a young dove let out from its cage in the General's home, which, gaining its liberty, may seem to rejoice in public gladness and flutter on the shoulder of the familiar head of the household. But who could have the heart to slay such a winged innocent? No; it was not that which came forth to meet Jephthah. Or it may be some good neighbor that will rush out to greet him after having first been in to tell the family of the near approach of the General. But who could slay a neighbor who had come on the scene to rejoice over the reunited household? No; it was not that which came forth to meet Jephthah.

As he advances upon his home the door opens, and out of it comes one whose appearance under other circumstances would have been an indescribable joy, but under becomes a horror which blanches his cheek and paralyzes his form and almost hurls him flat to the earth. His child, his only child, his daughter, comes skipping out to greet him, her step keeping time to a timbrel which she shakes and smites. Did ever a conqueror's cheer end in such a bitter groan?

All the glories of victorious war are blotted out from Jephthah's memory, and his banner is folded in grief, and his sword goes back into the scabbard with dolorous clang, and the muffled drum takes the place of the cymbals, and the "tremolo" the place of the trumpet, and he cries out: "Alas, my daughter, thou hast brought me very low, and thou art one of them that trouble me; for I have opened my mouth to the Lord, and I cannot go back." During two months, amid the mountains, without shelter the maidens who would have been at her wedding ranged with Jephthah's daughter up and down, bewailing her coming sacrifice.

Commentators and theologians are in dispute as to whether that girl was slain or not, and as to whether, if she were slain, it was right or wrong in Jephthah to be the executioner, a discussion into which I shall not be diverted from that we had better look out what we promise, better be cautious what engagement we make, better that in regard to all matters of betrothal and plighted vow we feel the responsibility, lest we have either to sacrifice the truth or sacrifice an immortal being, and we be led to cry out with the paroxysm of a Jephthah: "I have opened my mouth unto the Lord, and I cannot go back."

There is one ward in almost all the insane asylums, and a large region in almost every cemetery, that you need to visit. They are occupied by the men and women who are the

of marriage. The women in those wards and in those mortuary receptacles are in the majority, because woman lives more in her affections than does man, and laceration of them, in her case, is more apt to be a dementia and a fatality. In some regions of this land the promise of marriage is considered to have no solemnity or binding force. It was only made in fun. They may change their mind. The engagement may stand until some one more attractive in person, or opulent in estate, appears on the scene; then the rings are returned, and the amatory letters, and all relationship ceases. And so there are ten thousand Jephthah's daughters sacrificed as burnt offerings. The whole subject needs to be taken out of the realm of comedy into tragedy, and men and women need to understand that, while there are exceptions to the rule, once having solemnly pledged to each other heart and hand, the forfeiture and abandonment of that pledge makes the transgressor in the sight of God a perjurer, and so the Day of Judgment will reveal it. The one has lied to the other; and all liars shall have their place in the lake that burneth with fire and brimstone. If a man or woman make is there any moral obligation to fulfil it? If a man sign a note for five hundred dollars, ought he to pay it? If a contract be signed involving the building of a house, or the furnishing of a bill of goods, ought they stand by that contract? "Oh, yes," always answered. Then I ask the further question: Is the heart, the happiness, the welfare, the temporal and eternal destiny of a man or woman worth as much as the house, worth five hundred dollars, worth anything? The realm of profligacy is filled with men and women as a result of the wrong answer to that question. The most aggravating, stupendous and God-defying lie is a lie in the shape of broken espousal.

But suppose a man changes his mind, ought he not back out? Not one in ten thousand.

What if I Change My Mind about a promissory note, and decline to pay it, and suddenly put my property in such shape that you could not collect your note? How would you like that? That, you say, would be a fraud. So is the other a fraud, and punish it God will certainly, as you live, and just as certainly if you do not live. I have known men, betrothed to loving and good womanhood, resigning their engagement, and the victim went down in hasty consumption, while suddenly the recreant man would go up the aisle of a church in brilliant bridal party, and the two promised "I will," with a solemnity that seemed ensurance of a lifetime happiness. But the simple fact was, that was the first act of a Shakesperian play entitled "Taming the Shrew." He found out, when too late, that he had not married into the family of the "Graces," but into the family of the "Furies." To the day of his death, the murder of his first betrothal followed him.

The Bible extols one who "sweareth to his own hurt and changeth not. That is, when you make a promise, keep it at all hazards. There may be cases where deception has been used at the time of engagement, and extraordinary circumstances where the promise is not binding, but in nine hundred and ninety-nine cases out of a thousand, engagement is

As Binding as Marriage.

Robert Burns, with all his faults, well knew the force of a marital engagement. In obedience to some rustic idea, he standing on one side the brook Ayr, and Mary Campbell on the other, they bathed their hands in the water and then put them on the boards of a Bible, making their pledge of fidelity. On the cover of the Old Testament of that book, to this day in Robert Burns's handwriting may be found the words, "Lev: 19: 12. 'Ye shall not swear by my name falsely; I am the Lord.'" And on the cover of the New Testament in his own handwriting: "Mat. 5: 33: 'Thou shalt not forswear thyself, but shalt perform unto the Lord thine oaths.'"

Suppose a ship-captain offers his services to take a ship out to sea. After he gets a little way he comes alongside of a vessel with a more beautiful flag, and which has perhaps a richer cargo, and is bound for a more attractive port. Suppose he rings a bell for the engineer to slow up, and the screw stops. Now I see the captain being lowered over the side of the vessel into a small boat, and he crosses to the

and climbs up the sides, and is seen walking the bridge of the other ship. I pick up his resigned speaking-trumpet and I shout through it: "Captain, what does this mean? Did you not promise to take this ship to Southampton, England?" "Yes," says the captain, "but I have changed my mind, and I have found I can do better, and I am going to take charge here. I shall send back to you all the letters I got while managing that ship, and everything I got from your ship, and it will be all right." You tell me that the worst fate for such a captain as that is too good for him. But it is just what a man or woman does who promises to take one through the voyage of life, across the ocean of existence, and then breaks the promise.

What American society needs to be taught is that betrothal is an act so solemn and tremendous that all men and women must stand back from it until they are sure it is right, and sure that it is best, and sure that no retreat will be desired. Before that promise of lifetime companionship, any amount of romance that you wish, any ardor of friendship, any coming and going. But a golden gate, which one should not pass, unless he or she expects never to return. Engagement is the porch of which marriage is the castle, and you have no right in the porch if you do not mean to pass into the castle. The trouble has always been that this whole subject of affiance has been relegated to the realm of frivolity and joke, and considered not worth a sermon, or even a serious paragraph. And so the massacre of human lives has gone on, and the devil has had it his own cruel way, and what is mightily needed is that pulpit and platform and printing-press all speak a word of unmistakable and thunderous protest on this subject of infinite importance.

We put clear out into thin poesy and light reading the marital engagements of Petrarch and his Laura, Dante and his Beatrice, Chaucer and his Philippa, Lorenzo de Medici and his Lucretia; Spencer and his Rosalind, Waller and his Saccharissa, not realizing that it was the style of their engagement that or wretchedness, their virtue or their profligacy. All the literary and military and religious glory of Queen Elizabeth's reign cannot blot out from one of the most conspicuous pages of history her infamous behavior towards Seymour and Philip and Melville and Leicester and others. All the ecclesiastical robes that Dean Swift ever rustled through consecrated places cannot hide from intelligent people of all ages the fact that by promises of marriage, which he never fulfilled, he broke the heart of Jane Waring after an engagment of seven years, and the heart of Stella after an engagment of fourteen years, and the poetic stanzas he dedicated to their excellences only make the more immortal his own perfidy.

"But suppose I should make a mistake," says some man or woman, "and I find it out after the engagement and before marriage?" My answer is, you have on this subject. There are so many ways of finding out all about the character and preferences and dislikes and habits of a man or woman, that if you have not brain enough to form a right judgment in regard to him or her, you are not so fit a candidate for the matrimonial altar as you are for an idiot asylum. Notice what society your especial friend prefers, whether he is industrious or lazy, whether she is neat or slatternly, what books are read, what was the style of ancestry, noble or depraved; and if there be any unsolved mystery about the person under consideration, postpone all promise until the mystery is solved.

Jackson's Hollow, Brooklyn, was part of the city not built on for many years, and every time I crossed it I said to myself or to others, why is not this land built on? I found out afterward that the title to the land was in controversy, and no one wanted to build there until that question was decided. Afterward I understood the title was settled, and now buildings are going up all over it. Do not build your happiness for this world on a character, masculine or feminine, that has not a settled and undisputed title to honor and truth and sobriety and righteousness.

O woman, you have more need to pause before making such an important promise than man, because if you make a mistake it is worse for you. If a man blunder about promise of marriage or go on to an unfortunate marriage, he can spend his evenings away, and can go to the club or the Republican or Democratic headquarters, and absorb his mind in city or State or national elections, or smoke himself stupid or drink himself drunk. But there is no place of regular retreat for you, O woman, and you could not take narcotics or intoxicants and keep your respectability. Before you promise, pray and think and study and advise. There will never again in your earthly history be a time when you so much need God.

It seems to me that the world ought to cast out from business credits and from good neighborhood those who boast of the number of hearts they have won, as the Indian boasts of the number of scalps he has taken. If a man will lie to a woman and a woman will lie to a man about so important a matter as that of a lifetime's welfare, they will lie about a bill of goods and lie about finances and lie about anything. Society to-day is brim full of gallants and man-milliners and and those most God-forsaken of all wretches—flirts. And they go about drawing-rooms and the parlors of watering-places, simpering and bowing and scraping and whispering, and then return to the club-rooms, if they be men, or to their special gatherings, if they be women, to chatter and giggle over what was said to them in confidence. Condign punishment is apt to come upon them, and they get paid in their own coin. I could point you to a score whom society has let drop very hard, in return for their base traffic in human hearts.

And here my idea widens, and I have to say, not only to those who have made a mistake in solemn promise of marriage, but to those who have already at the altar been pronounced one when they are two, or in diversity of tastes and likes and dislikes are neither one nor two, but a dozen—make the best you can of an awful mistake. And here let me answer letters that come from every State of the American Union, and from across the sea, and are coming year after year from men and women who are terrifically allianced and tied together in a hard knot—a very hard knot. The letters run something like this: "What ought I to do? my husband is a drunkard." "My wife is a gad-about, and will not stay at home." "My companion is ignorant, and hates books, and I revel in them." "I like music, and a piano sets my husband crazy." "I am fond of social life, and my husband is a recluse." "I am trying to be good, and my life-long associate is very bad; what shall I do?" My answer is, there are certain good reasons for divorcement. The Bible recognizes them; but it must be and only after all reasonable attempts at reclamation and adjustment have proved a dead failure. When such attempts fail, it is generally because of meddlesome outsiders; and women tell the wronged wife how she ought to stand on her rights, and men tell the wronged husband how he ought to stand on his rights. And let husband and wife, in an unhappy marriage relation, stand punctiliously on their rights, and there will be no readjustment, and only one thing will be sure to them, and that is a hell on earth.

If you are unhappily married, in most cases I advise you to make the best you can of an awfully bad bargain. Do not project your peculiarities more than is necessary. Perhaps you may have some faults of your own, which the other party in the marital alliance may have to suffer. You are in the same yoke. If you pull aside, the yoke will only twist your neck. Better pull ahead. The world is full of about many things, and among other things about betrothal and marriage, and yet have been tolerably happy and very useful in the strength of God, and by the grace promised in every time of need, if those who seek it conquer the disadvantageous circumstances. I am acquainted with lovely women, married to contemptible men, and genial men yoked with termagants inspired of the devil. And yet, under these disadvantages my friends are useful and happy. God helps people in other kinds of martyrdom and to sing in the flame, and He will help you in your lifelong misfortune.

Remember the patience of Job. What a wife he had! At a time, when he was one great blotch of eruptions, and his property was destroyed by a tornado, and, more than all, bereavement had come and the poor man needed all wise counsel, she advises him to go to cursing and swearing. She wanted him to poultice his boils with blasphemy. But he lived right on through his recovered his health and his fortune, and raised a splendid family, and the closing paragraph of the Book of Job has such a jubilance that I wonder people do not oftener read it: "So the Lord blessed the latter end of Job more than his beginning."

Now, my badly married friend of either sex, if Job could stand it by the help of God, then by the same divine reinforcement. You have other relations, O woman, beside the wifely relation. If you are a mother, train up your children for God and heaven. If you are a member of a church, help move on its enterprises. You can get so much of the grace of God in your heart, that all your home trials will seem insignificant. How little difference does it make what your unrighteous husband calls you, if God calls you His child, and you are an heiress of whole kingdoms beyond the sky?

Immerse yourself in some kind of outside usefulness, something that will enlist your prayers, your sympathies, your hand, your needle, your voice. Get your heart on fire with love to God and the disenthrallment of the human race, and the troubles of your home will be blotted out in the glory of your consecrated life. I cry out to you, O woman, as Paul exclaims in his letter to the Corinthians: "What knowest thou, O wife, whether thou shalt save thy husband?" And if you cannot save him, you can help in the grander, mightier enterprise of helping save the world. Out of the awful mistake of your marriage rise into the sublimest life of self-sacrifice for God and suffering humanity. Instead of settling down to mope over your domestic woes, enlist your energies for the world's redemption.

Some parts of Holland keep out the ocean only by dykes or walls of stout masonry.

The Dutch Engineer

having these dykes in charge was soon to be married to a maiden living in one of the villages, the existence of which depended on the strength of these dykes. And there was to be a great feast in one of the villages that approaching evening, in honor of the coming bridegroom. That day a great storm threatened the destruction of the dykes, and hence the destruction of thousands of lives in the villages sheltered by that stone wall. The ocean was in full wrath, beating against the dykes, and the tides and the terror were still rising. "Shall I go to the feast," says the engineer, "or shall I go and help my workmen take care of the dykes?" "Take care of the dykes," he said to himself, "I must and will." As he appeared on the wall, the men working there were exhausted, and shouted: "Here comes the engineer. Thank God! Thank God!"

The wall was giving way stone by stone, and the engineer had a rope fastened around his body, and some of the workmen had ropes fastened around their bodies, and were let down amid the wild surges that beat the wall. Everything was giving way. "More stones!" cried the men. "More mortar!" But the answer came: "There is no more!" "Then," cried the engineer, "take off your clothes and with them stop the holes in the wall." And so in the chill and darkness and surf it was done, and with the workmen's apparel the openings in the wall were partially filled. But still the tide rose, and still the ocean reared itself for more awful stroke and for the overwhelming of thousands of lives in the villages. "Now we have done all we can," said the engineer, "down on your knees, my men, and pray to God for help." And on the trembling and parting dykes they prayed till the wind changed and the sea subsided, and the villages below, which, knowing nothing of the peril, were full of romp and dance and hilarity, were gloriously saved.

What We Want

in this work of walling back the oceans of poverty and drunkenness and impurity and sin is the help of more womanly and manly hands. Oh how the tides come in! Atlantic surge of sorrow after Atlantic surge of sorrow, and the tempests of human hate and Satanic fury are in full cry. O, woman of many troubles, what are all the feasts of worldly delight, if they were offered you, compared with the opportunity of helping build and support barriers which sometimes seem giving way through man's treachery and the world's assault?

O Woman, to the Dykes!

Bring prayer, bring tears, bring cheering words! Help! Help! And having done all, kneel with us on the quaking wall until the God of the wind and the sea shall hush the one and silence the other. To the dykes! Sisters, mothers, wives, daughters, of America, to the dykes! The mightiest catholicon for all the wounds and wrongs of woman or man is complete absorption in the work to rescue others. Save some man, some woman, some child! In that effort you will forget or be helped to bear your own trials, and in a little while God will take you up out of your disturbed and harrowing conjugal relation of earth into a heaven all the happier because of preceding distress. When Queen Elizabeth of England was expiring it was arranged that the exact moment of her death should be signalled to the people by the dropping of a sapphire ring from a window into the hands of an officer, who carried it at the top of his speed to King James of Scotland. But your departure from the scene of your earthly woes, if you are ready to go, will not be the dropping of a sapphire to the ground, but the setting of a jewel in the King's coronet. Blessed be His glorious name forever!

THE TRUE READING OF THE SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

By Rev. A. R. Faussett, D. D.*

The Newspaper in the Bible—Christ's Twofold Work—A Common Mistake—The Peculiarity of our Times—Similarity to those Before the First Advent—The Growing Unification of the World—Cheering Signs—The Double Epiphany—Two Rabbis at the Wailing-Place.

CECIL once said, "A Christian in a prison with his Bible can tell what is going on in the outer world." Brethren, the Word of God is our "light shining in a dark place" till the day dawn. The Emperor's chaplain challenged the stammerer, Notker, of St. Gall, in olden time: "You say God reveals Himself to His children. Can you tell me what God is now doing?" "Yes," was the reply; "what He is always doing—exalting the humble and debasing the proud." Yes, this is what God comes to do, especially at the Epiphany of the Glory of Him who is the great God and our Saviour. He comes for for the rapture of his saints, the lowly ones of the earth, who shall be exalted in transfigured bodies with Himself, and then in flaming fire to take vengeance on those who would not know God, nor obey the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ.

"But," says an objector, "does not our Lord command, 'Go ye, make disciples of all nations'?" Yes; but He did not say that the Gospel would convert all nations in the present age; God (according to Acts 15:14) is "taking out of the Gentiles now a people for His Name." The gospel of the kingdom is to be preached in all the world, for a witness unto all nations (Matt. 24:14); a witness such as that of Enoch and Noah to the men before the flood, so that the world is left without excuse if it neglects it.

But will the world have rejected it when Christ shall come? Let Himself answer, "When the Son of Man cometh shall He find faith on the earth?" (Luke 18:8.) The state of the world at His coming He compares to that of men before the flood, and that of Sodom on the eve of its destruction. "They did eat, drank, married wives, were given in marriage, until Noah entered the ark, and the flood came and destroyed them all." (Luke 18:27.) "They bought, sold, planted, builded, but the same day that Lot went out of Sodom it rained fire and brimstone, and destroyed them all; even thus shall it be in the day when the Son of man is revealed." How exactly herein the Lord photographs our bustling, self-seeking, intensely worldly age! The past ages, too, have been so.

The Peculiarity of Our Age.

as it was in Noah's times, is that the sons of God ally themselves, through the lust of the flesh and the lust of the eye, with the daughters of men; in other words, the Church is yielding itself to the world's fascinations, instead of being separate from it, and witnessing for God against its corruptions. So God will soon say, "My Spirit shall not always strive (or judge) in man." "He who now letteth (or restraineth) shall be taken out of the way." Yes, and the elect Church, alone faithful among the faithless, shall cease to "torment the dwellers upon earth" by their witness; for believers shall be "caught up" in transfigured bodies to "meet the Lord in the air." Then shall the full development of "lawlessness." which is yet "in mystery," take place.

The signs before and at our Lord's first Advent have their counterpart just before His second Advent. There were the then, represented by the Pharisees, the Sadducees and the Herodians. These answer respectively to (1) the Formalists, who "in the last days (II Tim. 3:5) have the form of godliness, but deny its power;" (2) the Rationalistic unbelievers; (3) the worldlings (Rev. 16:14), whose god is self and the world. And these develop into the whole world and the ten kings under Antichrist, being gathered by these miracle-working demon spirits (Rev. 16:14) to the war of that great day of God Almighty. So far from the present world age developing into universal peace before Christ comes, its issue is the reverse (Joel 3:11–21): "Assemble yourselves, ye heathen, gather together multitudes, multitudes in the valley of decision. Beat your ploughshares into swords, and your pruning-hooks into spears." This is exactly the reverse of what (Isa. 2:4) shall be after the Lord has come to reign on Zion, and over all nations; then "they shall beat their swords into ploughshares, and their spears into pruning hooks." So Joel, too, foretells that in "the day of the Lord," after His awful judgment with His mighty ones on the wicked multitudes gathered against Jerusalem, the new age shall see "Israel's God, Jehovah, dwelling in Zion." Then, and not till then, "nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more."

A Significant Feature of Our Age

is the marvellous unification of the world, space and distance being almost annihilated by the railway, the electric telegraph, the telephone and the steamship. Separating hedges are being levelled down, so that the earth is being prepared to be one grand field for the manifestation of its coming King; but first, Antichrist will gather his hosts. Then Jehovah will say (Psa. 1), "Gather My saints unto Me." So Rome combined in one political unity the kingdoms of the then known world; God's providence thereby prepared His way for Christ's First Advent and the kingdom of grace on earth, just as they are now being unified for the speedily coming kingdom of glory.

But there must first come the awful conflict foretold in Joel 3, Zech. 13 and 14, and Rev. 19. Christ comes as the antitypical David, the man of war, first; then, as the antitypical Solomon, the prince of peace.

Signs Bright and Dark.

Thus the signs of the Lord's coming are already appearing, alike the dark and the bright ones. Of the latter is the increased interest taken in the Holy Land (Ps. 102: 13–17), as foretold: "Thou wilt arise and have mercy upon Zion, for the time to favor her, yea, the set time, is come; for thy servants take pleasure in her stones, and favor the dust thereof." Never since Jerusalem was first trodden down by the Gentiles has such interest been taken in identifying the sites and stones of Palestine. The Temple's foundation-stones, with their Phœnician marks of Hiram's stone-masons, the Moabite stone, and the Palestine Exploration Society's Ordnance map, are being carefully studied. The number of Jews in Palestine, according to the Bishop of Jerusalem, has risen in a few years from 15,000 to 42,000. The gathering together (Heb. 10: 25) of believers in brotherly conferences on the coming kingdom, and the increase of the knowledge of it, are the pledges foretold (Dan. 12 and Mal. 3) of our speedy "gathering together" "unto our manifested king." (II Thess. 2:1.)

The Double Epiphany.

It may be objected: "If definite signs are given us, to precede the Lord's coming, such as the return of the Jews in unbelief (Zech. 12–14) unto their own land, and the Gospel witness unto all nations, how can the Lord's coming be as that of 'a thief in such a day and hour as men think not'? The only doctrine that can solve the difficulty is that which close search of Scripture reveals: The Lord's coming for His people is not simultaneous with His coming to take vengeance on the apostate world. He first comes for His people in the air: He next comes with His people, and His feet shall stand on the Mount of Olives. No special signs are needed by or given to His people; they are charged, "Watch ye, and pray always." He might have come, and may come at any hour, without sign for them. The special signs given refer to His subsequent descent to the earth. The signs given must precede the Lord's coming with His glorified saints to take vengeance on Antichrist and his world confederacy at Jerusalem; as to this coming, Zech. 14: 5 saith, "The Lord my God shall come, and all the saints with thee." (Ps. 1.) He could not come with His saints unless He had previously come for them. These are "the armies in heaven on white horses, and clothed in linen clean and white, the righteousness of the saints" (Rev. 19: 8, 14) who follow the Word of God, the King of kings, about to "smite the nations and rule them with a rod of iron." "But," say some, "the spiritual revivals and evangelistic missions now oppose the doctrine that our age is tending to apostacy." Thank God! These revivals are preparing an elect people out of the masses for His coming: but not so the world.

Two Rabbis met at the wailing-place, west of the Temple area, amidst the foundation-stones which testify of glories long past. One wore a look of inconsolable grief, the other of joy. "Why do you weep?" asked the joyful Rabbi. "I weep for the desolations of Zion. And why do you rejoice?" "I rejoice at Zion's coming consolations; for as surely as Jehovah fulfilled His threats of her desolation, so will He fulfil His promises of her glorious and eternal consolation." Let us, too, amidst the solemn signs on every side, lift up our heads, for our redemption draweth nigh—and what a glorious redemption!

A TRACT REFUSED AND ACCEPTED.

TALKING recently with a Christian worker, who in the war-time was a member of the Christian Commission, the editor of this journal heard an interesting reminiscence, which shows how acts of love and kindness may open the doors of an obdurate heart.

Our friend was at the front, and was distributing tracts among the soldiers. He offered one to a Scotchman, but was somewhat roughly bidden to put up those things. He for one had no use for them. He was reminded that death was very busy in that place, and that the tracts were prepared to help men in that trying hour. The Scotchman, however, said he knew all about religion, and had no respect for it, or its professors.

The Christian worker went his way, and a little later came upon a row of wounded men lying on the ground, some of them dying. He noticed that the ground on which they lay was rough, and in many places pebbles projected, which must be very painful to the backs of the sufferers. Laying down his bag of tracts, he collected some logs which had been felled, and rolled them to the place where the men lay. His object was to make a rude bed or two for the worst cases. By putting two logs near together and laying crosswise from one log to the other the staves of broken barrels, of which there were plenty around, he constructed two or three comparatively comfortable beds, with some elasticity in them. The men perceived his object, and voluntarily hunted up more logs and staves, until every wounded man had an extemporized bed. One of them, on being lifted from the ground to the bed, raised his uninjured arm, and throwing it around the neck of the Christian man, whose compassion was thus shown, drew his face down to him, and, rough soldier as he was, kissed him. "I have a wife at home in Connecticut," he said, "who will pray for you every night, when she knows what you have done for me."

Raising himself, the Christian man turned to take up his tracts, having done some hours of exhausting work in the hot sunshine. As he did so, he encountered the Scotchman who had rebuffed him in the morning. "He said, "I did not know you Christian Commission men did this kind of work. I thought it was all preaching and praying. There's some sense in this. Give me your hand; and I'll take your tract too, now."

Further talk with the Scotchman followed, and he admitted that he came of a pious family; and that his brother and sister were praying for him daily, to be preserved amid the perils of the battle-field and for his soul's salvation.

Before they parted, the two men knelt down together in the wood, and the Scotchman, with tears, was praying for forgiveness. Eventually he found peace and made public profession of his faith.

A MUSIC-TEACHER'S HELPLESSNESS.

IN this month's number of Thy Healer,* which is edited by Mrs. M. Baxter, is published the following testimony of a music-teacher who had the well-known premonitory symptoms of paralysis: "Last spring I began to lose the use of my arms, the left more particularly. They gradually got worse—my wrists being also very weak. As I get my living as a teacher of music, this caused me a great deal of anxiety, as, of course, I have to play the piano a great deal; but with my bad wrists I was quite powerless to do anything of the kind. The muscles of my left arm felt as if they were being drawn up, and it became quite useless. I went to a doctor, and he said I must give up playing entirely, for a time, which I did, but with no good result; so I came to Bethshan, and took the Lord for my Healer. After coming away, I really felt the Holy Spirit had come to me: I had such a happy feeling. On the following morning, although my wrists were still painful, I felt impelled to go to the piano and play. I did so, looking for the strength that Christ had promised me, and was able to play as well as ever. It seemed like one of the miracles of old, so suddenly were my wrists healed. Since then they continued getting stronger, and are quite well now. I am also getting bodily stronger, and am now able to get through a great deal more study and work without getting tired, and feel sure that I shall be quite strong in time. I feel that I cannot be thankful enough to God for healing me. He has been so good to me so many times before, but this seemed at first almost too good to be true. I would like you to read this in the Hall at Bethshan, and make use in any way of my testimony, so that God's power of healing may be spread abroad, and more may be brought to realize that He is the Healer of the body as well as of the soul."

A GOOD SAMARITAN SHOE-BLACK.

THE disposition prevalent in business circles, to subordinate every energy to the promotion of selfish interests, is not absolutely universal. Good men are found in all our cities, who will stretch out a helping hand to a brother fallen in life's struggle, and who do not treat their employees as "hands" to be paid the lowest market rate and no more, and to be discharged when they fall sick. It would be well for the Church and the world if every man who names the name of Christ could be counted among such kindly employers, as he would be, if he obeyed the apostolic injunction, "Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfil the law of Christ." (Gal. 6 : 2.) An example of the true Christian spirit, found where it might not be expected, is thus related in the New York Commercial Advertiser:

"A reporter called to a little bootblack near the City Hall to give him a shine yesterday. The little fellow came rather slowly for one of that lively guild, and planted his box down under the reporter's foot. Before he could get his brushes out, another larger boy ran up, and calmly pushing the little one aside, said, 'Here, you go sit down, Jimmy.' The reporter at once became indignant at what he took to be a piece of outrageous bullying, and sharply told the new-comer to clear out. 'Oh, dat's all right, boss,' was the reply; 'I'm only goin' to do it fur him. You see he's been sick in the hospital fur more'n a month, and can't do much work yet, so us boys all turn in and give him a lift when we can; savy?' 'Is that so, Jimmy,' asked the reporter, turning to the smaller boy. 'Yes, sir,' wearily replied the boy, and as he looked up, the pallid, pinched face could be discerned even through the grime that covered it; 'he does it fur me, if you'll let him.'

"'Certainly, go ahead;' and as the bootblack plied the brush, the reporter plied him with questions: 'You say all the boys help him in this way?' 'Yes, sir. When they ain't got no job themselves, and Jimmy gets one, they turns in and helps him, 'cause he aint very strong yet, ye see.' 'What percentage do you charge him on a job?' 'Hey!' queried the youngster; 'I don't know what you mean.' 'I mean what part of the money do you give Jimmy, and how much do you keep out of it?' 'You bet yer life I don't keep none; I aint no such sneak as that.' 'So you give it all to him, do you?' 'Yes, I do. All the boys give up what they gets on his jobs. I'd like to catch any feller sneaking it on a sick boy, I would.' The shine being completed, the reporter handed the urchin a quarter, saying, 'I guess you're a pretty good fellow, so you keep ten cents and give the rest to Jimmy there.' 'Can't do it, sir; it's his customer. Here, Jim.' He threw him the coin, and was off like a shot after a customer for himself, a veritable rough diamond."

A HIGH-CASTE CONVERT.

THE following incident is related in a letter, published in The Mission Field, from Rev. William W. Scudder, D. D., who is now laboring in the Arcot Mission in India. When he first went there, in December, 1884, he made the acquaintance of a young man of good abilities and high caste, but a heathen. Dr. Scudder says of him: "He is a young man of the Balgy caste, and connected with some of the most respectable families in Madanapalle. He came to this place from Cuddapah a number of years ago with his uncle, who is a pleader in the courts. He attended for a while the Government school, and obtain a good plain education. After a while he obtained a position in the civil dispensary as a compounder of medicines. When he first entered upon this situation he was brought under influences which made him a thorough atheist, and a bitter opposer of the Christian religion. He, however, came into daily contact with our Christians, and gradually his prejudices began to yield, and he listened with increasing interest to the claims of Christianity as set forth by them. The result was that his heart was drawn powerfully to the loving Saviour. Shortly after meeting with this change of heart he broke his caste, first secretly by eating in the house of one of our native Christians, and afterwards publicly by taking food openly in the house of a catechist. From that time he proclaimed his purpose to join the Christian religion. There was, of course, a good deal of stir and excitement among his own caste people. They used their utmost powers to dissuade him from bringing upon them the disgrace which would attend the baptism of one of their number. Great pressure was brought to bear upon him from various quarters to prevent him from joining us. I am happy to say that the young man withstood all these assaults; and in reply to all their efforts, expressed his determination never to give up his Saviour. He now preaches the Word daily in the public reading-room."

A RESCUED STREET WAIF.

IN the course of the work to which Dr. T. J. Barnardo has devoted his life—that of rescuing the homeless children of the London streets, he met with an interesting case, which he thus describes: "Her name is Esther, and she is nine years old. She was born in Golden Lane, and had never been out of London in her life: so that what wonder if the world meant to her only a dreary mass of dirty slums! She was always on the edge of hunger: she never had at one time, from her babyhood up, more than the ragged clothes she wore day by day. She had lost her mother 'ever so long ago,' as she put it. Esther's father was a casual laborer. After the death of his wife, who, by going out doing chores, had been the real bread-winner to the family, times became worse. The head of the family, never at any time possessed of much energy or force of character, obtained food for himself and his three children at home by selling the furniture piece by piece. Of course the end was not long in coming. Soon he was destitute and homeless, and for Esther there began a long series of wanderings through the common lodging-houses of London. At the time the application on behalf of Esther reached me, her father was a shoeblack earning casual pennies on the streets of Clerkenwell. He was one of those fathers who are no fathers, and whose paternal protection would have been of little avail against the nameless dangers to a young girl of a lodging-house life, to which their penury condemned them. The wolf at the door was overcoming their resistance; they had both been in the almshouse, and more than once poor Esther and her father had walked the streets all night. What could the future of a little girl under such circumstances be expected to turn out? To her, our Ilford home has, indeed, been an Ark of safety; and if Esther turns out well, as I hope and believe she will, she will owe it, under God, to the agency of our Cottage Homes. Alas! alas! there are thousands of girl waifs like little nine-year-old Esther still unrescued, whose cry is continually going up to God from out the darkest depths of our city slums. How long? Ah, it is for Christians everywhere, for the servants of the merciful Saviour of little children, alone to give an answer to that question."

A DYING MAN'S GRIP ON A KEY.

IN the course of an address to the Evangelical Alliance by the Rev. A. J. Gordon, D. D., of Boston, which is published in his Watchword, the following incident was related: "An eminent clergyman of England has described his visit to the death-bed of a wealthy parishioner. As he knelt by his side he twice requested him to give him his hand while he prayed, which he strangely declined to do. But as soon as the death gasp was over and the blankets were turned down, the reason was apparent. It was found that both hands were holding his safe-key in their death-grip, so that he had no hand of fellowship to extend to the minister praying for his soul. Where are the Church's hands to-day, when the greatest opportunity ever brought within the reach of any generation of Christians is just within her grasp? Is it possible that, with the memory of Him 'who though rich, for our sakes became poor,' ever before us, we should be found impotent to take hold of this opportunity, because we could not let go of our safe-keys?

"Here is a momentous question on which both the safety of the Church and her hold upon the masses largely depend. In this world as well as in the world to come, there is an impassable gulf between Dives and Lazarus. If the Church deliberately chooses the company of Dives, putting on purple and fine linen and faring sumptuously every day, she cannot keep with Lazarus. The attempt may be made to effect conciliation by tossing biscuits across the gulf. But this will not do. It is not money that is wanted so much as fellowship, to bring the disaffected masses into sympathy with the Church. If only the Church could once more stand forth, transfigured in its primitive ideal, it would be certain to repeat its primitive conquests. Let the ministers of our great metropolitan churches who enjoy munificent salaries begin the reform by becoming like the chief apostle, poor that they make many rich; and let the millionaire pew-holders follow their lead by parting their goods to such as have need, and see if the growing spirit of communism would not be speedily arrested, not by the counter-irritant of ridicule, but by the emollient of Christ-like example."

CURRENT EVENTS.

A Proposal to Distribute About Twenty million dollars among the States and Territories passed the Senate on January 18. It is a repayment of the direct tax collected from them under the act of August 5, 1861. Though it was at the time estimated to produce twenty millions, it yielded actually only $17,350,000, and it is believed that not more than that amount will be repaid. While the bill was under discussion, Senator Vance made a proposal, for which only sixteen Senators voted, to add to it a refund of the tax collected on raw cotton under the act of July 1, 1862. It is expected that this attempt will be renewed in the House with success. The raw cotton tax yielded, in round numbers, $68,000,000. If the proposal to add this to the direct tax bill should succeed, the measure would take over $85,000,000 out of the Treasury. Senator Quay, of Pennsylvania, voted in favor of the return of the raw cotton tax, and if it passes the House as an amendment, it is predicted that other Republicans and Northern Democrats in the Senate will vote for it. The bulk of it would go to the Southern States.

The Cabinet Nominations were All Confirmed by the Senate last week. Mr. Lamar's nomination to the Supreme Court bench was strenuously opposed to the last. Mr. Evarts, Mr. Edmunds and Mr. Ingalls were the most conspicuous speakers against confirmation. When Mr. Riddleberger, of Virginia, and Mr. Stewart, of Nevada, decided to vote against their party on the question, it was evident that further resistance was useless, and Mr. Stanford, of California, gave the one other Republican vote necessary for confirmation. Apart from those three Senators the vote was strictly on party lines. Mr. Vilas and Mr. Dickinson received confirmation without division. On January 18 Mr. Lamar was sworn in and took his seat on the bench.

The Fatal Effects of the Blizzard in the Northwest were not known until the middle of last week, owing to the wholesale destruction of the telegraph wires. It first made its appearance on the evening of January 11, and continued with few pauses until the morning of January 14. During that period two hundred and thirty-five persons perished with cold, and many more are missing, with but little chance of ever being found alive. A despatch from St. Paul says that an hour or two before the storm, the weather was warm and balmy, and people took advantage of it to go to town. A cloud gathered suddenly and swept across the sky, snow began to fall and the wind rose. The mercury fell to thirty degrees below zero. All the while the wind increased in fury, the snow fell thicker, and was hurled along by the wind. On the prairie an object forty feet distant could not be seen. A man's voice could not be heard six feet distant. The air was full of snow as fine as flour, and the roaring of the wind and the darkness caused by so much snow in the air made the scene the most dismal, drear and forsaken that man ever looked upon. Every railroad in Dakota, Minnesota and many Iowa, Nebraska and Wisconsin railroads were blocked. Children going home from school were overtaken by the storm and frozen to death. Men lost their way in going only a few blocks from their homes, were blinded by the storm, and fell helpless into drifts and perished. A party of seven farmers who started from St. Paul shortly before the blizzard came on never reached home, and four of them have been found frozen to death. A school-teacher near Stoloff, fearing two of her pupils might not reach home safely, accompanied them, and all three were overpowered by the intolerable cold and died. When found they were huddled close together, the teacher with her dress wrapped around the children. Many persons who escaped with their lives had their limbs frozen. No storm so severe has been experienced in twenty-four years.

Radical Changes in the Law Regulating capital punishment are under the consideration of the New York Legislature. It is proposed to abolish death by hanging, and substitute electricity as the fatal agent. The culprit is to be seated in a chair with metal plates at the head and feet, to which electric light wires are to be attached, and the current continued until the man is dead. It is also provided that instead of a year often elapsing, as at present, between sentence and execution, there shall not be more than eight weeks nor less than four, and that during that time only persons holding the written order of the court shall be permitted to visit the condemned criminal. Also that the body shall not be given to the family to be exhibited and interred with display, as is now done, but shall be given to a medical college for dissection, or buried in quicklime within the precincts of the jail. Another important provision is the exclusion of reporters from the execution, and a prohibition of newspapers publishing anything more than the bare announcement that sentence has been executed. The bill is the result of a Commission appointed by the Legislature, and is based on suggestions collected by the Commission from judges, sheriffs and physicians. From these classes the Commission received two hundred letters. Of these 80 were against a change, 87 favored electricity, 8 poisons, 5 the guillotine, and 4 the garrote.

The Opposition of the Mayor of New York to any grants of land to churches or charities, which was mentioned in these columns last week, is being defended by the Mayor's friends on the ground that it is the first duty of an official to protect the property of the city. The publication of the defence was made at an unpropitious time. On the same day an announcement appeared in the New York Herald, that one hundred and eighteen city lots had been granted by the Mayor and corporation to the Manhattan Elevated Railroad Company at the nominal rental of forty dollars each a year. Their market value is stated to be two hundred dollars a year each. It would appear that monopolies find more favor in the Mayor's eyes than churches and charities.

Renewed Efforts to Induce the Reading Company to submit to arbitration the differences between themselves and the striking railroad men and miners were made last week without avail. The suspension of many large enterprises and the increased burden of higher prices on the general public, appear inevitable. This will be felt most severely by the poor, who are unable to purchase their winter's coal in the fall, and who have, in a large number of cases, to buy it by the bag through the winter. They are now paying at the rate of ten dollars a ton for it, and the price must go still higher if the strike is not settled. The miners, it appears, were earning on an average, the men with the boys, $2.72 a day, and they struck rather than submit to a reduction. The dispute as to wages, however, is less difficult to arrange than that other question as to the employment of non-union men, which has been at the root of the majority of strikes in other trades. The union men contend that a man who enjoys the benefits of union influence on hours and wages ought to contribute to the support of the unions, and that when he does so he has the right to refuse to be associated with a man who does not accept this responsibility. The employer, on the other hand, claims the right to employ whom he chooses, and he naturally prefers the men who do not organize against him. This is the main question at issue and until it is definitely settled, the conflict between capital and labor must go on.

The Two Leaders of the Riots in Trafalgar Square, London, on November 13, were placed on trial last week. They were Mr. Cunninghame Graham, a Scotch member of Parliament and the socialist Burns. An attempt was made by the defence to raise the question of the right of public meeting in the Square, but the Judge took the view that if a public meeting was prohibited the attempt to hold it by the use of force was illegal. As there could be no question that the defendants had used force and had led the attack on the police—even their own witnesses being compelled to admit the fact—conviction was a necessity. They were sentenced to six weeks' imprisonment.

The German Reichstag was Occupied with the discussion of the new army bill last week. It passed the amendment relating to the period of service, the effect of which will be to enable men entering the active army before their twentieth year to leave the landwehr earlier. In the course of the sitting General von Schellendorf, the Minister of War, stated that the measure would give the army in time of war an addition of nearly seven hundred thousand trained men. The cost is estimated at between 80,000,000 and 100,000,000 marks. The statement of the Minister of War destroys the effect of the argument, which German journals have been so industriously pressing, that Germany's effective forces being small as compared with those of her neighbors, her influence is pacific.

A Favorable Report of the Condition of the Crown Prince of Germany was published on January 19 by the Lancet, the chief medical journal of Great Britain. It states that its news is authoritative, implying that it was furnished by the Crown Prince's physician, Sir Morel Mackenzie. It is to the effect that the Prince progresses so rapidly toward recovery that he looks forward to returning to Potsdam in the spring. German journals are, however, sceptical as to the cure, and state that in the best medical circles the opinion is still held that the Prince's days are numbered, the only opportunity of saving his life by an operation having been allowed to pass unused.

The British Government is Disturbed by a difficulty in Scotland similar to that which is at the root of the Irish trouble. Tenant farmers and the peasants complain that the land-owners are destroying small holdings to make room for large sheep farms and deer forests. As the families of the poor agriculturists increase, there is an increased demand for small farms, as the farm that supported a man and his wife and children does not yield enough for the support of the family when the sons grow up and have children of their own. Many farmers have subdivided their holdings to meet the difficulty, but that plan involves general poverty, and cannot be continued indefinitely. The land-owners recommend emigration, but there are cases in which that remedy cannot be applied. Just now many of the Scottish crofters are unable to pay their rent, and they not only resist dispossess proceedings, but are actually taking possession, by force, of vacant farms, for which they have no prospect of paying rent. The trouble is to be laid before Parliament when it meets.

Canvassers Wanted to Sell, from House to House, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Any man, woman or youth may easily add to their income every week by selling the paper in their spare hours in their own neighborhood. One man has sold one hundred copies on a Saturday. For terms address Manager of CHRISTIAN HERALD, 63 Bible House, New York.

Contributions to the Fund for Supplying colored ministers in the South with this journal have been received since our last acknowledgment to the amount of $30. They are from: Montclair, N. J., $5; Lone Star, Tex., $1; Jamestown, Mo., $2; Bridgton, Me, 50 cents; Providence, R. I., $1; Rock City, Ill., $1; from "A well wisher," $1; Brooklyn, N. Y., $1; Carluke, Ont., Can., 50 cents; Archer, Tex., $1; Lakeville, Cal., $4; Des Moines, Iowa, $1; Archer, Tex., $1; Jewett City, Conn., $1.50; Spring City, Ohio, $1; Allegheny City, Pa., $1.50; St. Joseph, Mo., $5; Monmouth, Me., $1. This sum gives us the pleasure of putting thirty more names on the list. We shall be sincerely glad, if sufficient money is received, to send the paper this year to every colored minister who has applied for it.

The Separation of Pastor C. H. Spurgeon from the Baptist Union appears to be final. On his return from his sojourn at Mentone, a deputation of ministers waited upon him to urge him to withdraw his resignation of membership. It is reported that concessions practically pledging the Union to a declaration of evangelical principles were made. The deputation, however, reported to the executive committee on January 18, that the efforts made to retain Mr. Spurgeon as a member of the Union had been futile. In spite of the observations made by the secular press, it is quite clear that Mr. Spurgeon's adherence to the principles and doctrines of the Baptist Church is as firm as ever.

The Objectionable Theatre Posters which shock decent people in all our great cities are being suppressed in Chicago. The Mayor of that city, on January 18, noticing some large colored posters on the walls, indicating in unmistakable manner the character of an opera company about to visit Chicago, notified the firm of bill posters who hung them, that he had revoked their license for putting up posters. It was also semi-officially announced that if the performance outlined on the bills was given, the theatre license will also be revoked, The firm promptly sent out a gang of men to cover the objectionable posters with white paper, and that being done, the Mayor permitted them to resume business. They have promised that hereafter all lithographs and show bills of theatrical companies shall pass inspection by the Chief of Police before being posted. The example of Mayor Roche deserves to be followed by the mayors of other cities.

A Curious Case of Conscience Money Restored to the Government occurred recently. A press despatch from Washington states that a few days ago a letter containing one dollar was received from Hillsboro, Kan., by the Postmaster-General. The writer of the letter said: "Enclosed find one dollar which belongs to the Government, and which I send you to pay back for what I have done wrong, as I used a three-cent stamp once on a letter which had been used once, and you find it thirty-three and one-half fold the amount out of which I cheated the Government, as I was a boy thirteen or fourteen years of age. I am sorry that I have to make such a report about me." Though the man makes abundant restitution, his letter clearly shows that he does not consider his character rehabilitated thereby. It may be hoped that if, as is probable, he is similarly concerned about his offences against God he may learn the efficacy of the Blood which not only brings pardon but cleansing. (1 John 1:7.)

A Somnambulist Walking Barefoot Through the snow startled the people of a New Jersey village on January 14. It was a bitter cold night, and the snow was deep on the ground. About midnight sleepers were aroused by loud knocks on their doors. Looking out, they saw a man clad in night garments only, bareheaded and without shoes, going from house to house, knocking on the door of each. He did not wait anywhere for admittance, but went straight on his way. He went to a farm-house at some distance, where, however, he did wait and piteously begged to be taken in. He said that he was given to walking in his sleep, and he had just awakened and found himself out in the snow, with no idea of how he came there. He was employed at a farm on the other side of the village, and must have risen in his sleep and walked a considerable distance before waking. His feet and hands were cut and bleeding, and he was almost frozen to death. The farmer warmed him, lent him some clothes, and accompanied him back to his home, where it was found that he had broken a window in making his exit. His injuries and his exposure have brought on a serious fit of illness, from which it is doubtful if he will recover. That neither the injuries nor the severe cold should have awakened the man earlier seems extraordinary, and shows how deep his sleep must have been. His case was typical of those which Christian workers often meet with, whom neither trouble nor warning seems able to awake to a sense of their position before God. As the apostle said, they have "the spirit of slumber, eyes that they should not see, and ears that they should not hear." (Rom. 11:8.)

A Lady's Complaint Against a Matrimonial agency came before the New York City Court on January 20. The lady stated that, being desirous of marrying, she applied to the agent in question, and, having paid five dollars as a registration fee, he undertook to provide her with a husband. She appeared to be fairly well educated, and had a considerable fortune. After waiting what appeared to her a reasonable time without result, she went again to the agent and paid him fifty dollars, stipulating, as she alleges, that if a husband should not be found for her within a specified time, the money should be returned. The agent introduced her to more than thirty gentlemen who wanted wives, but those who proposed to her were men whom she could not accept, and the others did not propose. The lady, therefore, applied to the agent for the return of her fifty dollars, and being refused, has brought suit for its recovery. All silly women who are tempted to respond to the advertisements of matrimonial agents should take warning by this case. If she had succeeded in buying marriage, she could not have bought love, without which marriage is a misery. (Sol. Song 8:7.) Anxious sinners desiring union with Christ are also sometimes deluded with the hope that the payment of money for His cause, either in life or by bequest, will promote it. They utterly misunderstand the offer of salvation; it is free, but it cannot be had without personal and entire consecration. (Acts 8: 20, 21.)

The Recovery of a Long Lost Daughter is reported from Detroit, Mich. Twenty years ago a citizen of New York returned from the war, and made inquiries for his wife and child. He said he had received no word of them all the time of his service in the army, and though he had written to them, and the friends who might be supposed to know of them, he could learn nothing. They were comparatively strangers in the city, and in the disorganized state of public affairs they seemed to have completely dropped out of sight. After a long search, he learned that his wife had been killed in a railroad accident the very week after he had left her to go with the army. No one seemed to know what had become of his baby daughter after her mother's death. He had not the means to continue the search longer, and he settled in Minnesota and went into business. He did not succeed at first, but of late years he has managed to accumulate a fortune. He never abandoned the hope of recovering his daughter, though every year rendered the prospect darker. He kept up communication with friends in New York living near his old home, and a few days ago received word that letters had been received making inquiries about him from a girl living in domestic service in Michigan. He obtained her address, and went to Detroit without loss of time. When he saw her, her likeness to his dead wife convinced him immediately that his long lost daughter was found, and he took her to his home rejoicing. When sinners begin inquiring for their heavenly Father, He never fails to meet them and receive them with joy. (1 Chron. 28: 9.)

A Curious Legal Decision was Handed down by the Court of Appeals, at Albany, N. Y., on January 17. The question submitted to the court was whether a tomb is a dwelling. It was the appeal of a convicted prisoner against the sentence of the court below. He had broken into a burial vault at Binghampton and examined a corpse interred there, in order to obtain evidence for a suit respecting the art of embalming. It was important for him to ascertain in what condition the body that had been embalmed then was. The family objected to the corpse being disturbed, but the man broke into the vault in spite of them, and made his examination. He was arrested for burglary, tried, convicted, and sentenced to a year's imprisonment. In appealing to the higher court, he contended that whatever his offence might be, it was not burglary, inasmuch as a tomb is not a dwelling. The court has agreed with him, and reversed his sentence. Those persons who pay more respect to the decisions of courts than to the dicta of the Bible should take note of this judgment. The court is right, but a dwelling is needed after death, and there is one provided, "eternal in the heavens," for all who, through Christ, have a title to it. (11 Cor. 5:1.)

BRIEF NOTES.

Monday prayer-meetings for business men are now held in the Board of Trade rooms, Philadelphia.

Miss Grace Weiser has commenced a series of services in Harlem, in the Methodist church, at 109th Street and Madison Avenue, New York.

Rev. Thomas Harrison is this week conducting meetings every evening at Jane Street M. E. Church, New York, of which Rev. Stephen Merritt is pastor.

The late Mr. L. J. Curtis, the millionaire manufacturer, of Meriden, Conn., has left $750,000 to the Home for Aged Women and Orphans, which he built and maintained during his life.

Mrs. Warnes Huntly's meetings in and around Pittsburgh, Pa., continue to be much blessed. Some remarkable conversions have taken place, and a very successful temperance work has been inaugurated. Her address is Lawn Street, Soho, Pittsburgh, Pa.

The idiotic practical joker made another victim last week. Daniel J. Grady, of Brooklyn, N. Y., died from lockjaw, which resulted from a severe cut he received in falling backward, when a facetious acquaintance pulled away the chair on which he was about to sit.

President Timothy Dwight received on the 3d inst. a $20,000 gift for Yale University from Alexander Duncan, of London, who was graduated in 1825. Mr. Duncan states that he desires the money to be used in providing for the immediate necessities of the University.

The Pilgrim's Progress has been translated into Japanese. It is profusely illustrated by native artists, who have depicted Christian and Faithful with shaven heads and in Yokohama costume. The dungeon of Giant Despair is the wooden cage used for the confinement of Japanese criminals.

Ben Hogan has been working in Cincinnati. The Times-Star, of that city, describes his visit to the workhouse, where he addressed the prisoners. He drew his illustrations from the lives of noted cracksmen, pointing out the inevitable misery of a dishonest career, and inviting his hearers to Christ. The convicts listened with breathless interest, and were deeply moved. His services in Wesley Chapel each evening were densely crowded.

To-day is the day appointed for prayer for colleges. Prof. L. D. Wishard, of Princeton, and C. K. Ober, of Williams, the college secretaries of the Y. M. C. A., earnestly desire the special prayers of all Christians for their work. They have personally addressed over one hundred thousand college students in the United States and Canada since they entered that sphere of labor. The College Y. M. C. A. has now a branch in nearly three hundred colleges in the United States, Europe, Japan, China, etc. It has now over 11,000 students as members.

The campaign for local option in St. Louis, Mo., opened on January 16, with the issue of an appeal to vote against the sale of liquor. It was signed by clergymen, judges, bankers, lawyers and prominent business men. The signers say: "We ask the co-operation of every citizen, without regard to social, business, political or religious conditions or affiliations, and we pledge our earnest, honest efforts to prevent fanaticism, personal ambitions, political or religious prejudices from controlling or affecting the campaign."

A LITTLE SANCTUARY.

A New Sermon by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

"Therefore say, Thus saith the Lord God; Although I have cast them far off among the heathen, and although I have scattered them among the countries, yet will I be to them as a little sanctuary in the countries where they shall come." Ezek. 11: 16.

The Prosperous Scorning the Unfortunate—Comfort from God—I. Where God's People may Be—Under Chastisement—Where the Lord has Placed them—In Places of Discomfort—Of Spiritual Barrenness—Under Oppression—II. The Promise of a Little Sanctuary—A Place of Refuge A Place of Worship—A Place of Stillness—A Place of Mercy—Of Communion and Revelation—Why the Christian's Candles are Blown Out.

THE text begins with "therefore." There was a reason for God's speaking in this way. It is profitable to trace the why and the wherefore of the gracious words of the Lord. The way by which a promise comes usually shines with a trail of light. Upon reading the connection we observe that those who had been carried captive were insulted by those who tarried at Jerusalem. They spoke in a very cruel manner to those with whom they should have sympathized. How often do prosperous brothers look with scorn on the unfortunate! Many a time the cruel word of man has been the cause of a tender word from God. Because of the unkindness of these people, therefore God, in loving kindness, addressed in words of tender grace those whom they despised. As in our Saviour's days the opposition of the Pharisees acted upon the Saviour like a steel to the flint, and fetched bright sparks of truth out of Him, so the wickedness of man has often been the cause why the grace of God has been more fully revealed. This is some solace when under the severe Chastisement of Human Tongues.

Personally, I am glad of this comfort. I would gladly be at peace with all men: I would not unnecessarily utter a word of provocation; but it is a world in which you cannot live at peace unless you are willing to be unfaithful to your conscience. Offences, therefore, will come. But why should we fret unduly under this trial when we perceive that out of opposition to the cause of God occasions arise for the grandest displays of God's love and power? If from the showers we gain our harvests, we will not mourn when the heavens gather blackness, and the rain pours down.

Now to proceed at once to our text, seeing that the occasion of it is a sufficient preface. Let us notice, first, where God's people may be, and yet be God's people. They may be by God's own hand "scattered among the countries, and cast far off among the heathen." And, secondly, what God will be to them when they are in such circumstances. "Yet will I be to them as a little sanctuary in the countries where they come."

I. First, then,

Where God's People May Be.

If you ask where they may be, the answer to the question is, first, they may be under chastisement. If you will remember, in the Book of Deuteronomy, God threatened Israel that if they, as a nation, sinned against Him, they should be scattered among the nations, and cast far off among the heathen. Many a time they so sinned. I need not recapitulate the story of their continued transgressions and multiplied backslidings. The Lord was slow to fulfil His utmost threatenings, but put forth His utmost patience, till there was no more room for long-suffering. At last the threatened chastisement fell upon them, and fierce nations carried them away in bonds to the far-off lands of their dread. They were not utterly destroyed: their being scattered among the people showed that they still existed. Though they were a people scattered and peeled, yet they were a people, even as at this day.

But, assuredly, the chosen seed came under chastisement. When, by the rivers of Babylon, they sat down and wept; yea, they wept when they remembered Zion, then were they under the Lord's heavy hand. The instructed among them knew that their being in exile was the fruit of the transgressions of their fathers, and the result of their own offences against God. And yet, though they were under chastisement, God loved them, and had a choice word for them, which I will by and by endeavor to explain to you; for the Lord said, "Although I have cast them far off among the heathen, yet will I be to them as a little sanctuary."

Beloved, you and I may lie under the rod of God, and we may smart sorely because of our iniquities, even as David did; and yet we may be the children of God towards whom He has thoughts of grace. We may be in great spiritual darkness, and may be that our own sins have procured this unto ourselves. And yet, for all that, the Lord may have sent the chastisement in love, and in nothing else but love; and He may intend by it, not our destruction, but the destruction of the flesh; not our rejection, but our refining; not our curse, but our cleansing. Let us take comfort, seeing that God has a word to say to His mourners and to His afflicted, and that word in the text is a "yet" which serves to show that there is a clear limit to his anger. He smites, but it is with an "although" and a "yet:" He scatters them to a distance, but He sends a promise after them, and says, "I will be to them as a little sanctuary."

But, secondly, wherever they are, whether they are under chastisement or not, they are where the Lord has put them. Read the text carefully: "Although I have cast them far off among the heathen, and although I have scattered them among the countries." The Lord's hand was in their banishment and dispersion: Jehovah Himself inflicted the chastisement for sin. You say to me, "Why, it was Nebuchadnezzar who carried them away: the Babylonians and the Chaldeans took them captive." Yes, I know it was so; but the Lord regards these as instruments in His hand, and He says, "I have done it." just as Job, when the Chaldeans and the Sabeans had swept away his property, and his children had been destroyed through the agency of Satan, yet said, "The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away." The Lord was as truly in the taking away as He was in the giving. It is all second causes and instrumentalities. Do not get angry with those who are the nearer agents, but look to the First Cause. Do not get fretting about the Chaldeans and Sabeans. Let them alone, and Satan too. What have you to do with them? Your business is with God. See His hand, and bow before it. Say, "The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away." Come to that, for then you will be able to say, "Blessed be the name of the Lord."

Note, next, that the people of God may dwell in places of great discomfort. The Jews were not in those days like the English, who colonize and find a home in the Far West, or even dwell at ease beneath sultry skies. An ancient Hebrew out of his own country was a fish out of water: out of his proper element. The Jew tarried at home. "I dwell among mine own people," said a noble woman of that nation; and she did but speak the mind of a home-loving people who settled each one upon his own patch of ground, and sat down under his vine and fig-tree, none making him afraid. Their Lord had driven them into a foreign country, where everything was different from their ways—where all the customs of the people were strange and singular. They would be a marked and despised people, nobody would fraternize with them, but all would pass them by in scorn.

The Jews excited much prejudice, for, as their great adversary, the wicked Haman, said, "their laws were diverse from all people," and their customs had a peculiarity about them which kept them a distinct race. It must have been a great discomfort to God's people to dwell among idolaters, and to be forced to witness obscene rites and revolting practices. God's own favored ones in these days may be living where they are as much out of place as lambs among wolves, or Doves Among Hawks.

Do not imagine that God makes a nest of down for all His eaglets. Why, they would never take to flying if He did not put thorns under them, and stir up their nest that they may take to their wings, and learn the heavenward flight to which they are predestinated! And so He often puts us where we are very uncomfortable. Some of God's servants feel this in a very peculiar manner, for their soul is among lions, and they dwell among those whose tongues are set on fire of hell.

The beloved of God may yet be in a place of great barrenness as to all spiritual good. "I have cast them far off among the heathen"—far off from my temple—far off from the place of my worship—far off from the shrine of my glory. "I have scattered them among the countries," where they will learn no good—where, on the contrary, they will see every abominable thing, and often feel like Lot, who was vexed with the filthy conversation of the people among whom he dwelt. We are not kept apart from the wicked by high walls, or guards of heavenly soldiery. Even our Lord did not pray that we should be taken out of the world. Grace builds neither monasteries nor nunneries. Our may necessitate tribulation, and bereavement from visible comforts. To be weaned from all reliance on outward means may be for our good, that we may be driven in upon the Lord, and made to know that He is all in all.

Worse still, the Lord's chosen may be under oppression through surrounding ungodliness and sin. The captive Israelites found Babylonia and Chaldea to be a land of grievous oppression. They ridiculed them, and bade them sing them one of the songs of Zion. Even Daniel, in his high position under the Persian monarch, found that he was not without adversaries, who rested not till they had cast him into a den of lions. Those who were far away, whether in Babylonia or in Persia, found themselves the constant subjects of assault from the triumphant foe. Is it not still true of us, as well as of our Saviour, "Out of Egypt have I called my Son"? Expect still to meet with opposition and oppression while you are passing to the land where the seed shall possess the heritage.

But enough of that; I am making a very long story about the grievous routes through which we wend our way to the Celestial City. We climb on hands and knees up the Hill Difficulty; we tremblingly descend the steep of Humiliation. We feel our way through the tremendous pass of the Shadow of Death, and hasten through Vanity Fair, and walk warily across the Enchanted Ground. Not much of the way could one fall in love with. Are you in difficult places? Be not dismayed, for this way runs the road to glory. Sigh not for the dove's wing to hurry to your rest, but take the appointed path: the footsteps of your Lord are there.

II. So, now, I hasten at once into the sweet part of the subject, which consists of

What God will be to His People

when they get into these circumstances. "Yet will I be to them as a little sanctuary in the countries where they shall come." Brethren, the great sanctuary stood on Mount Zion, "beautiful for situation, the joy of the whole earth." That glorious place which Solomon had builded was the shrine to which the Hebrew turned his eye: he prayed with his window open toward Jerusalem. Alas! when the tribes were carried away captive, they could not carry the holy and beautiful house with them; neither could they set up its like within the brazen gates of the haughty city. "Now," says the Lord God in infinite condescension, "I will be a travelling temple to them. I will be as a little sanctuary to each one of them. They shall carry my temple about with them. Wherever they are, I will be, as it were, a holy place to them." In using the word "little," the gracious God would seem to say, "I will condescend to them, and I will be as they are. I will bow down to their littleness, and I will be to each little one of them a little sanctuary."

A sanctuary was

A Place of Refuge.

You know how Joab fled to the horns of the altar to escape from Solomon's armed men: he ran to the temple, hoping to find sanctuary there. In past ages, churches and abbeys and altars have been used as places of sanctuary to which men have fled when in danger of their lives. Take that sense, and couple it with the cities of refuge which were set up throughout all Israel, to which the man who killed another by misadventure might flee to hide himself from the manslayer. Now, beloved fellow-believer, wherever you are, wherever you dwell, God will be to you a constant place of refuge. You shall flee from sin to God in Christ Jesus.

O my hearer, make the Lord, which is my refuge, even the Most High, thy habitation, and then shalt thou know the truth of this text: "God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble." Wherever thou art cast, God will be to thee a suitable refuge, a little haven for thy little boat: not little in the sense that He cannot well protect thee; not little in the sense that His word is a small truth, or a small comfort, or a small protection, but little in this respect—that it shall be near thee, accessible to thee, adapted to thee. It is as though the refuge were portable in all our wanderings, a protection to be carried and kept in hand in all weathers. Thou shalt carry it about with thee wherever thou art, this "little sanctuary." Thy God, and thy thoughts of thy God, and thy faith in thy God, shall be to thee a daily, perpetual, available refuge.

Next, a sanctuary signifies also

A Place of Worship.

It is a place where the divine presence is peculiarly manifested—a holy place. It usually means a place where God dwells, a place where God has promised to meet with His people, a place of acceptance, where prayers and praises and offerings come up with acceptance on His altar. Now, notice, God says to His people, when they are far away from the temple and Jerusalem, "I will be to them as a little sanctuary." When a man lives near to God, and abides in Him, he should shake off the folly of superstition, and talk no more of holy places. God Himself, His own presence, makes a place of worship. Whenever you go to sea, God in your cabin shall be to you a little sanctuary. When you travel by railway, the carriage shall, through the Lord's presence, be a little sanctuary. God's presence, seen in a bit of moss, made in the desert for Mungo Park a little sanctuary. How often have the streets of London been to some of us as the golden pavements of the New Jerusalem, for God has been there! The Lord Himself is the temple of saints in heaven, and He is their temple on earth.

Now, go a little further. Our God is to us a place of stillness. The Holy of Holies was great for holiness, but not for space. There was this peculiarity about it, that it was the shrine of unbroken quiet. What repose one might enjoy who could dwell in the secret place of the Most High! How one sighs for stillness! Those who live in the wear and tear of this city life—and it is an

—might well pay down untold gold to be still for a while. What would we not give for quiet, absolute quiet, when everything should be still, and the whirring wheels of care should cease to revolve for at least a little while? I sometimes propose to myself to wait upon God and be still. Alas! There is the bell! Who is this? Somebody that will chatter for a quarter of an hour about nothing! Well, that intruder has gone; let us pray. We are on our knees. What is this? A telegram! One is half frightened at the very sight of it: it is opened, and it calls you away to matters which are the reverse of quieting. Where is stillness to be had? The only prescription I can give is this promise: "I will be to them as a little sanctuary."

The sanctuary was a place of mercy. God was not there in power to destroy, nor in subtle wisdom to discover folly: He was there in mercy, waiting to forgive. Now, dear friends, God says, "I will be to them as a little sanctuary;" that is to say, an accessible throne of mercy, an accessible palace of mercy. When men have no mercy on you, go to God. When you have no mercy on yourself—and sometimes you have not—run away to God. Draw near to Him, and He will be to you as a littlesanctuary.

Go a stage further. That sanctuary of which we read in the Old Testament was not only a place of great stillness, great mercy, and great condescension but it was a place of great holiness. "Holiness becometh thy house." This applied to the whole temple, but the inner shrine was called "sanctum sanctorum"—the Holy of Holies, for so the Hebrews make a superlative. It was the holiest place that could be. The world is an unholy place, and at times it is most grievously so. You mix up with people who defile you; how can you help it? Your daily business calls you to see and hear many things which are defiling. When these things are more than ordinarily glaring, you say to yourself, "Oh, for a lodge in some vast wilderness, that I might get away from the very sight of men!" I was with some time ago, and, being thirsty, I drank some water from a fountain by the roadside. When I held the cup to my companion, he refused it, saying, "I don't drink that." I said, "Why don't you drink it?" He answered, "I wait till I have climbed up into the mountains, where mortal men never pollute the streams, and then I drink. I like drinking of fountains at which none but birds sip: where the stream pours forth from God's hand, pure as crystal." Alas! I cannot climb with my Alpine friend as to material things; but what a blessed thing it is to get right away from man, and drink of the river of God, which is full of water, and know the joys of His own right hand, which are for evermore! What bliss to enter into the Holy of Holies! Now, you cannot do that by getting into a cell, or by shutting yourselves up in your room; but you can enter the most holy place by communion with God. Here is the promise; the text means this—"I will be to them as a little sanctuary—a little Holy of Holies

Lastly, God will be to us a place of communion and of revelation. In the holy place was the ark: God is to us the ark of the covenant. He has entered into covenant with man, towards us He has a throne of grace, and there He meets us, even in Christ Jesus, who is our propitiation. Within that ark there were three things: the rod of Aaron, that divine work of Christ which always buds; the pot of manna, the emblem and token of the living bread, whereon His people feed; and the tablets of the law unbroken, in all their splendor, whereby the saints are justified. O brethren, if you want anything, if you want everything, go to God for it! He will be to you as a little sanctuary; that is to say, He will bring to you everything which was inside that holy place.

If, at this time, you have lost many of the comforts of this life, and seem bereaved of friends, then find God in your "little sanctuary." Go home to your chamber with holy faith and humble love, and take Him to be your all in all, and He will be all in all to you. Pray after this fashion—"O Lord, so work in me by thy Spirit that I may find Thee in all things, and all things in Thee!" The Lord has from the visible and the tangible, and bringing us to live upon the invisible and the real, in order to prepare us for that next stage, that better life, that higher place, where we shall really deal with eternal things only. God blows out our candles, and makes us find our light in Him, to prepare us for that place in which they need no candle, for the glory of God is their light; and where, strange to tell, they have no temple, for the Lord God Almighty and the Lamb are the temple thereof. Oh, that God would gradually lift us up above all the outward, above all the visible, and bring us more and more into the inward and unseen! For Christ's sake, we ask it. Amen.

TITLE AND WEALTH RENOUNCED.*

ANDRIENNE VIGNIER subsequently visited us, and by her tender nursing of my beloved mother, and in other ways, proved a friend in trouble. Her history ought to be written in full—a brief outline must suffice.

An only child of Protestant parents, their castle and estate could not be inherited by her, but passed to the brother's son. He was a Roman Catholic, and from childhood was Andrienne's ardent lover. Owing to an accident when ten years old, Andrienne was taken to Italy for spinal treatment. There every effort was made to induce the child to abjure her Protestant notions. She described to me the endeavor to frighten her; after some brave refusal, she was told that evil spirits would come to her if she were not in the true Church, and phosphoric outlines were made to pass before her on the wall as she lay in bed. All in vain! then she was taken one evening into the chapel, to confess; refusing to do so (I only wish I could repeat her clever answers), she was locked up all night alone in the chapel. The morning found the brave child firmer than ever.

Years went on, till her coming of age was to decide the choice—to be a loved wife and a countess in the castle of her ancestors, or to earn her bread as a governess in a strange land. No dogma, no obstinacy, ruled her; in the strong, firm persuasion that Roman Catholic doctrines could not be proved by Holy Scripture, and that as they detract from the glory of Jesus Christ, and substitute the merits of Virgin and saints, this true follower of Christ counted all things but loss, and literally gave up lover, house and lands for His name's sake. It was soon after this that I met her in that singular way.

Once again, after the trial of loneliness, the count tried again. She was walking with her pupils, when an Italian greyhound ran caressingly to her. She knew then its master was not far distant. Two interviews followed, not only with herself, but her English friends; but when Jesus Christ is a reality in the heart, we must be more than conquerors.

Her later path was one of wonderful ministry; not only in England, but away in Naples, noble deeds could be told of her generous rescue of some in distress. Andrienne gave me a singular detail of her assisting two escaped nuns, and their revelations strongly confirmed her Protestant faith. I will not give particulars, as I did not write them then. Brave Andrienne! when the Son of Man comes in His glory, your name and your confession of faith shall be confessed by Him, and His smile will be your eternal compensation.

Victims of Liquor.

One Saturday evening, after ten o'clock, I was led to visit a dying man, with some nourishment for the night. Turning up a sad street of saloons, I was just in time to rescue one of my Sunday scholars, twelve years old. Her drunken mother was literally beating her head against the wall. "My poor child, why is this?" "Mother is beating me because I won't go in with her to drink." This explained the sad, weary look I often noticed on Sundays. I took her to sleep at her grandmother's. That led me to pass the door of a fine young husband in my night-class. There he stood, breaking every dish and plate, and the pretty crockery lay in bits on the floor. The wife, with baby's forehead bleeding from its drunken father's blow, stood crying in the street. I saw her safely to her mother's, who herself knew what it was to take refuge in a pig-sty. No wonder I am a strong teetotaller, and nothing is so convincing as to be able to say, "See, I have tried it myself, and even when ordered brandy medically, I have just turned it out, and taken hot water and ginger."

THE COUNTESS DUFFERIN'S TRAINED NATIVE NURSES OF INDIA.

(See Illustration).

MENTION was made in these columns on December 22 (page 807) of a petition in a locket sent by a royal lady in India to Queen Victoria. The petition called the Queen's attention to the fact that thousands of women in India were suffering from diseases which might be cured by proper medical treatment, but owing to the ridiculous customs of the country the European physicians who attended their husbands, brothers, or sons were not permitted to attend them. The lady begged that the Queen would do something to remedy this evil. Happily, however, the appeal became known, and one noble lady —the Countess of Dufferin, wife of the Viceroy of India—took the matter into consideration and established training-schools for native ladies, who could visit the zenanas without difficulty. One of the most successful of the local organizations is in the central provinces. In order to give this class the necessary practical training, and at the same time afford help to the suffering women of the neighborhood, a separate ward is being erected near the Mayo Hospital through the liberality of the native gentlemen of the district, one of whom, Seth Castur Chand, Rai Bahadur, has promised 13,000 rupees ($6,500) towards the building expenses; and another, Rai Bahadur Mukund Balkrishna Buti, has offered to pay for the furnishing. Our illustration, which is engraved from a photograph, shows the women already trained and now training at Nagpur under Dr. Barter, who is seated in the centre of the group, with Kali Krishna Ghose on his right hand. That this class is attracting women of good caste, may be inferred from the fact that one of those who lately joined is a highly educated Brahmin lady, the head mistress of a girls' school, who has temporarily vacated her post in order to qualify as a nurse. It may be hoped that this institution will be the means not only of alleviating physical suffering, but will be blessed to the spiritual good of the women of India.

MRS. LACY'S ENGAGEMENT

"How restless you are, child," said a stately old lady, as her granddaughter, a girl of some eighteen summers, threw aside the book she was reading and went to the window, where she stood, eagerly looking out. "Your friend Harold will not be here a minute the earlier for your worry. You have tried embroidery, tried drawing, tried reading, and could not settle to anything. My poor girl, do try to get control over your nerves, or you will prepare a pile of troubles for yourself. You will wear yourself out before you reach half my age. Come and sit on this ottoman and tell me about Harold."

Mrs. Lacy could not have suggested a more absorbing topic. Edith ceased her nervous, restless movements, and poured into her grandmother's ear a glowing description of the young man whom she was beginning to look upon as a lover. He was coming to see her this morning, having found, as Edith was pleased to infer, that her few days' absence from home on a visit to her grandmother tried his patience.

"I think you said you were not actually engaged?" Mrs. Lacy asked.

"Oh, no!" said Edith, "not formally, you know; but I am sure he is fond of me, and I just dote upon him."

"Do not be in a hurry about the engagement, dear," said Mrs. Lacy. "Try to understand his character, before you promise to marry him. Young men are apt to appear at their best while they are lovers, and the light in your own eyes, too, casts a glamor over them. You cannot easily see them as they actually are."

"Oh! I know Harold through and through. He is just perfect," said the exaggerative girl.

"I am afraid that proves that you don't know him," Mrs. Lacy said, quietly. "Now be persuaded and make a calm study of his character. If he has faults—as who has not?—find them out before you are engaged. If you find them out afterward and discover that you cannot be happy with him, what would you do?"

"Break the engagement, I suppose, grandma!"

"And perhaps your own heart, too. It is an awful agonizing work sometimes, Edith. I speak from experience."

"Dear old Grandma! You do not mean to say that you had anything so romantic in your life? But why not? you were a young lady once, of course. How strange it seems! Had you many lovers? Were you beautiful? Let me see if I can imagine what you were like."

"You can do better than that, dear. Come up-stairs and I will show you my portrait painted when I was young."

They went to a room which the old lady rarely used in her latter days, and which Edith had never been in before. Mrs. Lacy threw back the shutters, and pointing to a recess said, "There, Edith, that was a good portrait of me as I was before I married. It was painted for a young man who never possessed either that or the original, happily for him and me too." It represented a young lady, tall and well formed, with a wealth of auburn hair. Her upraised hand, in which was a fan, was holding back a curtain, the deep rich color of which threw into strong relief the delicacy of her complexion.

"O Grandmamma, how beautiful!" Edith exclaimed. "And you were really like that? Now you must tell me about that broken engagement. Did you suffer, you poor dear?"

"I cannot bear to speak of it now without a shudder. He was my ideal of a husband at that time. Anyone of my girl friends would have accepted him gladly, and I think the knowledge that they liked him piqued me a little. We were members of the same church, and that satisfied my mother and father, who would not have consented to an engagement with any but a religious man. I thought, as you said just now, that he was perfect."

"And you never married him! How sad!" Edith interpolated.

"Yes, it was sad at the time, but I was very glad afterward. It was not until about three months after our engagement that I became conscious of a change in my feeling toward him. I put it from me then in horror, for I regarded an engagement as sacred as a marriage. But it wound itself around me like a deadly snake, until it was crushing my young life. I began to analyze my feeling, and I found that my repugnance — for it grew to that — came upon me after spending a few hours alone with him. When other persons were with us I did not feel it. But when we were alone, there was no subject that we talked of on which we felt alike. He had a hard, cold, worldly disposition, that showed itself in spite of him. He took a low, sordid view of everything. Even in religion he had been anxious to get his soul saved that he might escape perdition, and had no conception or aspiration after the life Christ's followers ought to live. He did not understand the truths Christ came to teach. His idea of religion was like a life insurance. Self-denial, self-sacrifice, disinterested effort for the good of others, seemed to him absurd and Quixotic. In short, he was selfish; and though he lavished gifts on me, it was only because he regarded me as part of himself."

"How dreadful!" exclaimed Edith; "and you did not suspect it before?"

"No; he concealed it so well that no one suspected it, because he had the idea that charitable gifts were well laid out in purchasing public esteem. It was the principles of the man that disgusted me, and they were revealed when he talked confidentially with me."

"What did you do, dear Grandma?"

"I bore it for a month or two, trying, hoping, to believe that I was mistaken. Then, when that was useless, in the hope of leading him to higher, broader ground; when that failed, I gave myself to prayer. It seemed infamous in me to break my promise to him. Yet gradually a better spirit than that of pride in keeping a rash promise came to my aid, and I believe God sent it to me in answer to prayer. I saw that he, as well as I, would be made miserable by our union. We could never have any real union of heart, could never even converse in harmony, for our first principles were antagonistic. At last I resolved to tell him. It would be impossible for me to describe the agonizing struggles by which I reached that decision, for somehow I loved and pitied him, in spite of his faults and the disposition that I abhorred. Finally I told him, and after the first outburst of anger and sorrow, he admitted that he too had detected the uncongeniality between us. I was weak and foolish, he thought. Well, we had many anxious talks about it, and during that time my grief at seeing his suffering almost made me yield. But God gave me strength to do my duty, and He saved me from a marriage that would have been like a living death. In His strength I conquered. The engagement was broken. The gossips had a nine days' wonder, but all turned out well. Both he and I have been glad ever since that neither pain nor scandal scared me from doing what my conscience told me was right."

By Brenda.

TOM'S JOURNEY.

WHEN the great gates clanged behind him on leaving the Poor-house Infirmary that morning that Bridget entered it, Tom Mite felt as if he had seen his wife pass from him into another world; he felt as far separated from her as if the grave divided them. From the low, depressed condition to which drink had brought him, his mind took the gloomiest view of everything; and instead of regarding the Infirmary as a place where people went to get well, he looked upon it rather as a place expressly designed to kill them. And a great fear possessed him that he would never see Bridget again; that she would certainly die there, and he would never be able to show his penitence, and make up to her for the wrong he had done her.

He might have continued to hang about the Infirmary gates all day, but in his arms was the baby, the strongest link, it suddenly struck him, that he could have now with poor Bridget, and it might get cold if he lingered, and hungry if it wasn't fed; he must go home and tell Mrs. Job it wasn't admitted, and see about the other children too. That was what would please Bridget best if she could know. On reflection. Tom felt quite a comfort in having the baby, of whom he was sure Bridget was thinking every moment; it seemed to bring him nearer to her. Holding the thing in his arms that was so infinitely precious and dear to her and about whom she would be continually thinking, Tom took a peep at its little face—it was sleeping—drew the woollen wrap Mrs. Job had lent tighter around its little body, and then stepped out to begin the homeward journey.

He did not reckon how long a walk it would be when he began it; driving along in Jemmy Wiggles's cab, he had not taken much notice of anything, and had lost count of the distance altogether. It had been in reality a very long drive from Tripe Court to the Infirmary, but to Tom it had seemed to be quite a short one. For the first mile or two he found the way not difficult; it lay through a new district of neat little houses, and he traversed its long rows of streets with little Dinah asleep and cuddled up in his arms, meeting but very few people and pulled up by no obstacles at the crossings; there were no cabs and carts about; nothing from end to end of the long, quiet roads was to be seen save here and there a street vender with his barrow, crying cheap vegetables, or a man wheeling a tray of gray paper flags and windmills — little toys for the children.

It was later, when Tom Mite got into the more populated parts, that he discovered what poor legs he had now for walking, and what a poor nerve he had for the crossings. Before he had gone a quarter of the way homewards his legs began to shake and feel feeble under him, and he would stand trembling on the verge of the pavement for five minutes, sometimes, before he would trust himself to cross to the other side. And he felt the same nervous dread and shrinking in the crowds hurrying past him in the streets; he felt as if people were going to knock him down every second, and, if they brushed his shoulder ever so slightly, he trembled and felt overcome.

"It was all for the want of a drink," he supposed.

Conscience shouted in his ear:

"A thousand times No, Tom Mite! If it had not been for the drinks, you would never have felt as you do now; it's the drinks that have destroyed your nerve, and made you what you are—a poor, shaky, nerveless creature, afraid of your fellow-men, and not able to look a jaded cab-horse in the face!"

He plodded on, but became conscious now of a new difficulty—that of "passing the corners," as Mrs. Treeby had called it. He had found the jostling crowds and the crossings stiff difficulties enough, but they were nothing to this new one. The manner in which, after a time, Tom Mite took to passing these "corners," or, in other words liquor saloons, was like nothing I know of so much as a horse shying at a gate-post. He made a kind of swerve in his course, not turning his head, but his eyes, round in the direction of the saloons, whose great doors, as they swung backwards and forwards, emitted those peculiar intoxicating fumes, so repulsive and horrible to most, but so seductive and pleasant to the nostrils of drunkards.

Tom passed a good many rum-shops in this fashion of "shying." He thought of Bridget each time as he had seen her carried away that morning out of his sight, with her shawl covering her eyes and her bosom heaving. He thought of her meek "All right, Tom," in the cab, when he had prayed for her forgiveness. He thought of that smothered sob he had heard after she had kissed her baby. Yes, the thought of those things made Tom Mite pass a great many "corners." As he proceeded on his way his nervousness and exhaustion increased; this was natural, for he had walked many miles, and he had had nothing in the way of food. But he never "shied" at the bakeries; hunger was not what he felt.

At last somebody in the crowd really did push up against him, and as nearly as possible knock him down. He staggered, and his hat fell off, but he managed somehow to keep his feet. In picking up his hat, little Dinah, who had been sleeping heavily hitherto in his arms, was roused. She began crying lustily, and turning her little head about from side to side in the wrap that covered her. She was thoroughly awakened, and it was no good Tom's jogging her up and down, and trying to smother her up again to go to sleep. She wouldn't be hushed up, she wouldn't be quiet; she cried at the tip-top of her frail little voice, which could be very rasping and assertive when she wanted to be fed. And food was what the poor babe wanted; she had gone a good many hours without it, far beyond her usual time, and she was aware of it, and cried accordingly.

"Of course it's a drink that she wants," said Tom to himself, hurrying along, with the baby screaming and battling with her hands under the shawl. "Nobody can get along without drinks. We both want a drink, that's the fact of it." Then a feeling of shame smote him, as he compared the babe's innocent craving for the food God had provided for it, with his own unhallowed craving for that which had been his curse, and which had been the indirect means of depriving the babe of its natural food. This recalled him to his better self. At any rate, the baby should have her drink first; he had six poor coins in his pocket; it would pay for a drink for them both. But the baby first. So he stepped along, on the lookout anxiously for a dairy.

Not all the din of the cabs and carts and omnibuses and noise of the streets could drown the sound of little Dinah's crying. People began looking at Tom indignantly, as if he were ill-treating his child.

"What are you doing to that baby?" asked a policeman at one of the crossings, while Tom was standing tremblingly on the brink, as it were, afraid as usual of committing himself to the mighty stream of traffic which flowed between him and the opposite pavement.

"I'm a-doing nothing," answered Tom, grumpily, scowling at the policeman.

"Then what's it screaming for like that?" asked the policeman.

"It wants a drink," said Tom, "that's why."

"Just what you've been having, I guess," remarked the constable, as he condescendingly nipped Tom's coat-sleeve at the elbow, and piloted him safely across.

Tom came to a dairy at last; rather a nice one it was, with a golden cow in the window, and eggs, and two little shrub plants. The walls were all of clean blue and white tiles, and on the spotless wooden counter there stood big shining cans of milk, and beside them a row of glass tumblers. On Tom's entering the shop with his screaming baby, a smart little woman came out of the room at the back, leaving in her hurry the door open. And through it could be seen such a cosy little place, as clean as the shop, with a bright fire and a kettle singing on it, for it was getting towards tea-time, and the flickering of the fire-light showed up a table set for the meal, and, in a corner, a cradle with a child tucked comfortably up in it.

"Milk, sir?" asked the woman, with her eyes fixed on his noisy parcel. Tom nodded, and threw a penny down on the counter. The woman quickly ladled out a pennyworth of the sweet white fluid from one of the shining cans, and handed it to him in a tumbler. To her astonishment, Tom did not toss it off down his own throat, as she had expected. He put his foot on a chair, and sat the baby up, and proceeded to give the milk to the baby. The babe's mouth was wide open, crying, and of course the milk went into it at a good rate; it filled it in a second, and then began a gurgling and a spluttering and a choking, that surprised Tom and horrified the woman.

"Stop, man! Whatever can you be thinking of?" she almost screamed, running out from behind the counter. "Pat it on the back; it's choking, you stupid fellah!" Without waiting for Tom to do it, the woman snatched the baby out of his arms, and putting it over her own, thumped its little back with decision till it was somewhat recovered. Then—

"Whatever were you thinking of?" she asked again, looking up indignantly at Tom. "Is the child used to take milk out of a drinking glass?"

"No, of course it ain't," replied Tom; "its not weaned, so of course it feels a bit strange with its lips against a glass."

"Then whatever do you do going feeding it?" asked the woman severely, still patting its back while she held it over her arm. "What's its mother about away from it, I should like to know? She ought to be ashamed of herself!"

This was too much for Tom's feelings. He burst into tears, and said in a broken voice:

"Don't, don't!"

"Is its mother dead, then? Oh! I'm sorry, sir, pardon me," said the woman softly, and she turned the baby round and kissed it.

"No, not dead," explained Tom, when he could speak; "she's gone into the Poor-house Infirmary this morning; they wouldn't take the baby in—over age—and I was bringing it back."

"Poor little dear, it's hungry, then, of course." said the woman, with all her best feeling aroused. "I'll see if it'll take a drink out of my child's bottle. Come in, sir, and sit down," carrying the baby and leading the way into her snug little room. It was very kind of the milk-shop proprietress this, for Tom Mite, with his dirty boots and ragged clothes and drunken-looking face, was anything but an inviting subject for hospitality.

She sat down with Tom's baby on her lap before the fire, and tried feeding it through the long India-rubber tube attached to the bottle of milk she had got already prepared for her own child when it should wake. She had no difficulty in making it take the milk in this way; Tom's baby was so hungry it sucked it all up to the last drop, and seemed disinclined to give up the tube when it was gone.

"I believe it would take more," said the woman, "but I won't give it now, in case it should get stomach-ache. I have an old feeding-bottle," she continued, "with the tube in it and everything fit for use, that I'll give you for your baby, sir, and I'll put a drop of milk-and-water in it, ready for it when you get home."

Tom thanked her for her kindness, and with this good present in his hand, and a satisfied baby in his arms, he left the hospitable little milk-shop, and turned out into the streets again to continue his way home.

The afternoon was drawing in, foggy and bitterly cold; the lamps were being lit everywhere, and the rum-shops were just a blaze of gas, enticing men and women by crowds out of the cold, raw air to go in for warmth and drink. Tom passed two saloons, shying, of course, after he had left the milk-shop, but when he came to a third, he seemed perfectly unable to get himself past. He wavered, and stopped in the very middle of the pavement; then somebody pushed him, but the push did not make him advance one step, though he got out of the way after that. There was a street lamp near, exactly opposite the saloon, and he went and leant against the lamp-post in full view of his great temptation.

"You have some money in your pocket, Tom, just enough for a pint of beer," whispered the tempter's voice in his ear; "you have had nothing all day; you have fed the baby; who could blame you for taking now just a half-pint of ale to help you along? There was your promise to Bridget, never to touch drink again; yes, but she didn't believe you; she'll feel none the worse to-night if you break your promise; it was only what she expected you to do! And if you go in there, you will get warm and cheered up, and you can sit as long as you like if you just take a drop. There is nothing for you to go home to, except wretchedness, with Bridget away and everybody scowling at you for your treatment of her. In there, you'll get to feel quite jolly again. You had better go in, Tom; you had indeed."

Yet still Tom hesitated. He heard that sob of Bridget's again, he saw her great troubled eyes looking at him through the gathering darkness, he saw her overshadowing the baby in his arms each time he started to take it into the unholy atmosphere of that flaring gin-palace. He was thus being swayed backwards and forwards in his mind, propelled one minute towards those swinging doors, drawn back the next by a force as irresistible in power as the one urging him to sin, when suddenly, as he leant there with little Dinah in his arms under the street lamp, a young lady, warmly muffled up, stepped aside from the crowd, and offered him a letter.

"It's an invitation," said the lady, answering his inquiring look. "I've got a party to-night; a great many people are coming; there will be light and music and warmth, and plenty of drink. You'll find all about it in the invitation—the hour, the place, and everything. I hope I shall see you there."

And before Tom could say a word either of acceptance or refusal, the young lady hurried off, and he saw her disappear, where do you think?—into the rum-shop opposite!

Tom unfolded his letter, and read under the gas in large printed words, "Sir, pray come to a party to-night that I am giving at No. 10 Blank Street, at half-past seven precisely. Come early. Wives and children will be welcome. Warmth, lights, plum-cake, and drink in abundance. Your sincere friend, Maria Hill."

Tom read it and re-read it. Thought he: "I think I'll go. It 'ud be one way of passing the time. And Poll and Sue 'll like the cake, if I take them. Unless it's a hoax. I wonder if it's a hoax."

But something inclined Tom to think it was not a hoax. At any rate he would have a try for this party, and as it was at half-past seven precisely, and he had got to get to Tripe Court—yet some distance off—to fetch Poll and Sue, and find his way back to Blank Street after that, he had not any time to lose. He began walking out again, resolved to defer his drink till later. The invitation promised "drink in abundance;" would it be the right sort of drink, beer and rum? he wondered, as he sped on with his mind full of it.

"Yes," he thought it would; it looked so very nice and hopeful, the young lady having gone into that saloon.

S. S. Lesson for February 5, Matt. 17:1-13 Golden Text, Luke. 9:35.

Ver. 1. Six Days After the Revelation of Christ's Death to His Disciples—On Mount Hermon—Three Representative Disciples — The Inner Circle—Ver. 2. A Revelation of His Heavenly Majesty—To Support them in the Approaching Ordeal—Ver. 3. Representatives of the Old Dispensation—The Lawgiver and the Prophet—Luke Says they Talked of His Approaching Death—The most Momentous Event of all Time—Ver. 4. Peter Prosaic and Practical—Ver. 5. The Divine Injunction—The Appointed Teacher for the World—Vers. 6-9. Christ's Gentle Reassurance—The Sight for all Workers—Jesus Only—Vers. 10-13. A Clear Statement Forgotten Afterward—John Baptist's Place Authoritatively Assigned.

OUR blessed Lord had been teaching Peter that, although he had been distinctly taught of God that Jesus was the Christ, yet he was still carnal in his conceptions, for he savored not the things that were of God but those that were of men. His instinct was rather to save Jesus from temporal suffering than to enter into the thought of God in man's redemption; and this sympathy, altogether on man's level, was distasteful to the Son of God. He came to teach and to exemplify a life in which self should be, not pitied, but denied; not considered, but ignored; He asked the question: What is a man profited, if he shall gain the whole world and lose his own soul? or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?" The calculations of Jesus were all for eternity, He looked on every earthly thing in its bearing on the great hereafter, and He has made it our privilege to do the same. Jesus then opened before His disciples a glimpse of His kingdom of glory. "For the Son of man shall come in the glory of His Father, with His angels, and then He shall reward every man according to his works. Verily, I say unto you, There be some standing here, which shall not taste of death till they see the Son of man

Coming in His Kingdom."

In the humble carpenter of Nazareth they had learned to see Christ, the Son of the living God; but all their thoughts about the kingdom of God, notwithstanding the teaching of Jesus (chap. 13), were of a temporal reign, according to the prophecies of the Old Testament. It was difficult for them to take in that "the Kingdom of God is righteousness, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost." (Rom. 14:17.) But how should they see the Son of man coming in His kingdom? "After six days Jesus taketh Peter, James, and John his brother, and bringeth them up into an high mountain apart, and was transfigured before them: and His face did shine as the sun, and His raiment was white as the light. And, behold, there appeared unto them Moses and Elias talking with Him." It was Jesus, yet in wondrous glory; Man still, yet man illuminated with His glorious divinity. He was in His kingdom, but that kingdom did not consist of thrones and crowns, lands and armies; it was a kingdom of glorified men. The specimens which the disciples saw were Moses and Elias: the man of the law and the man of the prophecies; and both in glory, both conversing with Jesus. He reigns among His redeemed and glorified ones both on earth and in heaven; He has "His inheritance in the saints." (Eph. 1:18.) Moses and Elias did just what the disciples were so slow to do; "they spake of His decease which He should accomplish at Jerusalem." (Luke 9:31); they were ready to enter into the thoughts of God, and to see things from His standpoint; they savored the things which be of God, and not those that be of men. All through the economy of His grace, God has had in view. From the death of Abel, who, "being dead, yet speaketh" (Heb. 11:4), right on through the flood, the offering up of Isaac, the history of Joseph, God's dealing with Moses, etc., God has shown that it is not through what is good or advantageous in man that He works, but that it is through the death, and humiliation, and bringing to naught of the earthly, that He brings forth the heavenly. Abel preached through his death; The flood regenerated the earth through death and destruction; Joseph came through rejection, slavery, and false accusations to the place of power; Moses had to die to all "the wisdom of the Egyptians," and to be for forty years a simple shepherd, that he might be made God's instrument to deliver Israel! Thus also "the kingdom of Christ cometh not with observation," not through the greatness, the talent, the power, or the holiness of man, but through God coming in on the ruin and failure of man to build up a kingdom which is "not of this world." (John 18:36.)

It was only when Moses and Elias appeared that Peter said, "Lord, it is good for us to be here." He liked the company of these men, was in danger of esteeming Moses and Elias more than Jesus. "If Thou wilt," he said, "let us make here three tabernacles: one for Thee, and one for Moses, and one for Elias."

O, how Natural it is for the human heart to wish to be always on the mountain, always in the glory, always in spiritual enjoyment, while the poor lost world around is going to perdition! Poor Peter! in this also, he savored not the things that be of God, but the things that be of men; in this, also he showed how self ruled him, and how carnal nature possessed him. Who can claim to have been delivered from himself and his carnal nature, who relishes more the company of God's saints than communion with God alone? The tender love of Jesus covered the glory with a cloud, a cloud which shut out the saints but revealed Jesus; and a voice came out of the cloud, which said, "This is My beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased;

Hear Ye Him,"

It is our life's vocation to hear Jesus, and to take into heart and will and affections what He says. By nature, we are not receptive; self is far more ready to teach than to learn; it is grace which makes men learners. Moses had to become a learner before he became a leader; Jesus in the temple heard and asked questions, and the apostle James exhorts us to be "swift to hear, slow to speak." (James 1:19.) What a rebuke this was to Peter, who had been, just six days before, taking Jesus Himself to task! O, if we were faithful in hearing Jesus, in listening for the answer, after we have asked His direction, how could we ever make a mistake; how could we fall under the power of a temptation; how miss the right word to speak, or the right time to be silent? The most powerful Christians are those who hear Jesus, and who give Him the opportunity of speaking to them, and so whatever they do is divinely done, and never has to be undone. I know that whatsoever God doeth it shall be forever: nothing can be put to it, nor anything taken from it. (Ecc. 3:14.) All which is done according to the counsel of God is really done by God Himself, who uses our members as instruments of righteousness. O, it is pitiable to think how much time we have lost, how many words we have spoken in vain, how many prayers have been like "beating the air," because we took the command, and did not wait first to "hear Him."

"When the disciples heard it, they fell on their face, and were sore afraid." How strange it is that we should ever be afraid or disheartened by a rebuke from God! Is it not a proof of His endearing love that He should educate His children? He teaches us that if we endure chastening (Greek, education), God dealeth with us as with sons, and that He educates us "for our profit, that we might be partakers of His holiness." (Heb. 12: 7, 10.) Yet how many Christians are like pettish, unthinking children! they sulk and fret when God corrects them, as though He were their enemy!

"Jesus came and touched them, and said Arise, and be not afraid. And when they had lifted up their eyes, they saw no man but Jesus only." They were to hear no man and see no man but Jesus. Moses who is invisible" and thus, in every emergency, He turned quite naturally, and without hesitation, to God. Whether it was the need of a way through the sea, a failure in the bread supply, whether the want of water in the desert, whether a cure from the bite of serpents, or an attack of the Amalekites upon the people, his unvarying resource was God. Although he was "learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians, and was mighty in words and in deeds," we never find him in a single instance relying on that learning, or on any national or acquired power, which he possessed. He lived, walked, governed, prayed, with his eye fixed on God. This is real faith. A more dependent man than Moses could not be conceived, as far as his relations to God were concerned; a more independent man in his relations to man would be hard to discover. Why, O why do we not always live enduring, "as seeing Him who is invisible"?

With "Jesus only" the disciples came down from the mount, the glory was gone; Jesus was, to sight and sense, the humble man they had always seen Him; yet they had received a revelation of Him which was hidden from the eyes of man. And Jesus forbid them to tell the vision to anyone, until He should be risen again from the dead. After His resurrection, He sent the Holy Ghost upon His disciples; then Peter and the rest were baptized into God, and buried by that baptism into death; self was then replaced by Christ, and they began to savor the things that be of God, and not the things that be of men. Had they, in their carnal state, become witness to the transfiguration of Christ, it would only have led people to attempt, in more desperate earnestness, what, again and again, they had already attempted—to make Jesus a king. (John 6:15.) The disciples, still occupied with the vision which they had seen, asked, "Why then say the scribes that Elias must first come? And Jesus answered and said unto them, Elias truly shall first come and restore all things. But I say unto you, that Elias is come already, and they know him not, but have done unto him whatsoever they listed. Likewise shall also the Son of man suffer of them." They understood his reference to John the Baptist, but they did not yet understand about the suffering Messiah.

From the glory of the mount of transfiguration, they came to the theatre of Satan's working. While Jesus was upon the mount with the three disciples, a distracted father had brought his son, with the terrible scourge of to the eight disciples. Of that number was the traitor Judas and the unbelieving Thomas. No wonder that the father had brought the child in vain to such a company! Jesus said to the father, "Bring him hither to me." O, parents who have diseased or epileptic children, do not bring them to disciples to be cured, but take them straight to the great Healer; He alone can rebuke the devil, who throws them into fits, or oppresses them with disease; He has power over all sickness, and all infirmity, and He has a right to cure, because He has taken our infirmities and borne our sickness. Jesus rebuked the devil; and he departed out of Him; and the child was cured from that very hour. The disciples came to Jesus with a very natural and a very important question, "Why could not we cast him out?" He said, "Because of your unbelief." Only those are blest in healing who see God's side of the question, and estimate His power, willingness, according to His own word. He goes on to say: "If ye have faith as a grain of mustard seed, and shall say unto this mountain, remove hence to yonder place; and it shall remove, and nothing shall be impossible to you." This is God's measure. Let us not depreciate it by our unbelief.

"GRIEVE NOT THE SPIRIT."

Oh! grieve Him not away!
That sacred Spirit, inward pleading:
Not always will He stay
If thou resist His holy leading.
He calls thee now,
To Jesus bow:
O soul, for thee the Lord hung bleeding!

A crown is on that brow,
For thee, O sinner, was that dear head wounded!
Canst thou not see it now,
That loving face with thorns surrounded?
Accursed for thee
Upon the tree,
The blessed One in whom all grace abounded!

He knocketh yet once more,
Where many a time, with dewy face and sighing
He's called to thee before,
Ah! what, O soul, was thy replying?
"Oh, go thy way!
Some far off day,
I'll listen to Thy tears, Thy groans, Thy dying."

A time will surely come,
When thou, O soul! thy Lord denying,
Shall meet Him in His home,
And see the throne, the angels lowly lying.
In that sad day
Thy Judge will say,
"Depart, accursed, thou heed'st not my dying."

Then grieve Him not away.
Once more those wounds, that dear side riven,
Are calling thee to-day,
Stay not, but seek—implore to be forgiven.
Now he will hear,
His spirit's near,
The angel waits to write thy name in heaven.

THE CHRISTIAN MINISTRY

WITH MISCELLANIES FOR CANDIDATES.

Handsome Cloth Binding, 293 Pages.

PRICE $1.00.

"I have read 'The Christian Ministry,' etc., with much interest. The total effect of it cannot fail to do good; and it would be a source of pleasure to me if I could aid in giving it a wide circulation. I find more than I expected from the title; that it is equally adapted to all Christians, and am led to doubt whether exclusive a title will not keep it from the hands of whom it might benefit."—Rev. Dr. Mark Hopkins, ... College, Mass.

"MR. J.W. KIMBALL'S book on 'The Christian Ministry,' etc., is full of his earnestness and good sense, and will prove a help to every Christian reader who seeks to grow in the spiritual life."—Rev. Dr. Howard Crosby, N. Y.

"MR. KIMBALL'S words, so wise and earnest, are fraught with profit to every candidate for the ministry who should read them."—Rev. Dr. Julius H. Seelye, President, Amherst College, Mass.

"WE commend this volume to the careful reading especially of ministers of the Gospel and candidates for the ministry. Some of the articles are designed to promote greater activity among laymen, and the whole volume is fitted to be practically useful to all classes of Christian readers."—New York Observer.

"THIS excellent manual treats largely of the subjective experience and the personal and pastoral work of the minister. We heartily commend it to the devout reading of all desirous of accomplishing successful service in the Master's vineyard."—Zion's Herald.

ENCOURAGEMENTS TO FAITH.

Handsome Cloth Binding, Price 75 cents.

"This volume is a transcript of direct, affectionate conversational endeavors which the Lord deigned to use to help a troubled soul out of a sea of doubts. The difficulties dealt with are the difficulties of the human heart, and likely to trouble any one who is exposed to hear the commands of God slighted, and His promises spoken of as not to be relied upon. There are to-day thousands in our week-day and Sabbath-Schools struggling with the same. Here is a warm hand and a loving heart tendered you, in the name of the Lord, from one who harbors no doubts, and would gladly help you to break away from them. This book has greatly helped many Christians to a stronger faith in the blessed Lord Jesus; we earnestly hope that many more may be benefited by it."—Preface.

"This volume by J. W. Kimball, seems to be precisely such a one as a Christian would desire to put into the hands of any young man or woman troubled with doubts concerning the religious life. It has reference to the experience of the soul rather than the mind, and is in fact, a tender, confidential exhortation having its motive in love to cultivate faith in God."—Boston Advertiser.

"The book is adapted to all species of difficulties and doubts, and the one cheerful message which its pages bear to the reader is trust, implicit and unwavering. It is just the book to place in the hands of any who are known to be troubled by doubts or scepticism, and will find, we hope, an extensive circulation."—Boston Journal

"About three years ago I first saw your 'Encouragements to Faith,' at the house of a friend; and being at that time under a cloud, spiritually, I begged the loan of it. It was just what I needed. I was fretting under my disability to be a Christian Worker, and in my weakness I began to doubt God's notice of His creatures. Infidel notions crept in. Then I came across your book, and its plainness cut me to the heart. I felt like saying with Job, 'I am vile,' etc. Then light burst in on my soul, and I felt as happy as a bird. I went about singing instead of sighing."—L. A.

"'Encouragements to Faith' is just what I needed. God put it into your heart to write it, for He knows my needs. I have derived much benefit from it."—L. C., Saratoga, N. Y.

Missionary in the Pacific and New Guinea.

ONE of the grandest missionary enterprises of recent times is that in New Guinea and the adjacent islands, controlled and directed by the devoted missionary whose portrait appears on the first page. Some description of the work has already been given in these columns; we now, with the portrait of Mr. Gill and a picture of a New Guinea village, give further details of the mission.

William Wyatt Gill was born in December, 1828, at Bristol, England. He is, therefore, now in his sixtieth year. He was converted in early life under the ministry of the Rev. T. E. Thoresby; and soon afterward, feeling himself called to the ministry of the gospel, commenced preparatory training as a student of Highbury College. He was then nineteen years old. He applied himself to study with so much success that three years later, in 1850, he was able to pass the severe examination at the University of London, and graduated B. A. The perusal in early life of the history of the martyr Williams's missionary enterprises deeply interested him in the conversion of the heathen world. In 1851 he was introduced to the late Rev. A. Buzacott, who was about to return to the Pacific in the mission barque John Williams, with five recruits for the mission-field, and a warm friendship sprang up between them. Mr. Gill's interest in mission work was observed by the veteran with delight, and when at the last moment before starting one of the young missionaries was taken ill, Mr. Buzacott at once suggested to Mr. Gill that he apply for the vacant place. Mr. Gill offered himself, and was at once accepted by the directors of the London Missionary Society, and was solemnly set apart for the work at old Spafields Chapel, London. In fourteen days from the offer of service he was Sailing for the Pacific.

For upwards of twenty years Mr. Gill labored on the island of Mangaia (peace), in the Hervey Group. So successful was he, and so remarkable a faculty for organization did he develop, that the society under whose auspices he worked perceived that he could aid them better by superintendence of the general work in the Pacific than by direct effort. He was therefore entrusted with the duty of selecting and assigning teachers, native and English, for mission work. In 1872 he was privileged to locate teachers for the first time on the mainland of New Guinea; Loyalty Island teachers in the neighborhood of the Fly River, and Raratongan teachers in the southeast peninsula of that vast island. He also found time to write and publish several works adapted to arouse the interest of the Christian public in the mission work in Oceanica. His first volume was entitled "Life in the Southern Isles." About the same time was published his "Myths and Songs of the South Pacific," with an introduction by the well-known Professor Max Müller.

In 1876 the devoted missionary imported a printing-press, which he set up at Raratonga, from which portions of the Bible and religious works, translated into the vernacular, issued in large numbers under his supervision.

Thirty-three Years' Labor in the islands of the Pacific, by Mr. Gill, have been marvellously blessed of God, and he has now retired from active service in the field to devote himself to the task of translating and printing the entire Bible in the native language. He has also, in conjunction with his colleague, the Rev. James Chalmers, whose portrait and life appeared in this journal on September 1, 1887, written a history of the mission, entitled "Work and Adventure in New Guinea." This volume, which is full of matter of thrilling interest, records in simple, modest words, the trials, dangers and struggles of the work in which Mr. Gill has spent his life. We cannot give a better idea of that work than by selecting a few extracts from the book.

Hostility Disarmed.

In October, 1878, a visit was paid to the villages beyond Port Moresby. The vessel in which the three missionaries sailed anchored at that place, and they went ashore and proceeded up the country towards East Cape. "We did not see a strange native all the way," says Mr. Chalmers. "We had our hammocks made fast in the bush by the river-side, and rested until three P. M., when we started for the river Laroki, about seven miles off, in a southeast direction. After sunset we reached the point where the river was to be crossed, and there we meant to remain for the night. We had a bath, then supper, and evening prayers; after which we slung our hammocks to the trees, in which we rested well. Soon sleep came, and all seemed quiet.

"At three A. M. of October 26 we struck camp, and after morning prayers we began to cross the river, which was not over four feet in the deepest part. The moon was often hidden by dark clouds, so we had some difficulty in keeping to the path. We reached a deserted village about six, and after we had partaken of breakfast, we set off for the mountains. Armed natives soon appeared on the ridge shouting Misi Lao, Misi Lao (See Illustration No. 1). Ruatoka, our guide, called back, Misi Lao and all was right—spears were put away, and they came to meet us, escorting us to a kind of reception-room, where we all squatted, glad to get in the shade from the sun.

"After resting about two hours, we proceeded to the next village, five miles farther along the ridge. After walking some miles, we came unexpectedly on some natives. As soon as they saw us they rushed for their spears, and seemed determined to dispute our way. By a number of signs—touching our chins with our right hands, etc,—they understood we were not foes, so they soon became friendly. At the next village an old man lay outside on the platform of a house; he looking terribly frightened as we approached him, but as, instead of injuring him we gave him a present, he soon rallied and got us water to drink. After a short stay, we returned to where we thought of camping for the night, but for want of water we went on to the village we had visited in the forenoon."

In the spring of 1878 the work of

of New Guinea was commenced, the missionaries sailing from east to west in the little steamer Ellangowan, commanded by Captain Dudfield, and manned by an efficient native crew. Communication was held with some two hundred villages; one hundred and five were personally visited, and ninety for the first time by a white man, in parts hitherto unknown and amongst tribes supposed to be hostile. "I resolved," says Mr. Chalmers, "come what might, to travel unarmed, trusting to Him in whose work I was engaged, and feeling that no harm could come to me in His care.

"After visiting several villages, and finding that Inverary Bay was thickly populated, I went on board. The following morning many canoes came alongside, and on our getting up steam were much afraid. It was evident they wanted to show us that they had confidence in us, but it was difficult with the steam up, the snorting and general commotion on board being so great. We warned them on getting up anchor to clear off. Why should they? There was no sail, nor were we going to move. A commotion aft, canoes with crews clearing away to a very safe distance. One canoe hanging on is pulled under, a wild shout, a moment's silence, and then there is a loud roar of laughter, when they see canoe and paddles appear astern at some distance. Keeping on, we anchored outside of the Roux Islands, in a fine, safe harbor.

"We had some difficulty in getting a canoe to come alongside, and it was not until we had fastened a piece of red cloth to a stick and floated it astern that the first canoe would come near. Once alongside, we were soon fraternizing, and on seeing this other canoes came off, and trading for curios began. Asking the captain to keep on trading as long as possible, I resolved to go ashore, to see the chief of one of the villages. The tide was far out when our boat touched the beach, A crowd met us and in every hand was a club or spear. I went on to the bow, to spring ashore, but was

Warned Not to Land,

I told them I had come to see the chief, had a present for him, and must see him. An elderly woman came close up to the boat, saying, 'You must not land, but I will take the present, or,' pointing to a young man close by, 'he will take it for his father,' he being the chief's son. 'No; I must see the chief for myself,' I said; 'but the son I should also like to know, and will give him a present too.'

"Springing ashore, followed by the mate, a fine, daring fellow, not the least afraid of natives, I walked up the long beach to the village to the chief's house. The old man was seated on the platform in front of the house, and did not rise to receive us. I told him who I was, and the object of my coming. He heard me through, and treated the whole as stale news. I placed my present in front of him, and waited for some word of satisfaction, but none escaped the stern old chieftain. Presents of beads were handed to little children in arms, but indignantly returned.

"'Gould,' said I to the mate, 'I think we had better get away from here; keep eyes all around, and let us make quietly to the beach.' To the chief I said, 'Friend, I am going; you stay.' Lifting his eyebrows, he said, 'Go.' We were followed by the crowd, one man with a large round club walking behind me, and, as I considered, uncomfortably near. (See Illustration No. 2.) Had I that club in my hand, I thought. I should feel a little more comfortable. When on the beach, we saw the canoes had left the vessel, and were hurrying ashore; our boat was soon afloat, still we had some distance to go; I must have that club, or I fear that club will have me. I had a large piece of hoop-iron, such as is highly prized by the natives, in my satchel; taking it, I wheeled quickly round, presented it to the savage, whose eyes were dazzled as with a bar of gold. With my left hand I suddenly caught the club, and before he became conscious of what was done, I was heading the procession, armed as a savage, and much more comfortable. We got safely away, thank God."

Among Angry Savages.

"After visiting the Keakaro and Aroma districts, our journeyings were nearly brought to a sudden termination. When we got half-way between the point next to McFarlane Harbor and Mailu, where there is a boat entrance, we saw the boat, and waved to them to approach. They came near to the surf, but not near enough for us to get on board. I called out to them to proceed to the boat entrance at Mailu. Great numbers of natives were with us; we saw, in the distance, numbers more sitting on the beach, and armed. Some of those following us were armed. When within two miles of where the boat was to await us, we came upon a crowd of men and women; the former carried spears, clubs, or pieces of hard wood used in opening cocoa-nuts; the women had clubs. The teacher heard them discussing as to the best place for the attack; and, not knowing that he knew what they said, he heard much that left no doubt in our minds that murder was meant.

I carried a satchel, which had beads and hoop-iron in it; they tried to get it. I gave presents of beads; some were indignantly returned. I was in front, between two men with clubs, who kept telling me I was a bad man. I held their hands, and kept them so that they could not use their clubs. Two men, when near the village, came close up behind me with large wooden clubs, which were taken from them by two women, who ran off to the village. Things looked black, and each of us prayed in silence to Him who rules over the heathen. Soon a man came rushing along, seized the club, and took it from the man on my left, and threw it in the sea. He tried to do the same with the one on my right; but he was too light a man, and did not succeed. An old chief came hurriedly to meet us, calling out, 'Mine is the peace! What have these foreigners done, that you want to kill them?' He closed up to the teacher, and took him by the hand. Another chief walked close behind me. They began to talk loudly amongst themselves. Some were finding fault that we should have been allowed to get near the village, and others that there was yet time. Tho boat was anchored some distance off: we got her nearer; and, when ready to move off to the boat, I opened my satchel, gave hoop-iron to our friends the chiefs, and threw beads among the crowd. I shouted for Kapumaria, and a sturdy young fellow fought his way through the crowd. I gave him a piece of hoop-iron, and, with our friendly chiefs, he forced the crowd back, calling on us to be quick and follow. So into the water we got, the chiefs calling, 'Go quick; go quick!' We got on board (See Illustration No. 3); with poles and oars got the boat off, set sails, and away for Kerepunu. Before changing clothes, we thanked God our Father for His protection."

Minor Trials

which are merely alluded in the book were numerous, and they would have been hard to bear had not the missionaries been so full of love to Christ and to His work that they could overcome natural disgust. One of these unpleasantnesses was in the mode of salutation in fashion in good South Sea society. As in Polynesia, the natives of the villages on the shores of the Gulf of Papua instead of shaking hands rub noses when meeting, and it was not at all pleasant to the English missionaries when an affectionate chief met them, his face got up for the occasion, the paint still wet, or perhaps in mourning, and that only recently put on, and insisted on rubbing noses.

"During my stay at Delena," says the missionary, "one of those warlike

so common in New Guinea, took place. My presence and influence happily brought about an early and satisfactory settlement of the dispute. I extract the following from my journal: 'Last night I slept lightly. Women and children crowd into camp, with all their belongings, and ask for protection. We are told to keep a good look-out—and that we shall. It is now daylight, so we do not care much. The fight has begun in the village. Some Loloans, running after Delena natives, rush up-hill; we warn them back, and they retire. There is a loud shout for us to go to the village and fight. I leave Bob with guns and cartridges to keep watch over camp. I have more confidence in the skirmish unarmed, and have no wish for the irate savages to think I have come to fight. I shout out Maino (a friend), and soon there is a hush in the terrible storm. I am allowed to walk through the village, disarm one or two, and, on my return to our friend Kone's end of the village, he whispers to me, 'There is Arua,' understanding him to mean the chief, or vata tauna (sorcerer). I take his weapons from him, link him on to me, and walk him up the hill. I speak kindly to him, show him the flag, and tell him we are maino (friends), and warn him that his people must on no account ascend the hill. All right, he will stop the fighting.

"I sit down to write this, when again they rush up for me, saying Kone was to be killed. Leaving Bob with arms in charge, I go down to the village, and without my hat. More canoes have arrived. What a crowd of painted fiends! I get surrounded and

No Way of Escape.

Sticks and spears rattle round. I get a knock on the head, and a piece of stick falls on my hand. Arua and Luma of Lolo assure me they will not ascend the hill, and we had better not interfere with them. 'Right friend; but you must stop, and on no account injure my friend Kone.' It would frighten them were we to go armed to the village; but then we dare not stay here twenty-four hours after. I can do more for the natives unarmed. I am glad I am able to mix with both parties; it shows they mean us no harm, and speaks well for the future. No one was killed, but several were wounded, and a few houses destroyed. They have made peace at last, and I have had a meeting in the village with all.'

A Chief's Promise.

One more incident only from the charming volume to which we are indebted, and our sketch of this important and perilous missionary work in New Guinea must close. Mr. Gill says: "After walking through Mama's village, we made for Moapa, which is in truth a perfect cluster of villages. The population is very dense. The mission house is finely situated, overlooking the villages. Crowds of pretty little girls crowded to have the privilege of touching our hands, and to beg for kuku (tobacco). At length we arrived at the Chief Koapena's house, which is a very substantial structure. This chief has been to Cooktown, and has seen a little of the ways of white people. He has passed his word that there shall be no more killing of white men. Roapena may be fifty years old, muscular and well proportioned. He has lately been bereaved of two wives, but three remain to solace this much-feared chief. He has numbers of children and grandchildren. He is a brave fellow."

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

A Reclaimed Drunkard Relates: "Two months after I had been saved, I was holding in my hand a large jar of whisky. All my old desire for drink came back to me with awful power. I hesitated, and was in doubt, but the thought that God says, 'Be thou clean,' came to me, and appealing to God for help, I poured the liquor out into the gutter. A little later in the day I was similarly tempted, through the mistaken kindness of a friend, but, through God's grace, I again conquered. I immediately went to the Lord, and said, 'Oh, Lord, I gave up myself wholly to Thee to keep me.' And next morning, at a prayer and testimony meeting, I could step out on the platform and say that the Lord had given me victory over my besetting sin."

An Unexpected Congratulation.—"In the pretty rural parish of Seend, where I much enjoyed the affection and sympathy of my friends I had to encounter, at times, much reproach and opposition for the truth's sake. However, I felt then, as I still do, that the opposition of some is the best commendation a minister can have, and was content to let it be so. The offence of the Cross shall never cease, and most certainly it had not at the time of which I am speaking. During one of these little occasional storms, an excellent farmer and well-known local preacher among the particular Baptists, Mr. Harry Pocock by name, accosted me on the high road, and shaking me warmly by the hand exclaimed, 'Sir, I congratulate you! You've escaped the Woe.' 'The Woe, Mr. Pocock! What do you mean?' I inquired. 'Why, sir, the Woe. "Woe unto you when all men speak well of you!"' (Luke 6: 26.)

An Hotel Landlord Converted.—A Temperance speaker says: "There was a man, who, while passing through a town, was taken suddenly ill in the hotel at which he was staying. The landlord sent for the doctor, who, after examining the visitor, said that he had only a very short time to live. The landlady sent for a neighboing minister, who tried to point out to the dying man the way of life. 'My dear friend,' he said, 'I am sorry to see you so very far gone; you have but a short time to live.' 'Yes,' said the man, 'only three hours.' 'I hope you are safe in Jesus,' continued the minister. 'No,' replied the nan, faintly, 'I have not time now. It would take me many weeks, and I have only three hours!' But he was shown it did not need three hours, nor three minutes, that if he would only believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, he would be saved. The Holy Spirit graciously made the message effective, and the minister of the Gospel left the dying man trusting in Christ. When the patient was left alone, he called the landlord to pray with and help him to praise God for His great salvation. The landlord said he could not pray, but the invalid insisted, and, at length, the man knelt down, and Christ just saved him as He had done the sick man. Next day, when the minister called, the landlady met him and told him the sick man had passed away, but resting on Jesus he had received an abundant entrance, and that even in that short time between his conversion and death he had been instrumental in leading her husband to the Cross."

The Chiefs' Quarrel Ended.—Mr. Thomas Canning said: "There is a touching story of a North American Indian, who was a great chief. There was nothing among all his treasures that he loved so much as his little daughter. Another chief, a friend of the former, and a constant visitor, also loved the little girl, who looked upon these two, her father and his friend, as the only two beings in the whole world worth loving. But there came a time when the two chiefs quarrelled, and the little girl no longer saw her friend. She was not a strong child, and, shortly after the quarrel between the chiefs, she became seriously ill, and soon it was evident that she must die. One day, as her father bent over her, watching her fade away, she said to him, 'Father, I want you to be friends with ——' (naming the other chief). The father started back, passion depicted on every feature. He could not be friends with that man. But there lay his daughter dying, and it was her request, probably her last. He bowed his head, and said, hoarsely, 'Yes, I will.' The girl died, and at her grave there stood on the one side the grief-stricken father, tears streaming down his face, while, on the other, was the alien chief, also in tears; and they became firmer friends than ever, over the grave of her whom they both loved. So, over the dead body of Christ, the propitiation for our sins, God the Father extends His hand to the sinner, whom He thus reconciles to Himself forever."

How to Get Access to a Cellar in West London was the difficulty of a city missionary. He knew that within there resided a monster of crime, suffering and disease. The door had been bolted against that missionary month after month, so that he could not get admission. At length he determined to try the combined power of prayer and the sword of the Spirit. Outside the cellar door he stood, and in a very loud voice read an appropriate portion of the sacred Scriptures, and then knelt down on the stairs hard by, and poured out his soul in fervent supplications to the God of all grace, that He would be pleased to have mercy on the degraded young woman within. The missionary spoke so loudly, that she could not help hearing every word that fell from his lips. She burst open the door, and cried out, "I can't stand this any longer!" The missionary rushed gladly in, forced open the cellar window to ventilate the place, and then, with kind and tender words, declared the message of the Saviour's Cross. His instructions on this and on future occasions were the means of her conversion. The change in her case was astonishing. She entered one of the hospitals, where she was visited by other missionaries; and her health was restored. She afterwards entered service, where, as a virtuous and consistent Christian, she adorned her profession. Two years later, when she had become a tract distributor, the speaker had an opportunity of conversing with her. Her language was evidently that of a grateful, simple-hearted Christian. Others who knew her history came to the same conclusion, and believed that she was indeed "a brand plucked from the burning."

DOMINION OF FASHION.

Dr. Talmage's Fourth Sermon

TO THE WOMEN OF AMERICA.

Preached last Sunday Morning, January 29, 1888.

"The woman shall not wear that which pertaineth to a man, neither shall a man put on a woman's garment: for all that do so are abomination unto the Lord thy God." Deut. 22 : 5.

The Abomination of Bloomerism—The Fashion Plate an Index of Morals—Hybrids of both Sexes—Fashion not Wholly Mischievous—The Canonization of Bluntness—Fashion a False Standard—Stimulates Mammon Worship—Ruinous Rivalry—Leads to Flattery and Hypocricy—Lying About Pictures—Frozen Dignity—Leads to Unhappiness — Disease and Imbecility — A Worldling's Life and Death—End of a Woman of Fashion—Noble Contrasts—Queen Elizabeth of Castile at a Review.

GOD thought womanly attire of enough importance to have it discussed in the Bible. Paul the Apostle, by no means a sentimentalist, and accustomed to dwell on the great themes of God and the resurrection, writes about the arrangement of woman's hair and the style of her jewelry; and in my text, Moses, his ear yet filled with the thunder at Mount Sinai, declares that womanly attire must be in marked contrast with masculine attire, and infraction of that law excites the indignation of high heaven. Just in proportion as the morals of a country or an age are depressed is that law defied. Show me the fashion plates of any century from the time of the Deluge to this, and I will tell you the exact state of public morals.

in this country years ago seemed about to break down this divine law, but there was enough of good in American society to beat back the indecency. Yet ever and anon we have imported from France, or perhaps invented on this side the sea a style that proposes as far as possible to make women dress like men; and thousands of young women catch the mode, until some one goes a little too far in imitation of masculinity, and the whole custom, by the good sense of American womanhood, is obliterated.

The costumes of the countries are different, and in the same country may change, but there is a divinely ordered dissimilarity which must be forever observed. Any divergence from this is administrative of vice and runs against the keen thrust of the text, which says: "The woman shall not wear that which pertaineth unto a man, neither shall a man put on a woman's garment, for all that do so are abomination unto the Lord thy God."

Many years ago a French authoress, signing herself George Sand, by her corrupt but brilliant writings depraved homes and libraries innumerable, and was a literary grandmother of all the present French and American authors, who have written things so much worse that they have made her putrefaction quite presentable. That French authoress put on masculine attire. She was consistent. Her writings and her behavior were perfectly accordant.

My text abhors masculine women and Womanish Men.

What a sickening thing it is to see a man copying the speech, the walk, the manner of a woman. The trouble is that they do not imitate a sensible woman, but some female imbecile. And they simper, and they go with mincing step, and lisp, and scream at nothing, and take on a languishing look, and bang their hair, and are the nauseation of honest folks of both sexes. O man, be a man! You belong to quite a respectable sex. Do not try to cross over, and so become a hybrid; neither one nor the other, but a failure, half-way between. Alike repugnant are

Masculine Women.

They copy a man's stalking gait and go down the street with the stride of a walking-beam. They wish they could smoke cigarettes, and some of them do. They talk boisterously and try to sing bass. They do not laugh, they roar. They cannot quite manage the broad profanity of the sex they rival, but their conversation is often a half-swear; and if they said "O Lord" in earnest prayer as often as they say it in lightness they would be high up in sainthood. Withal there is an assumed rugosity of apparel, and they wear a man's hat, only changed by being in two or three places smashed in and a dead canary clinging to the general wreck, and a man's coat tucked in here and there according to an unaccountable æsthetics. O woman, stay a woman! You also belong to a very respectable sex. Do not try to cross over. If you do you will be a failure as a woman and only a nondescript of a man. We already have enough intellectual and moral bankrupts in our sex without your coming over to make worse the deficit.

My text also sanctions fashion. Indeed, it sets a fashion! There is a great deal of senseless

Cant About Fashion.

A woman or man who does not regard it is unfit for good neighborhood. The only question is what is right fashion and what is wrong fashion. Before I stop I want to show you that fashion has been one of the most potent of reformers and one of the vilest of usurpers. Sometimes it has been an angel from heaven, and at others it has been the mother of abominations. As the world grows better there will be as much fashion as now, but it will be a righteous fashion. In the future life white robes always have been and always will be in the fashion.

There is a great outcry against this submission to social custom, as though any consultation of the tastes and feelings of others were deplorable; but without it the world would have neither law, order, civilization nor common decency. There has been

A Canonization of Bluntness.

There are men and women who boast that they can tell you all they know and hear about you, especially if it be unpleasant. Some have mistaken rough behavior for frankness, when the two qualities do not belong to the same family. You have no right, with your eccentricities, to crash in upon the sensitiveness of others. There is no virtue in walking with hoofs over fine carpets. The most jagged rock is covered with blossoming moss. The storm that comes jarring down in thunder strews rainbow colors upon the sky and silvery drops on the orchard.

There are men who pride themselves on their capacity to "stick" others. They say, "I have brought him down; didn't I make him squirm!" Others pride themselves on their outlandish apparel. They boast of being out of the fashion. They wear a queer hat. They ride in an odd carriage. By dint of perpetual application they would persuade the world that they are perfectly indifferent to public opinion. They are more proud of being "out of fashion" than others are of being in. They are utterly and universally disagreeable. Their rough corners have never been worn off. They prefer a hedgehog to a lamb.

The accomplishments of life are in no wise productive of effeminacy or enervation. Good manners and a respect for the tastes of others are indispensable. The Good Book speaks favorably of those who are a "peculiar" people; but that does not sanction the behavior of queer people. There is no excuse, under any circumstances, for not being the lady or gentleman.

Rudeness is Sin.

We have no words too ardent to express our admiration for the refinements of society. There is no law, moral or divine, to forbid elegance of demeanor, or ornaments of gold, or gems for the person, artistic display in the dwelling, gracefulness of gait and bearing, polite salutation or honest compliments; and he who is shocked or offended by these had better, like the old Scythians, wear tiger-skins and take one wild leap back into midnight barbarism. As Christianity advances there will be better apparel, higher styles of architecture, more exquisite adornments, sweeter music, more correct behavior and more thorough ladies and gentlemen.

But there is another story to be told. Wrong fashion is to be charged with many of the worst evils of society, and its path has often been strewn with the bodies of the slain. It has set up by which people are to be judged. Our common sense, as well as all the divine intimations on the subject, teach us that people ought to be esteemed according to their individual and moral attainments. The man who has the most nobility of soul should be first, and he who has the least of such qualities should stand last. No crest or shield or escutcheon can indicate one's moral peerage. Titles of Duke, Lord, Esquire, Earl, Viscount or Patrician ought not to raise one into the first rank. Some of the meanest men I have ever known had at the end of their name D. D., LL. D. and F. R. S. Truth, honor, charity, heroism, self-sacrifice, should win highest favor; but inordinate fashion says: "Count not a woman's virtues; count her adornments." "Look not at the contour of the head, but see the way she combs her hair." "Ask not what noble deeds have been accomplished by that man's hand; but is it white and soft?" Ask not what good sense is in her conversation, but "In what was she dressed?" Ask not whether there was hospitality and cheerfulness in the house, but "In what style do they live?"

As a consequence, some of the most ignorant and vicious men are at the top, and some of the most virtuous and intelligent at the bottom. During the last war we suddenly saw men hurled up into the highest social positions. Had they suddenly reformed from evil habits, or graduated in science, or achieved some good work for society? No: they simply had obtained a Government contract! This accounts for the utter chagrin which people feel at the treatment they receive when they lose their property. Hold up your head like a Christian! Fifty thousand subtracted from a good man leaves how much? Honor; truth; faith in God; triumphant hope; and a kingdom of ineffable glory, over which he is to reign forever and ever. If the owner of millions should lose a penny out of his pocket would he sit down on a curbstone and cry? And shall a man possessed of everlasting fortunes wear himself out with grief because he has lost worldly treasure? You have only lost that in which hundreds of wretched misers surpass you; and you have saved that which the Cæsars and the Pharaohs and the Alexanders could never afford. And yet society thinks differently, and you see the most intimate friendships broken up as the consequence of financial embarrassments.

Proclamation has gone forth: "Velvets must go up and plain apparel must come down," and the question is: "How does the coat fit?" not "Who wears it?" The power that bears the tides of excited population up and down our streets, and rocks the world of commerce, and thrills all nations, transatlantic and cisatlantic, is clothes. It decides the last offices of respect; and how long the dress shall be totally black; and when it may subside into spots of grief on silk, calico or gingham. Men die in good circumstances, but by reason of extravagant funeral expenses are wellnigh insolvent before they get buried.

Wrong fashion is productive of a most Ruinous Rivalry.

The expenditure of many households is adjusted by what their neighbors have, not by what they themselves can afford to have; and the great anxiety is as to who shall have the finest house and the most costly equipage. The weapons used in the warfare of social life are not minie rifles, and Dahlgren guns, and Hotchkiss shells, but chairs and mirrors and vases and Gobelins and Axminsters. Many household establishments are like racing steamboat, propelled at the utmost strain and risk, and just coming to a terrific explosion. "Who cares," say they, "if we only come out ahead?" There is no one cause to-day of more financial embarrassment and of more dishonesties than this determination at all hazards to live as well as or better than other people. There are persons who will risk their eternity upon one pier mirror, or who will dash out the splendors of heaven to get another trinket.

There are scores of men in the dungeons of the penitentiary who risked honor, business, everything, in the effort to shine like others. Though the heavens fall they must be "in the fashion." The most famous frauds of the day have resulted from this feeling. It keeps hundreds of men struggling for their commercial existence. The trouble is that some are caught and incarcerated if their larceny be small. If it be great they escape and build their castle on the Rhine.

Again: Wrong fashion makes people unnatural and untrue. It is a factory from which has come forth more hollow and unmeaning than the Lowell mills ever turned out shawls and garments. Fashion is the greatest of all liars. It has made society insincere. You know not what to believe. When people ask you to come, you do not know whether or not they want you to come. When they send their regards, you do not know whether it is an expression of their heart, or an external civility. We have learned to take almost everything at a discount. Word is sent, "Not at home," when they are only too lazy to dress themselves. They say: "The furnace has just gone out," when in truth they have had no fire in it all winter. They apologize for the unusual barrenness of their table, when they never live any better. They decry their most luxurious entertainments to win a shower of approval. They apologize for their appearance, as though it were unusual, when always at home they look just so. They would make you believe that some nice sketch on the wall was the work of a master-painter. "It was an heir-loom, and once hung on the walls of a castle; and a duke gave it to their grandfather." People who will not lie about anything else will lie about a picture. On a small income we must make the world believe that we are affluent, and our life becomes a cheat, a counterfeit and a sham.

Few people are really natural and unaffected When I say this I do not mean to slur cultured manners. It is right that we should have more admiration for the sculptured marble than for the unhewn block of the quarry. From many circles in life fashion has driven out vivacity.

A Frozen Dignity

instead floats about the room, and iceberg grinds against iceberg. You must not laugh outright; it is vulgar. You must smile. You must not dash rapidly across the room; you must glide. There is a round of bows and grins and flatteries, and oh's and ah's and simperings, and nambypambyism—a world of which is not worth one good, round, honest peal of laughter. From such a hollow round the tortured guest retires at the close of the evening, and assures his host that he has enjoyed himself.

Thus social life has been contorted and deformed, until, in some mountain cabin, where rustics gather to the quilting or the apple-paring, there is more good cheer than in all the frescoed icehouses of the metropolis. We want in all the higher circles of society more warmth of heart and naturalness of behavior, and not so many refrigerators.

Again: Wrong fashion is Incompatible with Happiness.

Those who depend for their comfort upon the admiration of others are subject to frequent disappointment. Somebody will criticise their appearance, or surpass them in brilliancy, or will receive more attention. Oh, the jealousy and detraction and heart-burnings of those who move in this bewildered maze! Poor butterflies! Bright wings do not always bring happiness. "She that liveth in pleasure is dead while she liveth." The revelations of high life that come to the challenge and the fight are only the occasional croppings out of disquietudes that are, underneath, like the stars of heaven for multitude, but like the demons of the pit for hate. The misery that will to-night in the cellar cuddle up in the straw is not so utter as the princely disquietude which stalks through splendid drawing-rooms, brooding over the slights and offences of luxurious life. The bitterness of life seems not so unfitting when drunk out of a pewter mug as when it pours from the chased lips of a golden chalice. In the sharp crack of the voluptuary's pistol, putting an end to his earthly misery, I hear the confirmation that in a hollow, fastidious life there is no peace.

Again: Devotion to wrong fashion is mental imbecility and spiritual withering. Apparel insufficient to keep out the cold and the rain, or so fitted upon the person that the functions of life are restrained; late hours filled with excitement and feasting; free drafts of wine that make one not beastly intoxicated, but only fashionably drunk; and luxurious indolence—are the instruments by which this unreal life pushes its disciples into valetudinarianism and the grave. Along the walks of prosperous life death goes a-mowing—and such harvests as are reaped! Materia Medica has been exhausted to find curatives for these physiological devastations. Dropsies, cancers, consumptions, gout and almost every infirmity in all the realm of pathology have been the penalties paid. To counteract the damage, Pharmacy has gone forth with medicament, panacea, elixir, embrocation, salve and cataplasm.

To-night, with swollen feet upon cushioned ottoman, and groaning with aches innumerable, will be the votary of luxurious living, not half so happy as his groom or coal-heaver. Wrong fashion is the world's undertaker, and drives thousands of hearses to Greenwood and Laurel Hill and Mount Auburn.

But, worse than that, this folly is an Intellectual Depletion.

This endless study of proprieties and etiquette, patterns and styles, is bedwarfing to the intellect. I never knew a woman or a man of extreme fashion that knew much. How belittling the study of the cut of a coat, or the tie of a cravat, or the wrinkle in a sleeve, or the color of a ribbon! How they are worried if something gets untied, or hangs awry, or is not nicely adjusted! With a mind capable of measuring the height and depth of great subjects; able to unravel mysteries, to walk through the universe, to soar up into the infinity of God's attributes—hovering perpetually over a new style of cloak! I have known men, reckless as to their character and regardless of interests momentous and eternal, exasperated by the shape of a vest-button.

Worse than all—this folly is not satisfied until it extirpates every moral sentiment and Blasts the Soul.

A wardrobe is the rock upon which many a soul has been riven. The excitement of a luxurious life has been the vortex that has swallowed up more souls than the Maelstrom off Norway ever destroyed ships. What room for elevating themes in a heart filled with the trivial and unreal? Who can wonder that in this haste for sun-gilded baubles and winged thistle-down men and women should tumble into ruin? The travellers to destruction are not all clothed in rags. In the wild tumult of the Last Day—the mountains falling, the heavens flying, the thrones uprising, the universe assembling; amid the boom of the last great thunder-peal, and under the crackling of a burning world—what will become of the disciple of fashion?

The Worldling's Career.

But watch the career of one thoroughly artificial. Through inheritance, or, perhaps, his own skill, having obtained enough for purposes of display, he feels himself thoroughly established. He sits aloof from the common herd, and looks out of his window upon the poor man, and says: "Put that dirty wretch off my steps immediately!" On Sabbath days he finds the church, but mourns the fact that he must worship with so many of the inelegant, and says: "They are perfectly awful! That man that you put in my pew had a coat on his back that did not cost five dollars." He struts through life unsympathetic with trouble, and says: "I cannot be bothered." Is delighted with some doubtful story of Parisian life, but thinks there are some very indecent things in the Bible. Walks arm in arm with the successful man of the world, but does not know his own brother. Loves to be praised for his splendid house, and, when told that he looks younger, says: "Well, really, do you think so?"

But the brief strut of his life is about over. Up-stairs he dies. No angel wings hovering about him. No Gospel promises kindling up the darkness; but exquisite embroidery, elegant pictures, and a bust of Shakspeare on the mantel. The pulses stop. The minister comes in to read of the Resurrection, that day when the dead shall come up—both he that died on the floor and he that expired under princely upholstery. He is carried out to burial. Only a few mourners, but a great array of carriages. Not one common man at the funeral. No befriended orphan to weep a tear on his grave. No child of want pressing through the ranks of the weeping, saying: "He is the last friend I have."

What now? He was a great man. Shall not chariots of salvation come down to the other side of the Jordan and escort him up to the palace? Shall not the angels exclaim: "Turn out! A prince is coming." Will the bells chime? Will there be harpers with their harps, and trumpeters with their trumpets?

No! No! No! There will be a shudder, as though a calamity had happened. Standing on heaven's battlement, a watchman will see something shoot past, with fiery downfall, and shriek: "Wandering star—for whom is reserved the blackness of darkness!" But sadder yet is the

that has been worshipful of worldliness, all the wealth of a lifetime's opportunity wasted. What a tragedy! A woman on her dying pillow, thinking of what she might have done for God and humanity, and yet having done nothing! Compare her demise with that of a Harriet Newell, going down to peacefully die in the Isle of France, reviewing her lifetime sacrifices for the redemption of India; or the last hours of Elizabeth Hervey, having exchanged her bright New England home for a life at Bombay amid stolid heathenism, that she might illumine it, saying in her last moments: "If this is the dark valley, it has not a dark spot in it; all is light, light!" or the exit of Mrs. Lennox, falling under sudden disease at Smyrna, breathing out her soul with the last words, "Oh, how happy!" or the departure of Mrs. Sarah D. Comstock, spending her life for the salvation of Burmah, giving up her children that they might come home to America to be educated, and saying as she kissed them good-by, never to see them again, "O Jesus! I do this for Thee!" or the going of ten thousand good women, who in less resounding spheres have lived not for themselves, but for God and the alleviation of human suffering.

That was a brilliant scene when, in 1485, in the campaign for the capture of Ronda, on horseback, side by side with King Ferdinand, rode out to review the troops. As she, in bright armor, rode along the lines of the Spanish host, and waved her jewelled hand to the warriors, and ever and anon uttered words of cheer to the worn veterans who, far away from their homes, were risking their lives for the kingdom, it was a spectacle that illumines history. But more glorious will be the scene when that consecrated Christian woman, crowned in heaven, shall review the souls that on earth she clothed and fed and medicined and evangelized, and then introduced into the ranks celestial. As on the white horse of victory, side by side with the king, this queen unto God forever shall ride past the lines of those in whose salvation she bore a part, the scene will surpass anything ever witnessed on earth in the life of Joan of Arc, or Penelope, or Semiramis, or Aspasia, or Marianne, or Margaret of Anjou. Ride on, victor!

Queen Elizabeth of Castile,

MR. RE QUA'S INDIAN WORK.

THE efforts being made by the Rev. W. F. and Mrs. Re Qua to spread the knowledge of Christ among the Indians in the Indian Territory are beginning to bear fruit. We learn that Mr. Re Qua has succeeded in making arrangements for the opening of three mission schools in the spring, and has found suitable persons willing to labor in them. The statements of simple unvarnished facts, which have come under the observation of these self-sacrificing workers, show how urgently such work as theirs is needed. The Indians appear utterly destitute of even rudimentary knowledge of morality. Whole families, in many cases of three generations, eat, live and sleep in a single room, and the most shocking condition of relations results. Mr. Re Qua spends the week in visiting among the cabins, and in many instances, especially among the sick, has been used of God for the enlightenment of dark souls. He gladly informs us that he will be able now to extend this work, as a kind friend in Philadelphia has sent him a present of fifty dollars to be spent in the purchase of a horse for these journeys. On a recent Sunday he succeeded, in spite of the severe weather, in gathering an audience of about forty persons in a cabin that could be reached conveniently by all. It had no windows, but sufficient light and more than sufficient of the cold, raw wind were admitted at the open door. In spite of the discomfort, there was more earnestness and desire for knowledge than the preacher often finds in churches luxuriously carpeted and comfortably warmed. The two brave missionaries with their little four-year-old daughter are enduring many privations, but they are cheerful and full of faith in God's loving care. Many of our readers have already contributed to their support as they thankfully acknowledge, and the good work still needs their aid. Their address is McAlister, Indian Territory.

DIFFICULTIES WITH AFRICAN PATIENTS.

THE excellent work of training medical missionaries carried on by Dr. Dowkontt is receiving much encouragement, but could be indefinitely extended if there were more funds for the work.*

The Doctor has recently received a letter from Dr. A. Sims, whose portrait and life appeared in this journal on July 14, 1887. Dr. Sims is now at Leopoldville, in the Congo Free State, Africa. He says: "I am living in a district where the gospel is only begun to be preached, and where the native system of charms is in full rigor, and consequently have only five or six patients a day. I visit from house to house, seeking out the sick, but most of them I cannot get to come, and some not more than once, if at all. No matter, at present, for I am also trying to bring success by the other method. I have translated the Gospel of John in the Bateke and Bayansi languages, and am busy preaching to them in their town. I don't despair of seeing plenty of patients in the end. Dr. Scholes, on the coast and Dr. Harrison, some miles higher up Stanley Pool, seem to be in the same unsuccessful state as I, for the same reasons.

"A missionary colleague who has a fair number of patients, because he has many inquirers at his stations, sends me his experience in dealing with them. He writes me: 'I have been having a very large number of patients here until the last few days, when two died of dropsy, which seems to have made them lose all faith in my medical skill. These people are peculiar. They do not take into consideration the large number of dropsical patients we have had come here lately (there has been quite an epidemic of Beri-Beri), and have been cured, but they only look at the two deaths, and they are frightened. This is largely due, no doubt, to the peculiar way in which they regard sickness, death and medicine. As you know, they believe sickness and death are the work of malignant beings operating through human beings, and medicine is that which will negative all malign influences; therefore they do not consider it matters which medicine they take, and are quite unwilling to describe symptoms; in fact, they regard your questions as quite irrelevant. When they get the medicine one must be careful to enjoin upon them to drink it, otherwise they will probably be contented with merely putting it by the bedside, and will have lost all faith in it if by the morning they are not quite well. Should the individual die, confidence evaporates at once.

"'The people are always expecting to discover some medicine or charm somewhere that will enable them to triumph over death and live forever. We tell them it is the Gospel they want, but the gospel is too intangible and abstract for many, and they don't care for it. Nevertheless the work here is not without signs of hopefulness. We have a few, I believe, real converts, and should have had more, I do not doubt, if only the people had been sufficiently taught.'"

A FREE-THINKER'S VOW.

AN interesting case occurred recently in one of the McAll mission stations in Paris. A child was brought by its mother to the station to be baptized. The mother told a strange story of the means by which she was allowed to bring her daughter. She said that her husband was a determined atheist, who was very much exasperated when he heard that she and their little girl had been to the McAll mission. She pleaded with him, and begged that the little one might be baptized and have a religious education. The man refused with threats, and resisted all his wife's pleadings. Soon afterward the child fell ill and her life was despaired of. The father, who loved her dearly, was in a state of agonizing anxiety. At last he told the mother that if the child did not die she might bring her up as she wished. The girl did recover, and the infidel kept his vow. The mother brought her to the mission and publicly consecrated her to God.

Subscriptions for the support of the McAll missions in France, may be sent to Mrs. Marine J. Chase, 1622 Locust Street, Philadelphia, Penn., who is President of the American auxiliary.

A MODERN NAAMAN.

A REMARKABLE testimony is published by Miss Carrie F. Judd, of Buffalo, N. Y. It is that of Mrs. Burdge, who writes under date of December 1, 1887. She states that, after being several years an invalid, her physician, finding that she did not recover, but rather grew worse, suggested a consultation. An eminent professor in a medical college consulted with the physician. Mrs. Burdge was not informed of the result, but to her friends the two medical men said she was suffering from cancer. Shortly afterward the lady consulted another physician, who made no concealment of his diagnosis. He told her she had cancer, and advised an operation. This, however, she shrank from. She had an invalid friend, who came to visit her about this time, and, to Mrs. Burdge's astonishment, appeared to have quite recovered. She was still more amazed when her friend told her that God had healed her through faith and prayer. Mrs. Burdge was at that time in Cleveland, O., where meetings were being held by an evangelist, who declared the power and will of Christ to heal the body. She went to his meeting, expecting, she says, that he would just lay his hands on her and she would recover. Nothing of the kind of course took place. She was taught to look to God for healing, and to consecrate herself to Him, and to give to Him the strength and renewed life she was hoping to receive. It was some time before she could shake off the expectation that by some human instrumentality healing would come to her. Eventually the evangelist left her, telling her that it was a personal matter between her and God. Left to herself, and thoroughly convinced that God could and would heal her, she went to Him in prayer, and at length, solemnly pledged her future life, be it long or short, to His service. Healing came to her immediately, and she now declares herself strong and well, and has found herself equal to exertion in walking and working, beyond any she ever knew.

A BIBLE FOR PARISIAN CATHOLICS.

THE American McAll Record calls attention to a remarkable movement among the Roman Catholics of Paris. The atheistic tendencies of the dominant political party in France have scared the priests and bishops of that church, who fear that the country will lapse into infidelity. They have been moved to contend against it and have actually begun the campaign by arranging for a more extended circulation of the Bible, and have caused a better translation of it to be prepared. We may hope that they will build better than they know, and that the people will be led by their efforts, not only from infidelity, but into the truth as it is in Jesus. The following is the report:

It is an interesting fact that such a prominent secular newspaper as Le Matin, of Paris, hails as an event "of great social importance, of interest to humanity at large, and not alone to literature," the new translation of the Bible into modern French, by Henri Laserre, a well-known Romanist. This translation has received the imprimatur of the archbishopric of Paris, and the approval of Rome, and the book is spreading rapidly among Roman Catholic readers. They see in this replacing of the former imperfect and antiquated translation by one "flowing, readable, faithful and interesting" (to quote again from Le Matin), the means designed by God—not to correct the errors of their own faith; this, of course, they do not find necessary, but—to meet the atheistic propaganda now so actively carried on, and virtually fostered even by Government.

They see, as the editor of Le Matin points out, that it is by the Bible only that the Church can make headway against the demoralizing and materializing influence of the present recoil against religious teaching in the public schools. It is very possible that Romanists, embittered by the laws which have entirely withdrawn the education of the young men from the priests and monks whose business it formerly was, exaggerate the demoralizing tendencies of the present system; none the less is it true that in finding an antidote to this danger in the reading of the Bible, they are finding that which shall surely bring them into the true light.

A SINGING SERVICE ON A VERANDA

A LETTER from Miss Lathrop, who is in Allahabad, India, published in the Missionary Link, contains the following description of a visit by invitation to the women of a village in India:

Some little time ago, we were told that in a large village on the banks of the Jumna there were women and girls wishing to be taught. It was far away, and involved us in long walks through winding lanes and half-shoe deep in dirt. The appearance of everything was much better than we usually find in entering a village. Large brick houses, freshly whitened, with gardens and imposing gateways, and on the raised verandas groups of well dressed men leisurely smoking their hookas. A woman was watching for us at the entrance of a lane, and took us at first to a house where, on the veranda, soon gathered twenty or more girls wishing to form a school, and a crowd of women and babies were on the edge of the veranda. I had a low camp-stool with me, and was very glad to sit after the long walk, but women and children crowded so that I could scarcely get a breath. The morning was hot and close, and the position for a time not enviable. A teacher will go daily. Settling a few things for her future help, we read and talked and sang. Nothing else quiets a noisy group so soon, by arresting the attention of all, as a native air set to Christian words. I sat near a partly open door, and was conscious someone was standing inside; when a little at liberty, I turned and saw a sweet-faced young woman and a little girl. The woman was dressed in a clean white saree, and arms, neck, ears and nose were adorned with jewels. When I spoke first she was startled and retreated a few steps, but soon come back and I had a pleasant talk with her. A young brother of her husband came to me and said she was anxious to learn, but her husband being away, she dared not say so. I hope both she and the child may be allowed.

THE PROPHETS AND THE APOCALYPSE.

By Rev. N. West, D. D.*

The Millennium in the Old Testament—Progressive Development in Prophecy—Both Advents at First Appearing as One—Confused Ideas of the Kingdom—Daniel Perceives the Separation of the Advents—The Sky-Line Widening—The Seventy Weeks Revealed—The Interval Between the Sixty-ninth and Seventieth—Our Age—The Second Advent at the End of the Seventieth Week—The Colossus in the Grave Yard.

THERE is an idea very common throughout Christendom, not only among pre-millennialists, but also among post-millennialists, viz., that the doctrine of the "Millennium," or "The Thousand Years Kingdom," is found only in the New Testament, and only in one passage, and that, moreover, a very obscure passage, in a very obscure and symbolical book. And just because of this so popular and erroneous impression, I have thought it would be of service to many to show, in a general way, how utterly incorrect is this almost universal view of the matter, and how contrary it is to the clear teaching of the Old Testament itself. Believing, as I do, in the plenary verbal inspiration of the word of God, in the organic unity and genetic development of Old Testament prophecy, in the continuance of that development even under New Testament fulfilment, and yet more in the Apocalypse of John as the crown and consummation of all the Apocalypses given to the prophets, I felt confident that, somewhere in the Old Testament, I would find "the thousand years" of John not merely described as to their character, but defined as to their locality in history, by definite events marking the beginning or opening of those years, and marking also their end or close, and so add one more fresh proof to the truth of Augustine's maxim, and confirm forever the unchanging and unchangeable verity of God's words. And so I found it.

In order to get a clear conception of the fulfilment of Old Testament prophecy, you must combine the events which you now know to of Messiah; in other words, you must remember that the first Advent of Messiah only brought a partial fulfilment of the prophetic word which yet awaits the second Advent in order to complete it, or secure its plenary accomplishment. Joel's prophecy as to the outpouring of the Spirit in the last days, and of the great and notable day of the Lord, with all its terrestrial and celestial phenomena, the final redemption of Israel, and the transfiguration of the Holy Land, was only incipiently and partly fulfilled to a few, an election out of Israel, at the first coming of Christ. But there is to be still in coming days, when, now that a second dispersion and sifting of Israel has occurred, since James spoke, there shall be fullness of the Gentiles "after this;" and finally, the fallen booth of David, or Israel's proper Kingdom, as the prophets picture it, will be re-erected with the fullness of Israel converted to God, and the glorious Millennial age heave into view. So is it with reference to Isaiah's Redeemer coming to Zion, and Hosea's Israel's abiding alone for many days, and Micah's halting daughter of Zion, to whom, at length, comes the "former dominion." Whatever occurred to Israel graciously, at the first coming of Christ, was only a preliminary fulfilment to be exhaustively completed for Israel, at His Second Coming. Such is the law of prophecy and the law of fulfilment, and it will save us from many an error, if only we are careful to remember it.

From first to last, the Kingdom of God, in its rise, progress, and consummation, i. e., the empire of sovereignty of God in the individual soul, in the world, the kingdom spiritually, and is the one grand theme of the Old Testament. And it comes by stages and forms and degrees of development, as I have intimated. To that one end, the realization of the Kingdom of God, was this planet, and the universe, created, even "all things." There is much confusion as to the idea of the "kingdom." Some think of it in one way, some another, and some confound it, as Augustine did, with the church. The "kingdom" as predicted by the prophets is both inward and outward, both spiritual and material, both finite and infinite, both past, present and to come, both temporal and everlasting. As a polity to take the place of all earthly empires, it is impossible apart from nationality. Believing Israel, viewed as "the Church in the wilderness," was prior to the nation established in royalty in the Old Land. And so, in the days to come, Israel's nationality must be restored, before the kingdom as predicted in Daniel, Micah, Zechariah, Ezekiel and all the prophets can be restored to Israel.

The Basileia, or kingdom, means the sovereignty of God in history, providence and grace, and this is exercised in various ways. The Messianic kingdom has Christ as King, first spiritually, then politically in days to come, Israel always in the front. In this strict and proper sense, the difference between the church and the kingdom is the difference between a house and a state or empire. The church is the "House of God," the "House of Christ," as Paul tells us, while yet we are watching and waiting and expecting, to receive in its fullness of outward glory that very kingdom into which, spiritually, we have already been translated.

The events belonging to each advent are found in Isaiah and the pre-exile prophets, but save in one passage where the separation is implied. Isa. 24: 20-23. In the prophet Daniel, however, we find them sundered. The one end has become two. There is a coming of Messiah in humiliation, and to be "cut off" at a certain specified time. This you see in Dan. 9: 25. Then there is a coming of Messiah in the clouds of heaven, at the end of a long period following the first end. This you see in Dan. 7: 9, 22. Messiah comes at the beginning of the fourth prophetic empire. He comes also at its close. You have sailed up to your sky-line, and another one lies beyond it. You have reached the advent and find that it is parted into two advents with an intervening age, the age we ourselves are living in, the age when Israel is nationally cast away.

Look at the words of the revealing angel to Daniel, in the ninth chapter. He tells the prophet that the glorious Messianic Redemption foretold for Israel, as a nation, in pre-exile prophecy, will not come at the close of the seventy years of Babylonish Captivity, but that of years are measured off in God's counsel, and determined upon, for the continuance of Israel's distress, because of Israel's unreadiness to receive Messiah, and that only at the end of those weeks of years, will Israel's apostacy be finished, or restrained, and Israel's national sins covered up, and reconciliation for national iniquity be made, and abiding righteousness be brought in, and vision and prophet then become verified in history, and a new Sanctuary be consecrated to God. Read verse 24 of this 9th chapter. He explains still further. He tells the prophet that the Jews will reject their Messiah, at His first coming, i. e., at the close of the 69th week of years, or 483 years from the "going forth of the commandment" by Artaxerxes to restore and rebuild Jerusalem. He adds, still further, that because of this rejection, Israel will again be scattered, Jerusalem being destroyed by the Romans, and that down to the consummation, wars and desolations are decreed. This is just what Christ Himself repeated.

The angel then explains the 70th week, dividing it into two parts of three and a half years, or 1,260 days each, and concludes by telling the prophet that the "prince to come," the "desolator," who is the same as the "Little Horn," out of the fourth Empire, will, at last, be destroyed under the vials of the outpoured wrath of God. The 70th week follows the Great Interval which itself follows the 69th week, or Death of Messiah, or Destruction of Jerusalem, i. e., "it closes the Church—Historical period or Times of the Gentiles, i. e., the period of Israel's national rejection, and lies directly in front of the Second Coming of Messiah." You see precisely, then, that the Great or Dispensation, lies between the 69th and the 70th weeks of Daniel, and that, after the 70th week, the Kingdom comes to Israel, not before. The interval is that of Israel's National non-existence. It is the period during which the Colossus of Gentile power still stands unstruck by the Mountain Stone. It is the period of the Valley of Dry Bones, during which Israel remains nationally dead in the grave. What a picture we have, as prophecy goes on developing the ages and the ends, of the condition of Israel in the age between the First and Second Coming of Christ, in fact from the Captivity to the Final Redemption! It is that of a vast graveyard as Ezekiel saw it. It is that of a proud Colossus, as Daniel saw it. Combine the two visions. What we have is the Colossus of Gentile power standing like a monumental stone in the midst of Israel's graveyard, with a "Hic jacet Israel" on the breast of the Image, a picture of Israel's national fate down to the time when the prophetic word and the Spirit of God reanimate dead Israel into national restoration and religious life, the Coming again of the Redeemer to Zion. Never can the kingdom come in the shape foretold in prophecy, until that Gentile Colossus comes down, and those bleaching bones are requickened by the Spirit of life from God. Impossible that the Millennial Age should be the time of Israel's national death and burial in the grave!

It is at the close of the 70th week that glory comes, a week still future. That 70th week in the whole time covered by of John's Apocalypse. The apostle goes to Daniel for his "three and a half" or time times and half a time, or 1,260 days or forty-two months. He takes Daniel 9: 26, 27 and elaborates it and connects it organically with chapters second and seventh and twelfth. And just as the seventieth week in Daniel is to put an end to Israel's apostacy, and bring with it the recovery of Israel, the destruction of Antichrist, the overthrow of the Colossus or beast, and the resurrection of the faithful dead, so is it with John. After this seventieth week, and only after this, comes the Millennial Age and Israel's glory in the kingdom. At Messiah's first coming He was cut off and there was "nothing to Him;" at His second coming His enemies are cut off and there is everything to Him, a Messianic kingdom crown and people, a visible sovereignty under the whole heaven, a kingdom wide as the world.

* From his address at the Believers' Meeting for Bible Study held at Niagara. All the addresses at the Conference have been revised and corrected by the speakers and published in a pamphlet of 193 pages; price 50 cents, by A. G. Watson. Willard Tract Depository, Toronto, Ont., Canada.

An Illustrated Work on the Unfulfilled Prophecies of the Bible, by the Rev. M. Baxter, entitled, "Forty Coming Wonders," may be had from the office of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 63 Bible House, New York, by remitting 75 cents. It is a book of 528 pages, is handsomely bound in cloth, and contains fifty full-page pictures and diagrams representing the scenes described in the prophecies of Daniel and in the book of the Revelation. It also contains a résumé of the opinions of other expositors, and extracts carefully collated from the works of all the most eminent writers on prophecy from the earliest ages of the Christian era down to those of recent date. It thus forms the most useful and complete guide the student can have on entering the study of that portion of the Word of God. The book may be obtained for seventy-five cents from any bookseller.

CURRENT EVENTS.

Uniform Postage Throughout the North American continent is now an accomplished fact. The convention with Canada, which was signed on January 25, completes the work which was partially done by the convention with Mexico. Not only can a letter be mailed for two cents to any part of the continent, but small parcels of merchandise can be sent through the mails without the heavy charges for consul's fees previously exacted. A great commercial advantage is thus gained. Under the former postal convention no provision was made for the interchange of merchandise through the mails. A cumbrous and costly system of assessing duties consequently existed which is now simplified, and arrangements are made by which the post office collects the duty when the parcel is delivered.

The International Arbitration Question is now under consideration in the Senate Committee on foreign affairs. On January 23 Senator Hoar presented the Massachusetts Memorial, praying Congress to move in the matter. Senator Hoar in presenting the memorial referred to the deputation of English members of Parliament, which came last fall to present the project of arbitration of international disputes to the President. He said it was a message fit for the one country to send and the other country to welcome. It may be hoped that Congress will deal with the subject, as a treaty of that character between this country and England would form a precedent which other nations might follow. Its direct advantages also would be valuable. In case of a difficulty arising between the two Governments, the fact of both disputants being already pledged to arbitration, the necessity of fulfilling this pledge, at least in the first instance, might often tide over safely the only perilous period in the controversy.

The Urgent Need of Electoral Reform and the abuses most prominent in our present system formed the subject of an important debate in the Hall of the Young Men's Christian Association of New York, on January 24. Mr. Allen Thorndike Rice, who had a somewhat unhappy experience as a Congressional candidate in 1886, gave an exhaustive address on the subject. He stated that he was informed when he became a candidate that it would be necessary to hire a number of "workers" at five dollars a head, there being in every district a considerable vote that could be secured only in that way. He declined to appoint and pay workers, and lost the election. He said that any project of ballot reform will be imperfect unless it covers two strategic points. First, the candidate's money must cease to be an essential factor; secondly, absolute secrecy of the ballot must be ensured. The printing and distribution of tickets, he contended, ought to be a public expense, and if tickets were printed containing the name of every candidate, leaving the voter to erase the names of those for whom he did not vote or mark those for whom he did vote, the end would be secured without party bias. Mr. Rice said that under our present system the expenses of a successful candidature in a metropolitan district were so excessive that no poor man, had he the talents of a Webster, may expect election to any high office in the gift of the people without mortgaging his official action in advance to the persons, companies or organizations that defray his expenses This fact alone would in time tend to destroy a Republican Government, and to substitute the rule of commercial oligarchies and political conspiracies for the rule of the people.

The Invitation from Australia to the United States to take part in the forthcoming International Exhibition at Melbourne, was formally accepted last week by the passage in the House of a joint resolution. An appropriation for the purpose was also made. The international fair in the capital of Victoria will open on the first of August and continue six months. This is only one of several such undertakings contemplated and in part arranged. In April an exhibition is to be held in Barcelona, and this will doubtless attract more American interest on account of its distance. Still more important will be next year's centennial show in Paris; and for this an appropriation of $200,000 is proposed in a bill now pending in Congress. In all these enterprises the manufacturers and producers of the United States are invited to participate.

Commercial Union with Canada was Directly proposed by a resolution introduced in the House of Representatives last week by Mr. Butterworth, of Ohio. He moved that the United States should "use all proper means to secure an honorable, speedy and permanent adjustment of all differences and controversies in regard to the fisheries, and, in aid and support of the permanency of such adjustment, to remove all obstacles and hindrances to complete and unrestricted trade and commerce between the United States and the Dominion of Canada." The subject is not new; it has been freely discussed on both sides the border. The main difficulty in any such project is to arrange a tariff to suit both countries, as, if the Canadian tariff were lower than ours, foreign goods would reach our markets via Canada. In Canada, as in the States, there is opposition to commercial union, but Mr. Butterworth has acted wisely in testing the opinion of Congress on the subject.

A Mining Horror is Reported from British Columbia. On January 24 there was an explosion in the Wellington Mines at Nanaimo, B. C. Two hundred men were in the mine at the time, and it is now certain that fully half of them have perished. An eye-witness states that when about one hundred yards from the pit he heard a loud report, and there instantly shot far into the air a dense mass of smoke and dust. This continued for five minutes and then subsided, leaving everything apparently as before. A rescue party was at once sent down, but had to be drawn up again on account of the after damp. They saw many dead bodies, which they were unable to bring up. About sixty of these were subsequently recovered, The rescue party returned to the task on Thursday, but were unable to penetrate the recesses of the mine. They saw fifteen dead bodies lying close together. No noises could be heard, and it is feared that all in the mine are dead.

The Sufferings of the Miners on Strike in Pennsylvania appear to be extreme. Harrowing reports of children without food, and sick women in houses where there is neither food nor fuel, are being published. A movement was made last week anonymously, but purporting to originate with some of the men, to incite a revolt from the Union, and a return to work individually. The circular urging this step was, however, declared by the Knights of Labor to be the work of the Company, and it does not appear to have had any influence. Mr. Corbin, the President of the road, issued a statement of the Company's side of the dispute, which statement held out no hope of a settlement. He insisted on "the right of the Company to manage its own property, and the right to employ labor in the mining of the coal, so that the Company will have an equal chance with its neighbors in competitive markets."

The Arrest of Mr. Cox, an Irish Member of Parliament, took place on January 23. The charge against him is of attending meetings of the League after they had been proclaimed. He had succeeded in outwitting the Irish police after the warrant for his apprehension was issued. He managed to get to London, but was arrested there and sent to Ireland for trial. He has been lodged in Ennis jail, where he bitterly complains of cruel treatment. It is expected that his case will form the subject of an attack on the Government when Parliament meets. Mr Cox is popular, and many members of Parliament who have no sympathy with his political opinions are said to be personally well disposed toward him and will support his cause. Mr. William O'Brien, who was released from prison on January 20, is being enthusiastically welcomed in Irish cities. At Mallow a banquet was tendered him on January 25, at which he was profusely complimented. Further arrests of prominent Irish leaders are threatened.

An Attempt to Assassinate Louise Michel, the famous French female communist, was made on January 22. She was making an address at a meeting of anarchists, when a man in the audience named Lucas suddenly arose, and pointing a revolver at the speaker, fired two shots at her. She received a serious wound in the head, and the lobe of one of her ears was torn away. Lucas had a narrow escape from lynching at the hands of the infuriated anarchists, and it was only the timely arrival of the gendarmes that saved him. He was locked up. Louise has advocated assassination herself as a legitimate political weapon, so she will not be able to protest on principle against her enemies employing it.

Another Complication on the Franco-German frontier occurred on January 22, but happily it has not aroused French hostility, though the frequently occurring irritation on the frontier forms an element of danger to peaceful relations. "A man named Barbaret, seventy-one years old, was boar shooting in the Eriux district, near the frontier line, when a German customs officer signalled to him to approach. No sooner had the man done so than the officer attacked him. After a severe struggle the German got possession of Barbaret's rifle and ran off with it." The Prefect of Nancy made a report of the affair, in which he says that the French frontier was not violated by Hahnemann when he took Barbaret's gun away. Barbaret has not made a formal complaint to the Government against Hahnemann, and therefore the incident cannot be the subject of diplomatic representations.

The German Military Preparations are watched with interest throughout Europe. Their extent and the urgency with which they are pushed forward awakens uneasiness, as the inference is drawn that Bismarck regards war as probable. On January 26 the Minister of War announced to the Reichstag committee that the loan required on account of the new Military bill would amount to 280,000,000 marks ($66,640,000). He believed the Government would be enabled by the bill to complete the military organization. The amount of the loan which the bill authorized would be a non-recurring charge, which in general would not involve further permanent expenditure except for the interest on the capital, and for the sums necessary to increase the staff of officials, and to maintain the new buildings provided for in the bill. In time of peace the new army would only exist on paper, but if a war should break out, it would become an army of flesh and blood.

Canvassers Wanted to Sell, from House to House, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Contributions to the Fund for Supplying Colored ministers in the South with this journal were received last week to the amount of $15. They were from: Burmah, India, $1; Crawfordsville, Ind., $1.50; Mill Green, Ind., $5; New Market, N. J., 25c.; McDonald's Corners, Ont., Can., 75c.; Philadelphia, Penn., $1; North Omaha, Neb., $2.50; New York, N. Y., $1; Norwood, Ill., $2. We gratefully acknowledge the above receipts, and regard them as an answer to many prayers which have been offered for the maintenance of this most useful fund.

The Death of the Venerable Mother of the late President Garfield occurred on January 21. She was over eighty-five years old; her death was really from old age and a failure of the vital powers. It resembled nothing so much as a child falling asleep from weariness. It took place at the Garfield home at Mentor, where she was staying in the absence of her daughter-in-law in Europe. Eliza Ballou Garfield was a direct descendant of Maturin Ballou, a Huguenot, who in 1685, upon the revocation of the Edict of Nantes, fled to this country and settled at Cumberland, R. I. He built a church there, and until his death acted as its pastor. Mrs. Garfield was a deeply religious woman. Her distinguished son had profound reverence for her. It will be remembered that his first act after his inauguration was to go to where she was sitting and give her a filial kiss.

Three Distinguished Clergymen Narrowly escaped a shocking death on January 27. The Rev. Phillips Brooks, D. D., the Rev. Charles D. Cooper, D. D., and Rev. William N. McVickar, D. D., were riding in a carriage with Miss McVickar, to take part in the dedicatory services of the new Church of the Holy Comforter at Twenty-seventh and Wharton streets, Philadelphia. In crossing the Pennsylvania Railroad tracks near the Arsenal, the driver did not observe the approach of an engine. Happily the latter was going at a slow rate of speed. It struck the rear wheels of the carriage, overturning it and splintering it to fragments. The three clergymen and the lady escaped with a few bruises, but the driver was badly cut about the head. The clergymen had a hairbreadth escape. One moment later and all must have been killed.

An Amusing Change of Attitude is Described in a letter from an Englishman published in a New York journal last Thursday. It was written to a private correspondent, who desired to know what were the principles of social distinction in a country which had neither king nor aristocracy. The person receiving the letter being a vigorous opponent of republican institutions, gave the letter to the press. The writer of it stated that when he arrived in this country he presented several letters of introduction, in which he was introduced as Mr. ——. He was treated courteously, but received no special attention nor invitations. After he had been here some months, however, he met a lady at a public reception who had known him in England, and who addressed him by the title he wears as the eldest son of an English peer. "From that moment," says the visitor, "I was overwhelmed with attentions, was absurdly complimented and flattered, and received more invitations than it was possible to accept." The time is coming when a similar change of attitude will take place as to the Christian. It will be when God acknowledges him before the universe as His son and a heir of Heaven (Ja. 2:5).

Twelve Children Tied Together with Cords were led by their teacher, a heroic young lady nineteen years old, who carried another six year old child in her arms through the blizzard of January 12, to a place of safety. The children were in a school-house at Mira Valley, near Ord, Neb., when the storm came on. It was a frail frame structure, and the wind shook it so that the children were terror-stricken. The teacher did her best to encourage them, but foreseeing that if the wind increased the building must be overturned, she found some cord and securely fastened it around the waists of the children, attaching the end of it to herself. She had scarcely done so when a terrific gust carried the roof of the school-house away bodily. Taking the youngest and frailest of her charges in her arms, with all the words of encouragement she could muster, the courageous teacher started with her "team" of frightened little ones out into the fury of the storm. Those who have braved the terrors of a Nebraska blizzard need not be told that the act of that young girl was one from which strong men might quail. Selecting her way carefully, following in the course of the storm, the brave girl led her little charges through snow-drifts and blinding blizzard a wearisome journey of three-quarters of a mile, to a farm-house, where the little band received a hearty welcome. But for the teacher's presence of mind in tying the children together one or more must have been lost. So in the storms of life those who have committed themselves to Jesus are saved, being bound in love to each other and to their Saviour and Guide. (1 John 4: 21.)

Fifty Hours on the Mast of a Sunken Ship were passed by a captain and a sailor recently. A fisherman of Havre de Grace, Md., was walking along the shore on January 16; he noticed a strange object just above the waves about half a mile out to sea. He made out after a time that it was two men clinging to a mast. He lost no time in getting help, and in a short time two small boats were on their way to the wreck. After a gallant struggle they reached the spot, and the two miserable men were taken on board. One of them, who proved to be the captain of the submerged vessel, said that three days before he had sailed from Baltimore on board a schooner. They had not been out more than six hours when they encountered a gale, which increased in severity until morning, when the mainsail was torn to shreds. While drifting before the gale she struck a heavy cake of ice, sprung a-leak and immediately filled. The men had to leap for their lives, climb on a spar, and only by the hardest work, gained the masthead, to which they clung until taken off. They had been there without food or water for fifty hours. When rescued, the captain's hands were frozen stiff, and his companion was also badly frostbitten. If relief had not come, as it did both men must have fallen off. Their joy, when they saw the boats coming to take them off the mast, may be imagined. Such joy would sinners feel on hearing of salvation through Christ, if they realized their danger of destruction, as the two shipwrecked men did. (Matt. 24: 37, 38.)

Either Marriage or Imprisonment was the alternative presented to a Polish immigrant by Judge Ehrlich in the New York City police court last week. A good-looking, intelligent Polish girl was the complainant in his case. She stated that he came from Rupin, in Poland, in which place she also was born. Two or three years ago, while living there, they became engaged to be married. At the time he suggested that America be their future home. As he was poor, he proposed that she proceed to New York, and, by work, save enough money to send for him. This she did. By manual labor she saved up enough money to pay for her lover's passage. He came, but knowing no trade, was not able to take care of himself. Undaunted, she sent him to a school, where he was to learn to make cloaks. She paid his board during this time, and gave him money from her own earnings. He rewarded her by running away, and, when captured, he refused to marry her. She then brought suit against him for $2,000 damages for breach of promise. He was arrested Tuesday and passed the night in jail, as he could not furnish $2,000 bail. The case was so clear against him that a lengthened period of incarceration seemed inevitable, and the judge explained to him that the only way to avert it was to marry the girl, as he had promised. The man preferred to do so rather than go back to prison, and the judge thereupon married them in court. A man so worthless as to desert a girl, who had made so many sacrifices for him, richly deserved imprisonment without the alternative of marriage. So it will be perceived at the Day of Judgment. Sinners who have rejected Christ and despised His sacrifice will deserve no pity. (Heb. 10: 29.)

A Leap Into Fire to Save a Comrade was taken by a fireman, in New York, on January 23. A large four-story brick building in Pearl Street was burning fiercely, and there being no alley-way at the rear, the firemen had great difficulty in getting water on that part of the structure, which appeared to be the centre of the conflagration. At length two men ventured on the roof and carried a hose across it from the front to the rear. Scarcely had they placed it in position when the roof fell in, carrying one of the men with it right into the raging flames. The other man clung to the cornice and quickly scrambled to the top of the wall. No sooner, however, did he perceive his comrade's danger than, seizing the end of a rope, he jumped down after him, dragged him out of the flames and tied the rope around his body, under his arms. Then climbing to the top of the wall again he hauled the unconscious man up. It was quickly done, and but for his promptitude the man must have burned to death, for he was completely overcome by the heat and his clothing was on fire. The rescuer also was severely scorched in his struggle. Many men who are enthusiastic when they hear of such a gallant rescue are indifferent when they are told of Him who, seeing a whole world in danger of perishing, descended to a life of hardship and a death of ignomy, that it might be saved. (Heb. 12: 2.)

BRIEF NOTES.

Dr. Justin D. Fulton delivered two lectures on the subject, "Why Priests should Wed," in Cooper Union, New York, on January 25 and 26.

The law passed by the present Tennessee Legislature prohibiting the playing of base ball on Sunday is pronounced constitutional by the Supreme Court.

Dr. Dorchester, in his "Latest Church Statistics in the United States," states that there are 4,601,416 Methodists in this country, and 3,729,745 Baptists.

A Women's Christian Temperence Union has been organized in Switzerland. Mdle. Frey, the daughter of the Swiss pastor at Aarau, is the secretary.

A lady who visits the inmates of jails and hospitals, would be grateful if subscribers to this journal would mail to her any old copies they may have to spare for distribution. Her address is, Mrs. E. Schwieman, 1225 Diversy Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

At Tokio, Japan, the Women's Christian Temperance Union recently celebrated its second anniversary. An eloquent address was delivered by Miss Shige Kushida. Two gentlemen in the audience gave fifty dollars each to the funds of the Union.

In France a movement is on foot which seeks the enforcement of the laws against the sale of immoral publications. A petition to be presented to the French Senate praying for the interference of the national legislature is being numerously signed.

A new mission for soldiers and sailors, to be known as the Mizpah Sailors' Rest, was opened at West Tenth and Washington streets, New York, on January 21. It is situated in a room formerly occupied as a bar-room, the owner of the building, it is said, refusing to lease it again for that purpose.

The value of the New York Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children is proved by the fact that during the past year 5,849 complaints were received and investigated by the Society, 1,900 cases prosecuted, 1,848 convictions secured, and 2,755 children were rescued and relieved. One hundred and fifteen children who were lost, stolen or strayed were returned to their parents.

The meetings conducted by the Rev. B. Fay Mills in Philadelphia have been wonderfully fruitful of results. Presbyterians Methodists, Baptists, Episcopalians, Lutherans, German Reformed and Congregationalists united in the work. Five hundred persons have made a profession of faith in Christ. On Sunday evening, January 15, from three to four hundred arose to ask for prayer.

Mr. D. L. Moody's meetings in Louisville, Ky., are stirring that city to its centre, and are having a wide influence. They are held in a tabernacle built for them at a cost of $10,000. It is warmed by steam and lighted by electricity, and has a seating capacity for four thousand persons. A telephone connected with the platform enables an invalid confined to her bed to hear the singing and sermon. The afternoon meetings are held in Warren Memorial Presbyterian Church, and there is an attendance of two thousand. Mr. Moody's next engagement is in California.

THE SECRET OF POWER.

A New Sermon by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

"If ye abide in Me, and My words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you." John 15 : 7.

Degrees of Attainment Indicated—The Highest for Abiders in Christ—I. What the Special Blessing Is—Certain Exercise of Prayer—Liberty in Prayer—Success in Prayer—The Peerage of the Skies—II. How it is to be Attained—What Abiding Is—The Vine and the Branches—Abiding While Being Purged—And Afterward—His Words Also to Abide—III. Why it is So Attained—The Will Subdued—Safe to be Trusted—Sin a Bar to Success in Prayer.

THE gifts of grace are not enjoyed all at once by believers. Coming unto Christ, we are saved by a true union with Him; but it is by abiding in that union that we further receive the purity, the joy, the power, the blessedness, which are stored up in Him for His people.

There are these degrees of attainment among believers, and the Saviour here incites us to reach a high position by mentioning a certain privilege which is not for all who say that they are in Christ, but for those only who are abiders in Him. Every believer should be an abider, but many have hardly earned the name as yet. Jesus says, "If ye abide in Me, and My words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you." You have to live with Christ to know Him, and the longer you live with Him the more will you admire and adore Him; yes, and the more will you receive from Him, even grace for grace. Truly, He is a blessed Christ to one who is but a month old in grace; but these babes can hardly tell what a precious Jesus He is to those whose acquaintance with Him covers well-nigh half a century! Jesus, in the esteem of abiding believers, grows sweeter and dearer, fairer and more lovely, day by day. Not that He improves in Himself, for He is perfect; but that as we increase in our knowledge of Him, we appreciate more thoroughly His matchless excellences. I call your earnest attention to the text, begging you to consider with me

Three Questions.

I. What is this special blessing? Let us read the verse again. Jesus says, "If ye abide in Me, and My words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you." Observe that our Lord had been warning us that, severed from Him we can do nothing, and He does not now speak of what they should themselves be enabled to do, but of what should be done unto them: "it shall be done unto you." He does not say, "If ye abide in Me, and My words abide in you, ye shall do spiritual things;" but, "ye shall ask." By prayer you shall be enabled to do; but before all attempts to do, "ye shall ask." The choice privilege here given is a mighty prevailing prayerfulness. Power in prayer is very much the gauge of our spiritual condition; and when that is secured to us in a high degree, we are favored as to other matters.

One of the first results, then, of our abiding union with Christ will be the certain exercise of prayer: "Ye shall ask." If others neither seek nor knock nor ask, ye, at any rate, shall do so. Those who keep away from Jesus do not pray. Those in whom communion with Christ is suspended, feel as if they could not pray; but Jesus says, "If ye abide in Me, and My words abide in you, ye shall ask."

Prayer Comes Spontaneously

from those who abide in Jesus, even as certain Oriental trees, without pressure, shed their fragrant gums. Prayer is the natural outgushing of a soul in communion with Jesus. Just as the leaf and the fruit will come out of the vine-branch without any conscious effort on the part of the branch, but simply because of its living union with the stem, so prayer buds and blossoms and fruits out of souls abiding in Jesus. As stars shine, so do abiders pray. It is their use and their second nature. Habitual asking comes out of abiding in Christ. You will not need urging to prayer when you are abiding with Jesus: He says, "Ye shall ask;" and, depend upon it, you will.

You shall also feel most powerfully the necessity of prayer. Your great need of prayer will be vividly seen: Do I hear you say—"What! When we abide in Christ, and his words abide in us, have we not already attained?" Far are we, then, from being satisfied; it is then that we feel more than ever that we must ask for more grace. He that knows Christ best, knows his own necessities best. Prayer is now as much a necessity of our spiritual life as breath is of our natural life: we cannot live without asking favors of the Lord. "If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask:" and ye shall not wish to cease from asking.

Note next, that the fruit of our abiding is not only the exercise of prayer, and a sense of the necessity of prayer, but it includes

Liberty in Prayer:

"Ye shall ask what ye will." Have you not been on your knees at times without power to pray? Have you not felt that you could not plead as you desired? You wanted to pray, but the waters were frozen up, and would not flow. You said mournfully, "I am shut up, and cannot come forth." The will was present, but not the freedom to present that will in prayer. Do you, then, desire liberty in prayer, so that you may speak with God as a man speaketh with his friend? Here is the way to it: "If ye abide in Me, and My words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will." I do not mean that you will gain liberty as to mere fluency of utterance, for that is a very inferior gift. Fluency is a questionable endowment, especially when it is not attended with weight of thought and depth of feeling. Some brethren pray by the yard; but true prayer is measured by weight, and not by length. A single groan before God may have more fullness of prayer in it than a fine oration of great length. He that dwells with God in Christ Jesus, he is the man whose steps are enlarged in intercession. Thus shall you become Israels, and, as princes, have power with God. This is not all: the favored man has the privilege of successful prayer. There is a great breadth in this text, "Ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you." The Lord gives the abider carte blanche. He puts into his hand a signed cheque, and permits him to fill it up as he wills.

Does this text mean what it says? I never knew my Lord to say anything he did not mean. I am sure that He may sometimes mean more than we understand Him to say, but He never means less. Mind you, He does not say to all men, "I will give you whatever you ask." Oh no; that would be an unkind kindness: but He speaks to His disciples, and says, "If ye abide in Me, and My words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you." It is to a certain class of men who have already received great grace at His hands—it is to them He commits this marvellous power of prayer.

O my dear friends, if I may covet earnestly one thing above every other, it is this; that I may be able to ask what I will of the Lord, and have it. The prevailer in prayer is the man to preach successfully, for he may well prevail with man for God when he has already prevailed with God for men. This is the man to face the difficulties of business life; for what can baffle him when he can take all to God in prayer? One such man as this, or one such woman as this, in a church is worth ten thousand of us common people. In these we find

The Peerage of the Skies.

The text seems to imply that, if we reach this point of privilege, this gift shall be a perpetuity: "Ye shall ask," ye shall always ask; ye shall never get beyond asking, but ye shall ask successfully, for "ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you." Here we have the gift of continual prayer. Not for the week of prayer, not during a month's conference, nor upon a few special occasions, shall ye pray prevailingly; but ye shall possess this power with God so long as you abide in Christ, and His words abide in you. God will put His omnipotence at your disposal: He will put forth His Godhead to fulfil the desires which His own Spirit has inwrought in you. I wish I could make this jewel glitter before the eyes of all the saints till they cried out, "Oh that we had it!" This power in prayer is like the sword of Goliath: wisely may every David say—"There is none like it; give it me." Oh, come, let us seek this boon. Listen, and learn the way.

II. The privilege of mighty prayerfulness—

How is it to be Obtained?

The answer is, "If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you." Here are the two feet by which we climb to power with God in prayer. Beloved, the first line tells us that we are to abide in Christ Jesus our Lord. It is taken for granted that we are already in Him. May it be taken for granted in your case, dear hearer? If so, you are to abide where you are. But abiding in the Lord Jesus does not only mean trusting in Him; it includes our yielding ourselves up to Him to receive His life, and to let that life work out its results in us. We live in Him, by Him, for Him, to Him, when we abide in Him. We feel that all our separate life has gone: for "ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ." We have no reason for existence except that which we find in Christ; and what a marvellous reason that is!

As if to help us to understand this, our gracious Lord has given us a delightful parable. Let us look through this discourse of the vine and its branches. Jesus says, "Every branch in Me that beareth fruit, He purgeth it." Take care that you abide in Christ when you are being purged. "Oh," says one, "I thought I was a Christian; but, alas! I have more troubles than ever: men ridicule me, the devil tempts me, and my business affairs go wrong." Brother, if you are to have power in prayer you must take care that you abide in Christ everything away. Endure trial, and never dream of giving up your faith because of it. Say "Though He slay me, yet will I trust in Him." Your Lord warned you when you first came into the vine that you would have to be purged and cut closely; and if you are now feeling the purging process, you must not think that some strange thing hath happened unto you. Rebel not because of anything you may have to suffer from the dear hand of your heavenly Father, who is the husbandman of the vineyard. No, but cling to Jesus all the more closely. Say, "Cut, Lord, cut to the quick if Thou wilt; but I will cling to Thee." Yes, cling to Jesus when the knife is in His hand, and so "shall ye ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you."

Take care, also, that when the purging operation has been carried out you still cleave to your Lord. Notice the third verse: "Now ye are clean through the word I have spoken unto you."

Abide After Cleansing

where you were before cleansing. When you are sanctified, abide where you were when first justified. When you see the work of the Spirit increasing in you, do not let the devil tempt you to boast that now you are somebody, and need not come to Jesus as a poor sinner, and rest in His precious blood alone for salvation. Abide still in Jesus. As you kept to Him when the knife cut you, keep to Him now that the tender grapes begin to form. Do not say to yourself, "What a fruitful branch I am! How greatly I adorn the vine! Now I am full of vigor!" Our whole hope lies in Jesus at our best times as well as at our worst.

Yea, abide in Him as to your very life. Do not say, "I have been a Christian man now twenty or thirty years; I can do without continued dependence upon Christ." No, you could not do without Him if you were as old as Methuselah. Your very being as a Christian depends upon your still clinging, still trusting, still depending; and this He must give you, for it all comes from Him, and Him alone. To sum it all up, if you want that splendid power in prayer of which I spoke just now, you must remain in loving, living, lasting, conscious, practical, abiding union with the Lord Jesus Christ; and if you get to that by divine grace, then you shall ask what you will, and it shall be done unto you. But there is mentioned in the text, and you must not forget it—"and my words abide in you." How important, then, are Christ's words! He said in the fourth verse, "Abide in me, and I in you," and now, as a paralled to this, it is, "If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you." We must obey His precepts or He will not accept us as disciples. Especially that precept of love which is the essence of all His words. We must love God and our brethren; yea, we must cherish love to all men, and seek their good. Anger and malice must be far from us. We must walk even as He walked. If Christ's words abide not in thee, both as to belief and practice, thou art not in Christ. Christ and His gospel and His commands are one. If thou wilt not have Christ and His words, neither will He have thee nor thy words; but thou shalt ask in vain, thou shalt by and by give up asking, thou shalt become as a withered branch.

III. It is my last work to try to show why this privilege should be so obtained. This extraordinary power of prayer, to those who abide in Christ? May what I have to say encourage you to make the glorious attempt to win this pearl of great price! Why is it, that abiding in Christ, and having His words abide in us, we get to this liberty and prevalence in prayer? I answer, first, because of the fullness of Christ. You may very well ask what you will when you abide in Christ, because whatsoever you may inquire is already lodged in Him. Good Bishop Hall worked out this thought in a famous passage. I will give you the substance of it. Do you desire the grace of the Spirit? Go to your Lord's anointing. Do you seek holiness? Go to His example. Do you desire pardon of sin? Look to His blood. Do you need mortification of sin? Look to His crucifixion. Do you need to be buried to the world? Go to His tomb. Do you want to feel the fullness of a heavenly life? Behold His resurrection. Would you rise above the world? Mark His ascension. Would you contemplate heavenly things? Remember His session at the right hand of God, and know that He "hath raised us up together, and made us sit together in heavenly places." I see clearly enough why the branch gets all it wants while it abides in the stem, since all it wants is already in the stem, and is there for the branch.

Why is it Given

The next reason for this is, the richness of the Word of God. Catch this thought, "If My words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you." The best praying man is the man who is most believingly familiar with the promises of God. After all, prayer is but taking God's promises to Him, and saying to Him, "Do as Thou hast said." Prayer is the promise utilized. A prayer which is not based on a promise has no true foundation. Study what Jesus has said, what the Holy Ghost has left on record in this divinely inspired Book, and in proportion as you feed on the Word, and are filled with the Word, and retain the Word in your faith, and obey the Word in your life—in that proportion you will be a master-man in the art of prayer. You have acquired skill as a wrestler with the covenant angel in proportion as you can plead the promises of your God.

A Safe Promise.

Let us go a little further: you still may say you do not quite see why a man who abides in Christ, and in whom Christ's words abide, should be allowed to ask whatever he wills, and it shall be done unto him. I answer you again: it is so, because in such a man as that there is a predominance of grace which causes him to have a renewed will, which is according to the will of God. Suppose a man of God is in prayer, and he thinks that such and such a thing is desirable, yet he remembers that he is nothing but a babe in the presence of his all-wise Father, and so he bows his will, and asks as a favor to be taught what to will. Though God bids him ask what he wills, he shrinks and cries, "My Lord, here is a request which I am not quite clear about. As far as I can judge, it is a desirable thing, and I will it; but, Lord,

I am not Fit to Judge for myself, and therefore I pray Thee, give not as I will, but as Thou wilt." Do you not see that, when we are in such a condition as this, our real will is God's will. Deep down in our hearts we will only that which the Lord Himself wills; and what is this but to ask what we will, and it is done to us? It becomes safe for God to say to the sanctified soul, "Ask what thou wilt, and it shall be done unto thee."

You clearly see that the holy God cannot pick up a common man in the street, and say to him, "I will give you whatsoever you will." What would he ask for? He would ask for a good drink, or permission to enjoy himself in evil lust. It would be very unsafe to trust the most of men with this permit. But when the Lord has taken a man, and has new-made him, has quickened him into newness of life, and has formed him in the image of His dear Son, then He can trust him.

I have not quite done. A man will succeed in prayer when his faith is strong; and this is the case with those who abide in Jesus. It is faith that prevails in prayer. The real eloquence of prayer is a believing desire. "All things are possible to him that believeth." A man abiding in Christ with Christ's words abiding in him, is eminently a believer, and consequently eminently successful in prayer. He has strong faith indeed, for his faith has brought him into vital contact with Christ, and he is therefore at the source of every blessing, and may drink to his full at the well itself.

O dear brother in Christ, if thy prayers speed not at the throne, suspect that there is

them: thy Father's love sees a necessity for chastening thee this way. If thou dost not abide in Christ, how canst thou hope to pray successfully? If thou dost pick and choose His words, and doubt this, and doubt that, how canst thou hope to speed at the throne? If thou art wilfully disobedient to any one of His words, will not this account for failure in prayer? But abide thou in Christ, and take fast hold upon His words, and be altogether His disciple, then shalt thou be heard of Him. Sitting at Jesus' feet, hearing His words, thou mayest lift up thine eyes to His dear face, and say, "My Lord, hear me now"; and He will answer thee graciously; He will say unto thee, "I have heard thee in a time accepted, and in the day of salvation have I succored thee. Ask what thou wilt, and it shall be done unto thee."

Unhappily, to a portion of this congregation my text says nothing at all; for some of you are not even in Christ, and therefore in Him. O sirs, what shall I say to you? You seem to me to miss a very heaven now. If there were no hell hereafter, it is hell enough not to know Christ now, not to know what it is to prevail with God in prayer, not to know the choice privilege of abiding in Him and His words abiding in you. Your first matter is that you believe in Jesus Christ to the saving of your souls, yielding your souls to His cleansing, your lives to His government. God hath sent Him forth as a Saviour; accept Him. Receive Him as your Teacher; yield yourself up to Him as your Master. May His gracious Spirit come and do this work upon you now; and then, after this, but not before, you may aspire to this honor.

First of all—"Ye must be born again." I cannot say to you as you are now, "Grow," because you will only grow a bigger sinner. However much you may be developed, you will only develop what is in you: and that is, the heir of wrath will become more and more the child of evil. You must be made anew in Christ: there must be an absolute change, a reversal of all the currents of nature, a making you a new creature in Christ Jesus; and then you may aspire to abide in Christ, and let His words abide in you, and the consequent prevalence with God in prayer shall be yours. Gracious Lord, come Thyself, and uplift us to Thyself, for Thy mercy's sake. Amen.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

An Engineer's Vindication.*

A STRIKING instance, which illustrates the reign of necessity in these adjustments of physical elements, occurred some years ago, at Revere, Mass. The Beverly express ran into the Bangor accommodation, as it stood at the station, passing half-way through one car before it stopped. The engineer was arrested, and tried for manslaughter. He affirmed that he was running on the schedule time, fifteen miles an hour; the prosecution charged that he was running thirty miles an hour. The weight of the express was furnished to one of the professors in the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, who calculated the momentum of the train and the inertia of the car, and found that the momentum at fifteen miles an hour would be just enough to carry the express half-way through the car. At thirty miles an hour, the momentum would have carried it four times as far. The engineer was, of course, at once released.

The Kaffir's Problems.

It is almost a revelation of the working of the Heathen mind, that we have in the words of a Kaffir, Sekese, to the French traveller, M. Arbrouseille, on the subject of Christianity: 'Your tidings are what I want, and I was seeking, before I knew you, as you shall hear and judge for yourself. Twelve years ago, I went to feed my flocks. The weather was hazy. I sat down upon a rock, and asked myself sorrowful questions—yes, sorrowful, because I was unable to answer them. 'Who has touched the stars with his hands? On what pillars do they rest?' I asked myself. 'The waters never weary: They know no other law than to flow without ceasing from morning till night, and from night till morning; but where do they stop, and who makes them flow thus? The clouds also come and go, and burst in water over the earth. Whence come they? Who sends them? The diviners certainly do not give us rain, for how could they do it? And why do not I see them with my own eyes when they go up to heaven to fetch it? I cannot see the wind, but what is it? Who brings it—makes it blow and roar and terrify us? Do I know how the corn sprouts? Yesterday there was not a blade in my field: to-day I returned to the field, and found some. Who can have given the earth the wisdom and the power to produce it?' Then I buried my head in both my hands."

Mutinous Convicts Subdued.

The highest type of heroism is impossible without a grand moral ideal and moral courage. Instances are numerous of the control of large and infuriated masses of people by one man of great moral power.

Years ago, in a penitentiary in one of the Eastern States, the convicts, to the number of several hundred, mutinied one morning, and drove their keepers from the shop in which they were at work. The Warden sent, in affright, to the adjacent city for aid. A United States army officer was in the city, with a mere handful of troops—twenty-five or thirty—and

* From "The Gist of It," by Rev. Thomas E. Barr, B. at once went to the prison. The convicts were all gathered at one end of the shop, a long building, armed with axes, hammers, chisels, and other tools of their work. Filing in at the opposite end of the building, the intrepid officer drew up his little company in line, bade them load their muskets in full view of the prisoners, and take careful aim at the crowd; then, taking out his watch, he said to the criminals, "The man that remains in this building at the end of three minutes shall be shot dead." What cared that throng of armed desperadoes, in the first flush of partial freedom, for the bunch of troops facing them? But a minute is a long, long time to stand and look quietly into the muzzle of a loaded gun, with no sound save the ticking of the watch whose moving hands determine the instant when the falling hammer will speed the ball on its errand of death. Ere it elapsed, some of the convicts nearest the door dropped quietly out; and, before half the allotted time had gone by, the entire number had left the shop, and returned to their cells.

Garfield's Control of a Mob.

On the morning of April 15, 1865, when the nation was thrilling in anger and indefinable dread at the assassination of President Lincoln, a mass of fifty thousand men gathered in New York City around the Exchange Building. General B. F. Butler addressed but was not able to disperse them. The crowd were armed, enraged. Suddenly, from the extreme right wing of the crowd rose a cry, "The World! The office of The World! The World!" and the mass began to move, as one man, toward that office. Where would this end? Destruction of property, loss of life, violence and anarchy, were in that movement, and apparently no human power could now check its progress. Then a man stepped to the front of the balcony, and held his arm aloft. His commanding attitude arrested universal attention. Perhaps he was going to give them the latest news. They waited. But while they listened, the voice—it was the voice of General Garfield—only said: "Fellow-citizens, clouds and darkness are round about Him. His pavilion is dark waters and thick clouds of the skies. Justice and judgment are the establishment of His throne. Mercy and truth shall go before His face. Fellow-citizens, God reigns, and the Government at Washington still lives." The tide of popular fury was stayed. The impossible had been accomplished. The World was saved, but that was not much. The safety of a great city was secured, and that was much. Such are the achievements of moral power, and well may one aspire to its possession and exercise.

THE BLIZZARD'S VICTIMS.

(See Illustrations.)

It will be long before the blizzard of January 11–14 is forgotten in the Northwest. From Dakota, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Iowa and Nebraska the most distressing details of suffering and death continue to arrive. It is stated by one journal that when the list of the dead and missing is fully made up, the victims will be found to number nearly one thousand. Two hundred and thirty-eight bodies have already been found. Among the incidents reported are some that display heroism of a most exalted type. At Stoloff, Dak., a school teacher named Miss Jacobson observed the storm coming up, and fearing that one of her pupils, a delicate child, might be lost in the snow, started out to accompany her to her home. The blinding wind, laden with fine particles of snow, completely hid the path from them; they lost their way, and both perished. When their bodies were found, Miss Jacobson was found crouched in a hollow of the ground, the child tightly clasped in her arms and her dress skirt wrapped around the little one (See Illustration). Mary Connell, another teacher near Cavour, also attempted to convey a child to her home, and was lost; but, knowing the danger of standing still or resting a moment, she plodded with her little charge heroically all night long (See Illustration), and when morning came, was met by a party of searchers and conveyed to a house for shelter.

The searching parties who went out to look for missing friends were obliged to connect themselves with each other by ropes, so blinding was the storm, and so hopeless was any attempt to keep together in the teeth of the wind that tore across the prairie. But very few of the persons who were so unhappy as to be caught in the open by the sudden storm survived. A number of the dead had the appearance of having died from suffocation. Some had torn their clothing away from their throats, and others had thrown away their head-covering, and were clutching at their throats, as though struggling for breath. During a genuine blizzard such as this the air is filled with fine ice dust, driven with terrific force, which chokes the unfortunate victim in a short time if he attempts to stand against it. Several passengers on the trains died in the cars of cold after the trainmen found it impossible to go farther. The children especially succumbed, though it is worthy of note that the male passengers in many cases took off their overcoats and wraps to protect the little ones.

Sufferings from the intense cold are reported from other States and Territories, from Montana to Texas. In western Kansas the number of destitute people is said to be most alarming. Many have perished, and others are in an emaciated condition.

A lady, neatly but inexpensively dressed, timidly entered a picture dealer's store in Philadelphia one cold winter's morning, and asked to see the proprietor. The clerk who spoke to her knew by her manner as well as by the flat, thin parcel she carried, what her business was. He was a sympathetic, kindly man, and he felt sorry for her.

"Poor creature!" he said to a fellow-clerk, when he reached the back part of the store, after placing a seat for her; "she is only just beginning, I think. It's awful to think what she will have to go through before she learns that she can't earn her living that way."

Agnes Mendon had plenty of time to look around her while she waited for the picture dealer, and what she saw did not tend to raise her spirits. Pictures infinitely superior to that she had brought to sell were scattered around in profusion. It seemed to her that purchasers rather than venders were the need there. Still she had built her hopes on the picture. Her work used to be much admired when she did it as an amateur, and the fact had encouraged her to hope that it might support her now that she was penniless. If she could get but a small sum for this, and an order for the other picture half-finished on her easel at home, she might hope. Her heart was throbbing with anxiety and suspense when the clerk told her that his principal had arrived and would see her at once.

A very few minutes sufficed to crush out the hope she had cherished. So many pictures were offered, the dealer said, some of them of real merit, as if hers had only the mere pretence of merit, that he had already a larger stock than he needed, and had stopped buying for the present. Agnes was too much crestfallen and the dealer's manner was too decisive to allow of any pleading, and she took up her rejected picture and left the store. The tears would come into her eyes, strive as she might, but she restrained them until she reached home, and then she let them have their course. They relieved her a little, but they brought no relief to her anxiety. She went into the little room where she had spent so much time over her work, and sat down before her unfinished picture. She took up her brush almost mechanically, but she could not proceed. Of what use was it to finish the picture, if she could not sell it? She sat gazing at it in a reverie, her mind wandering off into scenes far different from her present surroundings.

Life was very hard for poor Agnes. Up to a year ago her every want was supplied, and she had money in her pocket for charity. Her father was reputed wealthy, but when he died his executor was unable by the sale of all he possessed to discharge his indebtedness. Agnes was told the condition of affairs, and, rather than allow any reproach to attach to her dear, dead father's name, she placed her little fortune, the bequest of a distant relative, at the disposal of the executor, desiring him with that to pay every dollar of indebtedness. It was not just, it was not necessary, the executor said; the creditors had no legal claim upon her. But Agnes persisted, and the result was that she was penniless, and was trying to earn her bread with her pencil.

Agnes Mendon's Reverie.

As she sat motionless, looking sadly and wearily at her picture, all those years of happy youth passed before her mental vision. What misery her father would have endured could he have foreseen her present plight! He had been spared that sorrow, however, and on that account Agnes was thankful. She was still sure that she did right in sacrificing her own property to save his good name; she believed God would provide for her in some way. Still, cold and hunger were very dreadful things to this gently nurtured lady, and they appeared to be not so far away from her. She shuddered as she remembered the death of a poor girl who had been found one cold night near her father's house, and had been sheltered and cared for there, but too late to save her. The doctors had said she died of starvation. Agnes wondered if she would end like that. No; she thought not. Her faith in God was too strong to have such a fear. She would go to Him now and place her case in His hands; perhaps light would come. Light did come into her heart, though her mind had no light as to her plans; but she felt calmer, and having cast her burden on the Lord, could wait His time. None who put faith from them can realize what they lose in their own souls. Even if prayer brought no answer, its effect on the praying Christian cannot be overestimated. It gives peace, rest, confidence, hope.

It seemed for several weeks as if no other blessing was coming to Agnes. Every day the meagre store of money she had left grew smaller, though she husbanded it with the utmost vigilance. But she never ceased to pray, and her confidence that God would undertake for her eventually, never faltered. She answered advertisements, sought work of any kind, and made application to everyone who might be able to find her employment. Failure attended every effort. She had not the self-confidence and boldness that help some women to make their way, and as she had not been educated to earn her livelihood the qualities she could offer in the market were not marketable. One morning she changed her last dollar bill, and before doing so she spread it before God and with tears besought Him to look upon her in her extremity. She went out again on her pitiful quest, and there was no occupation now so menial that she would have refused it, if it would only bring her bread.

"Ah, Miss Mendon!" said a strong, cheery voice beside her, "how are you doing? I have not seen you for an age."

Agnes looked up and saw that her father's executor had overtaken her, and was by her side. He had warned her of this very trouble that had come upon her, when she insisted upon parting with her money, and now she shrank from letting him know that his predictions were fulfilled. But concealment was impossible; her worn, weary face told the story. "Not starved to death yet, you see," was the answer, which she tried to make gay, but with poor effect.

"No," he said, "but you look pretty near it. What are you doing?"

"Looking for employment."

"And failing, of course. You should have come to me before. I suppose your pride kept you away. You thought I should taunt you with being wrong after all. Well, I won't, for you are a brave woman. Now I think I can help you. I will see what can be done, and you come to me to-morrow and find out how I have succeeded. Good morning," and he hurried away.

Though there was no definite prospect of relief, yet Agnes instinctively felt that her troubles were near their end, and she returned home and offered thanks to God. He had heard her, she was sure; and in advance she poured out grateful words from her heart.

The next day, with a brighter look than her face had worn for many a day, she went to her friend's office.

"I have good news for you," he said, "and you will like it all the better because it is the result of your Quixotic self-sacrifice. One of your late father's creditors needs a lady to take charge of his house. He is a widower, and has had rather a painful experience with a variety of housekeepers—some of them dishonest, and some incapable. I told him I knew exactly the person to suit him, and when he heard who it was, and remembered how you behaved about that little matter of the deficiency, he was as eager to secure your services as you could wish. It is an easy position, and the pay is good. He is inundated with applicants, but he will listen to none until he knows if you will accept. Here is his address; either see him or write him, and arrange at once."

Tears of joy and thankfulness filled Agnes Mendon's eyes as she listened. Her long fight with poverty was ended, and her heart was full of gratitude. Her future was better than she hoped or knew at that time; for her refinement and pious cheerfulness so won upon her employer's heart, that he pleaded with her, and eventually succeeded in persuading her to enter into a closer relationship.

By Brenda.

THE TEMPERANCE PARTY.

No one of the neighbors who saw him depart with Bridget in the cab from Tripe Court that morning, expected Tom Mite to return at night in other condition than that of drunkenness. Jemmy Wiggles might make him "pass the corners" in his cab going to the Infirmary, but coming back Tom would be his own master, and it never occurred to any one of them to think that he would return sober. Neither did it enter, as a possibility, into the minds of Poll and Sue. They thought they could have told any person exactly what would happen. "Late in the evening, after saloon closing hours, their father would come staggering and shouting down the court, and make his way blunderingly up the stairs and into the room, and expect to find the bed all down, and ready for him as usual. But this evening he just won't," they would have said; "he'll have to get it and make it ready for himself, for we—we know what we're going to do, don't we? We won't tell, for it's a secret, but we know well enough!"

Poll and Sue, you remember, had agreed to run away, to be absent from home while their mother was absent, feeling that without her and the baby home would be intolerable. The plan of action settled upon by the miserable children was this—to leave Tripe Court in the evening, and to walk a long way westward, and get into the region of the nice stores; they planned to have a good look in at them, and then to have a supper of hot fried fish somewhere, payment for which they intended to provide themselves by taking half that three shillings with them that their mother had told their father the preceding evening he would find in the mug on the mantel-shelf. They reckoned it was fair that they should take this much of the money at least; they knew where it would all go to if they did not. And their father would have all those other sums their mother had said were owing to her. So they thought they might take half of this with a good conscience.

They could not quite settle beforehand where they would sleep at night—that would all have to depend upon circumstances—but it wouldn't be in a bed; of that they were pretty certain. Perhaps they would creep under a doorway or an arch and sleep, or perhaps they wouldn't sleep at all, but walk about till it was morning. And when morning came—well, they hadn't made many plans about the next day. They supposed they'd have to beg or do something to get bread, but their plans were very hazy as to living, after the supper of hot fried fish which they had promised themselves; the only thing they were certain of afterwards was this—that as long as mother was in the Infirmary they'd never go back to Tripe Court. The unhappy children had got their torn straw hats on, and had drawn their poor wraps around their shoulders, and were on the point of starting out on their runaway expedition to the West-end, when, to their dismay, they heard their father coming up the stairs. It had not entered into their heads to think he would be home so early.

"And there's not the bed got down, or anything!" cried out Poll in horror.

"Well, it's not a bit o' good trying to get it down now," said Sue with decision; "there's not time. We must dodge him round the table if he's angry, and fly out at the door and run, for in course we'll go, all the same."

The next minute their father had entered the room, and the children were gazing at him in amazement, for, contrary to all expectation, they saw in the dusky light that he was not only sober, but that he had brought back the baby! Their plans were changed in an instant. The hot fried fish, the thought of which had made them feel positively cheerful at starting forth, vanished into air. Without a word to each other, they both made up their minds at once what must be done now—they must stay at home, however miserable it was; they must stick by the baby, whatever happened. It flashed across them, at the same moment, that it must have been lack of money that had brought their father home sober. He would take the money in the mug, of course, and go out again and get drunk.

"You've brought Dinah back?" exclaimed the children in a breath.

"Yes; they wouldn't take 'er—too old," said their father. "But there ain't a moment to lose. I've got a hinvitation to a party to-night, and we're all a-goin', and must start quick."

"Whatever do you mean, father?" asked Poll, thinking he must have been drinking, after all.

"What I say: we're goin' to a party," repeated Tom, a little testily. "There'll be plum-cake at the party; what d'ye think o' that, children?" Then, producing the feeding-bottle, "Make this warm for the little 'un, will you? she can feed as we goes along."

"We've got no hot water, father," said Sue, beginning to grin at this very funny idea about the party. And she saw that Poll was beginning to grin too. Plum-cake, though not as good as hot fried fish, made them feel a little cheerful again, though they hardly believed in it. "Father," they thought, "must have taken a little and got fuddled, and was making all this up about a party."

"Look alive, then, and run and get Mrs. Job to give it a hot up," said their father. "The party begins at half-past seven, and it's a goodish step from here."

With quite a laugh this time at the mention of the party, Sue ran off with the bottle of milk to Mrs. Job's house, a few doors off. She found Mrs. Treeby there, consulting with Mrs. Job over her sick boy Billy.

"Father's come home," cried Sue, rushing in upon the two women as they stood talking over a paraffin lamp. "And he's sober, and he's brought back the baby; they wouldn't have her, she was too old."

"Ah," said Mrs. Treeby, nodding her head, "I told you so, Mary Job; she'd be over age."

"Well, I was half afraid, too," said Mrs. Job; "but it's such a scrap of a thing, and she was so bent on having it and all, I thought they might let it pass. Poor Bridget! How does your father say he left mother?"

"Oh, he didn't say; he can't wait to speak. He's a-hurrying of us up, me and Poll, to go out with him to a party to-night," said Sue, smiling again all over, "and he says there ain't a minute to lose. I'm just to get this 'ere bottle warmed up for baby to suck as we walks along, and I'm to be back at once."

Mrs. Job's countenance fell as she listened.

"The party" seemed no joke to her. She had her own ideas about it, which, after she had warmed the milk and Sue had left, she communicated to Mrs. Treeby. She began putting on her shawl and bonnet in a hurry.

"I'm going to follow them," she said.

"What!" said Mrs. Treeby; "do you think—" and she stopped short in horror.

"Yes," said Mary Job, nodding, "it's my belief the party's a parcel of nonsense, and he's going out to make away with himself and those poor little dears!"

"Well, it never struck me," said Mrs. Treeby, "but you may be right. The river's handy, to be sure; yet, he's been and brought that feeding-bottle—that don't look like it. If he meant drowning it, poor dear, he wouldn't go feeding it first."

"That may be all a blind," said Mary Job; "it's just what one reads of in the newspapers every day in the week—men going off their heads when they're left alone; they are but poor things without us women after all—and doing away with themselves and children. It wouldn't surprise me one bit. Tom seemed just in the mood for doing it this mornin.' Bridget's leaving home seemed to prey on him dreadful. There they go!" she cried, as three figures passed the window quickly. "I'm off!" and Mrs. Job, with palpitating heart, rushed out into the keen air to follow them.

Rather to her surprise, Tom Mite did not lead his children riverwards. At a smart pace he led them into the most populated streets, going over the ground Mrs. Job knew that he had had to pass in the morning in the first stages of the journey to the Infirmary. "The Infirmary was in a retired district," reflected Mrs. Job; "it was quite possible he had seen a quiet spot there where he meant to carry out his dreadful intention to-night."

So she continued to follow them, having now and then almost to run to keep up with them, so fast did they go. As she hurried in pursuit, she made up her mind she would speak to a policeman, as soon as the way got lonely, and get him to join her, but they never reached the lonely parts. In the very heart of the bustle and crowd Tom suddenly stopped and consulted a paper he had in his hand. Then he went down a small side-street, called Blank Street, where there was a church, and next door to it a building with large windows all alight. Crowds of poor rough-looking people, men, women, and children, were pressing into this building, and Mrs. Job, full of surprise at this unexpected termination of her chase, saw Tom Mite and his children pass in with the crowd, Mary Job's curiosity was aroused. She determined to follow and find out what was the meaning of this large gathering. At the door there was a man stationed, taking from each person entering a paper of some sort. As Mary Job attempted to press past—

"Your invitation, ma'am?" he said.

"I haven't one, sir. What's going on?" she replied.

"Never mind, ma'am, pass on; all's welcome to-night," said the man, hustling her forward; and Mary Job found herself the next minute in a very large, lighted room, decorated with blue flags, and already packed with people sitting close together on the rows of benches filling the broad spaces on either side, with a narrow lane left as passage-way in the middle. At the end of the room there was a platform with a table on it, and chairs and some ladies and gentlemen, and a harmonium set open, and three blue flags depending from the wall.

As Mary Job crushed into a seat at the back—the front ones were all full—she perceived that refreshments were being handed about by persons in the passage-way, carrying deep, broad wicker baskets piled with hunches of plum-cake and trays bearing mugs of some hot beverage, which they were distributing as fast as they could go down each row of eager people. The beverage was tea—the atmosphere was fragrant with it; and Mary Job did not now require to ask the neighbor next to her what kind of a gathering this was. She saw at a glance that it was a Temperance meeting,

She thought the world must have turned topsy-turvy, finding herself brought to a Temperance meeting by Tom Mite! She was anxious to see how he seemed to like it, and craned her neck aside to get a view of his face as he sat on one of the benches in front, with Poll and Sue beside him, and Dinah, the baby, asleep in his arms. Oh, she could see he was looking very glum, very low-spirited indeed, and seemed not to be enjoying himself at all. Poll and Sue, however, were looking radiant; each with a mug of tea in her hand and a large hunch of cake; and the ragged little girl next to them said they would be allowed more tea and more cake when that was done.

"Really this was something like a party; it was true, after all!" they were thinking; "and they were not sure that the tea and cake were not as good as hot fried fish, and better."

But Tom Mite's thoughts were very different. His opinion of the party was that it was "a thorough do"—a hoax of the worst description; and I may tell you that he was very angry. It wouldn't have required much to have made him tip up the mug of tea that was offered to him, and throw his hunch of cake with all his might at the platform, whither all his black looks were levelled; for on the platform, smiling blandly, Tom discovered the young lady who had given him this invitation under the lamp-post, and who had so raised his hopes about the prospects of beer and ale by disappearing into a grog-shop immediately afterwards. Yes, he would have liked to throw his cake at her head, hoaxing him so shamefully.

"Drink in abundance"! he sneered inwardly; "and what kind of drink?—sloppy tea." (But this was not fair towards the tea; it was really good tea, and strong.) He wasn't sure that he wouldn't tell her father, if he could see him, about the grog-shop. She deserved to be shown up. He'd like to give her into custody; a week's imprisonment wouldn't be too much for her; and he was just marking his displeasure by getting up with a clatter, intending to drag the children out with him, to leave the building, when he was arrested by Poll tugging at his coat, and calling out:

"Oh, father, see; they've opened the thing"—by the thing she meant the harmonium—"and they're going to sing!" whereupon Tom bumped down again on the bench,

"The singing wouldn't be up to much more than the drink, he'd bet," he thought to himself; "still, if Poll and Sue wished to stay, well he supposed he might as well. There was nothing for them at home, nothing but darkness and wretchedness there! Here, at any rate, there was warmth and light and company, and he was very tired; his limbs ached—he didn't feel much up to walking again for the present. There might be a row at the end," he thought. He saw men and women about him looking as discontented and angry at this joke as he was, and if there was to be a row he'd like to stay and join in it, and be able to tell the young lady what he thought of her playing them a trick like this. While the singing and the talking were going on he'd try and get a nap, and on the road home, as a salve to his outraged feelings, Tom promised himself again that pint of beer which he had been seeming to get so near to all day, and just missing. But have it he would. Two-pennyworth couldn't make a man drunk, and he'd leave the baby outside a moment with Poll and Sue while he went in to get it, and there'd be no harm done to anybody;" and so with all this in his mind Tom elected to stay for a space.

JESUS AND THE LITTLE ONES.

By Mrs. M. Baxter.

S.S. Lesson for February 12, Matt. 18: 1-14. Golden Text, Matt. 19: 14.

Ver. 1. The Disciples Still Dwelling on the Idea of an Earthly Kingdom—Ver. 2-4. Christ's Gentle Reproof—A Solemn Warning—Even Admission to the Kingdom Might be Refused—The Essentials for Entrance the Same as for Greatness—The Characteristics of a Child—Docility—Humility—Guilelessness—Ver. 5, 6, 7. How Childlike Believers Must be Treated—Representatives of Jesus—Consequence of Causing Them to Offend Ver. 8, 9. Darling Sins and Connections to be Renounced for Christ's Sake—Self-Purging Better Than Punishment—Ver. 10. The Powerful Protectors of the Humble—Ver. 11-14. A Mission of Infinite Compassion—Encouragement for the Erring and for Workers.

When Jesus and His disciples were come to Capernaum, the public tax-gatherers came to Peter, and asked him, "Does not your Master pay tribute?" Why did they not come to Jesus Himself? How many there are who ask questions about Jesus, but will not go and ask Himself, who alone can fully answer them. In this case, the answer was a simple one, "Yes." Jesus did pay tribute, and He gave His reason for it when He said to Simon, "What thinkest thou, Simon? Of whom do the kings of the earth take custom or tribute? Of their own children, or of strangers?" Peter saith unto Him, "Of strangers." Jesus saith unto him, "Then are the children free. Notwithstanding, go thou to the sea, and cast an hook, and take up the fish that first cometh up; and when thou hast opened his mouth, thou shalt find a piece of money; that take, and give unto them for Me and thee." Jesus was the Son of David, and as such should have been exempted from taxation, but He would not stand upon His rights, or claim His privileges, lest He should offend.

"At the same time"—while occupied with this question of giving offence—the disciples came to Jesus with the question, "Who is the greatest in the kingdom of heaven?" How like a child of earth; how unbecoming an heir of heaven, is such a question! Man's greatness and God's greatness are the greatest contrast. The first of earth's "mighty men were, of old, men of renown," "corrupted [God's] way upon the earth," and "the earth was filled with violence." (Gen. 6: 4, 12.) It was these very men who brought the flood upon the earth through their sin! Nimrod was a "mighty hunter before the Lord," and he left behind him as his memorial a mighty city, and that was all! God did not say to him, as to Abraham, "I will bless thee.....and thou shalt be a blessing." Men who conquer nations, and shed the blood of thousands, those who amass riches and oppress the poor, those who bear titles and pride themselves on family distinctions, those who rise into power politically—these are earth's mighty men! But Jesus "called a little child unto Him, and sat him in the midst of them, and said, 'Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven. Whosoever, therefore, shall humble himself as this little child, the same is greatest in the kingdom of heaven.'"

Who is the Greatest?

This is a question which more often agitates the hearts of the children of God than they allow, even to themselves. A child of God is used of Him in mission work, a great awakening breaks out, he leads all the meetings, and speaks with a power which is as much a marvel to himself as to others. He begins to think that he is a special instrument of God; he is much sought after, and his name becomes known. By and by, another star arises, a man whom God now blesses more than he. At first his whole will rises in rebellion, but when it is laid down, he is brought to the humbling but salutary conviction that God can do without him—and that, after all, he is not so needful to the works of God, as he thought. From being a mighty man in his own eyes, he becomes a little child, willing to be nothing, willing to be last, and then, unknown to himself, God makes him a power. Just so far as we value ourselves are we unfit for the work of God. "The last shall be first, and the first last" (Matt. 20: 16) is God's order.

While Moses set a value on himself as the most important Hebrew in Egypt, God could not use him; but when he had been a simple shepherd long enough to forget all his learning and all his assumption, God could use him. David's brethren were not little enough for God to use; Gideon, who accounted himself least in his father's house, was an instrument fit for God. Why is all this? "That no flesh should glory in His presence." (1 Cor. 1: 29.) "This people have I formed for myself; they shall shew forth My praise" (Isa. 43: 21); not their own. We were Created in the Image of God.

The perfection of a portrait is that it sets forth the person it represents. If we set forth ourselves, we no more serve the purpose for which we were created and redeemed, than a beautifully executed portrait would serve its purpose if it was quite unlike the original. The wonder and glory of man's creation is that man is capable of containing God, of being a temple of the Holy Ghost, "an habitation of God through the Spirit." Christ dwelling in our hearts by faith. We are predestined "to be conformed to the image of (God's) Son," to be "partakers of the Divine Nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust." (Rom. 8: 29; II Pet. 1: 2.) How vain, then, is it for us to assume any personal honor, value ourselves on any personal holiness, or on any gifts which the Holy Ghost may use in us!

Having made the little child an example, Jesus began to speak about the little ones: "Whosoever shall receive one such little child receiveth Me." O how blessed are those who care for orphans, those who lead little children to Jesus, those who shield them from the awful snares laid for them in the world! Many enjoy the society of children for their own amusement. Is this to receive them in His name? Parents often make their own children ministers to their own pride; and they pride themselves on their children's beauty, wit, cleverness, learning, etc., etc., thus receiving them in their own name instead of Christ's. Again, in schools, how often those who teach, press forward the clever boys or girls, who will reflect credit on their teaching, and so recommend the school—forgetting that every dull, heavy, awkward child is to be received in the name of Christ. If every child born into the world of Christian parents were received in the name of Christ, if every pupil in a school were received in the name of Christ, if every young apprentice or workman, every young domestic servant were received in the name of Christ—what a different world it would be!

"But whoso shall offend [or cause to stumble] one of these little ones which believe in Me, it were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck and that he were drowned in the depth of the sea." The little ones have very keen eyes; they take everything on trust until they have been deceived; then and mentally take notes. They see mother lose her temper, and from that time they think it cannot be so very bad for them to have naughty tempers. They see father buy a paper on Sunday, and they think it can't be wrong for them to buy candies. An elder brother gets into debt, or a sister speaks of some impure story, and the little sentinel makes a mental note of it, and reproduces the same thing at another time. And Jesus takes notes too, and keeps an account of every one who has caused a little child to stumble. "Woe unto the world because of occasions of stumbling; for it must needs be that the occasions come (there must be trials of faith), but woe to that man through whom the occasion cometh" (R. V.). Jesus has just been paying the tribute money only to avoid an occasion of stumbling; now He urges that every occasion of stumbling should be cut off. If it is a hand, an eye or a foot, we are better without that, whatever it is, which causes us to stumble, or causes others to stumble; it is better to be blind or maimed than to sin or to cause others to sin. God gives us this that we may be willing to suffer anything rather than sin against our God. "Take heed that ye despise not one of these little ones"—a child or a child-like Christian—"for I say unto you, that in heaven their angels do always behold the face of My father which is in heaven. For the Son of man is come to save that which was lost." The angels are "all ministering spirits, sent to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation" (Heb. 1: 14), and God lets them minister unseen to His little ones.

The Son of man did not come to build up man's goodness, and put His signature to that which is of man; but on the contrary, to seek that which was lost, and save it. Thus He said. "How think ye? If a man have a hundred sheep, and one of them be gone astray, doth he not leave the ninety and nine, and goeth into the mountains, and seeketh that which is gone astray? And if so be that he find it, verily I say unto you, he rejoiceth more of that sheep than of the ninety and nine which went not astray." God forbid that we should despise backsliders; if we had our eyes open to see the unseen, we should see Jesus after them all the time, and our hearts would go out with His towards them. "Even so, it is not the will of your Father which is in heaven, that one of these little ones should perish." All who perish, perish by their own perverse will, and not by God's will. Hell was not prepared for man, but "for the devil and his angels" (Matt. 25: 21), and all who go there go athwart the promises and the loving invitations of God. They must pass by a crucified Redeemer to reach everlasting death. He stands between.

O do not let us look on our children as existing for the position they may have in the world, but as being created for God, for His kingdom. He says, "Suffer little children, and forbid them not to come unto Me; for of such is the kingdom of heaven." How can we suffer them to come? Not by driving or forcing them, for this would make them hate the things of God, but by strengthening ourselves in God, who does not will that they shall perish, and who says, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved, and thy house." Perhaps there is no suffering to believing parents so keen as to have children unsaved. Therefore, there is nothing which so honors God as to trust Him with the salvation of our children. With some parents the very anxiety and fussiness which they manifest about their children's salvation is a cause of stumbling to the children, but God never faileth, in this or any other thing, those who put their trust in Him.

Light for the Last Days; a New Work on Prophecy. By Mr. H. Grattan Guinness, handsomely bound in cloth, with two Colored Diagrams, 673 pages. Price. $2.50. May be had from the office of The Christian Herald.

"COME TO ME."

Come to me, Lord, when first I wake,
As the faint lights of morning break:
Bid purest thoughts within me rise,
Like crystal dew-drops in the skies.

Come to me in the sultry noon—
Or earth's low communings will soon
Of Thy dear face eclipse the light,
And change my fairest days to night.

Come to me in the evening shade—
And if my heart from Thee has strayed,
Oh, bring it back, and from afar
Smile on me like Thine evening star.

Come to me in the midnight hour,
When sleep withholds her balmy power;
Let my lone spirit find its rest,
Like John, upon my Saviour's breast.

Come to me through life's varied way,
And when its pulses cease to play,
Then Saviour, bid me come to Thee,
That where Thou art Thy child may be.

The lady whose portrait appears on the first page is the wife of Prince Frederick Christian, of Schleswig-Holstein, but she, with her husband, has made her home in England, where, as the third daughter of the Queen, she occupies a prominent position and enjoys a degree of social distinction which perhaps she would not have in her husband's land. Besides this, the bulk of his income is derived from lucrative offices about the English Court, most of which though sinecures could not be decently held by a non-resident. This is one of the abuses of royalty, but the English people have a profound regard for the present royal family, and only the radical party complain of the burden. Much of the discontent which might be provoked has been disarmed by the grace and tact of the Queen's daughters, whose husbands and families have become a national charge. This applies especially to the lady whose portrait appears on the first page, and she has just given a conspicuous proof of her kindliness and grace, comments on which have drawn forth other of a very creditable and interesting character. The Princess is forty-two years of age. She was born on May 25, 1846, and was named Helena Augusta Victoria. There is nothing recorded of her childhood and early days, beyond the fact that she was quick at learning her lessons, glad when the holiday seasons came round, possessed of a kindly and generous disposition, and brimful of merriment. The promise of her sunny girlhood has been abundantly fulfilled, for in these days she is beloved for her gentle kindliness and geniality wherever she is known. The domestics of her own modest household at Windsor are devotedly attached to her, and would do anything to prove their readiness to serve her. They have good reason for this, as the Princess is not only a kind mistress to them personally, but has shown her sympathy with their class, having taken an active part in organizing and managing the best institutions existing for the benefit of domestic servants.

Characteristic Personal Details

It is a curious coincidence that in her early life she was brought into a somewhat humiliating connection with one member of the class which she has in maturer years done so much to aid. The story is worth telling because of the characteristic traits it displays, and the example it gives of the benefit of judicious early training, by which the royal little lady was taught to realize that birth and station do not confer the right to behave rudely to more lowly persons. It is narrated that the Princess Helena and her elder sister, Alice, when they were children, happened to go into a room in which a servant was engaged in polishing a grate. The girls, in a spirit of insisted on helping her, and then when they had possession of the brushes left the grate and blackened the woman's face. The servant escaped at last from her little tormentors, and hurried to her room to wash her face, but on the way she met Prince Albert, who seeing the girl's disfigurement, insisted on knowing all about it. Presently the Queen was seen crossing the court towards the servants' quarters, leading the two child culprits. The woman, who by this time had washed her face, was brought forward, and the two girls had first to beg the servant's pardon, and then go to a store and purchase for her, out of their own pocket-money, a complete outfit in place of the dress, cap, etc., that had been soiled. The two Princesses afterwards declared that they rather enjoyed making presents to the woman, but asking her pardon they certainly did not like took place on July 5, 1866, the bridegroom being Prince Frederick Christian of Schleswig-Holstein, and she has now five children, three sons and two daughters. Prince Christian was born at Schleswig, Germany, January 22, 1831, and is therefore now fifty-seven years of age.

Royal Work

in the best sense of the word has been done for many years by the Princess. Romantic young ladies will be surprised to learn that pleasure and gaiety do not occupy the most prominent place in her life. Not long ago she gave an account of her philanthropic and benevolent occupations. It was done very modestly and only on fitting occasion, and her humble friends, it is said, would have drawn the picture in a far different way, throwing in colors mixed from feelings of profound gratitude to the lady whose gifts and personal labors have helped them in many a season of trouble. Of this the Princess said nothing. She gave the following brief sketch, which shows how sincere is her sympathy for the poor and afflicted: "Only those who really work among the very poor can fully understand and appreciate the real hardship of their lives, which so many, if not most of them, have to endure; and which, as a rule, are met so uncomplainingly and so bravely. Desirous of really being of more direct use, I obtained the consent of the Rector of Trinity Church, Windsor, to take a district in his parish under my especial care. It is situated in a very poor part of the town; the houses on the whole are good, the rents often high. When work is plentiful, they manage fairly well, but when times are hard, as was the case last winter, the distress is great. I, however, rarely heard complaints, unless I asked them to tell me how matters really stood. I generally visit my people twice a week, and it is a real pleasure to feel that my visits are looked forward to, and that they so that by degrees I have learnt all their individual troubles and difficulties. I have endeavored from the first to encourage them to help themselves as much as possible, and then, when I found they could do no more, I have obtained help for them. I have found among them my most real friends. I am sure there are many who will understand the feelings which filled my heart when, on leaving Windsor for an absence of several weeks, one poor woman took both my hands in hers, and exclaimed, 'To whom shall I tell my troubles when you are gone?' To me the words were far more precious than any thanks that could have been offered me.

"It strikes me each time afresh how wonderful the poor are in helping one another, showing so much unselfish devotion, sitting up at night with the sick, looking after a neighbor's children, though they themselves have numbers of their own, and, above all, the childlike submission and resignation with which they take sorrow and trouble when they come upon them.

"During the last three years great efforts have been made to organize means of help in times of distress, and also harmless amusements, to bring some brightness into the lives of these poor people. As regards the first, I have started a fund, with the help of kind friends, for providing of the town during the winter. This fund also provides coals and the loan of blankets for those who most need them. I have been most generously helped by many in the town, and I sincerely trust this support will be continued to me. We now feed, on an average, 250 children twice a week, and care is taken that they are those who need such help. The dinners take place in the Town Hall (kindly lent by the mayor), and consist of soup and pudding, or meat, puddings, pies and stews.

I Am Always Present to Help

in serving the children, and am assisted by many kind ladies in Windsor. As there is nearly always more food provided than is consumed by the children, the surplus is given to a number of poor men out of employment, usually upwards of fifty, who are invited to come in and eat in the hall; these also have tickets, in order to be quite sure that they are not idle vagrants. These dinners commence the first week of January, and are continued till April."

Another kindly effort to cheer lives otherwise cheerless is free concerts. These the Princess described in detail, evidently hoping that other ladies would adopt similar means to brighten the lot of their poor neighbors. Harmonic societies and glee clubs have been easily induced by the Princess to give their services, and she being a skilled pianist, has always taken part in the concerts. They are extremely popular, and the Princess dwells with pleasure on the appreciation which the people have shown of the music are, however, probably the best blessing she has secured for her humble friends. She says: "I had long felt the extreme necessity there was for district nurses for the sick poor, and quite made up my mind, if possible, to establish them. Many and earnest were the conversations I had with some friends on this subject, without whose help I could scarcely have carried out my wish; for at first the obstacles I had to overcome were many, and seemed insurmountable. To begin with, there was the difficulty about money, and the conviction held by many that such a thing was useless, nay more, would be disliked by the poor. We fought our way by slow degrees; a meeting of influential members of the town was called, at which I got permission to engage a nurse for three months as an experiment, after which time, should it succeed, I asked that she might be established permanently. Before the three months were over, not only had the nurse proved herself an absolute necessity, invaluable in every sense of the word, but I was asked to find a second one; and I was enabled, by the generous gifts of friends and others in the town, to raise a fund for the permanent establishment of two district nurses. I am more than rewarded for any part I may have taken in this movement, by the fact that the poor clamor for these nurses, who are beloved for their unselfish devotion, and who bring help and comfort wherever they go.

An Infant Nursery

is another institution in this town which I should like to mention. It is the little crèche. It was started several years ago by a lady in this town, and I have taken a personal active interest in it for the last three years, and I am thankful to say that it is doing real good work. Of course, as for everything else, money is needed, and, though I have been more than generously helped till now, yet, with the winter coming on, the funds at our disposal will be severely strained. It is, therefore, no small source of anxiety to me; and I hope that assistance will still be forthcoming to enable us to go on with our work."

A Recent Public Ceremony

in which the Princess appropriately took a prominent part, was connected with a college for young women in which she took a deep interest. A prominent philanthropist built the college, and also directed the erection of a statue of the Queen in the quadrangle. When it was completed, it was felt that no more suitable person could be chosen to unveil it than the Princess Christian whose interest in every department of the college and its work was conspicuously manifested. Accordingly, with appropriate ceremonies the Princess inaugurated it on December 16 last (See lower Illustration on first page); at the conclusion of the day's exercises she made an address full of sound advice and womanly sympathy to the students, in the course of which she said:

"It is impossible for me to take leave of you without expressing my gratification at having been asked to come among you to-day, and perform the ceremony of unveiling my mother's statue. I note with pleasure the training in the institution is not confined to mere book learning, but that of varied description find a place here as well. It is no longer necessary, as was the case fifteen or twenty years ago, to lay stress on the importance of the higher education of women. It has, on the other hand, rather been a duty to warn against the almost exaggerated views that some are inclined to adopt on this subject. I should rather let a woman never forget that she is a woman, and that her chief attribute and the power she possesses lie in her womanliness. I certainly sympathize in the desire for learning and mental culture; but I do feel that sometimes the ambition which urges many to encroach on man's province causes them to underrate the importance of the many duties, and even privileges, which are given to women alone.

"I do not wish for a moment to suggest that the higher education of women and intellectual cultivation are incompatible with good housekeeping, and that women are of necessity worse wives, mothers or daughters because they have studied Euclid and read Tacitus. I am anxious to impress on you the consideration of how much the success of this great institution must depend on the character and tone which you, its first inmates, impress upon it. Women in England will look to you to ascertain what may be expected from female education in its highest development, and under the most favorable conditions. Be true to your college, your teachers, and your womanhood.

Be Gentle, be Courteous, be Religious; and before many years are passed the anxious wish of the founder, to benefit the women of England by placing within their reach a complete course of education, will have been accomplished, and you will have shown that his bounty has not been expended in vain."

The upper illustration represents the opening ceremonies performed on another day at the inauguration of the college itself. The Queen was induced to attend them, doubtless at her daughter's solicitation. In a country where so much influence is exercised by royalty, the Queen's presence was a matter of great importance. Though it is difficult under a free Republic to understand the existence of such an influence among an intelligent people, the fact that it does exist cannot be overlooked; and, therefore, it is a matter for congratulation that it is beneficently exercised. Royal and imperial persons have been known to set an example of vicious and frivolous life; and other lands besides England have had unhappy experience of such cases. The present increase of intelligence and education, and the consequent transfer of power, first from the monarch to the aristocracy, and now from the aristocracy to the people, bodes ill for the permanence of monarchy; but the prejudice against royalty is to some extent disarmed when the monarch is personally lovable and is sincerely concerned for the welfare of the people. The most inveterate opponent of monarchical government cannot but feel that if all royal persons behaved themselves as does the Princess Christian, royalty would not be altogether a useless burden.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

An Athlete Accepts Christ.—Mr. J. Arthur remarks: "About the finest man I ever knew was an athlete, but he did not know God. He was stricken down with fever. At that time a lady visited him, and told him of Christ, who was longing to save him. As she had ineffectually urged him to accept Christ when it was in his power, he now looked up into her face and said, 'Do you think I would be shabby enough to give up to God the dregs, the last of my days, that I may save my soul, when the devil has had the rest?' But he was shown that it was God's will and command that he should come, even at the eleventh hour, and John M'Farlane yielded to God, his only regret being he had not come to Christ sooner."

A Momentous Epoch.—Mr. Oatts Says: "I remember when the Spirit of the Lord first came very near to me. I felt that I was at one of the most momentous epochs in my life. I worked for God as much then as ever I have done since; all my spare time was given to it. People came to my office and said, 'Mr. Oatts, we never heard such addresses as you are giving!' And yet there were no conversions; I knew that there was something in me that was preventing the blessing from coming. So, going to the Lord one day, I gave myself wholly over to Him, and every day since then I have been near to Him. I am always floating on a full tide of blessing. We may work for the Lord, as we think, but unless He uses us, unless we give over ourselves wholly into His hands to be used by Him, there will be but little effect.'

Witnessing A Marriage.—Mr. T. Canning observes: "The other morning, when I was staying at the house of a minister in Scotland, we were surprised by a loud knock at the door. It proved to be a young man, who inquired if the minister were at home. Being told that he was, he turned away, saying that he would be back in five minutes. He returned within the specified time, but not alone: he brought a young lady with him. Then we discovered that the object of his visit was to be married. As I stood beside the pair, a witness to the ceremony, I thought what a fine picture it was of salvation. When to the question, 'Do you take this woman to be your wedded wife?' he answered, 'I do,' I thought that does not make a marriage; it takes two consenting parties to do so. But when the bride, in answer to a similar question, made the same reply, then it was done. It needed both sides. So with salvation; we have to take Christ as our Bridegroom, and Christ will take us as His Bride. He says, Him that cometh unto Me I will in no wise cast out.'"

A Reclaimed Infidel's Death.—A Friend related: "I was visiting, lately, an avowed infidel. Missionaries were chary of calling on him, for he had made it widely known that he kept a coal-hatchet handy for the special benefit of any missionary or minister who might visit him. A minister and myself thought we would give that man a trial. After earnest prayer we set out for the man's house, and, when we reached it, we knocked, but received no answer. The door was secured by a simple thumb latch, and, pushing it down, I walked right in, and my friend followed. We found the man in bed, dying of decline, and in a most miserable room, unfurnished and dirty; the grate had been taken from the fire-place and sold. I did indeed pity him and the poor little girl, who was his sole attendant. I spoke to him about his poor body, and the miseries he was undergoing, and remarked that he did not seem to have over much in the way of comfort. I slipped some money into the child's hand, telling her to go and get some food, and, when I turned to speak to the man about his soul, he completely broke down. All his boasted infidelity was worth nothing now. Soon he was resting his weary, starved soul on that Saviour whom he had so often reviled. Weak as he was, he was anxious to work for Christ, and he sent for his infidel friends that he might talk to them of Christ, but they would not come, and he had to content himself with praying for them. Not long afterwards he died a glorious death, praising that God who had not rejected him, when he sought Him even at the eleventh hour."

A Blasphemer's Conversion.—Mr. Cruikshanks related: "There lived in the north of Scotland an old man, who, before his conversion, was notorious for the bad language which he habitually used. At a time of revival he was converted. When it became known, many people watched him to see how he would bear himself, and if he would be able to overcome his besetting sin. On one occasion some people heard him use language which they did not like, and at once they began to ask themselves and each other if he were really converted. The minister was informed of their suspicions, and he, soon afterwards meeting the new convert, asked him, 'John, are you converted?' 'Yes,' he replied. 'Well, tell me all about it; how it happened!' 'Well,' the old man answered, 'it was just this way: I did all I could, and the Lord did the rest.' 'Ah,' thought the minister, 'I am afraid these people were right, and you are not converted. But,' he continued, 'John, tell me what you did?' 'Oh, Christ saved me, and I did all I could to hinder Him.' That answer would not have been given by any but a saved man."

Capitulation at Last.—A Friend Relates the following: "I was visited by a companion who did not know of my conversion, but being very much troubled about religious matters he came to me to see if I could help him. I told him I was not learned in doctrine, but I could tell him about Christ, and this I did, urging him to accept Jesus as his Saviour. He was much affected, but did not decide. Next day I had a long talk with him, only to find that he had hardened his heart. After that he carefully avoided me, but once when I was preaching I met him. 'Man,' I said, 'have no more of this waiting, but come to Christ.' That night God touched his heart. He fairly broke down and wept, but still he would not sue for salvation, He went away unsaved. About two years passed, and one day I received a letter from him saying that he had at last come to Christ. He was in the habit of spending his Sundays drinking, but one Sunday the thought came vividly to him, 'How am I going to spend eternity?' He cried aloud for mercy, accepted Christ, and gave himself to His work. And now he is a successful preacher of the gospel."

A Well-spent Shilling.—Miss Cameron Relates: "Eighteen months ago, in one of our cottage meetings, a drunkard was brought to Jesus' feet. A few hours before he came in, he went to a young cripple girl, who was a Christian, and asked her if she would give him a shilling to get his dinner, for he was starving. The girl knew where her hard-earned money would go if she gave it to him, and she was not very able to spare it. She considered for a moment what she should do, for the giving up of the shilling meant that she must go without her own dinner; then, naming him, she said, 'I will give you the shilling if you will come to our meeting to-night.' He readily promised, glad to get away with the money. Meeting time arrived, and the girl's mother, hearing what her daughter had done, was determined that he should keep his word, and as the time went on, and the man made no appearance she went to the saloon in search of him, She found him there, and together they entered the meeting. At the close I asked him if he would like to sign the pledge; he replied that he would, but still looked dissatisfied. 'You want something more,' I said, 'I believe nothing short of Jesus Himself will satisfy you. Will you take Him to reign as king over you?' 'That I will,' was the earnest reply. We got on our knees, and there that poor unlettered man gave himself to Christ. From that night he has lived a most consistent and useful and beautiful life."

THE VEIL OF MODESTY,

Dr. Talmage's Fifth Sermon to THE WOMEN OF AMERICA.

Preached Last Sunday Morning, February 5, 1888.

IF you will accept my arm I will escort you into a throne-room. In this fifth sermon of the series of sermons there are certain womanly excellencies which I wish to commend, but instead of putting them in dry abstraction, I present you their impersonation in one who seldom gets sermonic recognition. We stand amid

The Palaces of Shushan.

The pinnacles are aflame with the morning light. The columns rise festooned and wreathed, the wealth of empires flashing from the grooves; the ceilings adorned with images of bird and beast, and scenes of prowess and conquest. The walls are hung with shields, and emblazoned until it seems that the whole round of splendors is exhausted. Each arch is a mighty leap of architectural achievement. Golden stars shining down on glowing arabesque. Hangings of embroidered work, in which mingle the blueness of the sky, the greeness of the grass, and the whiteness of the sea-foam. Tapestries hung on silver rings, wedding together the pillars of marble. Pavilions reaching out in every direction. These for repose, filled with luxuriant couches, in which weary limbs sink until all fatigue is submerged. Amazing spectacle! It seems as if a billow of celestial glory had dashed clear over heaven's battlements upon this metropolis of Persia.

In connection with this palace there is a garden, where the mighty men of foreign lands are Seated at a Banquet.

Under the spread of oak and linden and acacia the tables are arranged. The breath of honeysuckle and frankincense fills the air. The waters of Eulæus filling the urns, and sweating outside the rim in flashing beads amid the traceries. Wine from the royal vats of Ispahan and Shiraz, in bottles of tinged shell, and lily shaped cups of silver, and flagons and tankards of solid gold. The music rises higher, and the revelry breaks out into wilder transport, and the wine has flushed the cheek and touched the brain, and louder than all other voices are the hiccough of the inebriates, the gabble of fools, and the song of the drunkards. In another part of the palace, is entertaining the princesses of Persia at a banquet. Drunken Ahasuerus says to his servants: "You go out and fetch Vashti from that banquet with the women, and bring her to this banquet with the men, and let me display her beauty." The servants immediately start to obey the king's command; but there was a rule in Oriental society that no woman might appear in public without having her face veiled. Yet here was a mandate that no one dare dispute, demanding that Vashti come in unveiled before the multitude. However, there was in Vashti's soul a principle more regal than Ahasuerus, more brilliant than the gold of Shushan, of more wealth than the realm of Persia, which commanded her to disobey this order of the king; and so all the righteousness, holiness and rises up into one sublime refusal. She says: "I will not go into the banquet unveiled." Of course Ahasuerus was infuriated; and Vashti, robbed of her position and her estate, is driven forth in poverty and ruin, to suffer the scorn of a nation, and yet to receive the applause of after generations who shall rise up to admire this martyr to kingly insolence. Well, the last vestige of that feast is gone; the last garland has faded; the last arch has fallen; the last tankard has been destroyed, and Shushan is a ruin; but as long as the world stands there will be multitudes of men and women, familiar with the Bible, who will come into this picture-gallery of God, and admire the Divine portrait of Vashti the queen, Vashti the veiled, Vashti the sacrifice, Vashti the silent.

Queen Vashti

In the first place, I want you to look upon Vashti the queen. A blue ribbon rayed with white, drawn around her forehead, indicated

Her Queenly Position.

It was no small honor to be queen in such a realm as that. Hark to the rustle of her robes! See the blaze of her jewels! And yet, my friends, it is not necessary to have palace and regal robes in order to be queenly. When I see a woman with stout faith in God, putting her foot upon all meanness and selfishness and godless display, going right forward to serve Christ and the race by a grand and glorious service, I say: "That woman is a queen," and the ranks of heaven look over the battlements upon the coronation; and whether she come up from the shanty on the commons or the mansion of the fashionable square, I greet her with the shout: "All hail! Queen Vashti!" What glory was there on the brow of Mary of Scotland, or Elizabeth of England, or Margaret of France, or Catherine of Russia, compared with the worth of some of our Christian mothers, many of them gone into glory?—or of Ruth, who toiled under a tropical sun for poor old, helpless Naomi?—or of Mrs. Adoniram Judson, who kindled the lights of salvation amid the darkness of Burmah?—or of Mrs Hemans, who poured out her holy soul in words which will forever be associated with hunter's horn, and captive's chain, and bridal hour, and lute's throb, and curfew's knell, at the dying day?—and scores and hundreds of women, unknown on earth, who have given water to the thirsty, and bread to the hungry, and medicine to the sick, and smiles to the discouraged—their footsteps heard along dark lane, and in Government hospital, and in alms-house corridor, and by prison-gate? There may be no royal robe—there may be no palatial surroundings. She does not need them; for all charitable men will unite with the crackling lips of fever-struck hospital and plague-blotched lazaretto in greeting her as she passes: "Hail, Queen Vashti." Among the

are the female day-school teachers of this land. I put upon their brow the coronet. They are the sisters and the daughters of our towns and cities, selected out of a vast number of applicants, because of their especial intellectual and moral endowments. There are in none of your homes women more worthy. These persons, some of them, come out from affluent homes, choosing teaching as a useful profession; others, finding that father is older than he used to be, and that his eyesight and strength are not as good as once, go to teaching to lighten his load. But I tell you the history of the majority of the female teachers in the public schools when I say: "Father is dead." After the estate was settled, the family, that were comfortable before, are thrown on their own resources.

It is hard for men to earn a living in this day, but it is harder for women—their health not so rugged, their arms not so strong, their opportunities fewer. These persons, after tremblingly going through the ordeal of an examination as to their qualifications to teach, half-bewildered step over the sill of the public school to do two things—instruct the young and earn their own bread.

Her Work is Wearing to the last degree. The management of forty or fifty fidgety and intractable children, the suppression of their vices and the development of their excellencies, the management of rewards and punishments, the sending of so many bars of soap and fine-tooth combs on benignant ministry, the breaking of so many wild colts for the harness of life, sends her home at night weak, neuralgic, unstrung, so that of all the weary people in your cities for five nights of the week, there are none more weary than the public-school teachers. Now, for God's sake, give them a fair chance. Throw no obstacles in the way. If they come out ahead in the race, cheer them. If you want to smite any, smite the male teachers; they can take up the cudgels for themselves. But keep your hands off of defenceless women. Father may be dead but there are enough brothers left to demand and see that they get justice.

Within a stone's throw of this building there died years ago one of the principals of our public schools. She had been twenty-five years at that post. She had left the touch of refinement on a multitude of the young. She had, out of her slender purse, given literally thousands of dollars for the destitute who came under her observation as a school teacher. A deceased sister's children were thrown upon her hands, and she took care of them. She was a kind mother to them, while she mothered a whole school. Worn out with nursing in the sick and dying room of one of the household, she herself came to die. She closed the school-book and at the same time the volume of her Christian fidelity.

Queens Are All Such,

and whether the world acknowledges them or not, heaven acknowledges them. When Scarron the wit and ecclesiastic, as poor as he was brilliant, was about to marry Madame de Maintenon, he was asked by the notary what he proposed to settle upon Mademoiselle. The reply was: "Immortality! the names of the wives of kings die with them: the name of the wife of Scarron will live always." In a higher and better sense, upon all women who do their duty God will settle Immortality! Not the immortality of earthly fame, which is mortal, but the immortality celestial. And they shall reign for ever and ever! Oh, the opportunity which every woman has of being a queen! The longer I live the more I admire good womanhood. And I have come to form my opinion of the character of a man by his appreciation or non-appreciation of woman. If a man have a depressed idea of womanly character he is a bad man, and there is no exception to the rule.

The writings of Goethe can never have any such attractions for me as Shakespeare, because nearly all the womanly characters of the great German have some kind of turpitude. There is his Mariana, with her clandestine scheming; and his Mignon, of evil parentage, yet worse than her ancestors; and his Theresa, the brazen; and his Aurelia, of many intrigues; and his Philina, the termigant; and his Melina, the tarnished; and his baroness; and his Countess; and there is seldom a womanly character in all his voluminous writings that would be worthy of residence in a respectable coal cellar, yet pictured and dramatized, and emblazoned till all the literary world is compelled to see. No! No! Give me William Shakespeare's idea of woman; and I see it in Desdemona, and Cordelia, and Rosalind, and Imogen, and Helena, and Hermione, and Viola, and Isabella, and Sylvia, and Perdita, all of them with enough faults to prove them human, but enough kindly characteristics to give us the author's idea of womanhood; his Lady Macbeth only a dark background to bring out the supreme loveliness of his other female characters.

Again, I want you to consider

Vashti the Veiled.

Had she appeared before Ahasuerus and his court on that day, with her face uncovered, she would have shocked all the delicacies of Oriental society, and the very men who in their intoxication demanded that she come, in their sober moments would have despised her. As some flowers seem to thrive best in the dark lane and in the shadow, and where the sun does not seem to reach them, so God appoints to most womanly natures a retiring and unobtrusive spirit. God once in a while does call an Isabella to a throne, or a Miriam to strike the timbrel at the front of a host, or a Marie Antoinette to quell a French mob, or a Deborah to stand at the front of an armed battalion, crying out: "Up! Up! This is the day in which the Lord will deliver Sisera into thy hands." And when women are called to such out-door work, and to such heroic positions, God prepares them for it; and they have iron in their soul, and lightnings in their eye, and whirlwinds in their breath, and the borrowed strength of the Lord Omnipotent in their right arm.

But these are exceptions. Generally, Dorcas would rather make a garment for the poor boy; Rebecca would rather fill the trough for the camels; Hannah would rather make a coat for Samuel; the Hebrew maid would rather give a prescription for Naaman's leprosy; the woman of Sarepta would rather gather a few sticks to cook a meal for famished Elijah; Phœbe would rather carry a letter for the inspired Apostle; Mother Lois would rather educate Timothy in the Scriptures. When I see a woman going about her daily duty—with cheerful dignity presiding at the table; with kind and gentle, but firm, discipline presiding in the nursery; going out into the world without any blast of trumpets, following in the footsteps of Him who went about doing good—I say: "This is Vashti with a veil on." But when I see loud-voiced, with a tongue of infinite clitter-clatter, with arrogant look, passing through the street with a masculine swing, gayly arrayed in a very hurricane of millinery, I cry out, "Vashti has lost her veil." When I see a woman struggling for political preferment, and rejecting the duties of home as insignificant, and thinking the offices of wife, mother and daughter of no importance, and trying to force her way on up into conspicuity, I say: "Ah, what a pity: Vashti has lost her veil." When I see a woman of comely features, and of adroitness of intellect, and endowed with all that the schools can do for one, and of high social position, yet moving in society with superciliousness and hauteur, as though she would have people know their place, and an undefined combination of giggle and strut and rodomontade, endowed with allopathic quantities of talk, but only homeopathic infinitesimals of sense, the terror of dry-goods clerks and railroad conductors, discoverers of significant meanings in plain conversation, prodigies of badness and innuendo—I say: "Vashti has lost her veil."

But do not misinterpret what I say into a depreciation of the work of those glorious and who will not be understood till after they are dead, women like Susan B. Anthony, who are giving their life for the betterment of the condition of their sex. Those of you who think that women have, under the laws of this country, an equal chance with men, are ignorant of the laws. A gentleman writes me from Maryland, saying: "Take the laws of this State. A man and wife start out in life, full of hope in every respect, by their joint efforts, and, as is frequently the case, through the economic ideas of the wife, succeed in accumulating a fortune, but they have no children; they reach old age together, and then the husband dies. What does the law of this State do then? It says to the widow, 'Hands off your late husband's property; do not touch it; the State will find others to whom it will give that, but you, the widow, must not touch it, only so much as will keep life within your aged body, that you may live to see those others enjoy what rightfully should be your own.' And the State seeks the relatives of the deceased husband, whether they be near or far, whether they were ever heard of before or not, and transfers to them, singly or collectively, the estate of the deceased husband and living widow."

Now, that is a specimen of unjust laws in all the States concerning womanhood. Instead of flying off to the discussion as to whether or not the giving of the right of voting to woman will correct these laws, let me say to men, be gallant enough, and fair enough, and honest enough, and righteous enough, and God-loving enough to correct these wrongs against women by your own masculine vote. Do not wait for woman suffrage to come, if it ever does come, but, so far as you can touch ballot-boxes and legislatures, and congresses, begin the reformation. But until justice is done to your sex by the laws of all the States, and women of America take the platforms and the pulpits, no honorable man will charge Vashti with having lost her veil.

Again: I want you this morning to consider

Vashti the Sacrifice.

Who is this that I see coming out of that palace-gate of Shushan? It seems to me that I have seen her before. She comes homeless, houseless, friendless, trudging along with a broken heart. Who is she? It is Vashti the sacrifice. Oh, what a change it was from regal position to a wayfarer's crust! A little while ago approved and sought for; now none so poor as to acknowledge her acquaintanceship. Vashti the sacrifice. Ah, you and I have seen it many a time. Here is a home empalaced with beauty. All that refinement and books and wealth can do for that home has been done; but Ahasuerus, the husband and the father, is taking hold on paths of sin. He is gradually going down. After a while he will flounder and struggle like a wild beast in the hunter's net—further away from God, further away from the right. Soon the bright apparel of the children will turn to rags; soon the household song will become the sobbing of a broken heart. The old story over again. Brutal Centaurs feast of Lapithae. The house full of outrage and cruelty and abomination, while trudging forth from the palace gate are Vashti and her children. There are homes represented in this house this morning that are in danger of such a breaking up. O, Ahasuerus, that you should stand in a home, by a dissipated life destroying the peace and comfort of that home. God forbid that your children should ever have to wring their hands, and have people point their finger at them as they pass down the street, and say: "There goes a drunkard's child." God forbid that the little feet should ever have to trudge the path of poverty and wretchedness. God forbid that any evil spirit, born of the wine-cup or the brandy-flask, should come forth and uproot that garden, and, with a blasting, blistering, all-consuming curse, shut for ever the palace gate against Vashti and the children.

Oh, the women and the men of sacrifice are going to take the brightest coronals of heaven! This woman of the text gave up palatial residence, gave up all for what she considered right. Sacrifice! Is there anything more sublime? A steamer, called the Prairie Belle, burning on the Mississippi River, Bludso, the engineer, declared he would keep the bow of the boat to the shore till all were off, and he kept his promise. At his post, scorched and blackened, he perished, but he saved all the passengers. Two verses of pathetic poetry describe the scene, but the verses are a little rough, and so I change a word or two:

"Through the hot, black breath of the burning
Jim Bludso's voice was heard.
And they all had trust in his stubbornness,
And knew he would keep his word.
And sure's you're born they all got off
Afore the smoke-stacks fell;
And Bludso's ghost went up above,
In the smoke of the Prairie Belle.
He weren't no saint, but at Judgment
I'd run my chance with Jim,
Longside of some pious gentleman
That wouldn't shake hands with him.
He'd seen his duty, a dead sure thing,
And went for it there and then,
And Christ is not going to be too hard
On a man that died for men."

Once more: I want you to look at Vashti the silent. You do not hear any outcry from this woman as she goes forth from the palace gate. From the very dignity of her nature you know there will be no vociferation. Sometimes in life it is necessary to make a retort; sometimes in life it is necessary to resist; but there are crises when the most triumphant thing to do is to keep silence. The philosopher, confident in his newly discovered principle, waited for the coming of more intelligent generations, willing that men should laugh at the lightning-rod and cotton-gin and steamboat—waiting for long years through the scoffing of philosophical schools, in grand and Magnificent Silence.

Galileo, condemned by mathematicians and monks and cardinals, caricatured everywhere, yet waiting and watching with his telescope to see the coming up of stellar reinforcements, when the stars in their courses would fight for the Copernican system; then sitting down in complete blindness and deafness to wait for the coming on of the generations who would build his monument and bow at his grave. The reformer, execrated by his contemporaries, fastened in a pillory, the slow fires of public contempt burning under him, ground under the cylinders of the printing-press, yet calmly waiting for the day when purity of soul and heroism of character will get the sanction of earth and the plaudits of heaven. Affliction, enduring without any complaint the sharpness of the pang, and the violence of the storm, and the heft of the chain, and the darkness of the night—waiting until a divine hand shall be put forth to soothe the pang, and hush the storm, and release the captive. A wife abused, persecuted, and a perpetual exile from every earthly comfort—waiting, waiting, until the Lord shall gather up His dear children in a heavenly home, and no poor Vashti will ever be thrust out from the palace gate. Jesus, in silence, and answering not a word, drinking the gall, bearing the Cross, in prospect of the rapturous consummation when

"Angels thronged His chariot wheel,
And bore Him to His throne:
Then swept their golden harps and sung,
The glorious work is done."

An Arctic explorer found a ship floating helplessly about among the icebergs, and going on board he found that the captain was frozen at his logbook, and the helmsman was frozen at the wheel, and the men on the lookout were frozen in their places. That was awful, but magnificent. All the Arctic blasts and all the icebergs could not drive them from their duty. Theirs was

A Silence Louder Than Thunder.

And this old ship of a world has many at their posts in the awful chill of neglect, and frozen of the world's scorn, and their silence shall be the eulogy of the skies and be rewarded long after this weather-beaten craft of a planet shall have made its last voyage.

The Palace Gate of Heaven!

You can endure the hardships and the privations and the cruelties and the misfortunes of this life, if you can only gain admission there. Through the blood of the everlasting covenant, you go through those gates, or never go at all. When Rome was besieged, the daughter of its ruler saw the golden bracelets on the left arms of the enemy, and she sent word to them that she would betray her city and surrender it to them, if they would only give her those bracelets on their left arms. They accepted the proffer, and by night this daughter of the ruler of the city opened one of the gates. The army entered, and, keeping their promise, threw upon her their bracelets, and also their shields, until under the weight she died. Alas, that all through the ages the same folly has been repeated, and for the trinkets and glittering treasures of this world men and women swing open the portals of their immortal soul for an everlasting surrender, and die under the shining submergement.

Through the rich grace of our Lord Jesus Christ may you be enabled to imitate the example of Rachel and Hannah and Abigail and Deborah and Mary and Vashti. Amen!

A PHYSICIAN'S MISTAKE.

IN the current number of *Thy Healer is the following report of a testimony recently given at Bethshan by a Mr. Hobbs: "Bless the Lord for what He has done for me in respect of healing. I was taken ill last September twelve months, with blood poisoning. In two or three days I became delirious, and was so for six weeks. My life was trembling in the balance for several weeks. The doctor has told me since that he expected, when coming to see me, to see the blinds drawn; but my wife wrote to Bethshan, and asked the prayers of the Lord's people in my behalf, and from that time I began to get better. But there was a wound on my back that would not finally heal. The doctor said it would never heal. 'You will always,' he said, 'have some little trouble with that.' I spoke to another doctor. He said, 'You must have it burnt out.' I had it burnt, but it appeared again, and I had it burnt again. After this, I was at Mr. Allen's meeting, and was there led to trust the Lord for healing, and He has healed me. He has done for me what the doctors could not do."

A WARNING SIGNAL AT SEA.

A DISCUSSION of some interest to seamen has been carried on in the press as to the defects of the code of flag signals, by which conversation is carried on between passing vessels at sea. Instances have been cited in which a captain, who perceived that a vessel is in peril, has been unable to warn her captain, because there is no signal in the code expressing the warning he wished to give. One instance is that of the Guion steamship Arizona, which some eight years ago ran into an iceberg on the banks of Newfoundland. It is stated that she could have received warning of her danger on the previous day, had there been a signal which denoted that ice was ahead. The Anchoria, of the Anchor Line, which had sighted the iceberg, passed the Arizona about twelve hours before the accident, and the captain of the Anchoria, finding there was no signal in the code having reference to icebergs, suffered the Arizona to pass unwarned, and she afterward struck with such force that but for her water-tight bulkheads she must have sunk. The reply is made, that in that and similar cases, though there may be no specific signal, there is a general one which may be used with advantage. It is the signal, "You are running into danger," which is well known and often used. The same reply is often made to cavillers who insist that Bible teachings and warnings are of no use in the nineteenth century, as the conditions of life and the dangers and temptations are so different from those of the day in which the various inspired authors wrote. There can no temptation beset a man, no evil befall him, for which there is not an appropriate word of warning or which is not covered by some clear word of caution or direction in the Bible. (II Tim. 3 : 16.)

A CHINAMAN'S PRAYERS.

ONE of the most remarkable proofs of the divine origin of Christianity, is its adaptation to the condition of men of all stations and nationalities and the similarity of its effects upon all. An instance of this characteristic is mentioned in a letter from Mr. Hager, of Hong Kong, to the Missionary Herald. He says:

"We have several inquirers who are studying the Bible with us every evening, and one of these is a man who I think has a remarkably clear conception of what a Christian ought to be. It is a joy to instruct him further in the truths of the gospel. In telling me his experience a few days since, he said that he firmly believed the gospel, but that when he prayed he often felt that God was not present, and he thought that one ought to be conscious of the full presence of God before entering the church. 'Sometimes,' said he, 'I have felt that God was very near me, and I always desire to feel in this way.' As I listened to his simple and honest testimony of how he prayed that God might protect him during a typhoon which raged here a month ago, and how that prayer was answered in a marvellous manner, I could not but feel that God had revealed some things to this poor heathen soul, which many Christians of our home lands had to learn: namely, the confidence that a child of God may have in the Father's care. This man heard the gospel for the first time last year, when I was living in a Chinese inn, and some three or four months ago he came again into the chapel and heard me speak. Thinking that a tract upon the religions of China would be an excellent thing to give him, I gave him one, with which he afterward returned, and hearing the gospel more perfectly from our helper, he has been growing into the Christian life ever since.

A DYING MORMON BOY'S SONG.

IN a letter received from the Rev. J. D. Gillian, the devoted worker among the Mormons of Utah, he says: "All our mission schools are opened with singing gospel hymns, and scripture reading, followed with prayer, the school joining in the Lord's Prayer; so that thus the Mormons are taught spiritual songs, the fruit of which labor manifests itself in various ways. Here is one: Some years ago there entered one of our schools a youngest, 'ruined son' of a polygamous family, after he had been expelled from their own district school. Three winters he came to us and never caused us the least particle of trouble.

"At the close of the last winter of his attendance, he was taken suddenly ill with that dread disease, diphtheria, and, with three others of the family, carried to the grave.

"Their next door neighbor tells me that just before the spark of life fled, this young man opened his eyes and sung

> "Rock of Ages, cleft for me,
> Let me hide myself in Thee," and then closed them again, peacefully passing away.

"He never heard such songs in their Mormon meetings, and who knows but that the blessed Rock of Ages had revealed Himself to that poor boy, and at that last moment glory opened his lips in song."

A PRISONER'S DREAD.

RECENT scandals show that persons who lead double lives, indulging in secret sin while attending church regularly and professing to be strictly moral in their habits, run a terrible risk of exposure and disgrace. The fact that many do escape, however, is used by Satan to encourage them to go on in their hypocrisy, and they forget that a day is coming when exposure will be inevitable, and when those whom they love and whose love and respect they cherish will know them as they are. (Matt. 10: 26.)

An incident related by an ex-prison warden conveys a faint idea of the suffering such exposure will involve. He states that among the prisoners at one time under his care was a man who astonished him by declining to avail himself of the much coveted privilege of working in the garden of the prison on the Island. This privilege was accorded to prisoners as a reward for good behavior, and was much prized. This particular prisoner, however, declined it, and being pressed for his reason hesitated a moment, but finally told it. He had a wife and two children, who were ignorant of his being in prison. In the small yellow house, he said, directly opposite his cell window and just across the river where he would have to work, should he go outside, they were then living. He had watched his children all through the summer, playing in a vacant lot of land on the river-bank directly under his window, and so near him that he could hear the voices; and he could see his wife passing in and out of the house, or sitting at her window, little dreaming that he had been so near them for almost two years. His wife supposed he was in the West trying to obtain work, while he was really in prison for stealing. His feelings were respected, and he was allowed to serve out his sentence without being discovered. That prisoner said that his punishment had been aggravated by the sight of his dear ones so near him yet so separated by his sin. He thought he should die of shame if they knew where he was.

A PARISIAN WIFE BEATER.

AMONG the attendants of one of the McAll Mission stations in Paris was a woman whose dress was of the poorest, but it and the wearer were scrupulously clean. She was somewhat irregular in attendance, and being spoken to on the subject, said that her husband was violently opposed to her coming, and at times forbade it entirely. He was a drunkard, who beat her severely, and she was in terror of his outbreaks. She was advised to pray for him, and she said she did so continually.

"One night," says Mr. McAll, "he came home better disposed than usual, and, to the great surprise of his wife, he said to her, 'I am going to the meeting to-night with you; make haste!' The poor woman could hardly believe her ears. She prepared herself without delay, and all the way to the meeting she was praying inwardly that God would touch his heart. He listened very attentively, and seemed much interested. Going home his wife said nothing, for she was afraid of weakening the impression, but she prayed inwardly. The following evening he came back early and sober. While they were at supper, he asked where was the meeting that night, and, being told, he said he would go with her again. The poor woman could not imagine what it all meant. She did not dare hope that he was sincere. However, it was so, and when the service was over she said to me, 'This is my husband.' In shaking hands with me, he told me that with God's help he was a changed man, and had renounced his evil habits; he had asked pardon for his past life, and felt he had received it, and now he was determined to live for the Lord.

"I went to see them a fortnight ago, in their little room with its scanty furniture, but while I was there I could feel that it was sanctified by the presence of the Lord. He told me that now he was happy, that he had found the Saviour, and that his only desire was that his son, who is married and living in another part of the town, should be converted also. The wife was beaming with joy, her face still very pale, but no more sadness there; a quiet and extremely peaceful expression had taken its place."

LIFE IN THE ZENANA.

A STIRRING appeal for consecrated workers for India is made by Miss Easton, in a letter to the Missionary Link. She describes her own work in the homes of the people, and draws a touching picture of the benighted condition of the wives and mothers, who, being uneducated, and being kept in seclusion, are often mere nonentities in the home. In the course of her letter she says:

"It, a thing, is about the best description of her. Indeed, that is literally the way in which she is described in sacred books, unless she be fortunate enough to have a son, in which case she is known as his mother. It is sad, but true, that during all her early married life a woman is usually of not much more consequence in a family than a piece of furniture. After she has had children and becomes mistress of the house, she has some privileges that for years she never dreams of. To a good wife [as wives are esteemed there] her husband is a god, to whom she bows down and worships. I am led to this thought in connection with the women of this country by a conversation with my Munshi this morning, an unusually intelligent man, well educated, a tutor in one of the colleges; but his wife is a mere stick. He has a gentle disposition; so he is not unkind to her, but simply does not consider her at all; and how can he? While he has been out in the world, seeing its ways, reading its books, and getting his mind filled and furnished, she has been shut up in one room, or at the most has had the liberty of two or three in the same house; she never goes out, never sees anybody but her mother-in-law, who is more ignorant and superstitious than she. Until her baby came her life was a burden to her; now she has him to care for and love, and she is happy, but between husband and wife there is no ground of intercourse. What we need is more consecrated young women from home, to come out, and go in and out among these women, taking to them the work of God, helping them, lifting them up to a higher plane of living, comforting them 'with the comfort wherewith we ourselves are comforted of God.' They need just what American women would need under the same circumstances."

THE PROPHETS AND THE APOCALYPSE.

By Rev. N. West, D. D.

Difference Between Three Eras of Prophecy—The Discrimination of the Ends and Ages—The Essential Union of Prophecy—Israel in the Apocalypse—A Prominent Subject of all Prophecy—Her Final Triumph Assured—The Tableau of the End.

I HAVE said already* that the general and characteristic difference between pre-exile prophecy on the one hand, and exile and post-exile prophecy on the other, so far as the Ages and Ends are concerned, is that the former has only One End, One Advent and One Age succeeding that End, while the latter develop this End and this Age, first of all, into two Ends and Ages, and next into the last End in all cases being the Endless one. The whole future, undiscriminated, is seen in One End and Age in the earlier prophetic word. Turn to Isaiah, chapter eleventh, as a single illustration of this. Both Advents in that chapter are viewed as one, the whole future of grace and glory being foreshortened and seen as it were in perspective. The End or Epoch of Messiah's appearing is all-comprehensive of the whole development of the kingdom of God on earth. The prophet does not distinguish between a Parousia in humility and a Parousia in glory, but blends both, and describes the whole work of Messiah in one picture, without intervals, as a work complete. And so we find it in general everywhere. All the sufferings of the "Servant of Jehovah," and the glories after these, are commingled and focalized in the one End, and radiate into the age succeeding.

First comes the "Day of the Lord," then the Messianic Age, Israel redeemed and glorious in front of it bringing life to the nations. In that Age, under the "New Covenant," sin is atoned and the sinner is pardoned, justified, renewed and sanctified, through faith in Messiah, the Spirit is poured out, the Gentiles are gathered, and showers of blessing fall in their season. The times of reviving and restitution enter history. The knowledge of the Lord is universal. The people are all righteous.

is transfigured, as is also the Holy Land. The precious things, the wealth of all nations, the glory of the Gentiles stream in to adorn it. The Temple is rebuilt in splendor unsurpassed. The Holy City is Jehovah's throne and dwelling-place. The land becomes fruitful. War ceases. Idolatry disappears. All nations are at peace, and man and nature too. The curse is gone. A painless, tearless, deathless state exists. The veil is removed from both Israel and the Gentiles. The Bridegroom rejoices over the Bride. Messiah reigns on David's throne forever and ever. A new Heaven and a new Earth crowns all. All belongs to the One End and One Age following it, in pre-exile prophecy.

But I showed you, also, how, in exile and post-exile prophecy this great and complex future began to be discriminated into various Ends and Ages, and how, by observing this discrimination, and by the help of New Testament light, reflected on the Old, we came to discover, not only our own present age, but the Millennial Age following, the "Many Days," of Ezekiel 38:8. And now, allow me one brief word as to Israel in the Apocalypse.

That wonderful book is capable of many "applications," but only of one organic "interpretation," based upon the entire unity and analogy of prophecy. We may "apply" its symbols to the times of early Pagan persecution, and also to later Papal persecutions. This is the figurative "application" based upon the equation of "Israel" with the "Christian Church." The Apocalypse was a book of comfort to the early Church. It was a comfort also to the witnesses of Christ in the Middle Age, and during the Reformation. But as surely as Israel "abides," Israel and Daniel's "people" are not the "Church," so surely is Israel the key for the true and final interpretation of the closing prophecy of the New Testament. It sums up in itself all the unfulfilled predictions respecting that chosen, predestined race. You meet Israel everywhere. The very announcement of the Theme of the book, viz., the Lord's Second Coming, refers us to Israel. "Behold, He cometh with clouds, and every eye shall see Him; they also that pierced Him" (Rev. 1:7), i. e., the Jewish nation, as Zechariah assures us. The text is a combination of two passages, one from Zechariah, the other from Daniel, both in strict textual connection in the prophets with Israel's deliverance at the Second Advent of Messiah.

You meet Israel again in the promise made to the Philadelphian Church (Rev. 3:7–11), by Him who is the "Lion of Judah's tribe," and has "the key of David."

Israel shall be Converted in the last time, and in connection with the Coming of Christ. Again, you meet Israel in the Sealing of the 144,000 out of all their tribes (Rev. 7:1–8), just before the Trumpet Judgments occur, and the Tribulation begins. Again, you meet Israel in Chapters 10, 11 and 12, chapters that place you in the very midst of Ezekiel's Valley of Dry Bones, and show you the prophetic word, and the Spirit of Life from God, with attending earthquake, beginning that work of spiritual, personal and national conversion and resurrection foretold by the prophets. The oath-taking Angel of the Covenant, Solar-faced and rainbow-crowned, whose shoulders are robed in cloud, and feet like pillars of fire, reminding you of the Pillar of Cloud in the Wilderness, and Him who dwelt in it, comes to His people again. The "little book" is the matter of the testimony of the "two witnesses." Their 1260 days of witness is the first half of Daniel's 70th week. The slaughter of the witnesses is in the middle of that week, and is the first public persecuting act of the last Antichrist. The succeeding 1260 days is the second half of that week, the time of the tribulation.

And again you see Israel triumphant in 15:3, 4, singing "the song of Moses, the servant of God, and the song of the Lamb," blending their first and last deliverances in one, and declaring that the time for national Christianity on earth has come, now that and a nation converted to Christ. What you see in 14:20 and 19:11–21 is the Armageddon conflict, closed out in the valley of Jehoshaphat, outside Jerusalem, the Lord Himself descending from "Heaven Opened," to destroy the Antichrist, bind Satan, raise the faithful dead, and begin the "thousand years'" blessed kingdom of glory on earth (Rev. 10:1–7.) And what you see in Rev. 20:9 is the "Beloved City," Jerusalem, restored, the home of the Daughter of Zion, which, for a "thousand years," has enjoyed the uninterrupted peace and glory and joy foretold by the prophets.

He who cannot see Israel here in this book, as distinct from the "Church" and the "Nations," will see nothing. After the 6th verse of the 1st chapter, in the 6th of the seven Epistles to the churches, between the 6th and 7th seals; between the 6th and 7th trumpets; between the 6th and 7th vials, in the wilderness here, on Mount Zion there, a worshipping part in the city now, a multitude pressing into the land from the East, a slaughter, a victory, a triumph, a glory, an effect on the nations, and all at the second coming of Christ; I say that he who cannot see this will see nothing! It is the eschatology of all the prophets. It is the eschatology of Christ. It is the eschatology of the Apostles—one eschatology from first to last, built and based on the one eternal plan and purpose of God with respect to Israel, an interpretation grounded in the unity, continuity, organic structure and genetic development of all prophecy, divine, infallibly sure, a light forever.

Look at it and see if it is not so. John has nothing the prophets have not. I have shown you this. He has nothing Christ has not, for the Apocalypse was given Him of God, and does not mean a literary production, but is as He comes the Second Time, to His covenant people, to fulfil the word of His promise to them, restore their state, and give them the kingdom. He has nothing the Apostles have not. His Eschatology is the same as that of Peter and Paul. Peter binds Israel's national repentance and the Second Coming of Christ together. (Acts 3:19–21.) He tells of scoffers in the last days, of the world-judgment, the day of the Lord, the resurrection and the glory, the visible kingdom, and points to the New Heaven and Earth. (1 Pet. 3:1–14.)

Paul also takes up each eschatological point and discusses it separately. In II Thess. 2:8 you have the Antichrist and the Second Coming of the Lord, but nothing is said of Israel. In Romans, chapter 11, you find Israel's conversion and the Second Coming, but nothing said about Antichrist. In 1 Cor. 15:12–57, you hear him discussing the first resurrection at the Second Coming, but not a word about either Israel or Antichrist. In Romans 8:17–23, you find him dilating upon the glorified inheritance on earth, to be received at the redemption of the body from the grave, when Christ comes, but nothing about any of the other points.

Now put all together, combine all that he says in one picture; what you get as a total result is Antichrist destroyed, Israel redeemed, the saints raised, the inheritance glorified and the Millennial interval between the Coming of Christ to assume the kingdom, and then the remote "End," when Christ surrenders the kingdom to the Father "that God may be all in all." 1 Cor. 15:24—in short, you get precisely what John has given you in the Apocalypse, with this difference, that whereas Peter and Paul discuss the points separately, John discusses nothing, but combines all in a total

Tableau of the End

Time glowing under the highest light of the inspiration of the Holy Ghost. And so will every student of God's word find it, if only he comes to that word with a humble heart free from prejudice, and false theories of interpretation, and prays that God will open his eyes to see light in God's light alone, accounting all other light as but darkness. Blessed book is the Bible, the living word of the living God, one word from beginning to end, the work of one infinite mind, full of the wonders of wisdom, love and power! And from Moses to John, the Eschatology is one, because God's plan is one, the "Thousand Years" in John, following the Second Advent, and preceding the Last Judgment, being the very interval Paul himself has acknowledged in 1 Cor. 15:24, and none other than the precise period of time, called by Hosea the "Third Day," by Isaiah a "Multitude of Days," and by Ezekiel "Many Days"—in every case, in both Old and New Testaments, associated with the glory of Israel in the Kingdom, and the redemption of the Nations accomplished by the Second Coming of Christ. The holy penmen mutually supplement each other. It is a demonstration, and true as the Book of God is true. The Lord open the eyes of His Church to see it, and love it, and teach it, and to Him be the glory forever.

CURRENT EVENTS.

The Surplus in the Treasury Amounted to eighty-five million dollars on February 1. This shows a reduction in the balance against the Government for the month of January of over fifteen millions. The total reduction since the commencement of the fiscal year on July 1, 1887, is now sixty-nine millions. If that rate of reduction is maintained for the rest of the fiscal year it will reach a total or $144,000,000. There is, at present, no way in which this accumulation can be applied to the reduction of the debt except the purchase of bonds at a premium.

The New Extradition Treaty with Great Britain is arousing much public interest. It is stimulated by the refusal of the Senate to discuss it in open session. Mr. Riddleberger urged that course, but the Senate would not consent to publicity. It has been disclosed, however, that several amendments to the treaty have been proposed, among them one adding to the list of extraditable offences, assaults with explosives of any kind, and larceny and embezzlement. This would bring within the provisions of the treaty the Irish dynamiters who take refuge in the United States, and the American embezzlers who now find an asylum in Canada. The friends of the treaty express sanguine hopes of its ratification.

The Proposed Change in the Termination of the Presidential and Congressional terms, has again been endorsed by the Senate. On February 1, it adopted Senator Hoar's joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution providing that the term of office of the President and of the Fiftieth Congress shall continue until April 30, 1889, at noon; and that in future April 30, at noon, shall be substituted for March 4, as the commencement and termination of the official term of the President, Vice-President, Senators, and Representatives in Congress.

The Nicaraguan Canal Expedition has Encountered a serious obstacle in the heavy rains, which have been almost incessant since its arrival on the Isthmus. A reporter who accompanied the expedition, writes that, with the exception of a few miles of transit line, the weather has been such that little beyond establishing a camping site accessible to wind and sun has been accomplished. He reports days of hard physical labor and exposure, and sleepless nights in damp forests, with only a rubber blanket and palm leaves for a bed. "Civil engineering," he says, "at its best is beset with many difficulties, but in a country of dense tropical vegetation, where primeval forest trees have stood for ages, and countless vines gnarled and twisted have matted themselves into an impassable barrier, from which the light of day is often hidden, the running of a transit line is attended with something more than ordinary hardship." A member of the expedition who acts as mail carrier between camps, set out one morning with a Nicaraguan for a camp but a short distance away. He expected to return in a few hours, but lost his way, owing to the clouds which obscured the sun. The two men wandered about for nine days in the forest with no food but the bark of trees. They were almost dead when they came upon a river, on which, floating on logs, they returned to the camp.

The Bad Mail Service in the West is Being investigated by a Senate Committee. Formalities about all Government inquiries are necessary, so possibly there is no other way of dealing with the evil than by the labor of an investigating committee. Investigation, however, seems a farce in a case that presents no mystery at all. Economy has been the object aimed at for some years past, and no particular desire to maintain efficiency has been displayed. The force of clerks in the chief offices is and has been ridiculously inadequate, and in many offices the clerks owe their appointments to politics, and not to intelligence or industry. It may be hoped that Mr. Dickinson will not wait for the report of the Committee before removing the abuses. As a case in point, this journal is now mailed fully twenty-four hours earlier than formerly, yet complaints of delay in delivery are numerous.

The Gigantic Strike in Pennsylvania is to be investigated by a special committee of the House. An effort was made to have it referred to the Inter-State Commerce Committee, but a strong appeal against that course was made by Mr. Rayner, of Maryland, who said the inquiry might as usefully be confided to the Chinese Embassy. The work of the Committee is to include an investigation into the grievances of the miners, collective and individual, and it is directed to ascertain the points in dispute between the miners and their employers, a trouble which Mr. Randall declared was a greater one than that between the railroad company and its employees. It was openly stated in the House by Mr. Rayner that the Reading Company defied the laws of Pennsylvania, that forbid a corporation doing business as a common carrier to engage in any other business. This had been done by incorporating within itself the Reading Coal and Iron Company, of which, and of the Reading Railroad, Mr. Corbin was President. In proof of his statement, he reminded the House that when called upon in Pennsylvania to pay a tax the Reading Company had maintained that it was an inter-State corporation.

The Effort to Secure Agreement Between authors and publishers on the details of an international copyright scheme has been renewed. The difficulty which has prevented an arrangement so far, and which is not yet solved, is the importation of copies printed abroad of a foreign work copyrighted here. The great body of American publishers are ready to accept a bill containing what is called a manufacturing clause, providing for the printing, etc., in this country, of all foreign books enjoying the protection of American copyright. Some influential publishers, however, want the absolute prohibition of all foreign editions of books copyrighted in America, which prohibition is contained in the Chace bill, which has been reintroduced in the Senate. On this point, the divergence is decisive. The Authors' League would prefer that matters should remain in their present condition to having international copyright burdened with such a prohibition.

A Marvellous Case of Juvenile Depravity has come to light in New York. A remarkable series of suspicious fires—six in a short space of time—have occurred in the Home for the Ruptured and Cripples in Forty-second Street. The last of these broke out on February 2, and a previous one on January 29. Happily, none of the patients perished, though in the fire of Sunday they were in great danger. Before the hook and ladder companies arrived, car conductors and drivers, and well-dressed men on their way to the Grand Central Depot or their homes, vied with each other in carrying the poor little cripples to places of safety. They were saved, but one of the domestic servants was suffocated before she was found by the firemen. The frequency of the fires at last aroused suspicion, and an investigation was made. It was discovered that the fires were all set by a little girl eleven years old, May Wilson, who, on being charged with the crime, confessed her guilt. She is herself a cripple, and has been tenderly cared for in the Home during the last three years. The nurses and attendants thought her a child of sweet disposition—the last in the Home likely to commit such a crime. It is supposed that she must be demented, as she seems to have had no motive for the fiendish act; but no other evidences of insanity are found in her.

Two Slight Shocks of Earthquake were Reported last week. One in this country and a second in England. On Monday, January 30, a tremor was distinctly felt at various places in Rhode Island. It was noticed at Providence and Newport by a large number of persons. They agree in stating that it was forty minutes past midnight when it occurred. Houses shook and articles on shelves were thrown down. A rumbling noise accompanied the vibration, as if a heavily laden wagon were being driven through the street. The shock at Newport was at first supposed to have been caused by a dynamite explosion in the harbor, but that theory was disproved. The British shock occurred on Thursday last. It was most severe in Scotland, notably at Dingwall, County Ross, and Inverness. In the English midlands, also, the shock was noticed. Coventry, Birmingham and its suburbs, and other towns in that locality, were shaken. No damage was done by the convulsion.

The Enforcement of the Coercion Act in Ireland continues with unabated vigor. The trial of Mr. Cox, member of Parliament, for making a speech at Kildysart, County Clare, in October, inciting tenants to conspiracy, has resulted in Mr. Cox being convicted and sentenced to one month's imprisonment. He was taken to Limerick and lodged in the jail there. There was no demonstration. It is stated that on the expiration of Mr. Cox's sentence he will be rearrested on a charge of making a speech at Schull inciting the people to conspiracy. The drift of public opinion in England is said by sagacious observers to be hostile to Home Rule in Ireland. This is especially so in London.

The Crown Prince of Germany is Stated by Dr. Mackenzie, his English physician, to be making encouraging progress. The doctor is extremely guarded in his reports, but he evidently cherishes the belief that the Prince's malady is not cancer. He paid his illustrious patient a visit at San Remo last week, and examined his throat. He pronounced it much better than when he saw it last in December. The improvement is due in a great measure to the separation of a piece of morbid tissue, surgically termed slough, which had become decayed and been thrown off. The curative process which has been taking place is an effort of nature to get rid of the disease, and is never seen in cases of cancer. Professor Virchow confirms this hopeful view of the case. He examined the piece of tissue under the microscope, and states that it contained no trace of cancer.

A Sensational Suicide has Occurred in St. Petersburg. An English journal states that it has authentic intelligence of the event, which the Russian Government, according to its custom, has kept a secret. An officer of the Russian army was found shot near the heart. He was taken to an hospital, and there, being assured that he was near death, he made a confession, which was taken down in writing. He declared that he was a member of a secret society which resolved to assassinate the Czar. A ballot was taken to decide who should undertake the task, and the lot fell upon him. Rather than commit the crime he determined to take his own life, and he had therefore shot himself.

Canvassers Wanted to Sell, from House to House, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Any man, woman or youth may easily add to their income every week by selling the paper in their spare hours in their own neighborhood. One man has sold one hundred copies on a Saturday. For terms address Manager of CHRISTIAN HERALD, 63 Bible House, New York.

Pastor C. H. Spurgeon Appears Anxious that his severance of connection with the Baptist Union should not be misunderstood. In a letter to the Union, cabled to the American press last week, Mr. Spurgeon says that every union, unless it is a fiction, must be based upon certain principles. The doctrine of baptism by immersion will not suffice as a groundwork. There are other doctrines, besides, which are essential. He is unable to feel fellowship with a man merely because of his adherence to the doctrine of immersion, if in other matters he is false to the teachings of Scripture. It is on the doctrine of the Inspiration and verbal infallibility of the Bible and on the Calvinistic theology that Mr. Spurgeon differs from some of his brethren in the Baptist ministry, but well-informed journals declare that the number of the heterodox is relatively very small. Mr. Spurgeon has been urged by the Baptist Union to relieve it of the stigma his withdrawal casts upon it. It appeals to him to state the names of the ministers with whom he objects to associate, but as such a statement would render him liable to a series of actions for libel, Mr. Spurgeon will act prudently in keeping silence.

A Clergyman's Tact in Dealing with a Lunatic recently, saved him from a conflict. The Evening Star, of Washington, D. C., states that about four o'clock on a Sunday afternoon a man rang the bell of the house where lives the Rev. Edward H. Swem, pastor of the Second Baptist Church. He was admitted and conducted to the pastor's study. He then declared wildly that he was the Lord Jesus Christ, and that a minister whom he named was the Apostle Peter. He also stated that the devil was confined over in the insane asylum. He ended by demanding a sum of money. "Step this way," said Mr. Swem, gravely but firmly, and conducted the maniac out on the front steps. "I want you," he continued "to go to the large building on the corner of E and Fifth streets and wait there until I come." Much to Mr. Swem's relief the maniac obeyed, and the building being a police station, he was taken care of until he could be returned to the asylum from which he had escaped.

A Man Repenting of Repentance is Described in a Boston journal. It appears that at the Vendome banquet to Gen. Sherman, on February 1, several extra waiters were employed. At the conclusion of the festivity they all feasted on the remains of the banquet, and one of them who had a partiality for ice cream, indulged in the delicacy to excess. He was taken sick in the night, and suffered excruciating pain. A physician was sent for, who upon his arrival was anxiously asked by the sick man if he were going to die, because if so he wanted to confess a crime. The physician, thinking that in any case the confession should be made, answered that he had seen many men die from a similar cause. The man then confessed that during the evening he had secreted spoons, forks and other silver articles in his bag, and had brought them home. The stolen articles were then handed to the doctor. The penitent thief did not die, and he will probably live to stand his trial for the theft. To a reporter the man said, with evident sincerity, that he felt himself to be the greatest fool in Boston. It may be hoped that he will yet be the subject of still another repentance, which will be "repentance unto salvation, not to be repented of" (II Cor. 7 : 10), or there will be no escape from that state where there is "no place for repentance, though it be sought carefully and with tears." (Heb. 12 : 17.)

The Swift Descent of a Steep Hill a Thousand feet long resulted in a fatal accident in St. Paul,, Minn., on January 27. A cable road is run on the hill, and that morning two cars were on the track going down the hill. The man who controlled the grip-apparatus found, when a few feet from the starting-point, that the grip had not a firm hold on the cable. He therefore applied the brakes, and in doing so, released the cable altogether. The tracks were icy, and the heavily laden cars began sliding down the hill by their own momentum, at a speed which increased every moment until it became frightful. There was no means of getting a fresh hold on the cable, and the brakes, though they prevented the wheels turning, could not prevent their slipping on the icy rails. At the foot of the hill there is a curve which, when the cars reached it in their mad descent, could not be safely turned. The second car swung outward and fell on its side with a crash. One passenger was killed outright, another had his hand torn off at the wrist, and all were injured more or less seriously. Some moral and spiritual wrecks in life result from an analogous cause. The church is often distressed by seeing persons who have made a profession of religion fall into grievous sin, and irretrievable ruin. They had not a firm hold on Christ at the beginning of their Christian life, and when trial and temptation came no power of their own could check their downward course. (Gal 5 : 7, 8.)

A Race for a Bride was Run at Fulton, Mo., on January 30. The young lady, who is the daughter of a farmer, was wooed by two lovers, one of whom is an opulent Texan farmer, and and the other, whom she preferred, is poor, but young and handsome. The Texan, finding his rival had a better prospect than himself of winning the prize, appealed to the girl's father, and promised to pay him five thousand dollars if the marriage could be arranged. Thus stimulated, the father sent his daughter on a visit to some friends, and warned the poorer suitor off. The girl temporized to gain time, and allowed her father and the Texan to suppose that she had yielded to them; but she secretly notified the poor suitor of her place of retirement, and suggested that he get a license and end the struggle by marrying her at once. The Texan, also, was prompted by the father to hasten matters, and he applied for a marriage license. He found that his rival had obtained one only half an hour before, and realizing that no time was to be lost, he ran at the top of his speed to the house where the girl was staying. He was too late, however, for his rival, learning that the Texan was in town, and guessing his business, had also run as hard as he could, and being the fleeter runner, had gained time enough to have the ceremony performed before the Texan's arrival. In the Christian race, happily, success does not depend on riches or strength. Union with Christ is secured by the poor and weak more frequently than by any others. (I Cor. 1 : 26–28.)

The Arrest of Wealthy and Influential Citizens caused some surprise in Toronto on February 1. Four gentlemen of the highest respectability, at least one of whom is a millionaire, received summonses from the police magistrates to answer to the charge of compounding a felony. Three of the indicted men are respectively president, manager and solicitor of a well-known bank. Some time ago a note for $1,500 was presented at the bank for discount. The manager of the bank, examining the note after the depositor had left, noticed an informality in its wording, and sent it to the merchant by whom it purported to be signed, for him to rectify the error. The merchant at once denounced the signature as a forgery. Search was then made for the depositor, and he was found late at night at his home. He was brought to the bank, where he was informed by the bank's officers of the discovery that had been made. Finding the proof so clear he confessed his guilt, and said that he was engaged in a profitable business, but was short of capital. He would be able to redeem the note at maturity, and satisfied the officers of the bank that they ran no risk of loss in holding the note. Ultimately the culprit was allowed to go free, and no exposure took place at the time. Now, however, the persons who condoned his offence find that by doing so they violated the law. The forgery was a crime against the State which they had no power to forgive. It is this principle of inviolable justice which, applied to all sin, made the atonement of Christ necessary before pardon could be offered to the world. Only when the Redeemer had borne the penalty and satisfied justice could the sinner be held justified. (Rom. 3 : 26.)

A Remarkable Invention Called a Micro-Detector is described in a despatch from Houston, Tex. It states that on Wednesday of last week a number of scientists and reporters were invited to the jail, to test the efficiency of an electric machine, which not only conveyed noises to a distance, but increased their volume. When in working position, it will warn a jailer if prisoners in a distant part of the prison are attempting to escape by sawing, filing, or using any other adroit means. It was tested by a number of citizens posting themselves in a room in the back part of the prison, with doors closed. A clock was put in motion in a cell in one of the wings. Every click could be distinctly heard in the room. A saw was used gently on the bars of another cell, and the sound as heard by the party was a loud sawing noise. The instrument is worked by electricity on a single wire, the various noises of the cells coming over it distinctly. The invention is considered wonderful. And what is still more remarkable, it is the work of a prisoner, who has thus placed in the hands of the authorities the means of keeping a more vigorous watch over himself and his fellow-prisoners. Now the slightest whisper of a prisoner can be distinctly heard by the wardens on duty. Knowledge of this fact will doubtless make the men cautious, because in a jail, punishment is apt to follow promptly on an offence. Profane and mendacious persons are apt to forget that their words are not only so heard by the just God, but are registered against them. (Mat 12 : 36.)

BRIEF NOTES.

A large fire in Broadway, New York, on January 30, destroyed five buildings, containing property worth two million dollars. Two firemen were severely injured.

The Rev. Jackson Wray, the author of "The Friends of Aspendale," published in these pages last year, has received an invitation to become pastor of Zion Church, Toronto, at a salary of $4,000.

Two ladies have given a thousand dollars each toward the million dollar fund for Presbyterian ministers. They ask other ladies to join them in making a list of fifty subscribers of a like amount.

Arrangements for delegations from America to the International Missionary Convention to be held in London next spring, are being made; a series of meetings for the purpose have been held in New York and Brooklyn, the latter in Dr. Talmage's Tabernacle.

Dr. L. W. Munhall's meetings in Baltimore, Md., have stirred the whole city. On Sundays the meetings were held in Oratorio Hall, which was packed, and thousands were turned away for want of room. He is now holding meetings in Buffalo, N. Y.

Rev. E. Payson Hammond has been holding meetings in a tent at San Diego, Cal. It is unnecessary to say that the severe weather experienced in other parts of the country did not prevail there. All the churches of the city united in the work.

The estate of the late ex-Governor Washburn, of Massachusetts, amounted to $386,000, of which $159,000 is to be divided between the Commissioners of Foreign Missions, the Home Missionary Society and the Missionary Association.

The Rev. H. W. Brown and Mr. Avis are reaching large masses of the people in Nebraska. A correspondent at Grand Island states that in all the years of his residence there he never witnessed a movement so profound and extended. Mr. Brown is giving special attention to warnings against the sin of social immorality.

The Rev. H. S. Jenanyan and the Rev. Alexander McLachlan, two of last year's graduates from the Union Seminary, sailed on January 28 for Tarsus in the Ottoman Empire, where they are to superintend St. Paul's Institute, a newly founded Christian training school for the poor and orphan youth.

A religious canvass of the city of Minneapolis, Minn., is being made to ascertain the religious status of the people, and to stimulate attendance upon public worship and Sunday-school service. It is intended to hand every pastor a catalogue with residence of all attendants upon his church, and a list of non-church-goers, but who may express a preference for his church.

Clergymen and Evangelists who will Allow Copies of the CHRISTIAN HERALD to be placed in the seats of churches, or will have them distributed at the doors, will be supplied with assorted parcels of back numbers if they will write to the Manager 63 Bible House, New York.

HEALING BY STRIPES.

A New Sermon, by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

"With His stripes we are healed." Isa. 53 : 5.

A Bible-Searcher Rewarded—Discovers the Means of Healing—I. Sin as a Disease—Deranges the System—Painful or Benumbing—Fatal—II. The Remedy—Christ's Physical and Mental Sufferings—What the Roman Scourge Was—How to Apply the Ointment—III. The Remedy Effective Wherever Applied—Heals Character—Conscience—A Personal Testimony—A Comparison of Walking-Sticks—A Soul-Saving Telegram—Conversion of a Murderer in Brazil—Four Lines of Poetry Blessed to a General, and an Officer.

BEING one evening in Exeter Hall, I heard our late beloved brother, Mr. Mackay, of Hull, make a speech, in which he told us of a person who was under very deep concern of soul, and felt that he could never rest till he found salvation. So, taking the Bible into his hand, he said to himself, "Eternal life is to be found somewhere in this Word of God; and if it be here I will find it, for I will read the Book right through, praying to God over every page of it, if perchance it may contain some saving message for me." He told us that the earnest seeker read on through Genesis, Exodus, Leviticus, and so on; and though Christ is there very evidently, he could not find Him in the types and symbols. Neither did the holy histories yield him comfort, nor the book of Job. He passed through the Psalms, but did not find his Saviour there; and the same was the case with the other books till he reached Isaiah. In this prophet he read on till near the end, and then in the fifty-third chapter these words arrested his delighted attention, "With His stripes we are healed." "Now I have found it," says he.

for my sin-sick soul, and I see how it comes to me through the sufferings of the Lord Jesus Christ. Blessed be His name, I am healed!" It was well that the seeker was wise enough to search the sacred volume; it was better still that in that volume there should be such a life-giving word, and that the Holy Spirit should reveal it to the seeker's heart. I said to myself, "That text will suit me well, and peradventure a voice from God may speak through it yet again to some other awakened sinner."

I. In endeavoring to come to the full meaning of the text, I would remark, first, that God, in infinite mercy, here treats Sin as a Disease.

"With His stripes"—that is, the stripes of the Lord Jesus—"we are healed." Through the sufferings of our Lord, sin is pardoned, and we are delivered from the power of evil: this is regarded as the healing of a deadly malady. The Lord in this present life treats sin as a disease. Our sin is our crime rather than our calamity: however, God looks at it in another way for a season. That He may be able to deal with us on hopeful grounds, He looks at the sickness of sin, and not as yet at the wickedness of sin. Nor is this without reason, for men who indulge in gross vices are often charitably judged by their fellows to be not only wholly wicked, but partly mad. Propensities to evil are usually associated with a greater or less degree of mental disease; perhaps, also, of physical disease.

Sin is a disease, for it is not essential to manhood, nor an integral part of human nature as God created it. It is a disease, because it puts the whole system of the man out of order. It places the lower faculties in the higher place, for it makes the body master over the soul. Sin is a disease which in some cases causes extreme pain and anguish, but in other instances deadens sensibility. It frequently happens that, the more sinful a man is, the less he is conscious of it. It was remarked of a certain notorious criminal that many thought him innocent because, when he was charged with murder, he did not betray the least emotion. In that wretched self-possession there was to my mind presumptive proof of his great familiarity with crime: if an innocent person is charged with a great offence, the mere charge horrifies him. The deeper a man goes in sin, the less does he allow that it is sin. Like a man who takes opium, he acquires the power to take larger and larger doses, till that which would kill a hundred other men has but slight effect upon him. By and by sin is sure to cause pain, like other diseases which flesh is heir to; and when its awakening comes, what a start it gives! Conscience one day will awake, and fill the guilty soul with alarm and distress, if not in this world, yet certainly in the next. Then will it be seen what an awful thing it is to offend against the law of the Lord.

This disease is fatal. Is it not written, "The soul that sinneth, it shall die"? "Sin, when it is finished, bringeth forth death." There is no hope of eternal life for any man unless sin be put away. This disease never exhausts itself so as to be its own destroyer. Evil men wax worse and worse. In another world, as well as in this present state, character will, no doubt, go on to develop and ripen, and so the sinner will become more and more corrupt as the result of his spiritual death. God, therefore, treats sin as a disease, because it is a disease; and I want you to feel that it is so, for then you will thank the Lord for thus dealing with you.

II. God treats sin as a disease, and He declares which He has provided: "With His stripes we are healed." I ask you very solemnly to accompany me in your meditations, for a few minutes, while I bring before you the stripes of the Lord Jesus. The Lord resolved to restore us, and therefore He sent His Only-begotten Son, "Very God of very God," that He might descend into this world to take upon Himself our nature, in order to our redemption. He lived as a man among men; and, in due time, after thirty years or more of service, the time came when He should do us the greatest service of all, namely, stand in our stead, and bear the chastisement of our peace. He went to Gethsemane, and there, at the first taste of our bitter cup, He sweat great drops of blood. It is very rarely that a man sweats blood. There have been one or two instances of it, and they have been followed by almost immediate death; but our Saviour lived—lived after an agony which, to any one else, would have proved fatal. Ere He could cleanse His face from this dreadful crimson, they hurried Him to the high-priest's hall. In the dead of night they bound Him and led Him away. Anon they took Him to Pilate and to Herod. These scourged Him, and their soldiers spat in His face, and buffeted Him, and put on His head a crown of thorns. Scourging is one of the most awful tortures that can be inflicted by malice.

The Roman Scourge

is said to have been made of the sinews of oxen, twisted into knots, and into these knots were inserted slivers of bone, and huckle-bones of sheep; so that every time the scourge fell upon the bare back, "the plowers made deep furrows." Our Saviour was called upon to endure the fierce pain of the Roman scourge, and this not as the finis of his punishment, but as a preliminary to crucifixion. To this they added buffeting, and plucking of the hair; they spared Him no form of pain. In all His faintness, through bleeding and fasting, they made Him carry His cross until another was forced, by the forethought of their cruelty, to bear it, lest their victim should die on the road. They stripped Him, and threw Him down, and nailed Him to the wood. They pierced His hands and His feet. They lifted up the tree, with Him upon it, and then dashed it down into its place in the ground, so that all His limbs were dislocated.

There He hung, a spectacle to God and men. Now were all manner of bodily pains centered in His tortured frame. All the while His enemies stood around, pointing at Him in scorn, thrusting out their tongues in mockery, jesting at His prayers, and gloating over His sufferings. He cried, "I thirst," and then they gave Him vinegar mingled with gall. After a while He said, "It is finished." He had endured the utmost of appointed grief, and had made full vindication to divine justice: then, and not till then, He gave up the ghost.

To describe the outward sufferings of our Lord is not easy: I acknowledge that I have failed. But His soul-sufferings, which were the soul of His sufferings, who can even conceive, much less express, what they were? At the very first I told you that He sweat great drops of blood. That was His heart driving out its life-floods to the surface through the terrible which was upon Him. He said, "My soul is exceeding sorrowful, even unto death." When nailed to the cross He endured what no martyr ever suffered; for martyrs, when they have died, have been so sustained of God that they have rejoiced amid their pain; but our Redeemer was forsaken of His Father, until He cried, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" That was the bitterest cry of all, the utmost depth of His unfathomable grief. Yet was it needful that He should be deserted, because God must turn His back on sin, and consequently upon Him who was made sin for us.

The remedy for your sins and mine is found in the substitutionary sufferings of the Lord Jesus, and in these only. These "stripes" of the Lord Jesus Christ were on our behalf. Do you inquire, "Is there anything for us to do, to remove the guilt of sin?" I answer: There is nothing whatever for you to do. By His stripes we are healed. All those stripes He has endured, and left not one for us to bear.

"But must we believe on Him?" Ay, certainly. If I say of a certain ointment that it heals, I do not deny that you need a bandage with which to apply it to the wound. Faith is the linen which binds the plaster of Christ's reconciliation to the sore of our sin. The linen does not heal; that is the work of the ointment. So faith does not heal; that is the work of the atonement of Christ. "But we must repent," cries another. Assuredly we must, and shall, for repentance is the first sign of healing; but the stripes of Jesus heal us, and not our repentance. These stripes, when applied to the heart, work repentance in us: we hate sin because it made Jesus suffer. When you intelligently trust in Jesus as having suffered for you, then you discover the fact that God will never punish you for the same offence for which Jesus died. Thus "with His stripes we are healed."

III. I have tried to put before you the disease and the remedy; I now desire to notice the fact that this remedy is immediately

Effective Wherever it is Applied.

The stripes of Jesus do heal men: they have healed many of us. It does not look as if it could effect so great a cure, but the fact is undeniable. I often hear people say, "If you preach up this faith in Jesus Christ as saving men, they will be careless about holy living." I am as good a witness on that point as anybody, for I live every day in the midst of men who are trusting to the stripes of Jesus for their salvation, and I have seen no ill effect following from such a trust; but I have seen the very reverse. I bear testimony that I have seen the very worst of men become the very best of men by believing in the Lord Jesus Christ. These stripes heal in a surprising manner the moral diseases of those who seemed past remedy.

The character is healed. I have seen the drunkard become sober, the harlot become chaste, the passionate man become gentle, the covetous man become liberal, and the liar become truthful, simply by trusting in the sufferings of Jesus. If it did not make good men of them, it would not really do anything for them, for you must judge men by their fruits after all; and if the fruits are not changed the tree is not changed. Character is everything: if the character be not set right, the man is not saved. But we say it without fear of contradiction, that the atoning sacrifice, applied to the heart heals the disease of sin. If you doubt it, try it. He that believes in Jesus is sanctified as well as justified; by faith he becomes henceforth an altogether changed man.

The fact that "with His stripes we are healed" is a matter in evidence. I shall take liberty to bear

My Own Witness.

Years ago, when I was a youth, the burden of my sin was exceedingly heavy upon me. I had fallen into no gross vices, and should not have been regarded by any one as being specially a transgressor; but I regarded myself as such, and I had good reason for so doing. My conscience was sensitive because it was enlightened; and I judged that, having had a godly father, and a praying mother, and having been trained in the ways of piety, I had sinned against much light, and consequently there was a greater degree of guilt in my sin than in that of others.

I tried to do as well as I could, and to behave myself aright; but in my own judgment I grew worse and worse. I felt more and more despondent. I attended every place of worship within my reach, but I heard nothing which gave me lasting comfort till, one day I heard a simple preacher of the gospel speak from the text, "Look unto Me, and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth." When he told me that all I had to do was to "look" to Jesus—to Jesus the crucified One, I could scarcely believe it. He went on, and said, "Look! Look! Young man, look!" I did look; and in that moment relief came to me, and I felt such overflowing joy that I could have stood up, and cried, "Hallelujah! Glory be to God, I am delivered from the burden of my sin!"

Many days have passed since then; but my faith has held me up, and compelled me to tell out the story of free grace and dying love. I can truly say:

"E'er since by faith I saw the stream
Thy flowing wounds supply.
Redeeming love has been my theme,
And shall be till I die."

I hope to sit up in my bed in my last hours, and tell of the stripes that healed me. I hope some young men, yea, and old men before me, will at once try this remedy; it is good for all characters and ages. "With His stripes we are healed."

I want to talk with those who have not tried

This Marvellous Heal-all.

Let us come to close quarters. Friend, you are by nature in need of soul-healing as much as any of us, and one reason why you do not care about the remedy is because you do not believe that you are sick. I saw a peddler one day, as I was walking out: he was selling walking-sticks. He followed me, and offered me one of the sticks. I showed him mine—a far better one than any he had to sell—and he withdrew at once. He could see that I was not likely to be a purchaser. I have often thought of that when I have been preaching. I show men the righteousness of the Lord Jesus, but they show me their own, and all hope of dealing with them is gone. Unless I can prove that their righteousness is worthless, they will not seek the righteousness which is of God by faith. Oh, that the Lord would show you your disease, and then you would desire the remedy!

Suppose, for a moment, you are not healed, let me ask the question, "Why are you not?" You know the gospel: why are you not healed by Christ? "I don't know," says one. But, my dear friend, I beseech you, do not rest until you do know. "I can't get at it," says somebody. The other day a young girl was her father's coat. She was sitting with her back to the window, and she said, "Father, I can't see; I am in my own light." He said, "Ah, my daughter, that is where you have been all your life!" This is the position of some of you spiritually. You are in your own light; you think too much of yourselves. There is plenty of light in the Sun of Righteousness, but you get in the dark by putting self in the way of that Sun. Oh, that yourself might be put away! I read a touching story the other day as to how one found peace. A young man had been for some time under a sense of sin, longing to find mercy; but he could not reach it. He was a telegraph clerk, and being in the office one morning he had to receive and transmit a telegram. To his great surprise, he spelt out these words—"Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world." A gentleman, out for a holiday, was telegraphing a message in answer to a letter from a friend who was in trouble of soul. It was meant for another, but he that transmitted it received eternal life, as the words came flashing into his soul.

I met this week with something that pleased me—how one man, being healed, may be the means of blessing to another. Many years ago I preached a sermon in Exeter Hall, which was printed, and entitled, "Salvation to the Uttermost." A friend, who lives not very far from this place, was in the city of Para, in Brazil. Here he heard of who had in a state of drunkenness committed a murder, for which he was confined for life. Our friend went to see him, and found him deeply penitent, but quietly restful, and happy in the Lord. He had felt the terrible wound of blood-guiltiness in his soul, but it had been healed, and he felt the bliss of pardon. Here is the story of the poor man's conversion as I have it: "A young man, who had just completed his contract with the gas-works, was returning to England, but before doing so he called to see me, and brought with him a parcel of books. When I opened it, I found they were novels; but, being able to read, I was thankful for anything.

"After I had read several of the books, I found a sermon preached by C. H. Spurgeon, in Exeter Hall, on June 8, 1856, from the words, 'Wherefore he is able also to save them to the uttermost,' etc. (Heb. 7: 25.) In his discourse, Mr. Spurgeon referred to Palmer, who was then lying under sentence of death in Stafford Goal, and in order to bring home this text to his hearers, he said that if Palmer had committed many other murders, if he repents and seeks God's pardoning love in Christ, even he will be forgiven! I then felt that if Palmer could be forgiven, so might I. I sought, and blessed be God, I found. I am pardoned, I am free; I am a sinner saved by grace. Though a murderer, I have not yet sinned 'beyond the uttermost,' blessed be His holy name!" It made me very happy to think that a poor condemned murderer could thus be converted. Surely there is hope for every hearer and reader of this sermon, however guilty he may be!

If you know Christ, tell others about him. You do not know what good there is in making Jesus known, even though all you can do is to give a tract or repeat a verse. Dr. Valpy, the author of a great many class-books, wrote the following simple lines as his confession of faith:

"In peace let me resign my breath,
And thy salvation see;
My sins deserve eternal death,
But Jesus died for me."

Valpy is dead and gone; but he gave those lines to dear old Dr. Marsh, the Rector of Beckenham, who put them over his study mantel-shelf. The Earl of Roden came in, and read them. "Will you give me a copy of those lines?" said the good earl. "I shall be glad," said Dr. Marsh, and he copied them. Lord Roden took them home, and put them over his mantel-shelf. General Taylor, a Waterloo hero, came into the room, and noticed them. He read them over and over again, while staying with Earl Roden, till his Lordship remarked, "I say, friend Taylor, I should think you knew those lines by heart." He answered, "I do know them by heart; indeed, my very heart has grasped their meaning." He was brought to Christ by that humble rhyme. General Taylor handed those lines to an officer in the army, who was going out to the Crimean War. He came home to die; and when Dr. Marsh went to see him, the poor soul in his weakness said, "Good sir, do you know this verse which General Taylor gave to me? It brought me to my Saviour, and I die in peace." To Dr. Marsh's surprise, he repeated the lines:

"In peace let me resign my breath,
And thy salvation see;
My sins deserve eternal death,
But Jesus died for me."

Only think of the good which four simple lines may do! Be encouraged, all of you who know the healing power of the wounds of Jesus. Spread this truth by all means. Never mind how simple the language. Tell it out: tell it out everywhere, and in every way, even if you cannot do it in any other way than by copying a verse out of a hymn-book. Tell it out that by the stripes of Jesus we are healed. May God bless you, dear friends!

An Involuntary Voyage in a Frail Boat.*

It was still early in the day, a good three hours before sundown, and Nathan would have an hour or more for himself out on the waters of the harbor before going to the evening reception of the president of the college. Between three and four o'clock of that July day, the sea in the harbor lay a calm, unbroken surface, reflecting every boat and white-winged ship that sailed its placid waters, with a distinctness that doubled the object, even to the repeating of mast-head, spar, lines of cordage and coil of rope. The air was sultry on land, and this made the life-giving, tarry, sea-weedy odors specially refreshing to him. With no thought of passing beyond the safe shelter of the bay, he looked half longingly over toward the misty gray line which meant the open sea.

Captain Pickett was on the watch for Nathan, and in five minutes the light, well-trimmed craft in which he had spent many an hour during the last months, was gliding over the blue water like a sea-gull. The old sea-captain had become fond of the youth who many a twilight had lingered to listen with never-failing interest to his tales of storm and shipwreck; and though he was not one to forecast trouble, just as Nathan was pushing off, his keen eye detected a shadowy, vapory cloud forming across the sky over toward the west. The sight of it caused him to raise a warning finger, as he called out to Nathan to keep a watch to westward, for there was a squall brewing.

Nathan meant to heed the old man's counsel; but his way was outward, and his mind was full of thoughts and hopes wide as the sea; and the calm was unbroken till within an hour of sundown; then he noticed a gentle stirring of the waves, while he felt the cool sweet touch of a fresh breeze from over the island, but he saw no cloud, though he looked skyward. The haze had spread and thickened, that was all, and so he let the little boat continue to float according to the guidance of wind and tide. It would be time to turn the helm and take the now idle oars in hand, half an hour hence; thus he thought, and then if the wind had freshened into a brisk breeze, he felt no fear. Had not his strong arm rowed in many a boat-race, and encountered many a head-wind and foam-crested wave? But even as he looked, the great even mass of floating clouds was riven by a flash of lightning, before the lurid red light of which the sunset colors grew dim, while suddenly he became conscious of a chill, and a darkening of the day. It was a wind storm—one of those sudden mid-summer showers that come and go so speedily. And yet, when the clouds broke and the darkness lifted, Nathan saw that it was already twilight on land and sea.

During the sudden fury of the gale, his one thought had been to keep the boat before the wind, and she still went dancing across the waves at a rate of many miles an hour. But as the squall abated, he had time to realize the peril that surrounded him, as in vain he strove to draw in the torn, rent fragment of the sail, that now hung like a rag; for, as he tried, he found his vaunted strength was as nothing. and then he turned to the oars, in which he had so confidently trusted; but as they touched the water, a great rolling wave dashed against the slender blades, snapping them in two. Meanwhile, the little pinnace continued courtesying on its way, keeping time to the rolling waves, one moment sinking into their receding trough, and the next bounding up on some foam-crested billow. All this time darkness was deepening, and Nathan knew he had crossed the harbor-bar, powerless to check the light craft, flying before wind and wave like a thistledown, blown it knows not where. And still the night darkened, and the great wide sea, the joyous sea of the morning, stretched now an ever-widening gulf between him and his dearest. But Nathan was not afraid; never once did his courage fail him all through the hours of the night. It was strange, knowing as he did that, humanly, all that was between him and a deep-sea grave was that frail boat. In one sense either, for there was that in his nature which held him back from seeking God in those hours of darkness and sore extremity, when he had closed his heart against the heavenly voice in the sunshine; but while his lips framed no uttered plea for mercy, there was a calm in his soul, for he was learning then the wonderful strength there is for weakness, in the knowledge that our names are borne up to the mercy-seat, buoyed on the wings of prayers offered for us ever since childhood. It was remembering this that led Nathan to repeat the strength-giving promise, "The everlasting arms are underneath."

These thoughts came trooping in his mind as rapidly as the clouds went scudding across the star-lighted sky; and as he thus mused, the short mid-summer night waned, the first early beams of day-dawn began to flush the east. Eagerly he watched for the increasing light, whilst something in the shadowy gray of the clouds above, and sea beneath, filled him with a sense of awe. Perchance, too, he realized his position with more reality when he saw the torn sail and broken oars that had been hidden by the darkness. He had cherished, also, the hope that morning would show the friendly shore of some near coast; but as the day brightened he looked in vain eastward and westward, to the north and to the south, scanning the outmost rim of the now clearly defined meeting-place of sea and sky; but not a rocky cliff or bold promontory reached out a kindly greeting to the sea-encompassed youth. By noon the strength of the morning was gone; he was hungry and thirsty; the rays of the sun beat down on him in hot and angry beams. What followed, Nathan Parret could not distinctly recall. He was dimly conscious of voices and a sudden rushing motion, as though he was being borne through the air, and then all became a blank.

When he woke to consciousness it was night again, but the dash of waves against a vessel's side told him that he was no longer out on the open sea, alone in a frail boat, for whose incoming Captain Pickett and a score of men, classmates and friends, had been watching for twenty-four hours now. He lifted his head and peeped into the gloom that was only broken by the dim burning of a swinging lamp, and then he stretched forth his hand, to feel the heavy folds of a sea-coat that was thrown across him, and then he slept again, a dreamless sleep, from which he did not wake till mid-day, when the story of his rescue was briefly told.

"It was noontime," thus the captain said, "of the day before, when the man at the wheel had caught sight of the little pinnace; his well-trained eye had discovered in it a prostrate figure, and with no delay the long-boat had been lowered by the strong New Bedford men, who had plied their oars with a steady stroke that speedily bridged the distance; and Nathan half an hour later had been lifted by friendly arms to the deck of the whaling vessel, Mary Ann, outward bound for a cruise among the northern waters."

FEEDING THE DESTITUTE.

(See Illustration.)

Sad stories of destitution and semi-starvation continue to arrive from newspaper correspondents in London. It is gratifying, however, to learn that Christian people are making an effort to alleviate temporarily some of the suffering. Among others, the Rev. M. Baxter has established a fund for providing meals to those who are absolutely without food or money. He has received assistance in this truly Christian undertaking from the public, and has thus been enabled to relieve some who might otherwise have perished for lack of food. The illustration on this page depicts the gathering in the hall, in which the meals are given. There is reason to hope that through the gospel addresses, given after the repast, some who have been fed with temporal food have been led to seek "the Bread of Life, whereof if a man eat he shall never hunger."

A CASE OF CONSCIENCE.

"Mr. Stanford will see you at once, Miss Rivers," said a clerk to a young lady who, with an older lady of a somewhat crafty cast of features, was waiting in the outer office of Messrs, Stanford & Son, lawyers. The clerk looked a little suspiciously at the elder of the two. She did not receive a cordial welcome from the lawyer himself when, with Miss Rivers, she entered the office of the junior partner. He turned from the desk where he was standing talking with his father, and looked at her sharply and perhaps a little sarcastically as he greeted his young client.

"This person," Miss Rivers said, "has a claim against my aunt's property, Mr. Stanford."

"I think we must not go as far as that," said the lawyer. "We will say she professes to have a claim. I have had the honor of some visits from her already, and have heard all she has to allege. She has not a particle of foundation for her claim—some ridiculous story about being promised a thousand dollars for extra attention during the illness of your aunt, but she has no letter or paper to confirm her statement, and I do not believe the old lady ever made such a promise. It is simply a case of blackmail."

The woman whose assertions were so stigmatized set up a shrill and vociferous protestation, and inquired who the lawyer was that he should cast suspicion on the character of a respectable lady, who had boarded a great deal better people than he, in her time, and never had a word said against her. She had friends, and she would let him know that she was not going to be slandered by any one, lawyer or no lawyer. She only wanted her rights, etc.

Mr. Stanford listened to the outburst with growing impatience, and as the woman's tones grew higher and shriller, and she appeared to be working up to the point when hysterics only would convey her sentiments, he suggested to her, with mock politeness, that she leave the office, and took a step toward her, as if intending to hasten her exit. Miss Rivers, however, interposed.

"I should like her to have the money, Mr. Stanford," she said.

"Certainly I will follow your instructions, Miss Rivers, but excuse my saying that you are doing a very foolish and uncalled for thing. If she has any claim let her bring suit, as she proposes, and if she can substantiate it the courts will order payment. It will be quite time enough to pay then. You must allow me to protect you from imposition."

"I thank you for your advice, Mr. Stanford; I know you give it in my interest," said Miss Rivers, "but this is a matter in which I must have my own way, and I have quite decided. Will you tell her when she may come for the money?"

The lawyer shrugged his shoulders. "I am sorry for it," he said. "If she will come here on the first of next month, the money shall be ready for her."

"That's all I want," said the woman pertly. "I'm glad I haven't got to sue for it, which I should have done so sure as here I stand, for I'm not one as is going to be wronged without standing up for my rights. I wish you good morning, Mr. Stanford, and thank you, Miss Rivers." And she went out, closing the door with emphasis.

"This will reduce your inheritance considerably, Miss Rivers," said the lawyer. "You will not have more than five thousand dollars left, I think. Why do you suffer yourself to be imposed upon by such a person? Your aunt paid her well during her lifetime, I have no doubt. The claim is absurd; no judge on the bench would have admitted it."

"I believe my aunt did promise the money" said Miss Rivers. "She once make a remark in my hearing that convinces me that she did. I wonder she did not leave it in her will. She was dependent on this woman for her personal comfort, for she would not live with her relatives, and I think the prospect of the legacy may have had its effect in securing extra attention. But apart from all that, I would pay in such a case rather than go to law. I think that is my duty as a Christian."

"Indeed! Well it is a fortunate thing for us lawyers, that your principles are not common. What has religion to do with law?"

"It teaches us to resist not evil, and the Saviour explicitly enjoyed His followers to sacrifice their rights if they were sued. (Matt. 5: 40.) It is a case of conscience with me."

"It is very expensive to keep such a conscience," said Mr. Stanford. "A thousand dollars is a great deal to pay; I fancy most people would have found some cheaper way than that of satisfying conscience."

Miss Rivers despaired of convincing the lawyer that she had done right, but, though she knew he despised her for doing what seemed to him a foolish thing, she felt that the consciousness of duty done was a sufficient consolation for the loss of his respect and of her thousand dollars. The money was paid on the day appointed, and Miss Rivers supposed that she had heard the last of the affair. It was not so, however; it was about six weeks afterward that she received another visit from the woman whose claim she had paid. She brought with her a trunk which, as she said to Miss Rivers, "Your aunt kept in the storeroom. Books and letters in it, I guess. Nothing of any account, but you behaved honorable to me, and would not let the lawyers do me out of my rights, so I thought I would do as much by you. I should not have troubled to bring it if you hadn't stood my friend."

The Mosque of Kutibia in Morocco.

Miss Rivers thanked her, and a few days later sat down to examine the papers that the trunk contained. The eccentric old lady had saved every letter she had ever received, and there they were, neatly tied in bundles, with diaries, and records of business transactions. And there too, in a large package by itself, was a pile of bank-notes, which made the amount she had paid against the advice of the lawyer and at the dictates of conscience seem a very small sum in comparison.

A MOORISH MOSQUE.

To see Mohammedanism in its full power, it is necessary to see it as it exists in Morocco. The Moor prides himself on being a far more faithful servant of Mohammed than the Turk, whom he regards as latitudinarian—a truckler to Christians and infidels. His hope is to extend his religion over the whole world, giving every man the choice of Mohammedanism or death. It is mainly through Moorish enthusiasm that the Koran is reverenced through northern and western Africa. So thoroughly has this fact been realized, that the Christian missionary societies, from the commencement of their labors down to the year 1881, made no systematic attempt to introduce the gospel among the Moors. In that year, however, Mr. George Pearse started on a mission to Morocco, and was so much encouraged by his success that he made an appeal for more missionaries, which was promptly responded to. There are now about twenty-five missionaries laboring there. It is chiefly among the poorer inhabitants that converts have been made. The oppression of the Government has rendered the lower classes discontented, and has produced an aversion to the Sultan and his officers which extends to the religion as well as the politics of the oppressors. This is very natural as the Sultan of Morocco is styled the Prince of the Believers, or, blasphemously, "the Vicegerent of God upon Earth."

The mosque of which a picture is here given is one of the most splendid in Morocco. From the gallery of its massive tower, five times in every twenty-four hours the call to prayer is issued At sunrise, at noon, at three o'clock, at sunset and at eshe, or nightfall, the chant of the Muedzins is heard from the minaret. On working days the call is obeyed at home or in the street, or wherever the worshipper may happen to be, but on Fridays and holy days it is incumbent that the Mohammedan repair to the mosque, where portions of the Koran are read, and often a sermon is preached. Women are not encouraged to visit the mosques for prayer, though they are not absolutely forbidden. It is contended that their presence is liable to distract the thoughts of the male worshippers and impair the intensity of devotion.

THE FAMILY OF TRIPE COURT.

BRIDGET'S SURPRISE.

THE young lady whom Tom wished to give into custody, and who, I may now tell you, was the wife of the clergyman of the parish—he was in the chair to-night—continued to look very smiling and pleased, for all the while the hymn was being sung people were crowding in at the doors, and all the available chairs and stools were being got out for seats. She saw that her party—her Temperance meeting—was going to be a great success! And she had worked so hard at it for the last two days, she couldn't help being very pleased. Some of the work had been extremely trying—that of going into the saloons, as she had been doing all the afternoon; not, as Tom had imagined, to get a glass for herself, which he had fondly hoped would have made her "wonderous kind" to her guests in the matter of ale and rum, but to persuade the people she found there to come to her meeting this evening. And they were coming, and had come in such numbers as quite to astonish her.

Before her she saw seated men and women of the poorest class, whose faces, like Tom Mite's, told of habitual drunkenness, and who had got with them, also like Tom Mite, little undeveloped, white-faced children, clawing and tearing at the cake, whose appearance told as plainly as words how hungry and ill in health they were, because father's and mother's money all went to the grog-shops instead of to the butchers and bakers to buy wholesome meat and bread for them.

The Rector's wife wore the blue ribbon herself, and looked forward to pinning the same on many a coat to-night, as the Rector told the people when, after a hymn had been sung and prayer offered, he proceeded to address them on the subject of Temperance. "She'll never pin it on me, so she needn't think it," grumbled many a surly voice. And it did seem at the close of the evening as if that determination fixed itself upon every one in the meeting; for when the Rector, after earnest exhortation to them, called upon the people to come forward and sign the book, and have the ribbon pinned on, not one of the company made any response! Some were talking, some were staring stupidly in front of them, some were smiling jeeringly, as if they didn't mean to be caught, and others were snoring and too fast asleep to hear the appeal at all. The Rector's wife began to look quite downhearted, as she stood waiting behind her little table of badges.

"Come," said the Rector, good-naturedly, to the people, "don't be shy. Perhaps you are shy, and don't like to walk up to the table. Well, then, I told you to walk up to the table, but don't walk; sit where you are and hold up your hands. Those of you, my sisters and brothers, who wish to sign the pledge to-night, and bring brightness and happiness into your homes, hold up your hands!"

There was a pause; the Rector's eyes went quickly over the room; not an arm was raised.

"Not one?" he said sadly, letting his eyes roam over the heads over the people while he yet paused. "Yes," he cried, suddenly, with his face kindling, "I'm encouraged; there is one, just one!" and everybody was eager to see whose hand it was.

They followed the Rector's eyes, and many rose to their feet, because they could see nothing as they sat. There was quite an excitement, quite a sensation, when they saw that the clergyman's eyes were resting on the bare arm, uplifted, of a little baby! It had struggled out from a wrap that covered it, and, though the man holding the baby tried to suppress it and cover it up, the arm remained upraised in silent and most pathetic protest, it seemed, against the thing that had been under discussion—drink.*

"Well, at any rate, we have the babies on our side," exclaimed the Rector; and then he added thoughtfully, and with much feeling, "I dare say, if the owner of that little bare arm yonder could speak it would have to tell me something very pitiful about itself and—drink. I don't know its history; it's quite a stranger to me, but I can fancy what it might tell me: of a miserable home, and infant privations and sufferings, without mother to rock it, and sing to it, and soothe it; and, if I were to ask that little baby the cause, it would probably answer, 'Because somebody belonging to me drinks."

The Rector paused. There was a deep silence, some women sobbed, then a little movement amongst the audience, a slight sensation again. A miserable-looking man, with downcast face, and a baby in his arms, had advanced to the table; now he was bending down before the young lady writing his name in the book; now he and the baby—the baby was the one who had held its arm up—were having the blue ribbon pinned on them. And Mary Job, a moment later rousing herself suddenly from a nap in her quiet corner by the door, saw that the man and baby returning to their seats, wearing the blue ribbon, were Tom Mite and little Dinah! Wonder of wonders, Tom Mite had signed the pledge!

That night a little baby, with a blue ribbon on its arm, lay sleeping placidly in its cradle in Tripe Court, a shawl thrown over it to keep the draughts out, the cradle itself put on the table out of the reach of rats, a bottle of milk close handy and a sober father watching beside it, at the very moment that in the Workhouse Infirmary where poor Bridget was passing her first night away from home a voice was saying:

"I will wield that power for you to-night. I will pray that that eye, that arm, that love may reach and be around your little baby to-night, and I'm just as sure that no harm will be allowed to happen to it, and that it will be taken care of, as I am that there is a God in heaven."

Was Mrs. Cherry's confidence misplaced—does God ever disappoint?

The next morning—

"Poll and Sue," said Tom, "I'm off down to the docks to get work. Take care o' the little 'un, and let Mrs. Job know where I'm gone."

Right glad were they to carry such a message. It showed good intention at least on their father's part. Still they were not very hopeful. It was quite likely that Tom in his search for work might be overcome by thirst or get with some men who might invite him to drink—an invitation he had never been known to refuse—and he would come home drunk as usual. That was more likely than anything else, and the fact that the children thought so could be perceived by their father. Well, he could not expect anything else. They knew how often he had sworn off before. Still, he was sorry they had no more confidence in him, for he meant to hold on this time, and their belief in him might have strengthened his own, which was very weak. Never mind, he must prove his good resolution, and he did; he not only secured work, but came home sober.

It was a hard struggle, for now that Tom was working he felt the need of beer more than ever, but he would not give up. He could not look beyond the one day, but every morning he determined that he would not drink that day anyhow. As the days passed he grew stronger in his resolve, more confident of his own power, surprised that he had so much. Tom was a better man than he supposed he was, and the discovery pleased him; he began to respect himself. Then, what would Bridget say when she came out! How pleased her face would look when the children told her! Tom pictured the scene, and that gave him still more strength. Just then you could not have drenched him with beer if you had tried.

It was very dull at home, though, without Bridget. The children did what they could, and Mrs. Job looked in every day and helped them with the baby and the housework, but it was not like having Bridget He did long for news of her, but none came for six weeks. Then it did come.

It was Sunday, and an unusual stir and flutter of expection was going on in all the wards of the Poorhouse Infirmary, increasing in degree as the afternoon approached. Some patients were not able to eat their dinner, they were so excited; some were crying for very joy on their pillows, because a notice had been issued in the week by the Workhouse authorities that that order of theirs forbidding visitors to the Infirmary during the prevalence of small-pox was now withdrawn: small-pox having abated outside, the old arrangements were to stand, and there were to be visiting days again.

This was Sunday, and therefore the first "visiting day," and, for very excitement, some couldn't eat, and, for very joy, some were crying at the prospect of seeing beloved home faces once more. Letters had been despatched in the week from almost every bed, bidding husbands, mothers, sisters, brothers, children, to come this Sunday afternoon without fail, and there was hardly a person in the great parish hospital to-day whose mind was not occupied with the thought of somebody's coming.

Amongst the expectant ones there was Bridget Mite, laundress, in the Victoria Ward. She was sitting up in bed, with her leg almost well, and her face shining with that new light that had come into it ever since that Sunday afternoon when she had accepted the Message of Consolation and Rest. She was one of those who had not been able to eat her dinner for excitement, thinking of seeing Tom and Poll and Sue, and oh! joy of joys, clasping her baby in her arms again; for she had written of course to Tripe Court in the week, telling them all to come this Sunday, and at two o'clock she was watching, with beating heart and anxious eyes, like everybody else, the door at the far end of the long ward, where would appear first her dear, shabby little group.

Every moment people were flocking in, singly or together, carrying either children or flowers, and in most instances with clean faces and respectable clothes. The visitors seemed all to have done their best to make a tidy appearance, "not to shame their friend" whom they had come to see. Even the granddaughter of the old cigar-light seller, Biddy, who was no better than Biddy had ever been, had spruced herself up with a clean white apron, and oiled her hair well, to do credit to Biddy on visiting day.

While she awaited it with all the love and affection possible, poor Bridget, it must be confessed, felt a little natural anxiety, a little tremulous as to how her party would look when it came. She expected to see Sue so smutty, and Poll so sooty, and Tom the shabbiest husband there, and her baby—oh! how she longed that it might come clean and nice to show to Mrs. Cherry, to whom she had talked of it so much, but she did not dare hope that it would. Mrs. Cherry had no one coming to see her—she had been in the Infirmary so long all her friends seemed to have forgotten her. But she was taking keen pleasure out of Bridget's anticipations.

"Let's see, dear; how many do you expect?" she asked of Bridget, as the time advanced, and yet Bridget's eyes were fixed on the door. "Husband, and how many little ones did you say?"

"Three," said Bridget: "a baby and two little girls. I dare say they'll be looking a bit rough to-day with me not there to brush them up," added poor Bridget, by way of preparing Mrs. Cherry for the shock of "Sooty's and "Smuts'" appearance when they should arrive.

"Well, now, there's a party; ain't those them?" cried Mrs. Cherry excitedly; "just them coming in now after that girl with the shawl over her head; it's the number."

Yes, a party answering in number to Bridget's family was just entering the ward; but Bridget shook her head. The party did not answer in appearance to hers; it was not the shabby, forlorn group of Tripe Court this. This was quite a creditable little party—the man with a good coat on his back. Tom hadn't such a coat, she knew. The baby in the man's arms had a white hood on, covered all over with crisp little satin bows, not like any hood Dinah possessed; and the other children, answering to Poll and Sue, were neither sooty nor smutty, they were perfectly clean and tidy.

"Oh, no, them's not mine," said Bridget slowly, shaking her head; but as they came nearer, her brown eyes got larger and larger with surprise. She looked doubtful, the blood rushed into her face, and she said under her breath, "Why, I almost think it is them," and the next minute there was not another doubt about it.

The clean, tidy little girls were at Bridget's bedside, with their arms round her neck, and the man and the baby were leaning over her too. They were Tom and the children, without a doubt.

"Whatever's happened, Tom?" whispered Bridget, after the first affectionate greetings were over, as with the baby pressed close to her she looked from one to the other of the little home group. That something good must have happened, she was sure.

Tom looked more like the fine dock laborer that she remembered of former years than tipsy Tom Mite of Tripe Court. He seemed not ashamed to look her in the face to-day. He had got that good coat on his back; he had the air of a man about him once more.

"It's this," replied Tom, touching proudly the bit of blue ribbon in his button-hole. "I've signed the pledge, Bridget, signed it the evening you come in here, and I've kept it, thank God, and been to work ever since."

"And baby wears it too, mother," cried Poll, pointing to the tiny badge on Dinah's shawl, "cos it was baby that made him sign it. It was 'er little h'arm that done it all! and in Tripe Court they calls 'er now the Blue Ribbon Baby. And father bought baby her hood and us our hats, mother," added Sue, "and he's as kind as ever he can be, and the home's changed, mother darling—just changed."

There was deep pathetic meaning in those last words. And Bridget fairly wept for joy.

(To be Concluded.)

* This incident actually occurred at a temperance meeting not long ago.

A LESSON ON FORGIVENESS.

By Mrs. M. Baxter.

S. S. Lesson for February 19. Matt. 18: 21—35. Golden Text, Matt. 6: 12.

Ver. 21, 22: The Common Desire to Set a Limit to Mercy—Christ Enjoining Unlimited Forbearance—Ver. 23, 24: A General Audit—The Servant an Embezzler—A Twelve Million Dollar Defalcation—Ver. 25: According to the Oriental Custom—Ver. 26: Obeisance Not Worship Undertaking an Impossibility—Ver. 27: The King Better to Him than His Petition—Ver. 28: About Seventeen Dollars—Christ's Estimate of the Proportionate Debts to God and Man—Unnecessary Harshness in Making the Demand—Ver. 29, 30: Only Patience Asked For—Ver. 31: The Proper Course For Grieved Christians—Ver. 32-34: Forgiveness Revoked—A Terrible Possibility—Ver. 35: A Solemn Warning.

"FORGIVE us our trespasses as we forgive them that trespass against us." How can an unconverted or an unsanctified soul pray this prayer? We ask that the precise measure of our mercy to those who wrong us shall be the very measure of God's mercy towards us! If we only forgive those who we think are deserving of forgiveness, we ask God not to forgive us until we deserve it! If we forgive the undeserving by word, and yet cherish a spirit of antagonism against him in our hearts, we are praying God to cherish enmity in His heart against us! If we speak the word of forgiveness, and yet continue to tell out to others how much such an one has wronged us, we are asking God, in this prayer, to forgive us in word, and yet to bear witness against us. If we forgive and do not forget the injury, we are asking God to forgive us and yet to remember our sins against us! O how unsafe, how rash, it is to pray such a prayer, unless we forgive "every one his brother their trespasses"! Paul teaches us to be "kind, one to another, tender hearted—forgiving each other, even as God also, in Christ, forgave you." (Eph. 4: 32, R. V.) God says, "I will forgive their iniquity, and I will remember their sin no more." (Jer. 31: 34.) Therefore, if we forgive as we are forgiven, we must remember the offence no more. If "He is kind unto the unthankful, and to the evil," we have not to wait until a person deserves it before we freely forgive.

Peter, who, with all his faults, was a very practical man, and a kind of economist in his way, was beginning to weigh the teaching of Christ against the resources he had in himself to live up to it. This set him calculating, and the result of his reflection was the question, "Lord, how often shall my brother sin against me, and I forgive him?" In order to have the thing very definite, Peter suggests what would seem to him a very great strain on his powers of endurance, "Till seven times?" O how utterly aghast must he have been at the answer of Jesus, "I say not unto thee until seven times: but, until

Seventy Times Seven!"

Four hundred and ninety times! Surely when we have forgiven the same person nearly five hundred times, we shall long ago have ceased to reckon our forgiveness; it will be the habit of our lives. True, our natural hearts would never be braced up to such a task, but Christ in us will live His own life of forgiveness, and repeat in our hearts, towards those who wrong us, what He said upon the Cross, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do." Our natural hearts instinctively turn to the wrong done to us, and they eloquently plead the injustice of it, and how it would be contrary to all the principles of justice to forgive the guilty. Christ in us, on the contrary, pities the sinning one, and, leading us to put ourselves out of the question, makes us willing to forego our own rights that that erring one may be restored.

"But," says one, "if you are to forgive every wrong, you put a premium on sin." So men said of Paul. (Rom. 3: 8.) But Jesus, in this parable, puts things on the right footing. He tells us of "a certain king, which would take account of his servants." Any direct allusion to the judgment-seat has become strangely unpopular in the present day; and yet the saved and unsaved must be judged; the saved, to "receive things done in his body, according to that he hath done, whether it be Good or Bad"

(II Cor. 5: 10); the unsaved, to be judged before the great white throne "out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works." (Rev. 20: 11, 12.) But long before we shall be judged in another world, God brings His creatures from time to time to a little judgment-day on earth, when things come to a crisis with us, and the Spirit of God shows us what we are, and what we have done in the clear, searching light of God. This is what we call conviction of sin.

The king began to reckon. One after another his servants were brought before him, and strict and impartial investigation was made; old accounts were searched for and handed in, until one man was found who owed him ten thousand talents, i. e., about $12,000,000 (See Rev. Ver.). How could such a debt be ever met? There was nothing to be done but to confiscate his lands and goods. This scarcely met a fraction of the debt; the money had been utterly lost; the man himself, with his wife and children must be sold into slavery! O, if he had but faced the matter sooner, before such utter ruin came upon him, how different would everything have been! Now he had he could do only one thing, and that was to throw himself on the mercy of his king and creditor. But was it not his king's money which he had lost? Had he not made his lord his greatest enemy? Yes, this was all true; yet it was all he could do to throw himself upon his mercy, and say, "Have patience with me, and I will pay thee all." A fair promise; thousands of debtors make it, but how can a bankrupt, who has nothing left, pay anything? The promise was of no value; it was but an impertinence. Yet the very turning to him at all touched the king's heart, and in his wonderful magnanimity, he "loosed him and forgave him the debt." How like God! And we know the other side—how, through the blood of Jesus, shed for us, God can be just and yet justify; without breaking His own holy law, He can yet forgive us all that debt.

The Small Debtor.

"But the same servant went out, and found one of his fellow-servants which owed him an hundred pence; and he laid hands on him, and took him by the throat, saying, Pay me that thou owest! And his fellow-servant fell down at his feet and besought him, saying, Have patience with me, and I will pay thee all." There was more sense in this promise than in his own to the king, for this debt was but a little over seventeen dollars as against twelve millions dollars; yet this man, this forgiven one, would not forgive, but "went and cast him into prison, till he should pay the debt." Do we realize that we are not in the world for ourselves, but for God? That if we are forgiven, we are to serve God's purposes first, as well as our own afterwards? God gives us life that we may live to Him; pardon, that we may reflect a forgiving God upon the world around us; love, that we may love the unlovely, as God has loved us, in the very midst of our sin and rebellion; and He would have us reflect Him as the moon reflects the sun. Thus the world can know His heart by what they see in us. It was true that his fellow-servant did not deserve forgiveness, but neither did he. His lord had dealt with him in grace when he was more undeserving. His fellow-servant had urged the same plea exactly that he had urged, yet he turned a deaf ear! But how can we know when to forgive? "If thy brother trespass against thee, rebuke him, and forgive him. And if he trespass against thee seven times in a day, and seven times in a day turn again to thee, saying, I repent, thou shalt forgive him." Why this excess of pardon? Because it is forgiving as God forgives. A poor woman had a drunken husband: he often beat her, and she would creep away up-stairs and pray, "O God, forgive him for beating me," and the words went like swords to his heart. He would bring very little money home, but if she had gone without food all day, she would always contrive to have something for him. It was not often, only now and then, that he turned to her, saying, "I repent." But whenever he did, there was as free a forgiveness as if it had been the first offence. That woman could pray from her heart, "Forgive us our trespasses as we forgive them that trespass against us." She forgave as God forgave, and those who knew her saw God in her. Another woman, in better circumstances outwardly, had a husband who made a great profession of religion. She was a tender, delicate woman,

A Second Wife, and loved her husband with all her heart, and admired him, and looked up to him as being almost perfect. But, through the confession of a servant girl, she found he had been unfaithful to her, and the poor girl herself was ruined. Her only thought, at first, was to get away; he did not deserve forgiveness, truly; but he turned to her saying, "I repent," and, although with an almost breaking heart, for her disappointment in him, she took the God-like part of forgiving. A Christian merchant, an earnest worker for God, who, by his talents, with God's blessing, had come into a large way of business, had a superintendent in whom he fully trusted, to whom he confided everything, and whom he had raised from the lowest position in the business to the highest. Quite unexpectedly he turns round on his employer, shows him that he is in his power, sets up a similar business, and gains over the customers of his late employer. Money which once went into the work of God goes now to satisfy his pride. The man does not deserve forgiveness, but the impoverished employer has the opportunity to be God-like in forgiving. Such cases are always occurring. The drunkard, the unfaithful husband, the grasping man of business but God gave an opportunity to the two suffering wives and to the merchant, to forgive as they had been forgiven.

The fellow-servants were grieved at heart, and told their lord all that had happened, and another judgment day took place. "His lord, after that he had called him, said, O thou wicked servant, I forgave thee all that debt, because thou desiredst me. Wouldst not thou also have had compassion on thy fellow-servant, even as I had pity on thee? And his lord was wroth, and delivered him to the tormentors, till he should pay all that was due unto him." And that was never! "So likewise," says our Lord, "shall My Heavenly Father do also unto you, if ye from your hearts forgive not every one his brother their trespasses." In heaven are those who are like God. The Lord teach us these lessons of love and forgiveness, lest, after having preached to others, testified of Christ, gloried in His love to us, we should, after all, become castaways.

"FREELY YE HAVE RECEIVED, FREELY GIVE."—Matt. x, 8.

By LILLA M. ALEXANDER.

As the cloud, that heavenward rising,
Gathers moisture from the sea,
So my soul, by faith uplifted,
Draws its life and strength from Thee,
And is filled with all the fullness,
Of Thy love so rich and free.

For the ocean of Thy goodness,
In unmeasured mercy rolls;
And it falls not, though supplying,
Day by day our thirsty souls,—
For the fount from which it floweth,
Everlasting love controls.

And as rain-clouds, filled to bursting,
On the earth their fullness pour,
May I shed on those around me,
Something of my gathered store;
For the soul that giveth, groweth,
And oft emptied, holds the more.

A MEMBER of the distinguished brotherhood of exploring missionaries, the Rev. Henry Lansdell, D. D., whose portrait is given on ou. frontispiece, was born at Tenterden, Kent, England, in 1844, we believe, and therefore is now about forty-four years of age. Having resolved to devote his life to the ministry of the Gospel, he entered the London Episcopal College of Divinity in 1865. After attaining considerable proficiency as a theological student, in 1867 he was ordained as curate to the late Canon Miller, at Greenwich. Mr. Lansdell's zeal in all kinds of purely mission-work was very marked from the outset of his public life, and in the year 1869 he was appointed Metropolitan Association Secretary to the Society for Irish Church Missions. Five years later he originated the Church Homiletical Society, of which he acted as secretary; and in 1875 he started and edited the Clergyman's Magazine. But it is that Dr. Lansdell is best known, for he has not only journeyed round the world, and visited, with two exceptions, every country of Europe, but he has also visited parts of Siberia, Central Asia, Bokhara and Khiva, where no living Englishman had preceded him. In Dr. Lansdell's journeyings, which began in 1874, he has made the distribution of gospel literature his principal object. Each year he distributed thousands of pamphlets, tracts, etc., to the natives of the wild districts which he traversed. In 1878 he left St. Petersburg with two Russian wagon-loads of Scriptures and Gospel leaflets, which he gave away in a journey of 5,500 miles. In 1879 he travelled all across Asia to leaving Bibles and evangelical tracts in every hospital and prison throughout that country, distributing by gift or sale nearly 56,000 books. On this occasion he continued his journey by way of Japan and San Francisco, and having crossed the American continent and the Atlantic Ocean, he completed a tour of 25,500 miles.

As a Traveller and Missionary

In 1880 Dr. Lansdell appears to have been content with a run of 700 miles to Mount Ararat in Armenia, returning by Constantinople, Athens and Rome; but in 1882 he made a very adventurous journey of 11,000 miles through Russian Central Asia, including Kuldja, Bokhara and Khiva, where he distributed 5,000 copies of the Holy Scriptures, and more than 1,000 gospel publications. Dr. Lansdell has published a fascinating volume entitled "Through Siberia," which has had a wide sale, and been translated into German and Swedish; and recently another, brimful of valuable information, with the title "Russian Central Asia," giving details of the journey of 11,000 miles, to which reference has been made. He has just prepared a popular edition of this last-named work bearing the new designation, "Through Central Asia," from which we proceed to summarize extracts chiefly explanatory of the five pictures accompanying the portrait, on our title-page. Like most travellers, Dr. Lansdell is a Freemason. In 1876 he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Geographical Society, and in 1880 a Member of the British Association; and in 1882 the late Archbishop of Canterbury conferred upon him the honorary degree of D.D., in recognition of his literary and missionary services.

Having matured his plans for his Central Asia journey, Dr. Lansdell says; "There were not wanting those who thought my project a hopeless one. Had not other Englishmen tried in vain to penetrate to Russian Central Asia? And was not one of them—a clergyman too, who proceeded by stealth as far as Tashkend—ordered to be off within four-and-twenty hours? Besides these there were some of my older friends who recalled that the last two Englishmen, Colonel Stoddart and Captain Connolly, who entered Bokhara in 1842, were put to death, and that Dr. Wolff, who went to ascertain their fate, nearly lost his life. By them I was thought to be entering on a dangerous enterprise; but I was able to assure them that I had not the slightest intention of putting merely for the satisfaction of saying that I had done so, and that, unless I had not only the permission but the cordial support of the Russians, I should probably not enter Bokhara. But to be candid, I realized it to be the most dangerous journey I had undertaken. I so committed myself into His keeping in whose name I was going forth, and—started." St. Petersburg was reached June 29, 1882, three days after the traveller left London; and within a couple of days he had virtually obtained of the Grand Duke Michael (uncle of the Emperor) and Count Tolstoi, the Minister of the Interior, permission to do exactly as he wished. Upon reaching Moscow an interpreter was secured, and a steamer taken for Perm. Here a tarantass, or travelling-carriage, was purchased, which was intended to be the travellers' dwelling and sleeping place for a long succession of days and nights, and to carry them 3,000 miles. The dreary journey from the Ural Mountains to Omsk having been safely accomplished, with no other incident than the arrest of Dr. Lansdell and his companion for a short time as Nihilists, occasioned by the free distribution of gospel tracts, they pushed forward to an ancient city on the river Irtish, which was reached on August 24. "The buildings of Semipolatinsk," says Dr. Lansdell, "did not strike me as remarkable. The Russian and Tatar merchants of the place sell in the bazaars, tea, sugar and other groceries, cotton stuffs, Chinese silks, porcelain, furs, wax and honey. The principal trade, however, is carried on in winter, when the Cossacks and peasants come in from the neighboring districts, bringing skins, ropes and other produce. The Kirghese also—some on horseback and others in rumbling camel-carts (as seen in frontispiece engraving No. 1)—bring cattle and camel's hair, which they dispose of for flour, tobacco, iron ware, etc."

The next stage was to Sergiopol, a distance of only 180 miles, but comprising eleven stations and necessitating ten changes of horses. At this place a Sunday was spent, visiting the military hospital, prison and barracks, and leaving at each place some copies of the Scriptures, etc. "News of this soon spread," says the missionary, "and I was speedily visited, first by the Russian priest, who came to buy a Kirghese New Testament, and then by a Cossack schoolmistress, in pretty Russian costume and wearing the national head-dress known as the Kokoshnik, with which I fell in love; so, when the lady's purchases were completed, I ventured to ask her to sell it to me for a curiosity. She gracefully declined my request, but offered it as a gift. Accordingly, I made up its value in printed matter, which here I found highly prized, as everywhere else along my route."

At the various halting-stations along the road, Dr. Lansdell invariably managed to engravings of the Prodigal Son and Bible texts, while offering his books for sale. Blessings indeed they must have been in these solitary houses in the wilderness, and the post-masters seemed so to regard them. At the last station before Semipolatinsk an old man said, "The Lord must have sent these books for us."

One of the inconveniences of post travelling, in Asiatic Russia appears to be the absence of good lavatory accommodation. The common method among the Russian peasants of washing the hands is to place them beneath a bowl of water fixed at a height, out of which a stream of water slowly trickles (as shown in front page picture No. 2).

Describing the peculiarities of the different tribes whom he visited en route to Kuldja, Dr. Lansdell furnishes the following interesting items concerning the Kalmucks. He says: "The lamas are teachers, medical sorcerers and priests. Hence their services are called into requisition at a birth, to read prayers over the mother, and name the child; later to instruct the boy, to marry him when grown up, to treat him when ill to prayers and drugs, and after death to decide whether the corpse should be buried, exposed on the steppe to be eaten by dogs, or burned.

A Kalmuck Girl is a Shepherdess.

She is married early, without much attention to her predilections, even without her consent, but she is at liberty to leave her husband and return to her relatives. Whether she likes a suitor, is known by her leaving the tent as soon as the marriage negotiations commence; or the reverse, by her staying during the whole conference. The parents, however, seldom regard her taste, and the aspirant, with their consent, watches for an opportunity of seizing the girl and carrying her off by force, the parents considering their duty towards their daughter fulfilled if only the man carry her off without their seeing it."

There is a Buddhist pagoda in Kuldja, which was duly visited. "Crossing the courtyard," writes Dr. Lansdell, "we entered the joss-house and saw the idols. Against the wall was a large dais, with various eatables arranged thereon, and lamps and vessels for incense. Representations of dragons are displayed, as well as suspended banners and bells. On important occasions, instead of verbal prayers, papers with petitions written thereon are burnt, in the belief that the petitions will thus ascend to God more quickly.

The Bazaars.

On Sept. 4, 1882, the missionary and his interpreter, accompanied by the Consul's servant, visited the bazaars. Everywhere their eyes were met by ceaseless movement, bustle and noise, for the vendors of wares scream out to the purchasers, and there are crowds of children, some half-naked and others wholly so, chasing one another and increasing the general hubbub of the restless scene. Among the crowds of men there is a fair proportion of Chinese women, in national costume, who, owing to their compressed feet, sway from side to side, as if on stilts. The Sart bazaar, called in Russian, Bazaar ulitza, or "shop street," an illustration of which we give under its winter aspect (on front page, engraving No. 3), they found inhabited chiefly by a simple sort of people called Dungans. "Here," says the missionary, "it was amusing to see how every piece of old iron and tin was saved as precious, and exposed for sale, even to empty sardine and blacking boxes. They positively gave me 3 cents for an empty lobster tin."

Dr. Lansdell paid a visit to the Kirghese nomads, at Suigati, in the Ili valley, and tells us that he was so much interested in seeing a woman begin to put up her tent, that he would not stir from the spot till he had witnessed the whole operation. He says, "The component parts are felt and matting, wherewith to cover a framework, including a lintel and side-posts for a door, and ropes, made of horses' manes, hung from a hoop or corona inside to keep the tent down, and outside a stake was driven into the ground to windward for similar security. The floor was strewed with matting and felts, a space being left in the centre for the fire." The tent just described is shown in our frontispiece picture No. 4.

But the traveller was not contented with looking upon the erection of a tent, so he availed himself of an opportunity to visit one when it was "in full working order." He was entertained hospitably. After the meal, the host was asked if he would accept a copy of the New Testament, with the assurance that "it is the best book we have in England." He took it joyfully.

He was then asked what they—the Kirghese—thought became of us after death. Upon which the reply was given that "God had made good angels called Mankir, and bad angels called Nankir and that two of these angels sit invisibly on the shoulders of every man from his birth, Mankir being always on the right. Further, they see all the man does, and write the good and bad in their respective books, which at death are both taken to God, who decides whether the good or bad preponderates, and gives sentence accordingly; the bad being sent into the fire, and the others to the enjoyment of another life in the world of spirits, where the good find all they can desire." A simple but clear explanation of the truth followed, a hearty farewell was exchanged, Dr. Lansdell resumed his journey, and on September 15 entered Tashkend, the headquarters of the Russian administration in Central Asia, where he busied himself in his Master's work.

Arriving in course of time at Samarkand, he visited the celebrated tomb of Timur, and the Mosque of Shah-Zindeh, a Mohammedan local celebrity. No. 5 frontispiece picture illustrates the mode of travelling long distances in Siberia, through which country Dr. Lansdell journeyed in 1879, visiting the prisons, hospitals, barracks and penal settlements, and everywhere distributing the Word of life. He was invariably treated with cordiality and courtesy by the Russian officials, and he embodies the results of his visit in the volume to which we have already referred. It was while travelling through this lone land in winter that he conceived the purpose of traversing the dominions of the Czar in Central Asia. As in Siberia, so in St. Petersburg, Samarkand, Tashkend and every other place he touched at, he gave special attention to the needs of those in the prisons and mines, and his unvarnished relation has done much to concerning the general administration of the law in Russia. In his preface to "Through Siberia," Dr. Lansdell remarks: "Much has been written concerning the prisons and penal institutions of that country which is very unsatisfactory, and some things that are actually false. I do not believe that Russian prisons are what they might be, and I am sure they are not what those who are highest in authority would like them to be; but all this does not justify the representation of them to be what they are not."

He afterwards visited Bokhara, Khiva, Baku, Tiflis, Batoum, Odessa, etc. It may be stated, here, that when he was at Khiva he had an interview with the Khan, to whom he presented a Persian Bible and an Arabic New Testament. "I was of course keenly interested," he says, "as to how the Mohammedans would receive any attempts to convert them to Christianity. I say 'of course,' because I find it extremely hard to understand the position of those who say, 'Let the Mohammedans alone. Their religion is suitable for them. Converts can hardly be made, and, when made, do but follow the example of their Christian masters in eating pork and getting drunk.' Now, if this string of objections were true, which it is not, then I fail to see that a Christian would be released from obedience to his Master, to 'make disciples of all nations, and preach the Gospel to every creature.' In 1883-84 the British and Foreign Bible Society sent colporteurs to both Bokhara and Khiva, where their success is of a very promising charcter.

This Long Journey of 20,000 Miles came to an end on December 21, on which date Dr. Lansdell arrived in London, having been absent from England, 179 days, sleeping in his clothes half the number of nights. "I was somewhat exhausted," says the missionary, "by the journey, but not so much as I have been by writing my books. I commenced them with the thought that, having acquired information possessed by no other Englishman living, it was in a measure incumbent on me to offer it to the public. That duty I have attempted to fulfil, and now I leave the results in higher hands.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

A Sergeant's Story.—Speaking at a Testimony meeting, the man said: "It is about twenty years since the Lord found me and saved me. It was in Calcutta. It was at an evangelistic meeting there that I was deeply convicted of sin, but I did not at once find the Saviour. I went home very wretched, for I knew that if I were to die I should be lost. I was in an agony. I had no one to speak to, for I was on the staff; but taking up my Bible and kneeling down, I asked God to give me a text out of His own Word that would help me; and, bless His name, He did so. He showed me if I came to Christ as a helpless sinner, and gave myself to Him, He would take care of me; and He has done so from that time until now. He drew me to Himself. O that all men knew His beauty and matchless worth! 'And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto Me.'"

From Donald Drunk to Donald Sober.—Mr. Dewar says: "When I was a boy, standing in a shop one day, a man very much under the influence of intoxicating liquor came in. He was an official person, and being appointed to lead others, should have been going the right road himself; but there he was, helplessly intoxicated. He went up to the shop-keeper, and began to speak to him in a quarrelsome and foolish manner. The shop-keeper, who was a friend of the man, turned to him and said, 'You are not Donald to-night; if you were I should speak to you at once. Go away, just now, and ask Donald to look in to-morrow and speak to me.' The man seemed to see the force of the remark, and went quietly away. And is it not true that the man who takes intoxicating drink ceases to be himself? It changes his character, and causes him to say and do things that in his sober moments he abhors."

A Surprised Railway Porter.—A Minister said: "A train was running into Glasgow from the south, one day lately, when a porter saw an old man on the line. He shouted to him to get out of the way, but the man was not within hearing. Then the porter, running to where he was, caught him by the coat and roughly pulled him off the track. As the train thundered past, the porter inquired, 'Another minute later, and what than?' The old man looked up into the porter's face, and smiling, answered, 'What then, do you ask? Then glory.' Taking the hand of the young man, who looked much astonished, he asked, 'If it had been you, what then?' The porter thought for a moment, then turned away without speaking. He knew that he could not say, 'Glory,' as the old man had done. But he determined that, without loss of time, he would become enabled to say that, whatever happened, he would be safe, and so forthwith he sought Christ."

A Good Day for Bess and Bob.—Mr. Hunter remarks: "A married couple whom I knew, were leading very ungodly lives. They were both stricken down by disease, and brought near to the gates of death. A Christian visitor called upon them, the result being the conversion of the woman to God. They were both restored to health; the one determined to live for Christ, the other more determined than ever to have his fill of sin. For two years this state of things went on, the wife's godly ways seeming only to increase her husband's brutal usage to her. One evening he found a new Bible in the house. He seized it, tore off the covers, then dashed the pages, a few at a time, into the fire. A few leaves, however, escaped the burning; these the poor woman afterwards gathered up and placed them on the mantel-piece. The next evening the man came home, and sitting down at the fire, he took one of the spare leaves to light his pipe. Beginning to fold it up, his eyes fell on the words, 'Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do.' The words took hold of his conscience. He replaced the leaf upon the shelf and went out. He returned after a short time, and his wife asked, 'Will you have supper, Bob?' 'No, thank you, Bessie,' he replied, 'I am not hungry.' She was surprised at the gentle answer, but greater was her surprise next morning when she came downstairs and found the fire alight, the kettle on the hob, and, better still, a new Bible on the table. At this moment Bob entered, and, with tears in his eyes, said, 'Bessie, will you forgive me?' This request was quickly and gladly granted. 'Will God forgive me?' he next inquired. 'Ask Him,' said his wife. This was also done, and now that home—once the scene of brutality and blasphemy—has become the home of love and of daily united prayer. 'Old things have passed away, and behold all things have become new.'"

A Highland Soldier thus Testifies: "When I was unconverted, I often lay awake, wondering how I was to get to heaven. I had been very wicked, both before and after I had joined the army, and I knew I could not hope to get there on the strength of my own good works, but I always delayed coming to Christ until I should be a little better, or until I had left the army. One night, as I was lying in bed, after 'lights out,' I heard a man—the first convert in our regiment, and who had been converted that night at the Soldiers' Home—telling his comrade who slept next to him, all about it. He did not know I was listening, but I heard every word, and resolved that next night I would go to the Soldiers' Home. I did not go with the intention of being saved, but the Holy Spirit of God led me there, and before I left I had given my heart to Jesus. And I have, from that night, through Divine help, been a Christian soldier.

Died at His Wife's Feet.—Mr. Thomson Ob-serves: "A man was put into prison lately for deserting his wife and children, and they were taken to the poorhouse. After the fellow had been in prison for some time, the doctor told him that he had heart disease, and any great excitement might kill him. He at once resolved that what remained of his life would be very different from that which he had spent. When he was released, the first thing he did was to take his wife and children from the poorhouse and place them in lodgings. When he got his wife alone he knelt at her feet and exclaimed, 'Oh, Mary, I have been a bad husband to you, but in the strength of the Lord I will do better. I will do my duty as a man and as a Christian, if you will only say that you will forgive the past.' 'Yes, I do, with all my heart, Jack,' the wife replied. 'I am glad to hear you say that; there are brighter days in store for all of us now.' 'Mary, say that again,' he said, still kneeling at her feet; 'it does me good.' 'Get up, Jack; get up, I do forgive you,' replied the woman. She touched him as she spoke; he was dead; on his knees pleading for mercy. The excitement had been too much for his poor weak heart, and he was gone."

No Need to Shiver in the Corner.—"I remember a poor confirmed drunkard who had given himself to the Lord in one of our meetings. He was a strong-bodied man, and earned from two to three pounds a week. When he got home to his miserable, scantily furnished dwelling, he found his wife standing huddled together in a corner. When she saw he was sober, she came forward looking surprised, for it was the first time he had come home sober for months. 'What is the matter, that you stand shivering in that corner?' he asked. 'I thought you were drunk, and I was afraid of you,' she replied. The man, when he saw how he was feared by her whom he should have had only to love, broke down and wept. Looking up, he said, 'Mary, where are the children?' She went and fetched them. In the poor little creatures slipped one by one, looking fearfully in the direction of their father, as if he had been a wild beast whom they feared to arouse. Each fearful glance was like a stab to the father's heart, now that he was sober and in his right mind. Silently he embraced them, and resolved that from that night, they would have no reason to dread him. He says his home is now like a heaven since Christ came to dwell with him.

WIFELY AMBITION, GOOD AND BAD.

Dr. Talmage's Fifth Sermon to THE WOMEN OF AMERICA.

Preached last Sunday Morning, February 13, 1888.

"Arise and eat bread, and let thine heart be merry: I will give thee the Vineyard of Naboth." 1 Kings 21:7.

A Treasured Heritage—Its Sale to Ahab Refused—Jezebel's Plot to Gain it by Unjust Confiscation—The Victim—Retribution after Three Years—Fatal Results of a Wife's Bad Advice—A Wife's Power—Suggestion of the Ballot Test—Probable Effect of Female Suffrage on Burning Questions—Women Drinking in Restaurants—Cruelty of Female Employers—How Good Wives have Inspired Men—Illustrious Examples—Noble and Ignoble Ambitions—Social Distinction—Political Power—An Obliterated Family—The Brave Man Supported and Stimulated by his Wife—A Personal Statement—Famous Names Extinct—The Valor of Joan of Arc—An Empress Entertaining a Prince.

One day King Ahab, looking out of the window of his palace at Jezreel, said to his wife, Jezebel: "We ought to have these royal gardens enlarged. If we could only get that fellow, Naboth, who owns that vineyard out there, to trade or sell, we could make it a kitchen garden for our palace."

"Fetch in Naboth," says the king to one of his servants.

The plain gardener, wondering why he should be called into the presence of his majesty, comes in, a little downcast in his modesty, and with very obsequious manner, bows to the king.

The king says: "Naboth, I want to trade vineyards with you.

I Want Your Vineyard

for a kitchen garden, and I will give a great deal better vineyard in place of it; or, if you prefer money for it, I will give you cash."

"Oh, no," says Naboth, "I cannot trade off my little place, nor can I sell it. It is the old homestead; I got it of my father, and he of his father, and I cannot let the old place go out of my hands."

In a great state of petulancy, King Ahab went into the house and flung himself on the bed, and turned his face to the wall, in a great pout.

His wife, Jezebel, comes in, and she says: "What is the matter with you? Are you sick?"

"Oh," he says, "I feel very blue. I have set my heart on getting that kitchen garden, and Naboth will neither trade nor sell, and to be defeated by a common gardener is more than I can stand."

"Oh, pshaw!" says Jezebel, "don't go on in that way. Get up and eat your dinner, and stop moping. I will get for you that kitchen garden."

Then Jebezel borrowed her husband's signet, or seal—for then, as now, in those lands, kings never signed their names, but had a ring with the royal name engraved on it, and that impressed on a royal letter or document, was the signature. She stamped her husband's name on a proclamation, which resulted in getting against the king, and two perjured witnesses swore their souls away with the life of Naboth, and he was stoned to death, and his property came to the crown, and so Jezebel got for her husband and herself the kitchen garden. But while the wild street dogs were rending the dead body of poor Naboth, Elijah, the prophet, tells them of other canines that will, after a while, have a free banquet, saying: "Where dogs lick the blood of Naboth, shall dogs lick thy blood, even thine."

And sure enough, three years after, Ahab, wounded in battle, his chariot dripping with the carnage, dogs stood under it lapping his life's blood. And a little afterward his wife, Jezebel, who had been his chief adviser in crime, stands at her palace window and sees Jehu, the enemy, approaching to take possession of the palace. And to make herself look as attractive as possible, and queenly to the very last, she decorated her person, and according to Oriental custom closed her eyes and ran a brush dipped in a black powder along the long eye-lashes, and then from the window she glared her indignation upon Jehu. As he rode to the gates in his chariot he shouted to the slaves in her room: "Throw her down!" But no doubt the slaves halted a moment from such yet, knowing Queen Jezebel could be no more to them, and the conqueror Jehu would be everything, as he shouted again, "Throw her down," they seized her and bore her struggling and cursing to the window casement, and hurled her forth till she came tumbling to the earth, striking it just in time to let Jehu's horses trample her and the chariot wheels roll over her. While Jehu is inside at the table refreshing himself after the excitement, he orders his servants to go out and bury the dead queen. But the wild street dogs had for the third time appeared on the scene, and they had removed all her body, except those parts which in all ages dogs are by a strange instinct or brutal superstition kept from touching after death—the palms of the hands and the soles of the feet.

All this appalling scene of ancient history was the result of

to a husband, of a wife's struggle to advance her husband's interests by unlawful means. Ahab and Jezebel got the kitchen garden of Naboth, but the dogs got them. The trouble all began when this mistaken wife aroused her husband out of his melancholy by the words of the text: "Arise, and eat bread, and let thine heart be merry: I will give thee the vineyard."

The influence suggested by this subject is an influence you never before heard discoursed on and may never hear again, but a most potent and semi-omnipotent influence, and decides the course of individuals, families, nations, centuries and eternities. I speak of wifely ambition, good and bad. How important that every wife have her ambition an elevated, righteous and divinely approved ambition.

And here let me say, what I am most anxious for is that woman, not waiting for the rights denied her or postponed, promptly and decisively employ the rights she already has in possession. Some say she will be in fair way to get all her rights when she gets the Right to the Ballot-box.

I wish that the experiment might be tried and settled. I would like to see all women vote, and then watch the result. I do not know that it would change anything for the better. Most wives and daughters and sisters would vote as their husbands and fathers and brothers voted. Nearly all the families that I know are solidly Republican or Democratic or Prohibition. Those families all voting would make more votes but no difference in the result. Besides that, as now at the polls men are bought up by the thousands, women would be bought up by the thousands. The more voters the more opportunity for political corruption. We have several million more voters now than are for public good.

We are told that female suffrage would correct the rum business and the insufficiency of woman's wages. About the rum business I have to say that multitudes of women drink, and it is no unusual thing to see them in the restaurants so over-powered with wine and beer that they can hardly sit up, while there are many so-called respectable restaurants where they can go and take their champagne and hot toddy all alone. Mighty temperance voters those women would make! Besides that, the wives of the rum-sellers would have to vote in the interest of their husbands' business, or have a time the inverse of felicitous. Besides that, millions of respectable and refined women in America would probably not vote at all, because they do not want to go to the polls, and, on the other hand, womanly roughs would all go to the polls, and that might make woman's vote on the wrong side. There is not much prospect of the expulsion of drunkenness by female suffrage.

Two Evils,

As to woman's wages to be corrected by woman's vote, I have not much faith in that.

than men are. Masculine employers are mean enough in treatment of women, but if you want to hear beating down of prices and wages in perfection, listen how some women treat washerwomen and dressmakers and female servants. Mrs. Shylock is more merciless than Mr. Shylock. Women, I fear, will never get righteous wages through woman's vote, and as to unfortunate womanhood, women are far more cruel and unforgiving than men are. After a woman has made shipwreck of her character, men generally drop her, but women do not so much drop her as hurl her with the force of a catapult clear out and off and down and under.

I have not much faith that woman will ever get merciful consideration and justice through woman suffrage, yet I like experiments, and some of my friends, in whose judgment I have confidence, are so certain that alleviation would come by such process that I would, if I had the power, put in every woman's hand the vote. I cannot see what right you have to make a woman pay taxes on her property to help support city, State and national Government, and yet deny her the opportunity of helping decide who shall be Mayor, Governor or President. But let every wife, not waiting for the vote she may never get, or, getting it, find it outbalanced by some other vote not fit to be cast, arise now in the might of the eternal God and wield the power of a sanctified wifely ambition for a good approximating the infinite.

No one can so inspire a man to noble purposes as a noble woman, and no one so thoroughly degrade a man as a wife of unworthy tendencies. While in my text we have illustration of wifely ambition employed in the wrong direction, in society and history are instances of in right directions. All that was worth admiration in the character of Henry VI., was a reflection of the heroics of his wife Margaret. William, Prince of Orange, was restored to the right path by the grand qualities of his wife Mary. Justinian, the Roman emperor, confesses that his wise laws were the suggestion of his wife Theodora. Andrew Jackson, the warrior and President, had his mightest reinforcement in his plain wife, whose inartistic attire was the amusement of the elegant circles in which she was invited. Washington, who broke the chain that held America in foreign vassalage, wore for forty years a chain around his own neck, that chain holding the miniature likeness of her who had been his greatest inspiration, whether among the snows at Valley Forge or the honors of the Presidential chair.

Pliny's pen was driven through all its poetic and historical dominions by his wife, Calpurnia, who sang his stanzas to the sound of flute, and sat among audiences enraptured at her husband's genius, herself the most enraptured. Pericles said he got all his eloquence and statemanship from his wife. When the wife of Grotius rescued him from long imprisonment at Lovestein by means of a bookcase that went in and out, carrying his books to and fro, he was one day transported, hidden amid the folios; and the women of besieged Weinsberg getting permission from the victorious army to take with them so much of their valuables as they could carry, under cover of the promise shouldered and took with them as the most important valuables, their husbands—both achievements in a literal way illustrated what thousands of times has been done in a figurative way, that wifely ambition has been the salvation of men.

De Tocqueville, whose writings will be potential and quoted while the world lasts, ascribes his successes to his wife and says: "Of all the blessings which God has given to me, the greatest of all in my eyes is to have lighted on Maria Motley." Martin Luther says of his wife: "I would not exchange my poverty with her for all the riches of Crœsus without her." Isabella of Spain, by her superior faith in Columbus put into the hand of Ferdinand, her husband, America. John Adams, President of the United States, said of his wife: "She never by word or look discouraged me from running all hazards for the salvation of my country's liberties."

Thomas Carlyle

spent the last twenty years of his life in trying by his pen to atone for the fact that during his wife's life he never appreciated her influence on his career and destiny. Alas, that having taken her from a beautiful home and a brilliant career, he should have buried her in the home of a recluse and scolded her in such language as only a dyspeptic genius could manage, until one day while in her invalidism riding in Hyde Park. her pet dog got run over, and under the excitment the coachman found her dead. Then the literary giant woke from his conjugal injustice, and wrote the lamentations of Craigen-Puttock and Cheyne Row. The elegant and fulsome epitaphs that husbands put upon their wives' tombstones are often an attempt to make up for lack of appreciative words that should have been uttered in the ears of the living. A whole Greenwood of mounmental inscriptious will not do a wife so much good after she has quit the world as one plain sentence like that which Tom Hood wrote to his living wife when he said: "I never was anything till I knew you."

O woman, what is your wifely ambition, noble or ignoble? Is it

High Social Position?

That will then probably direct your husband, and he will climb and scramble and slip and fall and rise and tumble, and on what level or in what depth, or on what height he will, after a while, be found, I cannot even guess. The contest for social position is the most unsatisfactory contest in all the world, because it is so uncertain about your getting it, and so insecure a posession after you have obtained it, and so unsatisfactory even if you keep it. The whisk of a lady's fan may blow it out. The growl of one bear, or the bellowing of one bull on Wall Street, may scatter it.

Is the wife's ambition the political preferment of her husband? Then that will probably direct him. What is American politics, those best know who have dabbled in them. After they have assessed a man, who is a candidate for office, which he does not get, or assessed him for some office attained, and he has been whirled round and round and round and round among the drinking, smoking, swearing crowd, who often get control of public affairs, all that is left of his self-respect or moral stamina would find plenty of room on a geometrical point, which is said to have neither length, breadth or thickness. Many a wife has not been satisfied till her husband went into politics, but would afterward have given all she possessed to get him out.

I knew a highly moral man, useful in the church and possessor of a bright home. He had a useful and prosperous business, but his wife did not think it genteel. There were and sometimes they would adhere to his garments when he returned at night. She insisted on his doing something more elegant, although he was qualified for no business except that in which he was engaged. To please her he changed his business, and, in order to get on faster, abandoned church attendance, saying, after he had made a certain number of hundreds of thousands of dollars he would return to the church and its services. Where is that family to-day? Obliterated. Although succeeding in business for which he was qualified, he undertook a style of merchandise for which he had no qualification, and soon went into bankruptcy. His new style of business put him into evil association. He lost his morals as well as his money. He broke up not only his own home, but broke up another man's home, and from being a kind, pure, generous, moral man as any of you who sit here to-day, has become a homeless, penniless libertine. His wife's ambition for a more genteel business destroyed him, disgraced her, and blighted their child.

But suppose, now, there be in our homes, as thank God there are in hundreds of homes here represented, on one who says not only by her words, but more powerfully by her actions: "My husband, our destinies are united; let us see where industry, honesty, common sense and faith in God will put us. I am with you in all your enterprises. I cannot be with you in person as you go to your daily business, but I will be with you in my prayers. Let us see what we can achieve by having God in our hearts, and God in our lives, and God in our home. Be on the side of everything good. Go ahead and do your best, and though everything should turn out different from what we have calculated, you may always count on two who are going to help you, and God is one and I am the other." That man may have feeble health, and may meet with many obstacles and business trials, but he is coming gloriously through, for he is reinforced and inspired and spurred on by a woman's voice.

Some of us could tell of what influence upon us has been a wifely ambition consecrated to righteousness. As is out of town, and will not shake her head because I say it in public, I will state that in my own professional life I have often been called of God as I thought, to run into the very teeth of public opinion, and all outsiders with whom I advised told me I had better not, it would ruin me and ruin my church, and at the same time I was receiving nice little letters threatening me with dirk and pistol and poison if I persisted in attacking certain evils of the day, until the Commissioner of Police considered it his duty to take his place in our Sabbath services with forty officers scattered through the house for the preservation of order; but in my home there has always been one voice to say: "Go ahead, and diverge not an inch from the straight line. Who cares, if only God is on our side?" And though sometimes it seemed as if I was going out against nine hundred iron chariots, I went ahead cheered by the domestic voice: "Up! for this is the day in which the Lord hath delivered Sisera into thine hands."

A man is no better than his wife will let him be. O wives of America, swing your sceptres of wifely influence for God and good homes! Do not urge your husbands to annex Naboth's vineyard to your palace of success, whether right or wrong, lest the dogs that come out to destroy Naboth come out also to devour you. Righteousness will pay best in life, will pay best in death, will pay best in the judgment, will pay best through all eternity.

Extinct Families.

In our effort to have the mother of every household appreciate her influence over her children, we are apt to forget the wife's influence over the husband. In many households the influence upon the husband is the only home influence. In a great multitude of the best and most important and most talented families of the earth, there have been no descendants. There is not a child or a grandchild, or any remote descendant of Washington, or Charles Summer, or Shakespeare, or Edmund Burke, or Pitt, or Lord Nelson, or Cowper, or Pope, or Addison, or Johnson, or Lord Chatham, or Grattan, or Isaac Newton, or Goldsmith, or Swift, or Locke, or Gibbon, or Walpole, or Canning, or Dryden, or More, or Chaucer, or Lord Byron, or Walter Scott, or Oliver Cromwell, or Garrick, or Hogarth, or Joshua Reynolds, or Spencer, or Lord Bacon, or Macaulay. Multitudes of the finest families of the earth are extinct. As though they had done enough for the world by their genius or wit or patriotism or invention or consecration, God withdrew them. In multitudes of cases all woman's opportunity for usefulness is with her contemporaries. How important that it be an improved opportunity!

While the French warriors on their way to Rheims had about concluded to give up attacking the castle at Troyes, because it was so heavily garrisoned, entered the room and told them they would be inside the castle in three days. "We would willingly wait six days," said one of the leaders. "Six!" she cried out, "you shall be in it tomorrow," and under her leadership, on the morrow they entered. On a smaller scale, every man has garrisons to subdue and obstacles to level, and every wife may be an inspired Joan of Arc to her husband.

What a noble, wifely ambition, the determination, God helping, to accompany her companion across the stormy sea of this life and together gain the wharf of the Celestial City! Coax him along with you! You cannot drive him there. You cannot nag him there; but you can coax him there. That is God's plan. He coaxes us all the way—coaxes us out of our sins, coaxes us to accept pardon, coaxes us to heaven. If we reach that blessed place, it will be through a prolonged and divine coaxing. By the same process take your companion, and then you will get there as well, and all your household. Do just the opposite of your neighbor. Her wifely and a disappointed and vexed and unhappy creature she will be all the way. Her residence may be better than yours for the few years of earthly stay, but she will move out of it, as to her body, into a house about five and a half feet long and about three feet wide and two feet high; and concerning her soul's destiny you can make your own prognostication. Her husband and her sons and daughters, who all, like her, live for this world, will have the same destiny for the body and the soul. You, having had a wifely ambition, will pass up into palaces, and what becomes of your body is of no importance, for it is only a scaffolding, pulled down now that your temple is done. You will stand in the everlasting rest and see your husband come in, and see your children come in, if they have not preceded you. Glorified Christian wife! Pick up any crown you choose from off the King's footstool and wear it; it was promised you long ago, and with it cover up all the scars of your earthly conflict.

Sixteen miles from Petersburg, Russia, was one of the royal palaces, and there one night Catherine the Empress entertained Prince Henry. It was severe winter and deep snow, and rode in a magnificence of sleigh and robe and canopy never surpassed, followed by two thousand sleighs laden with the first people of Russia, the whole length of the distance illumined by lamps and dazzling temples built for that one night, and imitations of mosques and Egyptian pyramids; and people of all nations, in all styles of costume, standing on platforms along the way and watching the blaze of the pyrotechnics. At the palace the luxuries of kingdoms were gathered and spread, and at the table the guests had but to touch the centre of a plate and, by magical machinery, it dropped and another plate came up loaded with still richer viands. But all that scene of the long ago shall be eclipsed by the greater splendors that will be gathered at the banquet made by the Heavenly King for those consecrated women who come in out of the winter and snowy chill of their earthly existence into the warm and illumined palaces of heaven. With the King himself and all the potentates, yourself robed and crowned, you will sit at a table compared with which all the feasts of Kenilworth and St. Cloud and the Alhambra were a beggar's crust. And the platter of one royal satisfaction touched at the centre shall disappear only to make room for a beggar's crust; and the golden plate of one royal satisfaction, touched at the centre, shall disappear only to make room for the coming up of some richer and grander regalement.

A THIEVES' PARLOR VISITED BY A CITY MISSIONARY.

The Rev. James Wells, M. A., of Glasgow, in a recent address, said: "I entered a house where seven or eight men were playing at cards. As they were satisfied at a glance that I had nothing to do with the police, I at once announced myself as the missionary, and they with equal frankness announced their profession: they were regular thieves. I was in a thieves' parlor, or den of thieves. The house had scarcely a stick of furniture in it, for the householders held themselves ready to flit at a moment's notice. The men did not look like other men. Evidently their clothes had not been made for them, but had been got ready-made—probably at a pawn-shop. They had cropped heads, slouching round backs, and stunted, unhealthy-looking, back-boneless frames. They entered freely into conversation with me, and spoke quite respectfully. The oldest man among them—about forty—was an Englishman, called Friday; perhaps because, as in the case of Robinson Crusoe's man, some great event of his life had taken place on that day. He was a returned convict, and

The Chief of the Crew,

'by merit raised to that bad eminence.' He ruled them with a nod, and owed his undisputed authority apparently to the sheer intensity of his iniquity and his extraordinary force of character. His spirit seemed a compound of hatred of good and hatred of man—a compound of Cain and Ishmael, and I thought that I had never before met anyone so hardened and defiant. He gave me a disquieting idea of the meaning of the phrase 'the dangerous classes.' He had lustrous eyes, sunken cheeks, and a hollow, consumptive cough. I expressed regret at his poor health. 'Yes,' he said, 'I belong to a consumptive family, not one of whom has lived past forty-five, and I am now over forty.' I reasoned with them, and they all condemned themselves except Friday. 'No,' he said, sternly, 'society has wronged me, and I am just taking my revenge upon society; that's fair enough.' 'But,' I replied, 'you must be beaten sooner or later; for you are weak, man is strong, and God is stronger;

Both God and Man are Against You,'

'No,' he yelled, furiously, 'Friday will never give in.' He then described with admiration the death-bed of an old thief, whose name seemed a household word with them, and who, with his latest breath, ridiculed 'the parson,' who wished to pray with him, and died blaspheming.

"The next in point of age was 'Tommy,' who might be about twenty-seven. He had lately come out of prison, and was in bad health. Though brought up a Romanist, he had an extensive acquaintance with the Bible, which, he told me, he had gained in prison. He frankly admitted the truth of all I said, confessed his misery and self-dissatisfaction, but pleaded that he could not now keep himself. He deeply regretted that his father, who was also a thief, had not taught him a trade; he had been 'born in the business,' as another thief said; and no one could have added more feelingly than he did—'I am like the unjust steward in the parable. I cannot dig, and to beg I am ashamed.' His deep feeling drew out my sympathy, and subsequently I had friendly interviews with him.

"A well-dressed young fellow, who was master of the house, told me that he must be a Catholic, because his father had told him so. He said that as master of the house he levied blackmail on the rest. Four or five heavy-necked halflings completed the crew. They were apprentices at this thieves' college, though they had not yet taken out their degree, but they would soon be fit for it. They showed me some silk handkerchiefs which they had stolen, with the marks torn out. One showed me my own handkerchief which he had abstracted from my pocket during conversation. At my request he showed me how he had stolen it, and so I got

My First Lesson in Pocket-Picking.

They showed not a little hardened bravado, and a tendency to magnify their adventures. They had narrowly escaped detection the previous evening, as they had stolen, among other things, a basket with six bottles of brandy. They were revelling over their spoil when, roused by the alarm of the detectives, they threw up the window, and dashed the bottles in pieces against the wall. They described the episode with great animation and dramatic effect. They vowed a most intense hatred of policemen, and were quite sure that a thief had not so much to answer for on the Judgment Day as a policeman. I said, 'Is it fair or manly in you to take away from an honest workingman the money he has wrought for, and to do it by coming sneaking behind him?' They evaded the question, but maintained strongly that there was the strictest honor among thieves, and in proof of it quoted the case of the governor of Millbank Penitentiary, whose watch, stolen in London, was returned to him by post by the thieves, as soon as they knew that it was his, and all this in token of their respect for him. As I was leaving, Friday said, 'Well, you're the first stranger that has visited us to-day, and I take it for a good sign. I think we'll have good luck to-night,'—and a loud, rude laugh signified their hearty approval of the sentiment. Unwilling to let him have the last word, I made another appeal to him. 'Nay, nay,' he replied with piercing emphasis, 'none of your canting and praying for me; be sure Friday will die plucky; Friday will die plucky, and no mistake.' With these defiant tones ringing in my ears I came sadly down the stairs.

"Three or four months afterwards, when near the Tron steeple, some one gently touched my arm. Turning round, I found my friend Tommy, much excited. Courteously lifting his cap to me, he said: 'Do you remember that day when you saw us all in Princes Street?' 'Yes,' I said. 'Do you remember

What Friday Said to You?'

'Yes, he said that he would die plucky.' 'Well, he got seven years from Lord Ardmillan yesterday for stealing a watch; he never spoke a word after, nor lifted his head, and he was found dead in his cell this morning.' Poor Friday! after all, he did not die plucky. I told this story to a friend of mine, an advocate, who mentioned it to Lord Ardmillan. His lordship remembered Friday quite well, and, true Christian philanthropist that he was, he was profoundly affected."

A CAPTAIN'S DISMISSAL.

A christian captain held religious services on board his vessel every Lord's Day, wind and weather permitting, and many of his crew and passengers have been converted to God through his instrumentality. Some parties in New Zealand, connected with the firm which employed him, wrote home to complain of him, stating that Captain C. was too religious, and expressing a fear that the house would suffer, unless a check were put upon him. Accordingly, he was told that unless he altered his conduct in this respect he would be discharged on his return to England; and he was requested to take three days to consider the question, and then let the firm have his answer. The captain replied, "I do not want three days to consider; you can have the answer now." But no, he was to consider. On the third day he gave his answer, and it was to this effect: He would do his best for the owners, but if the passengers did not object to his preaching he must continue to do so. The reply was, "Very well, then; on your return you must leave the ship." The ship went out, and had a very prosperous voyage in every respect. Services were held on board morning and evening, and many were led to the Saviour. On reaching home, when all was settled, the captain was called into the office and told, "Well, captain, you have not done as we required you. You will remember what was said; you will have to leave the ship." "Sorry for it," was the reply; "she has had a good run and paid well?" "O yes; nothing to complain of," said the owner; "she has done well, never better. But there is our word, and that is our bond." "Well," said the captain, "I suppose you do not object to give me a letter to some other house; for I have done my duty as a servant to you ever since I entered your employ." "Do not be in a hurry," said the gentleman; "for although we never deviate from our word when it is given, and therefore you must leave the ship, yet—it is only to be removed to one of our best vessels, since we feel that a man who thus honors his God is too good to lose. And here is a cheque for £20, as an acknowledgment of our confidence." Such was the happy issue of one of the trials of a good man's life.

A WIDOW'S VIGIL.

Seven years in one room have been passed by a widow at Los Angeles, Cal. The Alta states that the efforts of the city council to have a house removed which stands on a city lot in Fort Street have been so steadily resisted that inquiries have been made as to the basis of the objections, and a remarkable story has been brought to light. Twelve years ago a man and his wife went from the East, and occupied the house. After five years the man, who was in a consumption, died. Thereupon his widow had her bed removed into the room in which he breathed his last, and has remained there ever since. During the whole seven years no one has seen her. She had a blind-door fixed to the room, and all business transactions have been made through its means. A faithful old woman has waited upon her, putting her meals inside the door, and receiving instructions there, the voluntary prisoner keeping carefully out of sight during the conversation. The explanation given by the widow for this extraordinary life is, that just before her husband died he told her that if it was possible for him to visit her after his death he would do so, and give her information about the world beyond the grave. On the night after his death she dreamed that he appeared to her, and told her to await his communication in his room, and that it might be eight years before she would receive it. She has accordingly waited there; and fully believing that her husband will come, has refused to leave the room lest he should come in her absence. She has displayed a constancy worthy of a better cause. If Christians were similarly minded there would be far more intensity in their work and consecration in their lives, as they would fear lest at their Master's coming, He should find them spiritually sleeping. (Mark 13: 35–37.)

A BRAHMIN'S INTERRUPTED JOURNEY.

The death of a useful Scripture reader is reported from India by Rev. Thomas Tracy in a letter to the Church. He describes the man's death as not only peaceful but triumphant, and narrates the following account of his remarkable conversion.

Nandkishor, although a Brahmin, was so ignorant that he was unable to read. He was a young man, but had led such a life of sin that disease in one of its worst forms had made him a cripple, and threatened to soon end his days on earth. One who saw him at the time said that he was a living skeleton. Knowing as he did that he could not long live in such a condition, and with no hope of recovery, he decided that his best course was to reach, if possible, the sacred temple of Jagan Nith, and gain the merit of ending his life there. God, however, intended better things for him, and led him in a way he knew not. He had travelled fifty miles on his way, and there had left the carriage for some purpose, and was sitting near the entrance to the station, when he was observed by the civil surgeon of the town, who was accustomed to go or send to each passenger train, that he might be of service to any in need. This officer was an eminent Christian. Nandkishor was induced to give up his journey and go to the hospital in hope of being healed. At this hospital there was a Christian compounder, and at that time an inmate who was also a Christian. More than this, the missionary of the station and his helper were accustomed to visit the sick and tell them of the love of the Lord Jesus Christ. In these circumstances we see the loving hand of God in guiding this wanderer to Himself, for such favorable conditions could hardly have been found in all that region of country. Slowly the mind of Nandkishor was awakened, and slowly was he drawn to the Saviour who so lovingly held out His arms to receive him. Ignorance and prejudice and pride gave place to deep spiritual insight and firm faith and confidence in Jesus as the only Saviour of men. A good degree of health was granted to him as the result of care and skill, and he devoted it to the publication of the glorious news of salvation.

THE PYRAMID POINTING TO 1888-9 AS YEARS OF TROUBLE.

(See Sectional Diagram on Page 108.)

According to the Astronomer-Royal for Scotland, Professor Smyth's Period of 1,882 Years from the Nativity in A. D. 6.

THE Great Pyramid of Egypt is one of the acknowledged Seven Wonders of the World, on account of the Colossal Magnitude of its Height, Breadth and Length, and also its Antiquity and mysterious Origin.

Professor Piazzi Smyth, Astronomer-Royal for Scotland, spent a year in a visit of exploration to the Great Pyramid, and in writing a large book of 700 pages upon it, called "Our Inheritance in the Great Pyramid." In this book he, as well as the Rev. Dr. Seiss in his "Prophecy in Stone," and other writers, maintains that the Pyramid was guided by a prophetic spirit, and that the length of its interior passages in inches, figuratively represents periods of an equal number of years, and that therefore, THE LENGTH OF THE GRAND GALLERY OF 1882 inches prefigures and represents A PERIOD OF 1882 YEARS FROM THE BIRTH OF CHRIST TO THE BEGINNING OF THE LATTER-DAY TROUBLOUS TIMES PREDICTED BY DANIEL TO PRECEDE THE SECOND ADVENT OF CHRIST. (Daniel 9: 26, 12: 1.)

After the Grand Gallery of 1882 inches, there follows a low exit passage, which is understood to represent the ensuing Troublous Times and Distress of Nations for a few years before the End of this Age, and accompanying considerable Depopulation of the Earth, which will take some years at the commencement of the Millennium to repair even measurably.

The true date of the Birth of Christ has been ably shown by the late Duke of Manchester in his learned book, "Times of Daniel," to be A.D. 5 or 6—the chronological evidence preponderating in favor of A. D. 6. Hence 1882 years commencing in A. D. 6 will end in 1888, as the commencement of Daniel's predicted Troublous Times and Distress of Nations. (Dan. 9: 25; Luke 21: 25.) And 1888, according to the Jewish Calendar, ends on April 1, 1889.

The Great Pyramid of Egypt is supposed to have been built about the year 2170 before Christ, and consists of an enormous solid mass of stones, covering an exactly square space of ground, which is 763 feet wide on each of the four sides of its base—about 13 acres. Each of its four sides gradually slants upwards until they reach their highest summit, which constitutes the apex of the pyramid, at a height of 486 feet from the earth.

In the very heart and centre of this gigantic mass of stone there is called the King's Chamber, 412 inches long, 206 broad, and 230 inches high—that is to say, about 11½ yards in length, 6 yards wide, and 6½ yards high. This chamber is reached from the outside by a long, narrow passage, which is between 3 and 4 feet wide.

This passage from the outside first goes downwards for 985 inches, and this portion of it is called, for the sake of distinction, the Entrance Passage. The passage then proceeds upwards for 1,542 inches further, which portion is termed the First Ascending Passage. The passage then suddenly becomes about seven times higher, for it increases in height from 47 inches to 339 inches, and consequently from this point onward it is called for a distance of 1,882 or 1,883 inches, at the end of which the passage abruptly decreases in height from 338 inches to 43 inches, i. e., about 3½ feet, so that a man has to stoop very much to creep onward. This very low exit-passage leading out of the Grand Gallery continues for 52 inches, and then comes what is termed the Antechamber, which is 116 inches long, 65 inches broad, and 149 inches high. After this, the passage becomes narrower and lower for a distance of 100 inches, and then enters at once into the spacious King's Chamber, inside which there stands a granite coffer, the outside measure of which is 90 inches long, 38½ inches broad, and 41 inches high.

The marked and superior height of the Grand Gallery, in contrast with the lesser height of the preceding Entrance Passage and First Ascending Passage is understood to typify the high and elevated character of the Christian dispensation in contrast with the inferior character of the preceding Jewish Dispensation.

It is an extraordinary fact that this

of the Troublous Times to commence about A. D. 1888-9 mainly agrees with certain chronological prophecies in Daniel and Revelation. For example, the 1,260 years (Daniel 12: 7; Revelation 11: 2), which is universally allowed to be the measurement of the Mohammedan as well as the Papal Antichrist, was calculated by the Rev. W. Girdlestone to commence in A. D. 630, the date of Mohammed's capture of Mecca, and therefore to end in 1890, by which time some tremendous blow will be inflicted on Mohammedanism and the Turkish empire (the mystic Euphrates) which is the principal stronghold and bulwark of the temporal power of Mohammedanism, although as the Mohammedans did not capture Jerusalem until 637, the 1,260 years of Mohammedanism cannot be expected to end fully until 1897.

The Rev. W. Girdlestone wrote in 1820 in his "Observations on the Prophecies:"—"The period of 1,260 years is to be dated from the establishment of Mohammedan imposture, which took place in the year A. D. 630, when Mohammed seized possession of the city of Mecca, which thenceforth became the sacred capital of Mohammedanism and synchronises therefore with the taking away of the daily sacrifice. (Rev. 11: 2, 3.) Mohammed did not establish his religion or his power till he was master of Mecca; from that time the Mussulman armies poured into Syria, and out of Syria they came upon Jerusalem."

Professor Smyth, in the fourth edition (in 1879) of his work, states that the Grand Gallery is 1,881 inches long, according to his measurement, but that Mr. Hiram Powers's measurement of it makes it to be between 1,881 and 1,882 inches; therefore Professor Smyth, in his detailed specifications of the measurements of the various interior passages of the Pyramid in his Chapter x. on page 222, specifies the length of this Grand Gallery to be 1,882 inches. He also states that Mr. Lane's measurement of it gives 1,894 inches as its length; so that after all its real length may be at least one or two inches longer than 1,882 inches, for it must be difficult to ascertain precisely to the amount of an inch the length of a long dark passage more than fifty yards long. In fact, Professor Smyth admits a marginal uncertainty to the extent of a year or two, i. e., an inch or two, for he says, on page 478: "So far as the final numbers of my actual Pyramid measurements are concerned, I do not recommend any one to trust to them for so small a quantity as a whole year," i. e., one inch. The Professor also says:

"For all those who have accepted the beginning of the Grand Gallery for the beginning of the Christian dispensation at the birth of Christ [Which the late Duke of Manchester, and Strauchius, hold to be in A. D. 5 or 6.—Editor.] there is nothing for it but also to accept that a period, distinct and finite, was appointed to that dispensation by God, and that that finite period is close upon us. Not an end of the world, or of nations, or of men, but of the dispensation.

"How Close, Then, is Such an End?

The answer to that question must depend on the length of the Grand Gallery by measure in pyramid inches, which symbolically represent years.

"As usual with the accounts of travellers at the Great Pyramid, there are various results in print. According to Mr. Lane's measurement of the Grand Gallery, its length is 1,894 pyramid inches. My own measures of the Grand Gallery, however, taken in 1865, amounted to, for the length up to the great step, 1,813.0 pyramid inches; and thence up to the end wall, in the line concluded for the slanting floor 68 inches farther—1,881.0 pyramid inches in all; or, as computed more exactly by Mr. H. A. Powers, of Cincinnati,* 1,881.4 pyramid inches.

"Something, then, seems to be appointed to take place at that particular time, and it is much easier to say what it is not than what it is. It is not, for instance, as just stated above, the end of the world, for there is a "passage floor" leading on from the Grand Gallery to the Antechamber; through that also, and onwards into the King's Chamber, the granite-lined and most glorious part of the whole interior of the building.

"In fact, it is rather like the unexampled days of future trouble which our Saviour Himself announced should immediately precede His second coming and terminate this dispensation of His first coming.

"O the unutterable anguishes of these most exceptional days to come! We read (Matt. 24: 21; Mark 13: 19) that "there shall be affliction such as there was not from the beginning of the creation which God created unto this time, neither shall be." But its duration will not be long, "for," continues our Saviour, "except the Lord had shortened those days, no flesh should be saved; but for the elect's sake, whom He hath chosen, He hath shortened the days."

"The Severities of These Times are pyramidally expressed at this place by the exit passage from the south end of the Grand Gallery being lower still than any of the low passages, which indicate the troubles of the profane world in early times. Those passages were forty-seven inches in transverse, and fifty-two in vertical height; painfully low, therefore, for any full-sized men to creep through; but the exit passage leading from this end of the Grand Gallery is only forty-four inches in vertical height, and is the most trying part of the whole passage system."

* Professor Smyth says: "My measures ought to have been of the floor. For practical convenience they were taken on the surface of the ramps, and would have given the same result as the floor, but for the 'impending' of the south wall of the Grand Gallery, which makes the correction furnished by Mr. Powers. This I fully agree in: but I am not equally disposed to accept certain different modes of using my own measures, adopted either by Mr. W. Rowbottom in his 'The Mystery of the Bible Dates Solved by the Great Pyramid;' nor, again, the rather different results brought out by Mr. Geo. N. Walsh, in his 'Israel's Chronology.' But I do not actively object to them, for some of their principles of divergence seem fair enough, in cases where it is difficult to maintain one opinion only, while the final and positive test for every one is the future. Mr. Walsh, I should perhaps add, by measuring over the surface of the Grand Gallery's step, in place of through it in continuation of the floor-line, increases the length of the whole from 1,881.4 to 1,910 pyramid inches."

CURRENT EVENTS.

The Extradition Treaty with Great Britain failed of confirmation in the Senate, last week. It was not finally rejected, but its further consideration was postponed until the first Monday in December. This decision was arrived at in secret session on February 8, and was adopted by a vote of 23 to 21. Senators have been moved to take this course, it is said, chiefly by two considerations. One of these is that though mutually advantageous, the treaty is more earnestly desired by Great Britain than America, and, therefore, that it is political to keep it in suspense pending the issue of the negotiation on the Fisheries. The chief cause, however, is doubtless an indisposition to confirm a treaty in which Irish refugees are vitally interested, until after the Presidential election, in which the Irish vote will be wanted by both parties.

An Important Mail Contract was Effected last week by the new Postmaster-General with the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad Company, by which the journey between New York and San Francisco will be performed in one hundred and twelve hours. By the new arrangement, which goes into operation at an early date, California mail leaving San Francisco in the evening after business hours and arriving at Council Bluffs in the afternoon of the third day will there be taken up by the new fast train, and will reach Chicago in time for the first morning delivery on the fourth day from the Pacific coast. A fast train is to leave Chicago on the arrival of the Pacific coast train, and to make New York in about twenty-five hours from Chicago, and about one hundred and twelve hours from San Francisco. And as the Pacific coast train will leave San Francisco in the evening, and as its connection, if established, will arrive in New York in the morning, it will make a practical saving of one full business day. This new contract is regarded by the Postmaster-General as the most advantageous, as well as the most important, ever entered into by the Post Office for a fast mail service.

The Possibility of an Agreement Between the parties on the Tariff question does not appear so remote as it did a few weeks ago. Prominent members of the Republican party are quoted by Washington journals as disposed to consent to a large increase in the free list, and important reductions in other cases. Senator Sabin, of Minnesota, has, it is stated, declared himself for free salt, free lumber and a reduction of the duty on steel rails. General Browne, Republican, of Indiana, declares for free salt, free lumber, free tin plates and a reduction on some hardware products. Mr. Nelson, Republican, of Minnesota, declares he is ready to go for tariff reduction. "Just as far as it is possible to go, I would like," he says "to have as many of the necessaries of life put on the free list as possible, and have the taxes retained on whiskey and tobacco." Other Republicans advocate reductions in articles which will not affect the business of the States they represent, and very few are opposed to some reduction. The aspect of affairs at the present stage suggests the expectation that the struggle on the question will be as much between sections of the country as between political parties.

The Agitation for the Admission of Utah into the Union is being vigorously prosecuted in Washington. The friends of morality should therefore be on their guard. The specious considerations urged by the Mormons are clearly deceptive. They point out that the constitution framed by Utah makes polygamy a crime, and undertakes never to revoke the article without the consent of Congress. Its power to do so, however, would be a question for the Supreme Court, and as the provision would place Utah on a different footing from other States, it is not difficult to predict how the Court would decide it. The plain fact is that if Congress surrendered its power to govern Utah by making her a State, she would be governed by the majority of her citizens, and they are Mormons, who, as their past record shows, are not to be trusted on the polygamy question, for they systematically set the law at defiance as long as they could. The demand for admission should therefore be strenuously resisted.

The Suspension of Another Bank in Cincinnati, the Metropolitan, caused some excitement last week. It was closed on February 7, and as in the case of the Fidelity Bank, arrests promptly followed. The President, Mr. William Means, and the Vice President, Mr. John R. Decamp, have both been arrested and placed under bonds. The President is charged with having loaned about a quarter of a million to himself without security. He contends, however, that although the amount appears against him on the bank's books, it was not a personal debt, but was used in protecting the bonds and stock of the institution. The bank examiner states that there is about $400,000 of bank funds of which he can find no trace at all. The money has simply disappeared without any record being made as to where it went. A not very reassuring opinion is that given on the case by Mr. Harper, of the Fidelity Bank, who is now in prison for his share in wrecking that institution, Mr. Harper denounces the lax methods of government examiners. He said: "The trouble is that these examiners do not call on a bank unless they hear rumors affecting its credit—the very time they should stay away and give the bank a chance to recover. Had the examiner done his duty the Fidelity would never have failed, and I would not now be in prison. The examination being careless and slack, I took the risk and lost. If the truth was known nine-tenths of all the bankers in the country would be in prison for the violation of the laws that I was convicted for."

An Important Speech by Prince Bismarck in the German Reichstag, on February 6, is variously interpreted in Europe as a general menace, and an attempt to establish a more pacific confidence than now exists. Probably it was intended as an intimation to all whom it might concern, that Germany was ready for war if war should be forced upon her, while herself desiring peace, and laboring zealously to promote it. The Chancellor, reviewing the past year's events, said that, "there has been very little change since then, when I feared war with France. Since then France has elected a peace-loving President, and, a pacific disposition has prevailed. I can therefore reassure the public that, so far as France is concerned, the prospect has become more peaceful. Regarding Russia, also, I am of no other opinion than when I said that we have to apprehend no attack from Russia. The situation must not be judged from press comments. The Russian newspapers I do not believe. I believe the Czar's word absolutely." Referring to the treaty with Austria, Bismarck declared that it was the expression of the community of interests of the two contracting parties. "This it was we wished the world to know. Not this treaty only, but also that with Italy is the expression of common interests and common efforts to avert common dangers." Finally, after sketching the effective strength of the German Empire, the Chancellor said: "When we undertake a war it must be a people's war which all approve, as in 1870. If we are attacked, then the furor Teutonicus will flame out. No one can make headway against that. Neither consciousness of our strength nor hope of victories can restrain us from continuing our peaceful efforts. I hope we shall remain at peace with our neighbors, especially with Russia, which has no pretext for a war."

The Opening of the British Parliament on Feburary 9, was marked by less excitement than usual. The Royal speech announced the settlement of the Afghan Boundary dispute with Russia, which so nearly precipitated war between the two countries a few years ago. Also the settlement of the disputes with France as to the Suez Canal and the New Hebrides. As to Ireland, the utterances are vaguely sanguine. The speech informs the legislators that "the measures which at great labor you passed last session for the benefit of Ireland have been carefully carried into effect during the period since elapsed. The result of the legislation, so far as tested by this short experience, is satisfactory. Agrarian crime has diminished, and the power of coercive conspiracies has sensibly abated. Measures tending to develop the resources of Ireland and to facilitate an increase in the number of proprietors of the soil will be laid before you." The Parliament also received an intimation that money is needed by the great spending departments, those of the army and navy, for fortifications and ships. The House will be asked "to provide for the improvement of the defences of the ports and coasting stations, rendered urgently necessary by the advance of military science, and also to sanction an arrangement providing for a special squadron to protect Australian commerce, the cost of which will be partially borne by the colonies." This with congratulation on an improvement in trade, and regret that there was no corresponding improvement in agriculture, completed the body of the royal communication.

An Operation on the Throat of the German Crown Prince was performed on February 9. The news caused disappointment to his friends the world over, who hoped that the favorable reports recently issued were an evidence that no operation would be needed. On the night of February 8, however the Prince experienced great difficulty of breathing. He spent the night walking briskly about his rooms, evidently suffering severely. Dr. Mackenzie and the other physicians held a consultation the next morning, and decided that it would not be safe to pass another night without an operation. It was accordingly performed, no chloroform being administered. The Prince bore it with fortitude, and experienced relief from its effects. The operation is technically known as Tracheotomy. It is a surgical operation by means of which an opening is made through the trachea, or windpipe, in which opening is introduced a small curved silver tube, which allows air to pass freely down into the bronchial tubes and thence to the lungs. This operation in itself, as a rule, does not carry any serious features with it, but is an operation which is used only in such disease as croup, where danger of suffocation arises from the filling up of the larynx and trachea.

The Irish Question from the Historian's standpoint is somewhat discouraging to the Liberals. Mr. James A. Froude, who is probably the greatest living historian, says in a letter recently published: "Any form of self-government which might be conceded to the Irish people, whether it be local councils or a parliament, would be used to increase England's difficulty in keeping Ireland attached to the kingdom. The Irish can be governed more easily than any other people in the world under military or quasi-military rule. The police are uniformly faithful and loyal. England has never yet succeeded in governing Ireland constitutionally, and never will."

The Election of a President of Princeton in succession to Dr. McCosh, whose resignation the trustees have reluctantly accepted, took place on February 9. The choice fell upon Professor Francis L. Patton, D. D., LL. D., who went to Princeton in 1881 to fill the Stuart Professorship on "the Relations of Philosophy and Science to the Christian Religion." Dr. Patton also holds the chair of Christian Ethics in the College. His views are in decided agreement with those of Dr. McCosh on philosophical and theological subjects, and if he accepts the Presidency it is believed that no material change will be made in the present methods. Dr. Patton is forty-five years old, having been born at Warwick, Bermuda, in 1843. He graduated from Princeton in 1865. His first charge was of the Eighty-fourth Street Church, New York. Dr. McCosh is to be President Emeritus of the College, with a salary of $2,500, and a further salary as Professor of Philosophy, if the high-spirited old gentleman will accept it. A bronze statue of him will be erected in front of the Marquand Hall, at a cost of $12,000.

The Death of the Rev. George Bowen is reported from Bombay, India. He has been forty-two years a missionary, and was known as the Nestor of the Indian Conference. He was born in this country in 1816, and was therefore seventy-two years old when he died. When a young man he read the writings of Gibbon, the infidel historian, and, falling under their influence, avowed himself an atheist. For eleven years he was an active oppenent of Christianity but he was converted at the death-bed of a lady to whom he was deeply attached, and after a short period of retirement and meditation resolved to sacrifice all his worldly prospects, which were very brilliant, and devote himself to Christ's service. In 1846 he went to India, where he supported himself by teaching, and preached the gospel without salary. He became the Secretary of the Religious Tract Society, managing its Indian depot without pay in addition to his other labors. He joined the MethodistConference, and continued to labor on until his death, never revisiting his native country, though often urged to do so.

Valuable Testimony to the Efficacy of the work for aiding discharged convicts was given at the anniversary of the Home of Industry, in New York. Some of the speakers had been old offenders, who had served various terms in penal institutions for serious crimes, and who had been reclaimed at the Home after their discharge from prison. Many of these have found profitable employment at trades or in business houses, while others are earning their living at the work done in the home itself. Since the establishment of the home, nine years ago, 2,311 convicts have been admitted as inmates, and of this number 1,061 have secured outside employment through the assistance of its officers.

A Quadrupedal Detective did Good Service to his owner at Middletown, N. Y., on January 21. A farmer residing in that town had business in a town across the New Jersey line, and drove there in his sleigh, behind a very valuable horse. He tied the horse and sleigh under a hotel shed, while he transacted his business, which he did not get through until long after dark. When he returned for the vehicle to drive home, that and the horse were gone. Evidently some thief had stolen them. As it was snowing heavily and blowing almost a gale, the farmer realized that it was useless attempting to search for his property, and remained for the night at the hotel. It appears that the thief thought he would baffle pursuit best by quitting the State, and so drove into New York State, where he meant to sell the horse and sleigh. The snow-storm caused him to lose his way, so he continued straight on, unaware that he was following the road which led directly to the home of the owner of the stolen property. When the horse arrived at the farm he stopped abruptly, and the thief applied the whip without avail. The struggle between man and beast for the mastery aroused the farmer's son, who came to the door, and recognizing the horse and sleigh, charged the man with the theft. He was so completely benumbed and subdued with cold that he did not deny the charge, but begged for warmth and shelter. The farmer's son saw that he was provided with them in the local prison, where he is awaiting trial. The instinct of the horse proved a better guide than does the reason of some men who have fallen under the power of the enemy. If they went to the Master He would deliver them. (Isa. 1 : 3.)

An Earthquake in Miniature Occurred Near Wilkesbarre early on the morning of February 10. It was caused by the explosion, from some unknown cause, of the powder works of Wapwallopen, in which were stored two thousand kegs of black giant powder. Every one of the fifty or more buildings that stood on the hillside above the station were wrecked. Men and women ran wildly in all directions; children cried, women moaned, men excitedly looked for missing men, sisters for their brothers, wives for their husbands, mothers for their sons. Wild confusion prevailed everywhere. Four men were literally blown to pieces, their heads and limbs being carried away from their trunks. Fourteen others were fatally injured, and about forty were severely cut and shaken. It was an astonishing fact that several men working near the scene of the explosion suffered no injury at all, while fellow-workmen almost at their sides received fatal wounds. Their escape seemed wholly inexplicable to them and to their families, who rejoiced over it. When the great day of severance comes, and one is taken and another left, there will be no difficulty in understanding the reason in each case, but then it will not be the one who is left, but he who is taken, who will be counted the happy one. (Matt. 24 : 40–44.)

An Athlete's Tears were an Unusual Spectacle which was witnessed in the course of the six days walking match at Madison Square Garden, New York, last week. The miserable contest of endurance which took place excited the liveliest interest in the city. Large crowds watched the struggle in the Garden, cheering the respective favorites as they dragged their weary limbs around the track hour after hour, and still other crowds congregated around the bulletin boards in various parts of the city, eagerly noting the figures as they were posted, indicating the distance each of the men covered. To them, apparently, no event was of so thrilling an importance as whether this or that pedestrian was ahead of his competitors. One candidate who struggled hard for three days, broke down on the morning of the fourth day, and his physician told him it was of no use attempting to continue the race. Thereupon his manhood gave way and he wept like a child. This disappointment so keenly felt, showed how earnestly he had tried to win the prize. The ardor of the contestants, and the interest taken in the struggle, is significant when we consider how little there is to be gained in it compared with that race for an incorruptible crown, which the Apostle Paul describes, and about which there is too often so general an apathy. (1 Cor. 9 : 24–26.)

The Removal of a Dead Body from One grave to another has involved a suit at law which was decided on February 2. The Philadelphia Ledger states that some years ago a citizen purchased a burial lot of the McKeesport and Versailles Cemetery Company, and in it he buried several children and his wife. He married again, and a few years later he died. He requested that he be buried with his children and first wife in the family lot, and his request was complied with. The second wife and widow wanted to be buried there too when her time should come, but the surviving children of her husband would give her no promise of compliance, and she felt sure that, as the lot was already nearly full, her admission would probably be refused, as the children regarded her as an interloper in the family. She accordingly purchased a lot in another part of the cemetery and had her husband's body disinterred and removed there. The children of the man thereupon brought suit for the restoration of the body of their father. The suit has been granted in their favor, the Judge holding that the wife had no right to remove the body, and must restore it. The result is doubtless a severe disappointment for the widow, but she has the consolation of knowing that neither her stepsons nor the courts can prevent her after death rejoining her husband in the spirit, if he has gone to heaven, and she has a title through Christ to an inheritance there. (II Sam. 12 : 23.)

The Remarkable Deafness of an Engineer is the subject of interest in medical circles in Ohio. The Journal, of Columbus, O., states that an engineer on the Little Miami Railroad was suspended some time ago, because, having been examined by Dr. Clark, he was found to be so deaf that in a still room he could not hear ordinary conversation a foot away. The engineer lives at Cincinnati, and received treatment in that city for his disease, but without any special benefit. After being suspended eight months, the engineer again came to Dr. Clark and begged him to help him to reinstatement, insisting that he could hear perfectly while on an engine. The doctor thought he would test the case, and, accompanying the man to Cincinnati, made a number of experiments with him on engines. The result was, that the doctor found the engineer was not only telling the truth in regard to the matter, but also that the deaf man could hear low remarks and whispers on an engine, amid the roar of escaping steam, that even Dr. Clark's keen ear failed to catch. The doctor has, therefore, certified to his fitness for duty. It would be interesting to hear the aurists' explanation of so curious a fact as that of a man hearing tones when uttered in the roar and rattle of an engine cab, which would be inaudible to him in stillness. The Christian's experience, however, occasionally presents a similar phenomenon. The voice of God has been heard in the duties of life when it could not be recognized in the church or the closet. (Matt. 4 : 18.)

BRIEF NOTES.

Mr. E. J. Parker, one of Mr. C. H. Spurgeon's evangelists, with Miss Parker, is holding meetings at Sharon, Pa. Their meetings at Keyport, N. J., were blessed to the conversion of about forty persons and the revival of many dull Christians.

The International Council of Women is called to assemble in Washington, D. C., on March 25. It is under the auspices of the National Woman's Suffrage Association. Delegates from England, France, Germany and Denmark are coming. The sessions will continue a week.

Extensive preparations are being made for the annual convention of the "Christian Endeavor Societies," appointed to be held in Chicago next July. It is thought that no church in that city will hold the crowd that will attend, and that some large public hall will be required.

Rev. George C. Needham has commenced services at Springfield, Mass. During his recent visit to Philadelphia he conducted a daily noon meeting for business men and others, at the American Sunday-school Union Rooms, at which he gave a half hour's Bible reading. Much good resulted from this effort.

Dr. and Mrs. Munhall were not allowed to leave Baltimore without a permanent and substantial mark of the esteem of the churches. The six pastors of the Independent Methodist churches, who have taken prominent part in the work, presented them with a handsome silver tea set as an expression of appreciation.

The Rev. C. H. Yatman, of Newark, N. J., has been holding a one week's series of meetings in Mr. Moody's church in Chicago. Crowded audiences attended each service, and Mr. Yatman was successful in winning many souls to take their first step for God. The pastor (the Rev. Charles Goss) and people are urging him to return for another series of services.

Dr. N. W. Miner has received promises of money to the amount of $15,000 toward the erection of a new home for aged and infirm Baptist ministers. Promises to the amount of $20,000 have been given conditionally on a certain sum being raised. The home at West Farms, L. I., has now twenty-seven inmates. The building is utterly inadequate.

Canvassers Wanted to Sell, from House to House, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Any man, woman or youth may easily add to their income every week by selling the paper in their spare hours in their own neighborhood. One man has sold one hundred copies on a Saturday. For terms address Manager of CHRISTIAN HERALD, 63 Bible House, New York.

PEACE WITHOUT OFFENCE.

A New Sermon by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

"Great peace have they which love thy Law: and nothing shall offend them." Psalm 119: 165.

The Law of the Kingdom—I. A Spiritual Character—Founded on Love—Love of the Word—Life in it—Reverence for it—Scripture not like a Pack of Cards—The Scripture as a Revelation of God—II. A Special Possession—Great Peace—Not always with Men—Peace of Mind—Fresh Theology every Week—Peace of Conscience—III. A Singular Preservation - Stumbling-Blocks Removed—A Night in a Sheltered Bay.

By the word "law" here is intended, not only the law of the ten commandments, but the whole of divine revelation, as it was in David's time, and as it is now. In David's day, the law was a smaller book than ours. We have that book at greater length, but it is one and the same. The New Testament is but an expansion of the same truth which the Old Testament contains.

Three things in the text are worthy of earnest attention. First, here is a spiritual character—"they which love thy law"; secondly, here is a special possession—"great peace have they;" and thirdly, here is a singular preservation—"nothing shall offend them"; or nothing shall be a stumbling-block to them. I. First, here is

A Spiritual Character

—"they which love thy law." Love lies deep, it is in the heart: it is not a thing of the surface, it is of the man's own self. As a man loveth, so is he. To love God's law is to have the very nature and essence of our manhood in a right condition. You cannot learn the law of God as you learn the laws of nature. Only he who does the will of God can know of the doctrine. Nothing in religion is sound till the heart goes with it. God says, "My son, give me thine heart," and He cannot be satisfied with anything short of it. Search, then, my hearers, and see if you really love the law of the Lord.

Form and Style.

He who loves the Word would not wish to have it altered, enlarged, or diminished: for he is content with what God chooses to teach him. If he finds any want of conformity in his own thought to God's thought, he throws his own thought away, and sets up the divine thought in its place. He loves every truth which the Lord declares; aye, and the very style and method of the declaration. As certain insects take their color from the leaves they feed upon, so have we become tinctured to the core of our nature with the living and incorruptible Word, which has proved its own inspiration by inspiring us with its spirit. Now as the fish in the stream; it is the element of our spiritual life. This is the sort of people who obtain great peace from the law of the Lord, because, in the truest sense, they love it. The love of God's law includes a deep reverence for it. That man is blessed who trembles at God's Word. This Book is not to be compared with other books: It is inspired in a sense in which they are not; it stands alone, and is not one among other books. As towers an Alp above the mole-hills of the meadow, so Holy Scripture rises above the purest, truest, and holiest literature of man's composing. Other writings we feel free to criticise, but "My heart standeth in awe of thy Word."

We Live in the Word

This advances to rejoicing in it. We know that we love God's Word when in it. Fain would we gather up every crumb of Scripture, and find food in its smallest fragments. Even its bitter rebukes are sweet to us. I would kiss the very feet of Scripture, and wash them with my tears! If it be but God's Word, though some may call it non-essential, we dare not think it so. The little things of God are more precious than the great things of man. Truth is no trifle to one who has fought his way to it, and learned it in the school of affliction.

Further than this, we receive Holy Scripture with emotion. David says, "I hate and abhor lying: but thy law do I love." Those are

Hard Words,

David! Surely you are sinning against the charity of our cultured age! Yes, but when a man feels strongly, he cannot help speaking strongly. "I hate," says he, and that is not enough; he says, "I hate and abhor lying." His whole being revolts at it. He means not only that lying with which in common life men would deceive their fellows, and that is hateful enough; but he refers especially to that kind of teaching which gives the lie to the law of the Lord; for he adds, "But thy law do I love." He who worships the true God detests and loathes idols. In these days there are many men to whom the truths of Scripture are like a pack of cards to be shuffled as occasion suits. It does not matter to them what this man preaches and what that man writes. Hold your tongue; it will be all the same a hundred years hence; and, really, nobody can be quite sure of anything! To the man that is loyal to his Lord, and faithful to his convictions, it can never be so; he hates the teaching which belies his God. He that has never felt his blood boil against an error which robs God of his glory, does not love the law, nor will he know that great peace which comes by having the law enshrined in the heart.

One other virtue is included in the love of the Word. According to the context, great gratitude to God for His Word is formed in the believing heart. "Seven times a day do I praise thee, because of thy righteous judgments." God's judgments written in His Word are matters of praise. God's judgments actively going on in the world, which tally with those predicted in His Word, are also matters for adoring praise. The God of the word is the God of the deed. What He says He does, and every day and all the day we praise Him for it.

Beloved, God may do what He wills, and say what He wills, and we will praise Him. We read in His Word stern things, words of wrath and deeds of vengeance. Shall we try to soften them, or invent apologies for them? By no means. Jehovah our God is a consuming fire. We love Him, not as He is improved upon by but as He reveals Himself in Scripture. It is not mine to improve upon the character of Jehovah, but to reverence and adore Him as He manifests Himself, either in judgment or in grace. I, who am less than nothing and vanity, dare not scan His work, nor bring Him to my bar, lest I hear a voice saying, "Nay, but, O man, who art thou that repliest against God?" Whatever God may be, or speak, or do—that is right: it is not mine to arraign my Maker, but to adore Him. Extenuations, explanations, and apologies may be produced from the best of motives; but too often they suggest to opposers that it is admitted that God's most holy Word contains something in it which is doubtful, or weak, or antiquated. Brethren, the Word of the Lord can stand alone, without the propping which many are giving it. Those props come down, and then our adversaries think that the Book is down too. The Word of God can take care of itself, and will do so if we preach it, and cease defending it. Let the pure gospel go forth in all its lion-like majesty, and it will soon clear its own way and ease itself of its adversaries.

The love of the law of God breeds penitence for having sinned against it, and perseverance in obedience to it. It also begets patience under suffering; and begets and fosters holiness. You cannot study the Scriptures diligently and love them heartily without having your thoughts and acts savored and sweetened by them. Let me commend to you, my beloved friends, that you live with the law of the Lord, till even men of the world perceive that you keep choice company. The of most people are the fit outcome of the trash which they read. A life fed on fiction is a life of fiction: a life fed on divine fact will become a life of divine fact. I have not time in which to show you all the sweet uses of the law of the Lord.

This much, however, I must add: if in any of us there is a love of the law of the Lord, this is a work of the Holy Spirit. Nature does not love God, and hence it does not love God's law. If, then, thou lovest God and His holy law, the Holy Ghost has been at work in thee; and by this new love it is proven that thou art a new creature. Let thy love of the law be to thee a proof of thy regeneration; of thine election and the prophecy of thine Ultimate Perfection.

If there be in thee a strong, passionate desire to accept and obey God's Word in everything, and to be conformed to it in thought and life, that desire will ultimately get the victory. Use well the sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God, and by the force of thy love give sin sharp and heavy thrusts, and thou shalt conquer until every thought is brought into captivity to the law of Christ.

II. We have spent too long a time upon our first point, and shall have to be brief upon the other heads. Our second division is a very sweet part of the text; here is

"great peace have they which love thy law."

By peace here is not meant that a man who loves God's law will have great peace with everybody, for that is not at all true. If David penned this sentence, he certainly was not an instance of great peace with men flowing out of his love to the Lord's law. He was a man of war from his youth. He had peace as a shepherd boy, but even then he had to kill lions and bears; and soon after he had to meet a giant in single combat. Neither in his family nor in Saul's court was he at peace. He was hunted like a partridge upon the mountains, and had to run for it from day to day. He had not much earthly peace: for when he had done with Saul, the Philistines invaded the land. If it be possible, we are to live peaceably with all men; but He who has put enmity between the serpent and the woman never meant that we should enjoy the friendship of the world. The great peace which they have who love God's law refers to a peace which can exist when strife rages all around us.

Does not it meant this—first, great restfulness of the intellect? If we love God's law in the sense in which we have explained it, so as to stand in awe of it and rejoice over it, the result will be great Peace of Mind.

Everybody must find infallibility somewhere. Some think it is with the Pope at Rome, others dream that it is in themselves: the second theory is no more true than the first. Others of us believe that infallibility lies in the Word of God: this book is to us the final court of appeal.

I care nothing what supposed philosophers may discover: they cannot discover anything true which is contrary to God's Word.

He who gave us the infallible Book has all the responsibility for its contents. If I believe what God tells me and do what He bids me, the results are with Him and not with me. He is the ruler of the universe and not I; and if there be any terrible mysteries, He must explain them and not I, if they ought to be explained. I am like a servant who is sent to the door with a message; if I deliver the message which my master gives me as I receive it, you must not be angry with me, for I did not invent the message, I only repeated it to you. Be angry with my master, not with me. That is how I feel when I have done preaching. If I have honestly preached what I believe to be in God's Word, I am free from all responsibility for my ministry. I have not before me the unbearable burden of composing a gospel. I remember well a minister, whom I much respect, saying to me: "I wish I could feel as you do. You have certain fixed principles about which you are sure, and you have only to state them and enforce them; but I am in a formative state; I make my theology fresh every week." Dear me, I thought, what and establishment! If the student of mathematics had no fixed law as to the value of numbers, but made a new multiplication table every week, he would not make many calculations. If a baker were to say to me, "Sir, I am always altering the ingredients of my bread: I make a different bread every week," I should be afraid the fellow would poison me one of these days. I cannot afford to experiment in the Bread of Life. Besides, there is an intellectual unrest in all this kind of thing, which is escaped from when we come to love the Word of the Lord as we love our lives.

Those who love God's Word have also a great peace which comes of a pacified conscience. Nothing will quiet conscience effectually and properly but the great doctrine of the substitutionary sacrifice of Christ. We see in the sacrifice of our Lord Jesus Christ that which must satisfy divine justice, and therefore our conscience receives a safe and holy quietus, and we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom also we have received the atonement.

And the same conscience also brings great peace when it bears testimony to renewal of heart and life. If you have loved God's law and kept to the way of strict integrity, you will have within your own bosom an angel of peace to strengthen you in the hour of sorrow. "The testimony of a good conscience" is like the song of the angels to the shepherds at Bethlehem.

Peace to Our Desires.

You will not be grasping after wealth when the Word is better to you than the most fine gold. You will not be ambitious to shine among men when to you the Word of the Lord is a kingdom large enough. When our desires find their pasturage around the Great Shepherd's feet, our ambitions cease to roam, and we abide at home in peace.

When we love God's law also, we reach forward to the peace of resignation to God, acquiescence in His will, and conformity to it. It is of no use to quarrel with God. When we perfectly yield to God, our heart's sorrow is at an end. The sting of affliction lies in the tail of our rebellion against the Divine will. To love the law and the Lawgiver goes a great way towards loving all that He appoints and decrees; and this is a garden of peace to all who know it.

Besides, the love of the Word breeds a happy confidence in God as to all things in the past, the present and the future. When we love God's Word, we see God at the beginning of everything, God at the end of everything, and God in the middle of everything; and as we see Him present whom we love, we cease from anxious thought.

III. I am cramped for want of time; therefore I must, in a very few words, sum up what deserves to be spoken at length upon the third point. Here is

A Singular Preservation:

"Nothing shall offend them." There shall be no stumbling-block in their way. Intellectual stumbling-blocks are gone. One asks me, "Do you mean to say that you read the Bible and do not find difficulties in it?" I regard the Word of God as being infallibly inspired, and therefore if I find difficulties in it, which I must do from the very nature of things, I accept what God says about those difficulties, and pass on. The Word of God does not profess to explain all mysteries: it leaves them mysteries, and my faith accepts them as such. When out in a yacht in the Clyde, we came opposite the great rock called the Cock of Arran. Our captain did not steam right ahead, and rush at the rock; no, he did what was much wiser: he cast anchor for the night in the bay at the foot of it, so that we were sheltered from the wind by the vast headland. I remember looking up through the darkness of the night, and admiring its great sheltering wing. A difficulty was it. It became a shelter. Every now and then in Scripture you come before a vast truth. Will you steam against it, and wreck your soul? Will you not, with truer wisdom, cast anchor under the lee of it? Do we need to understand everything? Are we to be all brain, and no heart? What should we be the better if we did understand all mysteries? I believe God. I bow before His Word. Of course we are blessed, in this enlightened age, with some who understand more than the ancients, and either know the unknowable, or think they do. In a sentence I will give you the result of my observation upon men and things: "No man knows everything except a fool, and he knows nothing." If thou lovest the Word of God, thou wilt see no difficulties which will in the least cause thee to stumble. Things hard to be understood become stepping-stones on which to rise, not stumbling-blocks over which to fall.

"Nothing shall offend them." Does not this also mean that no moral duty shall be a cross to them which shall cause them to turn aside? They will not turn away from Jesus because a sin has to be abandoned, a lust denied, or a pleasure given up. Does Jesus say, "Do this?" They do it without demur. Does Jesus say, "Cease from that?" They withdraw their hands at the instant. Self-denial ceases to be self-denial when love commands it.

Moreover, the man who loves God's law, is not offended if he has to stand alone. He that truly loves God's law resolves that if all men forsake him he will cleave to the Lord and His truth. As for me, I am resolved not to follow a multitude to do evil. I will keep the old faith, and if I never find a comrade between here and the celestial gates. I do not think a man loves God's Word thoroughly till it breeds in him a self-contained peace, so that he is satisfied from himself, and drinks water out of the cistern of his own experience. What have we to do with other men as supporters of our faith? To their own master they stand or fall. As for our Master in heaven, let us follow Him through life, and unto death; for to whom else could we go? He only hath the words of eternal life.

Neither will such persons ever be so offended as to despair of God's great cause. The night grows darker and darker, but the man who loves the Divine law expects the sun to rise at his appointed hour. If he delay, we will not therefore doubt. Grace has produced, in past ages, men who were confident as to the triumph of truth when others feared for it. Look at the who, when everybody else despaired of the gospel, trusted his God and cheered his people, and would not hear of drawing back. He could not pronounce the word "despair." "Luther, canst thou shake Rome? The harlot sits enthroned upon her seven hills; canst thou hope to dislodge her, or loose the captive nations from her bonds?" "No," said Luther, "but God can." Luther brought his God into the quarrel, and you know which way the conflict turned. Not to-day, nor to-morrow, nor in twenty years, may God's truth win; but the Lord can afford to wait. His lifetime is eternity. O struggler for the truth, make thou sure that thou art with God and with the truth, and then be sure that God is with thee in truth, and will deliver thee. "Nothing shall offend them."

It is wonderful, if you love God's Word, how things which are stumbling-blocks to others cease to be injurious to you. Suppose you enjoy prosperity: if you love God's law, you will not be puffed up by deceitful riches or honors.

The same will be true of adversity. If you love God's law, you are the man to be poor, to be sickly, to be slandered; for you can bear it all, because you have meat to eat that the world knows not of. Your love to God's law will furnish you with a ceaseless stream of consolation. Nothing will damp the flame of your spirit, because the Lord feeds it secretly with a golden oil.

As for you who love not God's law, who know nothing of Jesus, because you have never submitted to the law of faith—there is no "great peace" for you. There may be the deceptive cry of, "Peace, peace, when there is no peace," but there is no hope for you till you are at one with God. As surely as God made thee, thou must yield to thy Maker, and accept thy Redeemer, and be renewed by His Holy Spirit, or thou art lost for ever. I pray the Holy Ghost lead thee to accept what God has revealed, and bow thyself to the Supreme Majesty of His Word, especially to the power and grace of the Incarnate Word, the Lord Christ Jesus; then wilt thou have great peace for this world and the next. God bless you, beloved, for Christ's sake. Amen.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

It was Sunday night, when, preparing for rest, I suddenly felt a large hard substance extending under my right arm. The conviction flashed upon me, "This is a cancer." I trembled a little, but knelt down and simply prayed my God that, if it was so, I might glorify Him, and patiently bear all that might be coming. It was a solemn night, with thoughts of eternity nearing, and oh, the peace of resting one's whole self on the word of Jesus, on His precious blood! In the morning kind Mrs. G. tearfully confirmed my idea, but I decided at once that I would not distress my dear sisters or friends, and only wrote to my doctor. His answer was reassuring; I might be mistaken, and of course he reserved opinion till he saw me. I was positively light-hearted, for had I not committed the whole burden to the Lord?

I had arranged for my nurse, M. Farrington, to meet me at Dr. Malins'. He told me I was looking in much better health. "And now, doctor, you must tell me candidly what is the matter." He looked grave, sat down silently, then most feelingly said. "It is stone cancer, and not a shadow of escape from this conclusion."

"So I thought; what do you advise?"

"Only two courses—operation, or, if it runs on, certain death." "Now, doctor, why can't you do it at once, this afternoon, and so save my friends?"

"Impossible; you don't know what an operation involves, and you would like to have a sister with you."

"Oh, dear, no; Mrs. Crane is abroad, and as to making my gentle sister Ellen suffer for me, oh never, never; Mary is quite enough, and you know He whom I trust in will be with me."

Sweet promises floated around me, and not a flutter of fear; verily it was the enfolding of His wing. Presently Dr. M. came in, and asked if he could do anything for me. I said, "Yes; will you kneel down with me?" I just committed myself into God's hand, asked for quietness, and that I might glorify Him; for skill to my doctors; and then, "Thy will be done" came gladly from my heart. My doctor's reverent "O Lord, grant this, for Jesus Christ's sake, Amen," was a sustaining clench to me. He left me.

Love, all love and faithfulness, and His strong arm closed around me as the doctor opened the door and said, "All is ready." Resolutely I inhaled the ether, the inevitable suffocating feeling was conquered, and then all was silence and darkness for three-quarters of an hour. Then the waking up—"Mary, when will it be over?" "It's all done; see, you are nicely in bed, and doctors gone." Then came the consciousness of utter weakness and helplessness. But truly, not one thing had failed me—not one word of all His good promises had been unfulfilled to me; and now underneath were the everlasting arms, in a manner only those know who have felt them.

I did not know till some weeks after how graciously God had answered my prayer, that I might glorify Him before the doctors.

The next few days passed in excessive weakness, and the sultry weather was against me. But I believe my teetotalism of sixteen years greatly contributed to my recovery. A friend of mine who was operated on, and kept up afterwards with brandy and milk and opiates, could hardly walk on two sticks at the end of ten months, whereas in three months' I was walking to the top of Malvern Hill.

Secret Sin in a Cottage.

A strange impulse I had was the almost positive conviction that seemed given to me of people living in hidden sin. Once I was riding a pony in unfrequented lanes, and took a narrow turning, which led me to two cottages. Women and children were in both. Fastening the pony to the gate, I knocked at the first door, and was civilly asked to sit down while getting some tracts out of my bag. Then, asking God's guidance, I opened my testament to the fourth chapter of John. When I read the verse, "He whom thou now hast is not thy husband." I looked at the woman and exclaimed, "You must forgive me if I am wrong; I am a perfect stranger; I never heard of you or these cottages, but I think you are not married, and just living here to hide your sin. You cannot hide it from God, and He has sent me to tell you so. Let me be your friend, won't you?" The woman started, covered her face, saying, "You are right." I do not remember more sufficiently to write it down, but paid many more visits.

A Student's Mysterious Sickness.*

THE body is the mechanism of the manifestation and work of the spirit. It follows that any disturbance of the mechanism will interfere with that manifestation of spirit-activity. But that it does not follow that such interference actually impairs the spirit itself, is clearly shown by the numerous cases in which severe illness or accident enfeebles the body so as to injure its use by the spirit, but the activity of the spirit continues in full vigor. Not long since, in one of our Western colleges, a young man was prostrated by a severe attack of spinal meningitis. So serious was the attack that when, after several weeks' battle for life, he rose from his bed, the nervous system was so shattered as to be almost beyond the control of the spirit. It is probable that a very large part of the gray matter of his brain was actually destroyed by the fever, and for some months his memory was almost a total blank. Yet, during the entire period of illness and convalescence, all the spirit-powers were as intensely active as at any time of ordinary health; though frequently the physical mechanism wholly refused to obey the spirit, and an observer would have thought the spirit vitally injured. Professor Browen relates the remarkable case of James Kinnard, of Portland, Me., many years ago, who was attacked, while a young man, by anchylosis. Through several years his body gradually and completely ossified. Yet, up to the day of his death, his spirit-powers manifested perfect integrity and great vigor; and there are still extant literary essays of decided merit, composed by him in the intervals of comparative rest, during the tortures of a living death.

There is, then, no ground for affirming that the apparent decline of the spirit-action in old age is necessarily consequent upon the growing feebleness of the body. All that can logically be inferred, is that the condition of the physical mechanism prevents the manifestation of the spirit-activity; and the presumption is greatly in favor of the continuance of the full vigor of the spirit, even when the mechanism is falling into decay.

BLESSING THE RIVER NEVA.

(See Illustration.)

EVERY year there is a singular and time-honored ceremony performed at St. Petersburg, the capital of Russia, called "The Blessing of the River Neva." It is generally timed to occur about January 18. It is attended by the Czar, and soldiers and courtiers and ladies, who crowd the saloons of the Winter Palace before proceeding to the Imperial Chapel, an ecclesiastical building sumptuously decorated in white and gold.

Everyone stands during the ceremony except the Emperor and Empress, for whom two State chairs are provided. The service consists of chanting, singing and prayers and other ceremonies, in which the Metropolites, or chief priests of the Russo-Greek Church, take the principal part. They are usually venerable bearded men, clad in robes richly bedecked with gold and silver, and surrounded by their crosier bearers and attendant clergy. At length the procession pours down the marble staircase of the Chapel, and ranges itself in a line from the Palace porch to a kiosk-like Tabernacle Built Over the Ice.

There is a double line of clergy in square caps, from beneath which flows their long hair; choristers in purple and gold, and court pages in white trousers and gold-laced coats.

The supreme dignitary of the day is the Metropolite of Novgorod (St. Petersburg); before and after him are borne preciously bound books, gold crosses studded with jewels, the cup for the river water, on which are engraved sacred subjects, such as Moses striking the rock, and various pontifical insignia. The ceremony lasts only a few minutes. From an opening in the platform of the tabernacle a flight of wooden steps leads to the ice, and then, after the booming of guns across the ice-field, and much singing and chanting, the winter shield of the Neva is pierced, and the sacred cup dipped in the flowing water. The crucifix is laid in the stream, and the river is straightway pronounced blessed. The Czar and the Grand Dukes present kiss the hand of the Metropolite, a picture of our Saviour is carried along the quay, and the banners of the Russian armies are also blessed with the consecrated water, The cup of Neva water is next handed to the Czar, who touches it with his lips, and, according to immemorial custom, fills it to the brim with gold coins. As the Metropolite passes, officers run forward, kiss the sacred picture, and bow their heads to receive a sprinkling of the holy water, as it is now called.

At the conclusion of the ceremony, the parapet is crowned with a line of heads looking eagerly towards the hole where the Metropolite dipped the cross in the Neva. Men and boys climb over on to the ice, and run towards the spot. All hold bottles or vessels of some sort, to receive the blessed water. Those who cannot climb eagerly beseech the others to fill their bottles for them. Hands clutching bottles are stretched over the parapet to meet others straining upwards from the ice. Most are not content with obtaining a bottleful of the "holy water," but dip their hands in it, wash their faces, sprinkle their heads, and cross themselves with it, and even very young infants are saturated with the water by their anxious mothers, that they may not lose any supposed advantage.

The Established Religion of Russia is that of the Greek church. This may be considered by many preferable to Roman Catholicism; but it leaves the masses of the population fearfully sunk in ignorance and superstition, as the ceremony of the blessing of the Neva shows. Hence the Bible Societies have for several years past been actively engaged in circulating the Scriptures among the people, and other evangelizing agencies have also been successfully employed in the dissemination of evangelical and saving truth. To these efforts the Russian Government makes no objection, but much more needs to be done by the enlightened followers of Christ in the way of missionary labor to meet the necessities of the vast Russian Empire.

FOUR INTERLOPERS IN HEAVEN.

From Dr. Talmage's Talk Last Friday Evening, February 10, 1887.

A MESSAGE by the "Union Terrestrial and Celestial Telegraph" has just come. It announces the startling news that there is great excitement in the Celestial City. It seems that in the "House of Many Mansions" there was a great banquet and all the princes of heaven were present. In some burglarious way, as yet not found out, there were the Shining Gate: a Presbyterian bigot, a Methodist bigot, an Episcopal bigot, a Baptist bigot. They found their way to the Banquet Hall, and pushed in upon the guests. The music ceased, the grapes of Eshcol dropped on the golden platter, and hands uplifted in shock of amazement. The Presbyterian bigot appeared with an armful of Westminister Catechisms and proceeded to distribute them among the banqueters. "What is that?" cried one of the princes of heaven, who turned out to be Robert Hall the immersionist. "Don't you know what that is?" cried out the Presbyterian bigot. "Then I move Robert Hall be expelled!" "No, no," cried a hundred voices; "that great soul has been here fifty-seven years, and brought up a great many with him from Bristol and Leicester." But the Presbyterian bigot said: "All this matters not, if he does not adopt the Westminster Assembly Catechism. I know from that he must have been elected to be damned. Out with him from the gates of heaven!"

At this moment the Methodist bigot broke in upon the excitement and demanded how many of those at the table had ever sat upon an "anxious seat," declaring that those who had not been converted in that way had no business in heaven. He brought an "anxious seat" with him, and sat on it himself very near the table, and rudely began to eat a cluster of grapes, throwing the skins into the face of a Scotch Presbyterian, who turned out to be John Knox. The bigot had for John Knox, neither on earth nor in heaven, was of a temperament to take any impudence, and he gave the bigot very much such a look as he once did Queen Mary of Holyrood. The Methodist bigot moved that all those banqueters who had not come into the church militant by the "anxious seat," be denied the feast.

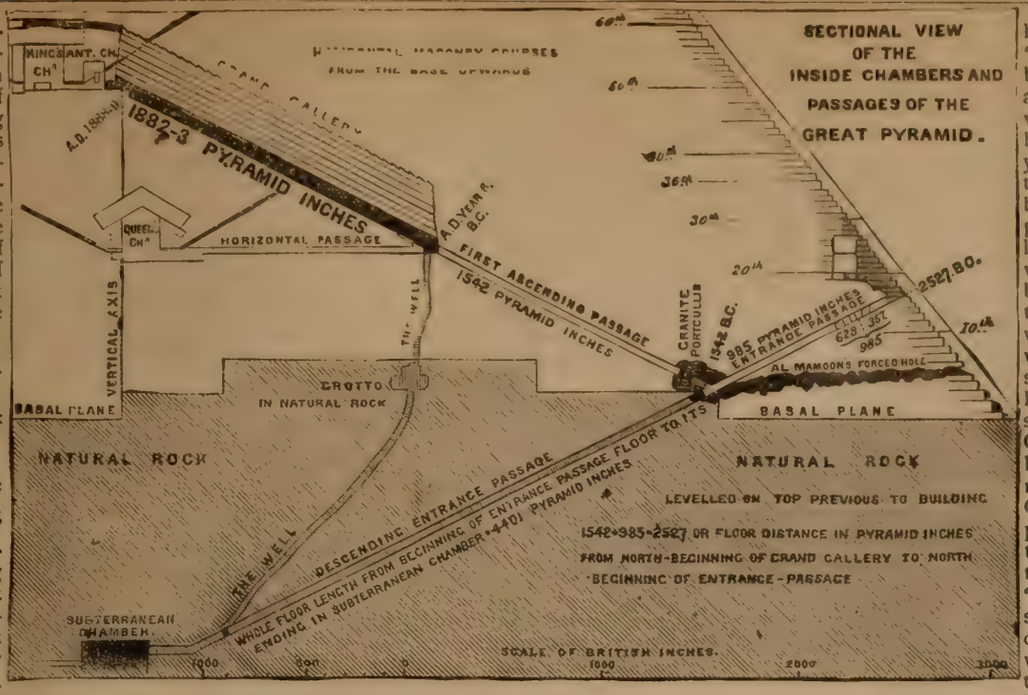
At this point the Episcopal bigot marched in with a great load of liturgies under each arm, and slammed them down on the table of the banquet, till all the goblets rattled. He said: "I propose to hold a service, just here and now. Each one of the banqueters will take one of these prayer-books and keep wide awake, and respond at the right place: 'Good Lord, deliver us.'" "No, no," said two of the best saints, who were found to be Albert Barnes and Alfred Cookman, "we never could on earth find the right place in the prayer-book, and we should even here make awkward work with the responses." At this the Episcopal bigot seized the white robes of Albert Barnes and Alfred Cookman, and pulled them violently toward the door; but there were so many who had been brought to heaven through the commentaries of the one, and so many through the preaching of the other, that there was a great rush of protectors around these great ones of heaven, and the bigot did not succeed in the expulsion.

At this point a Baptist bigot stepped into the excitement, carrying on his shoulders a burden that almost bent him double, so heavy was it. As he set down his load he took the lid off, and behold, it was a Baptistry. He said: "It does not seem as if some of you have been properly washed, and I shall proceed to put under the water all those who have neglected their ablutions. I shall take the first one I come to." This turned out to be Archbishop Leighton, who cried out: "Excuse me! My parents had me sprinkled when I was a baby, and I think that will do." "Sprinkled!" cried the Baptist bigot, "sprinkled! How dare you come here? A spoonful of water on a man of your size is nothing at all." The bigot, seizing the Archbishop, attempted to put him under the water, and in the resistance and struggle the Baptist got sprinkled and the Archbishop got immersed, and both would have drowned but for kindly interference on the part of bystanders. When the struggle was over, it was found that some of the white robes were as wet as though they had been diving in the River of Life for pearls.

Suddenly, from behind the curtains, a clarion blew, at which the banqueters laid hold of the four bigots and rushed them to the door, and rushed them through the street, and rushed them up to the battlements, crying "These Presbyterian, Methodist, Episcopalian and Baptist bigots have no business in heaven.

Throw Them Over the Wall!"

And down the battlements they were flung, now heads up, now heels up, over and over, down, down, till they came within sight of the earth. As they fell through among the stars, one came near being shoveled up by "The Dipper," and another just escaped being snatched by the paw of "The Bear," and another from being stung by "The Scorpion." The Presbyterian bigot had his bundles of Westminster Catechisms so tightly fastened to shoulders and arms that he was the more easily precipitated, and he struck headforemost in the graveyard back of Princeton. The Methodist bigot could not shake himself loose from his "anxious seat," and it beat him, bruised him and jerked him on the way down till he landed headfirst in the graveyard back of Middletown. The Episcopal bigot cried, as he was precipitated, to be delivered from the great weight of liturgical book-binding, and for the first time prayed without his notes as he went tumbling down swifter and swifter, till he fell transfixed on the spire of St. Alban's Cathedral. The Baptist bigot splashed into the middle of the Atlantic Ocean. When the expulsion was complete the banqueters again took their places in the "House of Many Mansions," and with lifted chalices, filled with water from under the throne, cried out: "Drink, one and all, to the communion of saints and the life everlasting."



Sectional Diagram of the Great Pyramid. (See page 103.)

My hearers, to-night let us rejoice that while once in a while there crops out something showing that the bigots are not all dead, the union revival meetings, now going on in many of the towns and cities, are proof that the boundary line between evangelical denominations is becoming of less and less importance.

By Brenda.

THE NEW LIFE.

IN all that Infirmary, with its long rows of beds, there was not one to which the long anticipated visiting day brought quite so much happiness as to that in which lay poor Bridget Mite, the laundress of Tripe Court. No wonder that when she heard the good news and saw in the children's faces and clothes the results of the reformation in Tom's habits, she could but weep. But they were almost the only tears Bridget had ever wept for joy. She had wept for woe with very good cause more frequently than most women of her age, but the end of all that was come, and the signs of sorrow were those that best relieved the joy of her full heart.

That night, when the visitors were all gone, Mrs. Cherry had to hear more about Tom than the loyal, suffering wife would tell before. The change in Tom was so marvellous to his wife, that Mrs. Cherry suspected that he was a pretty hard case. Bridget ventured now to tell her some of the things he had done under the influence of drink. Bridget could almost laugh at them now. But the talk was necessarily short, for excitement was bad for her neighbor, as Mrs. Cherry knew. So she tried to turn the few minutes left to profitable purpose.

"You'll go to church now, I presume?" she said. "Now you'll be less worried, and have better things to wear, church will be the proper thing."

"Yes, I'll never get into that way of life again that I was in when I came here," said Bridget. "It's worth all the pain to have broke it up. That's your doing, with the hymn you said to me, 'There is an eye.' You've been an angel to me, Mrs. Cherry; I'll never forget you."

"You know more what religion's worth to us poor folks now, don't you? Rich people can get along without it pretty easy, but when you are poor and troubled, and there seems no good left and no good ever likely to come, a hope of heaven is a thing one knows the value of. You'll never let it go again?"

"Never," whispered Bridget, firmly. "I'll have extra reason for church now, too, 'cause I've had such wonderful mercy; I never expected anything like this—Tom a new man and the children all so bright. When I get back among 'em there'll be no place so fit to go to as to church, I'm thinking."

It was easier work for Bridget now. The racking pain in her limb, the nights of restlessness and fever, had always been supplemented and aggravated by the mental agony which was wrung from her by every thought of that home in Tripe Court. Until the visiting day described in the last chapter, poor Bridget could only guess what was taking place there. What was likeliest to take place? Ah! Bridget knew that only too well. She pictured the scenes easily enough, but she never pictured the home in Tripe Court as it actually was. Had anyone hinted it to her, she would have said it was too good to be true. But now that she had actually seen Tom sober and the children clean and cheerful, all that heavy load of mental suffering passed away. Six long weeks she had borne the burden, and had escaped from it only when the more important physical torture claimed all her capacity of endurance. She need never have borne it at all, and that is the case with so many of the burdens we all carry.

The Infirmary doctors and nurses were surprised at the improvement that took place in their patient. It was so sudden and so thorough, no medicine, no liniment, in the pharmacopœia could have worked a change like that. It was almost miraculous. They thought so because they did not know how Bridget had worried about home. It was the harass and sorrow that had kept up the fever. Now those were relieved, only the physical ailment had to be dealt with, and that became benign at once. It was just the very opposite of a faith cure, yet many faith cures are like Bridget's. The faith that Mrs. Cherry tried to plant in the poor dark soul really failed to affect the body, however it might enlighten the soul. It was a "Sight cure" in Bridget's case; the life-giving mental ecstacy which effects the cure having been produced by sight and not by faith.

The doctors gave Bridget her discharge from the Infirmary, and she went back to Tripe Court, Bridget Mite did indeed find it to be a changed home; not much changed, outwardly—no new furniture had replaced the old; there were the same rickety chairs and tables, the blackened ceiling and mantel, the rat and the mice holes, the dilapidated safe; in outward aspect the home in Tripe Court remained as Bridget had left it. But "a changed home" she nevertheless felt it to be—changed, inasmuch as she felt God's peace and blessing now rested on it, since at its head there was a man engaged in honest toil every day, leaving them in the morning with kindly words, and returning at night with good money in his pocket, which he gave to his wife to buy meat and bread and coals, and coffee and cocoa, with never a black look or a murmur as in the old drinking days "that a fellow could never keep a penny to himself"—at whose coming the children no longer trembled, but ran with outstretched arms and joyful greeting, for the firm footstep on the stairs assured them night after night that father was returning perfectly sober.

Yes, Tom Mite kept the pledge; he could "pass the corners" now without "shying," and before very long, by dint of steady work at the docks, he was able to move into a little house in Inkerman Lane, a street farther removed from the river, and altogether a better spot than Tripe Court, where the Mites's home became happier and more prosperous still. Poll and Sue became members of the Band of Hope, and every Sunday Tom and Bridget and the children—no matter what the weather was or how hard the week's toil had been—wended their way riverward to take part in the services of St. Peter's Church. Poll and Sue continued to attend the Sunday-school at the Mission, where their changed appearance occasioned no little surprise among the children. Their teacher did not see it. She was the vicar's daughter, and had taken a great interest in them, but she was married now, and went away on her wedding trip the very week before Bridget went to the Infirmary. She was expected back soon, and the children felt that until she saw them and their new clothes, and heard of the cause, their triumph would not be quite complete. They were very eager to know when she would come, and one Sunday they were told that next Sunday afternoon she would be there, not to teach, but just to see them.

The children attending this Sunday-school were clearly very poor little ones. Children poorly clad and poorly fed, who would be glad, most likely, of the shabbiest cast-off clothes, and for anything else they could get. They were sorry when the school-bell rang for closing this afternoon, it was all so cold and dark outside, being gloomy November weather, and St. Peter's school-room, with its bright fire and gas-lights, was the nicest place they knew in winter. At home there was often no fire and no light, not even a "dip" candle to cast a cheering ray across garret or cellar. Their little pinched, red noses and chilblained hands and feet showed how sharply these river-side children suffered from scant food and fuel in the bitter November cold.

There was more noise and commotion than usual on this particular Sunday afternoon when the bell rang and the classes broke up. Teachers tried to control them and enforce some order in their manner of departure, but the children scrambled over the forms, and hustled and pushed, in wild hurry and eagerness to reach the doorway, where stood their dear friend, the vicar's daughter, who had come, according to promise, to see her poor little friends. She was smiling and nodding as the children surged round her, shouting and calling at the top of their shrill little voices, "How d'ye do, Miss Mary?" "Welcome back, dear Miss Mary!" as if they were just overjoyed at seeing her.

She was not "Miss Mary" any longer, but Mrs. Somebody now; but the children did not regard that. "Miss Mary" had crept in quietly, just while the last verse of the closing hymn was being sung; but she was quickly recognized, and as soon as the breaking-up bell had given its first testy little tingle, the children's enthusiasm broke loose, and, in spite of teachers, there they were, scrambling and rushing and crowding around "Miss Mary," shouting 'Welcome!" till they were hoarse. They were 'not content with merely shouting, they wanted "Miss Mary" to notice them each individually, and there were twenty and more little hands outstretched to be shaken, and a dozen others, not able to touch her in any other way, were patting her sealskin jacket, hoping she would feel them presently, and give them a nod. Amongst those most eager to be noticed were Poll and Sue, who seemed frantic in their efforts to make "Miss Mary" see them. They were on the outskirts of the small crowd, and, with all their pushing and scrambling, were unable to get any nearer for some time.

"Miss Mary's" eyes did rest on them once or twice, even at this distance, and she nodded; but the nod was not to their satisfaction, there was not hearty recognition in it, it was a puzzled nod, and the smaller one cried out to her sister at last:

"I don't believe she knows us, Poll, there! not a bit! She thinks we're some other children!"

"And of course she don't know you!" said a pert little school-fellow, scornfully, turning round close at her side. "Who'd ever know pigs if they changed into peacocks suddingly?"

There was a burst of laughter all round. The speech, though impolite, was forcible, and the two little sisters themselves joined in the laughter. There was so much truth in the insult, they resolved to let it pass.

The crowd was gradually thinning, aided by "Miss Mary," who had regard to the clock. Teachers were at last getting the children into some order, and making them file out at the door in proper order; and by-and-by, quite at the last, the two little sisters, who had been likened by their class-fellow to "pigs," got close up and stood before "Miss Mary." Giving them her hand, she looked down at them with the puzzled look they had noticed before, and it seemed now to amuse the children very much. They stood smiling and twinkling up into her face as if it were the best joke in the world.

"Don't you know us, Miss Mary?" asked the elder one, pressing forward.

"Well, not quite. What are your names, children?" inquired Miss Mary.

"Why, 'Sooty' and 'Smuts'—we're 'Sooty' and 'Smuts' of course!" cried both children, in a breath. "Now don't you remember us?"

A sudden light came over "Miss Mary's" face, a look of great pleasure and wonderment. The mention of "Sooty" and "Smuts" brought up to her recollection a couple of children who, eighteen months ago, had been the shabbiest and wretchedest and most neglected-looking of all the children attending St. Peter's Schools. They used to come with their hair unkempt and tangled, their clothes hanging in rags about them, the brims of their hats half off, their bare toes showing at the ends of their boots, and their faces so disfigured and grimy with the dirt and smoke of the river-side, that their class-fellows—who were by no means spotless themselves—had nicknamed them "Sooty" and "Smuts."

And the home of these children!—Miss Mary thought of that too. A tenement in a dark place called Tripe Court, in which sometimes the little babies in their cradles were attacked by the rats infesting the river, and where there seemed no cleanliness and no peace and no security for any one. Looking down at the children now before her, Miss Mary's blue eyes grew larger and larger with surprise. She could scarcely believe her own senses. Where were the rags? where was the dirt? where the unkempt hair, and the torn boots, and the battered hats of the children she remembered? Gone! and in their places these two neatly dressed little people, with a good soap polish on their faces, and not a rag or a hole about them!

"'Sooty' and 'Smuts,' the Mites of Tripe Court—really?" exclaimed Miss Mary, as the delightful truth dawned upon her, at last, that they were those very same children, only changed.

"Yes, Miss Mary, 'Sooty' and 'Smuts' we are!" cried the children triumphantly; "but we don't live in Tripe Court any more, we lives in Inkerman Lane, and we feeds reg'lar every day, and we belongs to the Band o' Hope, and father's signed the pledge, and—and— 'Miss Mary!'" they shouted as they disappeared, "'twas all along o' baby!"

That was the cause to which then and ever afterward the two children ascribed the glorious change in their lives. Mrs Treeby always contended that Tom's reformation was due to that good talking to "she had given him that morning when Bridget went to the Infirmary. But the children knew better. They did not like Mrs. Treeby, who was always "lectorin" mother and reproving them. Besides, they had seen baby's little arm go up at the meeting, and knew what followed. They insisted that it was "all along o' baby," and they were right: that little arm had been a powerful instrument for good in God's hands, emphasizing afresh the truth of those words, "God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise; and God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty; and base things and things which are despised hath God chosen." (1 Cor. 1 : 27.)

[This story may be had in book form, bound in cloth, price 90 cents, from Mr. Thomas Whittaker, publisher, 2 Bible House, New York.]

THE RICH YOUNG RULER.

By Mrs. M. Baxter.

S. S. Lesson for February 26. Matt. 19: 16–26. Golden Text, Matt. 6 : 24.

Ver. 16: What the Ruler Sought—An Inestimable Prize—His Mistake—Expecting to Earn It—Ver. 17: A Gentle Reproof (see Revised Version)—The Righteous Applying to the Sinners' Saviour—Reminded of the Rules in Vogue for His Class—Ver. 18–20: The Moral Man Conscious of Deficiency—Unaware of its Nature—Ver. 21, 22: The Flaw Revealed—Christ's Knowledge Clearer than Self-knowledge—Ver. 23–25: A General Observation—A Very Effective Bar Still—Ver. 26: A Warning Against Dogmatizing About Salvation—The Impossibility for the Finite not Impossibility for the Infinite.

"No man can serve two masters: for either he will hate the one and love the other, or else he will hold to the one and despise the other.. Ye cannot serve God and Mammon." (Matt. 6 : 24.) What is Mammon? Some say, "Riches;" others, "The world." Is it not that which asserts itself as God's rival, whether it is in the form of riches, pleasure, fashion, the world in any form; or whether it be self in any of its multiplicity of forms? Jesus had just been blessing little children, children too young to be self-conscious; and He said of them, "Suffer little children to come unto Me, and forbid them not, for of such is the Kingdom of Heaven. And behold, one comer said unto Him, Good Master, what good thing shall I do, that I may have eternal life?" How little this man understood the Master! The little children were not received because they had done "some good thing." All they did was to receive, and they were blest. The ruler's ideas were those of all men until they are taught by the Holy Ghost. "Good Master, what good thing shall I do?"

was the thought which filled his heart. He was ready to do anything, give anything, if he might only inherit eternal life. He was fully convinced that eternal life was worth something; was, so to speak, a good investment; and he was ready to make a sacrifice to obtain it. But he began wrong; he did not see that it is man's badness, not man's goodness, which is his claim on God for salvation. No doubt his thought was, "This Jesus is a good man; if I can become as good as He is, I shall merit eternal life," and, no doubt, his heart swelled and beat high with the thought of the holy heroism which burned within him. There was no amount of gift he would think too great, so long as he might recognize himself, and be recognized by others, as the giver. There was no amount of self-denial or of austerity too great, so long as he might have the satisfaction of and take to himself the glory of being so devoted. He was ready to go all lengths, so long as he could get the credit for it, and have the sweet consciousness of his own goodness to rejoice in. Are there not many believers, even consecrated believers, who resemble him, and who luxuriate in the thought of how consecrated they are, how zealous and devoted they are, how deep is their love for souls, how perfectly consistent are their lives? Are there not many who think how much more true they are to God than some others who equally from all sin, and yet are unscrupulous in money matters, very loose with regard to truthfulness, or, it may be, still in bondage to light literature, smoking, snuff, etc.? Such will feel in their hearts something like the Pharisee when he said, "God, I thank Thee that I am not as other men are" (Luke 18: 11); I do not smoke, I do not read stories, I am true in all my dealings, my heart is pure, I love souls, I find no fault in myself, I am good, the blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth me from all sin, I am clean, I am good.

But what a complete revolution of all such thoughts lies in the words of Jesus, "Why callest thou Me good? There is none good but One, that is God." As much as to say, "If I am not God, I am not good; for only that which is God is good." Goodness does not grow in the soil of human nature; it is only as God comes in, and supersedes the human, that there is anything good in man; and then it is Christ in us which is good. We have known men the consistency of whose lives, judged by the law, was perfect; and yet, while sin was cleansed, self remained in them, and their very consistency and devotion to God became a snare to them, for, like Job, they gloried in it, and took satisfaction in it, instead of seeing goodness only in God. Job's mistake was Not Sin, But Self.

He was "a perfect and an upright man;" according to the law, he did fear God and eschew evil. (Job 1 : 1.) But he admired and gloried in his own goodness more than in God, and God was forced to keep him in such a position that self came to the surface; and then Job again and again blamed God, and justified himself rather than God. Thus God revealed Himself as the Creator, until Job shrank into nothing before such greatness; and the perfect man—who was none the less perfect as compared with his fellow-man—seeing himself in relation to God, cried out, "Behold, Lord, I am vile; what shall I answer thee? I will lay my hand upon my mouth." "I have heard of Thee by the hearing of the ear, but now mine eye seeth Thee; wherefore I abhor myself and repent in dust and ashes." (Job 40 : 4; 42 : 5, 6.) He did not say, "I abhor my sin, for, according to the law relating to his neighbor, he had not sinned, but he had served mammon, or self, more than he had served God.

The life of Jesus was

A Witness Against Self.

He came not to do His own will, and self loves its own will; He received not honor from man (John 5 : 41), and self loves honor from man. He came to resist not evil, and to love His enemies, and taught us to do the same. He did not defend Himself, but "committed Himself to Him that judgeth righteously." Self always defends itself, and will have its rights. As long as we serve self, we are not serving God, however devoted we may be; for God put us into the world, not to show how good we are, but how good He is.

Jesus answered the young man, "If thou wilt enter into life, keep the commandments." He saith unto Him, "Which?" Jesus said, "Thou shalt do no murder; thou shalt not commit adultery; thou shalt not steal; thou shalt not bear false witness; honor thy father and thy mother; and thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." The young man saith unto Him, "All these things have I kept from my youth up; what lack I yet?"

Elastic Consciences.

Strange how elastic some people's consciences are. Jesus did indeed love His neighbor as Himself, and He showed it by taking upon Him our flesh, and bearing our sins and our sicknesses. He did most literally what He would have had another do for Him if He had been a lost sinner bearing the consequences of his sins. But some men will affirm unblushingly that they love their neighbor as themselves, while they take every opportunity of exposing the faults and skilfully pointing out the blemishes of that beloved (?) neighbor. Is it because they have an unusual relish for having their own faults exposed? Perhaps they will say like Job, that they have no faults. Let the bull's-eye lantern of God's discerning Spirit be turned full upon them, and O, how self comes out! It may be a good self, as with Job and the young ruler, or it may be a bad self, which shows itself in self-indulgence, tardiness, fretfulness, jealousy, spite, malice, etc. But whether good self or bad self it is not Christ, and if it is not God it is mammon. "What lack I yet?" said the young ruler. The man was honest; he had made an inventory of his own goodness, and thought he had passed the examination with flying colors, and perhaps he expected the Lord to say, "Thou art all fair, My son, there is no spot in thee." (Cant. 4 : 7.) O how astonished must he have been at the reply, "If thou wilt be perfect, go and sell all that thou hast, and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven, and come follow Me."

Give All?

But that would be to cease to be a lordly benefactor, a renowned giver! That would be to put himself upon a level with ordinary men! He could not, for this involved the giving up of self. He could not serve God and mammon. O how many make a mammon of their Christian reputation! To them riches are nothing, comfort is nothing, all the world is nothing, but their reputation for consistency, for consecration, for uprightness, is dearer than life to them, and if anything assails it, and a doubt is thrown upon it, they will compass sea and land to prove themselves in the right. So did not Joseph in Egypt, it was enough for him that the Lord was with him, and He justified him by making him ruler over the whole land. We are converted and consecrated to show forth not our own praises, but "the praises of Him who hath called [us] out of darkness into His marvellous light." (1 Pet. 2 : 9.) If we sell all that we have, we must be willing, if God so permits, to let our reputation go too, and let the Lord have that with all else. We are too apt to think that God's reputation is at stake with ours; but God is not dependent on us, He can do without any and all of us, blessed be His name. If we have, in very deed, sold all that we have, ourselves. our possessions, our reputation, our spirits, souls and bodies, then it becomes God's responsibility, not ours, to look after our reputation. He sometimes, yes, often, allows us to be misrepresented that we may be put to the proof whether we can trust Him with our good name, and then it ceases to pain us when we are wronged, for we know He cares for His own cause, and we live for no other.

The Needle's Eye.

The young man "went away sorrowful; for he had great possessions." "Then said Jesus unto His disciples, Verily, I say unto you, that a rich man shall hardly enter into the kingdom of heaven." So long as we have anything, or are anything in our own eyes, we are not small enough or empty enough to enter into the kingdom of heaven. "It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle (i. e., the little postern gate which is left open when the great gates of a walled city are closed) than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God." The camel must be unloaded, and so must we, to get through the eye of the needle.

The disciples cried, "Who, then, can be saved?" and Jesus answered, "With men this is impossible;" man is so great in his own eyes that it is impossible to him to be small; "but with God all things are possible." Let God come into a man, and he feels small at once.

Peter thought he would show how much better he was than the young ruler, and said, "Behold, we have forsaken all, and followed Thee; what shall we have, therefore?" Poor Peter, he was still after mammon; still driving bargains for his own advantage; still self-seeking. Jesus showed that those who followed Him should indeed reign with Him; that those who left anything, or all, for His name's sake (not for their own holiness's sake) should receive an hundredfold and inherit everlasting life. But, He continued, "Many that are first shall be last, and the last first." Those who think themselves first, disqualify themselves by that very thought for the place they want—for to seek the first place is serving mammon, and not God.

An Illustrated Work on the Unfulfilled Prophecies of the Bible, by the Rev. M. Baxter, entitled, "Forty Coming Wonders," may be had from the office of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 63 Bible House, New York, by remitting 75 cents. It is a book of 528 pages, is handsomely bound in cloth, and contains fifty full-page pictures and diagrams representing the scenes described in the prophecies of Daniel and in the book of the Revelation. It also contains a réumé of the opinions of other expositors, and extracts carefully collated from the works of all the most eminent writers on prophecy from the earliest ages of the Christian era down to those of recent date. It thus forms the most useful and complete guide the student can have on entering the study of that portion of the Word of God. The book may be obtained for seventy-five cents from any bookseller.

LOVE'S HEIGHT.

I sometimes think God's tender heart must ache,
Listening to all the sad complaining cries,
That from our weak, impatient soul's arise
Because we do not see that for our sake,
He answers not, or answers otherwise
Than seems the best to our tear-blinded eyes.
This is love's hardest task, to do hard things
For Love's own sake, then bear the murmurings
Of Ignorance, too dull to judge aright,
The love that rises to this wond'rous height.
He knows we have not yet attained; and so
He wearies not, but bears complaint and moan,
And shields each willing heart against His own
Knowing that some glad day we too shall know.

The Late Revs. H. Townsend and T. J. Comber, Missionaries in Africa—Scenes in Mission Work.

TWO BRAVE MISSIONARIES.

THE death of the intrepid young missionary to the Congo, Mr. T. J. Comber, has already been recorded in our news columns. We are now enabled to give his portrait, and with it that of the Rev. H. Townsend, another brave man whose life also was given to the service of Christ in Africa, and who has also entered into his reward. It is two years since Mr. Townsend died. But it is only now that his biography has appeared, that the full extent of the services he rendered to the cause of Christ in the Dark Continent is understood.

THE REV. HENRY TOWNSEND.

Founder of the Yoruba Mission.

Born in 1815—Dedicates Himself to Foreign Missions—Volunteers for Africa—Arrives at Sierra Leone in 1836—Marriage—Journey to Abeokuta—A Chief's Reception—The Yoruba Mission Begun in 1844—A Ride in a Tub—Progress—Orphanage Effort—An Army Dispersed—Escape from Death—Return Home.

MR. TOWNSEND was born on December 1, 1815, and died on February 25, 1886, at the age of seventy. In early life he gave his heart to God, and resolved to devote his life to the work of preaching the gospel to the heathen. Having been accepted by the committee of the Church Missionary Society as a catechist, he went to London, to undergo a fitting course of preparation for the work to which he believed the Lord had called him.

He had not been long a student, when there occurred a very serious mortality among the missionary staff at Sierra Leone, on the west coast of Africa, where the Society had a station; and the Society under these circumstances would only send volunteers. Henry Townsend, after prayer for Divine guidance, volunteered to go to the unhealthy field of service, and on the day preceding his twenty-first birthday, November 30, 1836, he Landed at Freetown.

Having spent a few days with some missionaries and native Christians, he was appointed to Kissy as assistant in school and evangelistic work. Here, after two years' useful service, he was prostrated by yellow fever, and fears were entertained for his life. However, through the mercy of God, he was spared, and on his recovery he removed to Wellington, and labored abundantly, though weakened by frequent illnesses in the Sierra Leone district. After four years labor change of scene became imperative, and Mr. Townsend paid a brief visit to his native country. During this visit he became united in marriage to a lady of consecrated spirit, who during the remainder of his life proved a true helpmeet to him in his work. The marriage took place on October 1, 1840, and at the end of the same month the happy couple left their native land for Sierra Leone, where they labored until 1842, when a great movement took place which culminated in the establishment of the Yoruba Mission.

In that year two captured slavers were brought into Sierra Leone, and the captives set at liberty, to be returned to the Yoruba country, where they had been kidnapped. Their delight on being put ashore was intense (See illustration on first page.) The missionaries were enabled to converse with some of them, and it was learned that white teachers would receive a cordial welcome in the Yoruba country, if any dare venture thither in the face of the fatal climate and the enemies of the Yoruba people. Mr. Townsend volunteered to return with the liberated captives and ascertain what were the prospects of establishing a mission. He embarked on November 14, 1842, and landed at Badagry on November 29, whence he set out for the interior. During this journey he fell ill with ague and had to be carried in a litter.

was attended with some ceremony, When Shodeki, the chief or king, was informed that a white man was coming with his liberated people, and that the white man was a teacher, he sent his son with an armed escort to bring in the distinguished visitor; for no white man had ever been seen in Abeokuta. "Sitting up in my basket litter," says Mr. Townsend, in his journal, "and carried on the shoulders of the men, at last we reached the presence of Shodeki.

"We alighted at the entrance into the king's yard, and I was led through a spacious yard to the place where the king sat, surrounded by his wives and retinue. He was clad in a scarlet velvet cloth, loosely thrown over him; he received me very kindly, and after the exchange of a few words, I was led away to the house appointed for my use. Soon afterwards he came to visit me, and sat down and had a little chat with those around him. He gave me a bag of cowries and a sheep.

"The few days of this interesting visit to Abeokuta were occupied in Inspecting the Town.

The intercourse with the king was of the most friendly kind, who thankfully accepted a present brought for him—he said 'he hoped many white people would come and dwell with them.'"

In the afternoon of January 5, 1843, service was held in a shed in the king's yard, which was attended by the king, who had his mat spread near the speaker. On this occasion an immense number of spectators were assembled. After prayers Mr. Townsend expounded the parable of the great feast from St. Luke 14, and the people listened attentively. It was an impressive sight, and as the missionary looked from the eminence over his congregation and on over the vast town, he thought, "What a benefit it would be to them could there be at least six missionaries stationed in it. It would require many churches and schools in various parts to meet the real necessities of the people.

This hope of Mr. Townsend for six missionaries, besides churches and schools, has been more than realized, as at present Abeokuta and district has three native clergymen, seventeen lay teachers, 2,543 Christians, ten schools with 398 scholars.

Before leaving the country, Shodeki promised Mr. Townsend that he would give him any piece of land which might be chosen, and help to build a schoolhouse on it; that he would be glad even to get a native schoolmaster until white men came, and that he would find more children to teach than the missionaries could manage. As a farewell gift, he pressed on Mr. Townsend's acceptance a tusk of ivory, and sent after him other valuable offerings as tokens of sympathy, gratitude and good-will.

It was decided, on Mr. Townsend's report, to establish a mission in Abeokuta, and he was intrusted with the direction of it. On December 18, 1844, was held in Sierra Leone of a most solemn character. Writing of it, Mr. Townsend remarks: "Thus were we sent forth by the Church in Sierra Leone, the clergy and laity together in prayer committing us to the care of Him who alone was sufficient to protect and sustain us in the work we were called on to do. The path before us, we knew, was beset with danger—perils among the heathen, perils from the Dahomians who periodically raided the country for slaves to send to the coast, perils by water, perils by land, and the perils of the climate were to be met, and could only be successfully met under the protecting and guiding care of our heavenly Father." The party embarked from the wharf amid a scene of extraordinary excitement, and with many a parting wish and blessing and affecting good-byes at the last moment. The party consisted of four missionaries and their wives, an interpreter, seven children, four carpenters, three laborers, and two native servants.

A Farewell Meeting

This party found the difficulties of travel far greater than Mr. Townsend had found them in his litter on his former visit. The following entry in the missionary's diary will show this: "This morning part of our escort returned. At 7 a. m. our tent was struck, and we were all ready to cross the Majuba water, called Ohre, for which, through the exertions of Mr. Gollmer, we were provided with a substitute for a canoe, a large tub (See illustration). This water was about four feet deep, and wide, having large stumps of trees sunk in it that rendered it very dangerous for persons to be carried across it. The tubs succeeded admirably, having men to drag them along, and to return for others, thus those unable to wade were comfortably conveyed across. This took an hour to accomplish, and at eight o'clock we left the banks of this water and proceeded on our way.

"Having been on horseback all of yesterday, to which I was not accustomed, I endeavored to make use of my carriers on starting, but after proceeding about a mile I gave it up, finding it quite impossible for the men to carry me. The road became almost impassable: it became dangerous for Mrs. Townsend to ride; she tried her carriers, but with no success, for with extreme difficulty she was carried 100 yards or so, and was then obliged to remount her horse. Mine fell with me twice. The road was extremely slippery, and so narrow, having become a water course, that a horse could not stand with his feet together, high banks being on each side.

"Before reaching Imowo Otta, Mrs. Townsend's horse lay down with her through fatigue, and on reaching that place, although we had only gone over what was to me in my former journey four hours' walk, we were glad to encamp for the night. Our horses and people were worn out, and several of them already lame, and, to complete their sufferings, were in want of provisions, and ourselves in want of water, our encampment not affording that necessary of life. However, a heavy shower enabled us to catch water, with which we made tea, and after eating a good supper, for which the best of all sauces supplied the relish, and commending ourselves to the gracious protection of our Heavenly Father, we retired to rest."

was from the first evidently and abundantly blest of God. Mission premises were erected on about three acres of land. Houses were constructed with mud walls and thatched roofs, which were a great improvement on the native huts of the locality. A small church, built of mud (see illustration), and a humble school-house, were added in time, and thus arose the first settlement of that Christian mission, which has already been so fruitful of good. Churches, school-houses, and missionary compounds were, formed; not indeed without hindrance or difficulty, arising in some cases from the heathens, or from the neighboring savage Dahomians, tribal wars, pestilence, frequent fires, and from deaths oft among the laborers, yet the work went on until, under God's blessing, the great African town of Abeokuta and regions beyond received the gospel in all its elevating and transforming influences.

Another useful institution was started in 1862 under Mr. and Mrs. Townsend's superintendence, viz., "The Ake Orphanage." "The heathen population of Abeokuta seldom or never attempt to bring up infants who have lost their mother. They are for the most part laid by the side of their dead mother to perish of want; or else, after some days, they are thrown away in some waste place." Hence the Christian effort needed for receiving these poor children. A notable instance of is that of James Pearse, now the principal schoolmaster at Ake. When sixteen days old his mother died, and the child would have been buried with her, but a kind Christian woman, who had been once a heathen priestess, took charge of him, and thus rescued him from a premature death. In due time he was baptized, educated, and trained under Mr. and Mrs. Townsend's supervision, and eventually passed through the Training Institution at Lagos. He is about thirty-one years old, and hopes soon to be able to pass on to the College at Fourah Bay, Sierra Leone, for advanced education.

Pearse was named after Mr. Townsend's late father and brother, who often evinced an interest in him, by sending him suitable presents.

Extraordinary Escape From Death.

In the early part of 1864 the formidable and dreaded Dahomian army appeared again before Abeokuta. Its camp extended for two miles in length, on a rising ground. From the 7th of March to the 23d was a time of great anxiety, and many were the prayers presented to God for deliverance. To the surprise of all, the much dreaded foe departed, and one of the missionaries thus records the event:

"I consider the retreat of the Dahomians as one of the greatest victories the Church of God has obtained by prayer. The King of Dahomey has not come into this city, nor has he shot an arrow here, nor has he come before it with shields, nor has he cast a bank against it; by the way that he came, by the same has he returned, and has not entered into this city. There is great rejoicing among all people; and many heathens acknowledge that it is the arm of the Lord. We shall never be put to shame if we put our trust in the Lord."

Again, in 1873, the army appeared before Abeokuta, and, after being encamped thirteen days, suddenly disappeared. Mr. Cole, a native, who visited the deserted camp, says, "We thank God for our deliverance from the hand of that bloodthirsty man. Man proposes and God disposes. To Him be all the praise."

Mr. Townsend had the joy of witnessing the church at Abeokuta, which he had been instrumental in establishing, grow and thrive into vigorous life. When the infirmities of age came upon him he returned to his native land, leaving the work to be continued by younger hands. There he peacefully breathed his last, February 25, 1886, in the seventy-first year of his age.

THE LATE REV. T. J. COMBER.

Thomas John Comber, whose portrait appears on our frontispiece, was born in 1852, and died in the Congo Free State, in September last, in his thirty-fifth year. His father, with a noble disinterestedness, has surrendered four of his children, three sons and one daughter, to the work of missions in Africa. Thomas Comber was led first to give himself to the work. How this came about may be given in his own words. Speaking at the valedictory service held in Plymouth in 1875, Mr. Comber stated: "I have no strange or startling account to give of my conversion. The chief influences which led me to the Saviour were those of a loving and loved mother, and an earnest Sunday-school teacher. When only about fifteen years of age I began to feel the powerful interest of my teacher, whose devotedness and earnestness in life were the grand secrets of his success amongst his pupils. Africa is my own choice, because that land has always seemed to me to have been the forgotten child of the mission family."

Mr. Comber was, as he said, fully bent on going to Africa, believing that God had called him to labor there. With this resolution—should the way be made possible—he entered Regent's Park College, having previously attended evening classes at the Metropolitan Tabernacle. In April, 1875, he was accepted by the Committee of the Baptist Missionary Society, and at the end of the year he reached the shores of Africa. For nearly three years he continued his labors at Cameroons and Victoria, on the dreaded West Coast, during which time he made important excursions, visiting especially the Bukundu region, in which, for some time now, a missionary station has been established.

The explorations of Mr. Stanley, resulting in the discovery and identity of the Lualaba and Congo rivers, and an immense extent of clear waterway reaching across the continent a thousand miles, at once attracted wide attention, and that not alone of geographers, but also of the friends of Christian missions. Messrs. Comber and Grenfell were among the first to move into the new ground. They proceeded on a preliminary expedition to San Salvador, the capital of the kingdom of the Congo in 1883. Mr. Comber, writing to the Home Committee in respect to this field, said: "I am not my own, nor am I out here for my own purposes and ends; and in all my movements, especially in such a deeply important one as I feel this to be, I look up to the gracious Master to fulfil His promise: 'I will guide thee with Mine eye,' and to make all things work together for the everlasting good of souls and His own eternal glory." The preliminary expedition having proved full of promise, Mr. Comber returned for reinforcements, and Messrs. Bentley, Hartland and Crudgington volunteered their services. Very soon after his arrival with the new missionaries at San Salvador in 1886, a heavy trial befell Mr. Comber. His dearly loved wife—but a few weeks previously a bride—was removed by death. The loss was almost paralyzing, but communion, to use his own words, with the Master, drove away the dead, blank despair from his heart, and as soon as possible we find him making an attempt to reach Stanley Pool by the Makutu route—an attempt which nearly cost him his life. The life thus spared fell, however, before the ravages of fever after a very short illness in the autumn of last year, 1887.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

The Loyalty of Soldiers to Christ.—A Christian worker remarked: "Have you ever noticed what very fine Christians old soldiers make? How firmly many retired Indian officers stand up for Christ! I once asked an aged soldier the reason of this, and he replied, 'Oh, I know all about it. You see, in the Army you have to be out-and-out—either one thing or another, either plainly for Christ or plainly against Him.' Would that the Christians of this day saw the importance of being decidedly known as such. Why should they be ashamed of their uniform? Is not their party the winning party? Has it not the best Commander and the best pay? Then stand wholly up for Jesus."

A Tempter Defeated.—The Same Friend said: "When I was a very young man residing in London, I was tempted by one of my own sex to leave the paths of virtue. This young man tried to persuade me to go with him, but I refused. He persisted, and taking my hat off my head, said, 'If you do not come with me you will not get your hat.' But what value was my hat in comparison with my soul? I turned and left him with my hat in his hand, and seeing that I was not to be tempted he soon restored to me my hat. Young men, 'Resist the devil, and he will flee from you.' Beware of the commencement of evil. The best and only safe thing to do is to turn your back upon temptation when you see it approaching."

Billiard Players Converted.—The Rev. Mr. Stalker said: "I was once visited by a divinity student, whom I asked what had made him think of becoming a minister. In answer, he told me this strange story: 'At the age of eighteen I was master of a business in a country town. Some evangelistic meetings were started there. I went to one, and the arrow of God went straight to my heart. The wound was deep. I was in misery. I believed, but the difficulty was in confessing Christ. I was one of a number of young men who were in the habit of meeting every night to play billiards and bet. My first thought was—how can I tell of my conversion to my companions? In my trouble I did what too many do in their trouble—I resolved to go into the nearest city and have a spree. I was going to a theatre, when I met a young fellow belonging to my village. We spoke for a few moments, and, when we were about to part, the young man said, "There is a verse has been following me these two days," and taking out his Testament, he read, "If thou shalt confess Christ with thy mouth, and believe in thy heart, thou shalt be saved." My friend says he stood still. It was a bolt from heaven. He went back to his native village by the next train, and passing down in front of the inn he saw, standing there, his companions with whom he usually passed the night. Now was the moment of decision. Just then that text came back to his mind, and asking God to help him, he did confess his Saviour. When he left them, they stood looking after him as if too much astonished to say a word; but within one month, by the means of his example, God had brought every one of them to Himself."

A Delightful Cause of Agitation.—Mr. Stalker narrated: "I was staying with a brother minister, some time ago, and one night I noticed that he was very much agitated. I asked him what was the matter, for we had just been talking about his two boys, one of whom was at college, while the other had just taken a first prize at school, and I could see no cause for his agitation, but I soon learned what it was. In answer to my question, he replied, 'Every night I go up to my bedroom, and pray for my boys, and to-night, just as I was bending down my head, the elder one entered, and throwing his arms around my neck, exclaimed, "Do you know, father, that I have given myself to the Lord Jesus Christ?" Then I did not wonder at his agitation. I am sure it must be like heaven begun on earth when a loved one comes to join you in the march heavenward."

The Peril of Putting Off.—An Evangelist said: "I went on Sunday week to see a young girl who lay dangerously ill. Most of the time she was unconscious, and as she lay there I tried to tell her how Jesus loved her, and how there was salvation for her if she would but trust Him. At length there came a short interval in which she was conscious, but all I had to tell her was that Jesus loved her, and an hour or two afterwards she was in eternity, whether saved or unsaved we could not tell. But what a solemn lesson! I was as if I had received a definite command, saying, 'Go, tell every man and woman while they have life to come at once to the Saviour, and not put it off till a dying day, when their frame is racked with pain, and their brain confused."

The Poacher and His Prey.—A Temperance worker testified: "Some years ago, before I knew Christ, I was out poaching a few miles from Edinburgh. I did not carry a gun for fear of detection, but a revolver, which could easily be concealed upon the approach of any one. On that day, the last which I ever spent poaching, I shot three birds, and jumping over a hedge secured them. Two were dead, but one only wounded. As it lay in my hand fluttering, I looked down upon the dying bird. I thought, 'What if that were me; where should I spend eternity?' I knew I should go to perdition, and God brought that conviction so forcibly home to my heart that I resolved to leave the ways of sin and seek the paths of righteousness. Not being very clear about the way of salvation, I went to a gospel meeting, and there I saw Christ as my Saviour, and thank God I could say that I had passed from death unto life."

A Brother's Apology.—A Successful Lay preacher remarked: "At the time of my conversion there was a revival in our neighborhood, and at the pursuasion of my mother I consented to go to one of the meetings. But I paid no attention to the preaching; my whole interest was centred upon a young lady I saw there. I left the meeting worse than I went to it, having rejected God's offer of salvation. When I got home my brother came to me and affectionately apologized for having lost his temper the last time he had spoken to me about my soul. As soon as my brother had left the room, I threw myself upon my knees, and tried to pray, but I could not; not a word would come. I rose, and going to my brother's room, burst in upon him with the words, 'Pray for me, for I cannot pray for myself!' He prayed with me, yet I could not get peace. I went and saw a Christian friend, who advised me to accept Christ there and then. After some hesitation I was able to do so, and I can assure you that I have never had cause to regret it. I went home and told my brother, and together we thanked God."

WOMAN'S HAPPINESS:

What Can and What Cannot Make a Woman Happy.

Dr. Talmage's Seventh Sermon to THE WOMEN OF AMERICA.

Preached last Sunday Morning, February 19, 1888.

"She that liveth in pleasure is dead while she liveth." 1 Timothy 5 : 6.

An Editor's Question—Happiness Follows Usefulness—Cloudy Days in May—What Greenough and Barnes Thought of Life—Solomon's Two Opinions—Mistakes about Happiness—Not Dependent upon Social Position—A Grand Marriage—The Godless Mansion—A Night of Discontent—A Lord Envying a Dog—Neglect of Present Opportunities Irremediable—Make Your Father's Home Happy—Happiness not Dependent on Beauty—A Subtle Charm—The Hoof-Marks of Time—The Plain Woman in the Hospital—Mistaken for an Angel—A Wounded Drummer-Boy—Happines not Dependent on Masculine Flattery—Nor Fashion—The Jewish Fashion Plate—The World a Failure—A Dying Girl's Message to a Church.

THE editor of a Boston newspaper, a few days ago wrote asking me the terse questions: "What is the road to happiness?" and "Ought happiness be the chief aim of life?" My answer was: "The road to happiness is the continuous effort to make others happy. The chief aim of life ought to be usefulness, not happiness, but Happiness Always Follows Usefulness."

This morning's text in a strong way sets forth the truth that a woman who seeks in worldly advantage her chief enjoyment, will come to disappointment and death. "She that liveth in pleasure is dead while she liveth."

My friends, you all want to be happy. You have had a great many recipes by which it is proposed to give you satisfaction—solid satisfaction. At times you feel a thorough unrest. You know as well as older people what it is to be depressed. As dark shadows sometimes fall upon the geography of the school girl as on the page of the spectacled philosopher. I have seen as cloudy days in May as in November. There are no deeper sighs breathed by the grandmother than by the granddaughter. I correct the popular impression that people are happier in childhood and youth than they ever will be again. If we live aright, the older the happier, that I ever knew was a Christian octogenarian; her hair white as white could be; the sunlight of heaven late in the afternoon gilding the peaks of snow. I have to say to a great many of the young people that the most miserable time you are ever to have is just now. As you advance in life, as you come out into the world and have your head and heart all full of good, honest, practical Christian work, then you will know what it is to begin to be happy. There are those who would have us believe that life is chasing thistledown and grasping bubbles. We have not found it so. To many of us it has been discovering diamonds larger than the Kohinoor, and I think that our joy will continue to increase until nothing short of everlasting jubilee of heaven will be able to express it.

The Happiest Woman

Horatio Greenough, at the close of the hardest life a man ever lives—the life of an American artist—wrote: "I don't want to leave this world until I give some sign that, born by the grace of God in this land, I have found life to be a very cheerful thing, and not the dark and bitter thing with which my early prospects were clouded."

Albert Barnes, the good Christian, known the world over, stood in his pulpit in Philadelphia, at seventy or eighty years of age, and said: "This world is so very attractive to me, I am very sorry I shall have to leave it."

I know that Solomon said some very dolorous things about this world, and three times declared: "Vanity of vanities, all is vanity." I suppose it was a reference to those times in his career when his seven hundred wives almost pestered the life out of him. But I would rather turn to the description he gave after his conversion, when he says in another place: "Her ways are ways of pleasantness, and all her paths are peace." It is reasonable to expect it will be so. The longer the fruit hangs on the tree, the riper and more mellow it ought to grow. Hear, then, while I discourse upon some of the

in regard to happiness, and point out to the young women what I consider to be the source of complete satisfaction.

And, in the first place, I advise you not to build your happiness upon mere social position. Persons at your age, looking off upon life, are apt to think that if, by some stroke of what is called good luck, you could arrive in an elevated and affluent position, a little higher than that in which God has called you to live, you would be completely happy. Infinite mistake! The palace floor of Ahasuerus is red with the blood of Vashti's broken heart. There have been no more scalding tears wept than those which coursed the cheeks of Josephine. If the sob of unhappy womanhood in the great cities could break through the tapestried wall, that sob would come along your streets to-day like the simoon of the desert. Sometimes I have heard in the rustling of the robes on the city pavement the hiss of the adders that followed in the wake. You have come out from your home, and you have looked up and coveted a life under those arches, when perhaps, at that very moment, within that house, there may have been the wringing of hands, the start of horror, and the very agony of hell. I knew of such an one. Her father's house was plain, most of the people who came there were plain; but, by a change in fortune such as sometimes comes, a hand had been offered that led her into a brilliant sphere. All the neighbors congratulated her upon her grand prospects; but what an exchange! On her side it was a heart full of generous impulse and affection. On his side it was a soul dry and withered as the stubble of the field. On her side it was a father's house, where God was honored and the Sabbath, light flooded the rooms with the very mirth of heaven. On his side it was a gorgeous residence and the coming of mighty men to be entertained there; but within it were revelry and godlessness. Hardly had the orange-blossoms of the marriage feast lost their fragrance, than the night of discontent began to cast its shadow.

Cruelties and Unkindnesses

changed all those splendid trappings into a hollow mockery. The platters of solid silver, the caskets of pure gold, the head dress of gleaming diamonds, were there; but no God, no peace, no kind words, no Christian sympathy. The festal music that broke on the captive's ear turned out to be a dirge, and the wreath in the plush was a reptile coil, and the upholstery that swayed in the wind was the wing of a destroying angel, and the bead-drops on the pitcher were the sweat of everlasting despair. O, how many rivalries and unhappinesses among those who seek in social life their chief happiness!

All that this world can do for you in silver, in gold, in Axminster plush, in Gobelin tapestry, in wide halls, in lordly acquaintanceship, will not give you the ten thousandth part of a grain of solid satisfaction. The English lord, moving in the very highest sphere, was one day found seated with his chin on his hand and his elbow on the window-sill, looking out and saying: "O, I wish I could exchange places with that dog!" Mere social position will never give happiness to a woman's soul. I have had wide and continuous observation, and I tell the young women that they who build on mere social position their soul's immortal happiness are building on the sand.

Suppose that a youg woman expends the brightness of her early life in this unsatisfactory struggle and omits of usefulness in the home circle: what a mistake! So surely as the years roll around, that home in which you now dwell will become extinct. The parents will be gone, the property will go into other possession, you yourself will be in other relationships, and that home which only a year ago, was full of congratulation, will be extinguished. When that period comes, you will look back to see what you did or what you neglected to do in the way of making home happy. It will be too late to correct mistakes. If you did not smooth the path of your parents toward the tomb; if you did not make their last days bright and happy; if you allowed your younger brother to go out into the world unhallowed by Christian and sisterly influences; if you allowed the younger sisters of your family to come up without feeling that there had been a Christian example set them on your part—there will be nothing but bitterness of lamentation. That bitterness will be increased by all the surroundings of that home; by every chair, by every picture, by the old time mantel ornaments, by everything you can think of as connected with that home. All these things will rouse up agonizing memories. Young women, have you anything to do in the way of Making Your Father's Home Happy?

The Present Opportunity

Now is the time to attend to it, or leave it forever undone. Time is flying very quickly away. I suppose you notice the wrinkles are gathering and accumulating on those kindly faces that have so long looked upon you; there is frost in the locks; the foot is not as firm in its step as it used to be; and they will soon be gone. The heaviest clod that ever falls on a parent's coffin-lid is the memory of an ungrateful daughter. O, make their last days bright and beautiful. Do not act as though they were in the way. Ask their counsel, seek their prayers, and after long years have passed, and you go out to see the grave where they sleep, you will find growing all over the mound something lovelier than cypress, something sweeter than the rose, something chaster than the lily—the bright and beautiful memories of filial kindness performed ere the dying hand dropped on you a benediction, and you closed the lids over the weary eyes of the worn-out pilgrim.

Better that, in the hour of your birth, you had been struck with orphanage, and that you had been handed over into the cold arms of the world, rather than that you should have been brought up under a father's care and a mother's tenderness, at last to scoff at their example and deride their influence; and on the day when you followed them in long procession to the tomb, to find that you are followed by a still larger procession of unfilial deeds done and wrong words uttered. The one procession will leave its burden in the tomb and disband; but that longer will forever march and forever wail. O, it is a good time for a young woman when she is in her father's house. How careful they are of her welfare! How watchful those parents of all her interests! Seated at the morning repast, father at one end the table, children on either side and between, but the years will roll on, and great changes will be effected, and one will be missed from one end the table, and another will be missed from the other end the table. God pity that young woman's soul who, in that hour, has nothing but regretful recollections.

I go further, and advise you not to depend for enjoyment upon mere Personal Attractions.

It would be sheer hypocrisy, because we may not have it ourselves, to despise, or affect to despise, beauty in others. When God gives it, He gives it as a blessing and as a means of usefulness. David and his army were coming down from the mountains to destroy Nabal and his flocks and vineyards. The beautiful Abigail, the wife of Nabal, went out to arrest him when he came down from the mountains, and she succeeded. Coming to the foot of the hill, she knelt. David with his army of sworn men came down over the cliffs, and when he saw her kneeling at the foot of the hill he cried, "Halt!" to his men, and the caves echoed it: "Halt! halt!" That one beautiful woman kneeling at the foot of the cliff had arrested all those armed troops. A dew-drop dashed back Niagara.

The Bible sets before us the portraits of Sarah and Rebecca and Abishag, and Job's daughters, and says: "They were fair to look upon." By out-door exercise, and by skilful arrangement of apparel, let women make themselves attractive. The sloven has only one mission, and that is to excite our loathing and disgust. But alas! for those who depend upon personal charms for their happiness. Beauty is such a subtle thing, it does not seem to depend upon facial proportions or upon the sparkle of the eye or upon the flush of the cheek. You sometimes find it among irregular features.

It is the Soul Shining Through the face that makes one beautiful. But alas! for those who depend upon mere personal charms. They will come to disappointment and to a great fret. There are so many different opinions about what are personal charms; and then sickness and trouble and age do make such ravages! The poorest god that a woman ever worships is her own face. The saddest sight in all the world is a woman who has built everything on good looks, when the charms begin to vanish. O, how they try to cover the wrinkles and hide the ravages of time! When Time, with iron-shod feet, steps on a face remain, and you cannot hide them. It is silly to try to hide them. I think the most repulsive fool in all the world is an old fool! Why, my friends, should you be ashamed of getting old? It is a sign—it is prima facie evidence that you have behaved tolerably well, or you would not have lived to this time. The grandest thing, I think, is eternity, and that is made up of countless years. When the Bible would set forth the attractiveness of Jesus Christ, it says: "His hair was white as snow." But when the color goes from the cheek, and the lustre from the eye, and the spring from the step, and the gracefulness from the gait, alas! for those who have built their time and their eternity upon good looks. But all the passage of years cannot take out of one's face benignity and kindness, and compassion and faith. Culture your heart and you culture your face. The brightest glory that ever beamed from a woman's face is the religion of Jesus Christ. In the last war two hundred wounded soldiers came to Philadelphia one night, and came unheralded, and they had to extemporize a hospital for them, and the Christian women of my church, and of other churches went out that night to take care of the poor wounded fellows. That night I saw a Christian woman her sleeves rolled up, ready for hard work, her hair dishevelled in the excitement of the hour. Her face was plain, very plain; but after the wounds were washed and the new bandages were put round the splintered limbs, and the exhausted boy fell off into his first pleasant sleep, she put her hand on his brow and he started in his dream, and said, "O, I thought an angel touched me!" There may have been no classic elegance in the features of Mrs. Harris, who came into the hospital after the "Seven Days" awful fight, as she sat down by and heard him soliloquize: "A ball through my body, and my poor mother will never again see her boy. What a pity it is!" And she leaned over him and said: "Shall I be your mother, and comfort you?" And he looked up and said, "Yes, I'll try to think she's here. Please to write a long letter to her and tell her all about it, and send her a lock of my hair and comfort her. But I would like you to tell her how much I suffered—yes, I would like you to do that, for she would feel so for me. Hold my hand while I die." There may have been no classic elegance in her features, but all the hospitals of Harrison's Landing and Fortress Monroe would have agreed that she was beautiful, and if any rough man in all that ward had insulted her, some wounded soldier would have leaped from his couch on his best foot, and struck him dead with a crutch.

In the Wards of the Hospital,

Again: I advise you not to depend for happiness upon

The Flatteries of Men.

It is a poor compliment to your sex that so many men feel obliged, in your presence, to offer unmeaning compliments. Many capable of elegant and elaborate conversation elsewhere, sometimes feel called upon at the door of the drawing-room to drop their common sense and to dole out sickening flatteries. They say things about your dress and about your appearance, that you know, and they know, are false. They say you are an angel. You know you are not. Determined to tell the truth in office, and store and shop, they consider it honorable to lie to a woman. The same thing that they told you on this side of the drawing-room, three minutes ago they said to some one on the other side of the drawing-room. O, let no one trample on your self-respect. The meanest thing on which a woman can build her happiness is the flatteries of men.

Again: I charge yon not to depend for happiness upon

The Discipleship of Worldliness.

I have seen men as vain of their old-fashioned and their eccentric hat as your brainless fop is proud of his dangling fooleries. Fashion sometimes makes a reasonable demand of us, and then we ought to yield to it. The daisies of the field have their fashion of color and leaf; the honeysuckles have their fashion of ear-drop; and the snowflakes flung out of the winter heavens have their fashion of exquisiteness. After the summer shower the sky weds the earth with ring of rainbow. And I do not think we have a right to despise the elegancies and fashions of this world, especially if they make reasonable demands upon us; but the discipleship and worship of fashion is death to the body, and death to the soul:

I am glad the world is improving. Look at the fashion plates of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, and you will find that the world is not so extravagant and extraordinary now as it was then, and all the marvellous things thet the granddaughter will do will never equal that done by the grandmother. Go still farther back, to the Bible times, and you find that in those times fashion wielded a more terrible sceptre. You have only to turn to the third chapter of Isaiah, a portion of the Scriptures from which I once preached to you, to read:

The Jewish Fashion Plate,

"Because the daughters of Zion are haughty, and walk with stretched-forth necks and wanton eyes, walking and mincing as they go, and making a tinkling with their feet: In that day the Lord will take away the bravery of their tinkling ornaments about their feet, and their cauls, and their round tires like the moon, the chains, and the bracelets, and the mufflers, and bonnets, and the head-bands, and the tablets, and the ear-rings, the rings, and the nose-jewels, the changeable suits of apparel, and the mantles, and the wimples, and the crisping pins, the glasses, and the fine linen, and the hoods, and the veils." Only think of a woman having all that on! I am glad that the world is getting better and that fashion which has dominated in the world so ruinously in other days has for a little time, for a little degree at any rate, relaxed its energies.

All the splendors and the extravaganza of this world dyed into your robe, and flung over your shoulder, cannot wrap peace around your heart for a single moment. The gayest wardrobe will utter no voice of condolence in the day of trouble and darkness. The woman is grandly dressed, and only she, who is wrapped in the robe of a Saviour's righteousness. The home may be very humble, the hat may be very plain, the frock may be very coarse; but the halo of heaven settles in the room when she wears it, and the faintest touch of the resurrection angel will change that garment into raiment of exceeding white, so as no fuller on earth could whiten it. I come to you, young woman, to-day, to say that this world cannot make you happy. I know it is a bright world, with glorious sunshine, and golden rivers, and fire-worked sunset, and bird orchestra, and the darkest cave has its crystals, and the wrathiest wave has its foam wreath, and the coldest midnight its flaming aurora; but God will put out all these lights with the blast of His own nostrils, and the glories of this world will perish in

The Final Conflagration.

You will never be happy until you get your sins forgiven, and allow Christ Jesus to take full possession of your soul. He will be your friend in every perplexity. He will be your comfort in every trial. He will be your defender in every strait. I do not ask you to bring, like Mary, the spices to the sepulchre of a dead Christ, but to bring your all to the foot of a living Jesus. His word is peace. His look is love. His hand is help. His touch is life. His smile is heaven. O, come, then, in flocks and groups. Come, like the south wind over banks of myrrh. Come like the morning light, tripping over the mountains. Wreathe all your affections on Christ's brow, set all your gems in Christ's coronet, let this Sabbath air rustle with the wings of rejoicing angels, and the towers of God ring out the news of souls saved.

"This world its fancied pearl may crave,
'Tis not the pearl for me;
'Twill dim its lustre in the grave,
'Twill perish in the sea.
But there's a pearl of price untold,
Which never can be bought with gold;
O, that's the pearl for me."

The snow was very deep, and it was still falling rapidly, when, in the first year of my Christian ministry, I hastened

To See a Young Woman Die,

It was a very humble home. She was an orphan; her father had been shipwrecked on the banks of Newfoundland. She had earned her own living. As I entered the room I saw nothing attractive. No pictures. No tapestry. Not even a cushioned chair. The snow on the window casement was not whiter than the cheek of that dying girl. It was a face never to be forgotten. Sweetness and majesty of soul, and faith in God, had given her a matchless beauty, and the sculptor who could have caught the outlines of those features, and frozen them into stone, would have made himself immortal. With her large, brown eyes she looked calmly into the great eternity. I sat down by her bedside and said: "Now tell me all your troubles, and sorrows, and struggles, and doubts." She replied: "I have no doubts or struggles. It is all plain to me. Jesus has smoothed the way for my feet. I wish when you go to your pulpit next Sunday, you would tell the people that Religion Will Make Them Happy.

"O death, where is thy sting?" Mr. Talmage, I wonder if this is not the bliss of dying?" I said: "Yes, I think it must be." I lingered around the couch. The sun was setting, and her sister lighted a candle. She lighted the candle for me. The dying girl, the dawn of heaven in her face, needed no candle. I rose to go, and she said: "I thank you for coming. Good night! When we meet again it will be in heaven—in heaven! Good night! good night!" For her it was good night to tears, good night to poverty, good night to death; but when the sun rose again it was good morning. The light of another day had burst in upon her soul. Good morning! The angels were singing her welcome home, and the hand of Christ was putting upon her brow a garland. Good morning! Her sun rising. Her palm waving. Her spirit exulting before the throne of God. Good morning! Good morning! The white lily of poor Margaret's cheek had blushed into the rose of health immortal, and the snows through which we carried her to the country graveyard were symbols of that robe which she wears, so white that no fuller on earth could whiten it.

My sister, my daughter, may your last end be like hers!

THE GENTILE POWER.

Its Rise, Culmination and Downfall.

By G. H. Pember.

God's Two-fold Division of Mundane Government—Satan Constituted Prince of the World—The Remote Period of His Inauguration—The Era of the Noachian Delegation—Its Failure—The Vicegerency of the Jew—His Recreancy—The Gentile Power—The Image Its Type—The Absolute Ruler—His Beneficent Reign.

There is one thing we must notice before we can understand the prophecies of God and the history of the world, and that is the very decided way in which God divides the government of this world into two parts, earthly and spiritual. Owing to the interaction of these two parts sin entered the world.

I do not intend to enlarge on the origin of sin. It is a vast and dreadful subject, going far back into past eternity, and of which we shall know nothing till we pass out of our present state. I will not speak of the hints given as to the past existence of man, and of the interval between the first and second verses of the first chapter of Genesis. Nor will I enter on the history of Satan and his angels and demons; only, remember, he is and prince of the power of the air. He would never have such titles given to him in God's Book were he a mere usurper. It seems that he was invested with the government of this world in past ages, and at some period thereafter became a rebel against God.

We begin, however, with our own race. When the earth was fitted, or, more properly, refitted, for our residence, the question arose, Who is to have possession? The Lord Himself answers, "The earth hath He given to the children of men." But temptation came from the rebellious race in the air, and it proved but too successful. It seems that after the Fall there was further intimacy between fallen man and supernatural beings, and the result was that God swept away the evil doers with a deluge.

Then followed the first covenant with man, which also involved the previous, or, as we may term them, the cosmic laws. For they were given to mankind, not to any election in particular. They include the laws of marriage, of the Sabbath, of the subjection of women, and of sacrifice as teaching that without shedding of blood there is no remission. To these the Noachian covenant added commands that flesh should be used as food, but not with the blood, and that the murderer should be punished with death. Such are the Divine laws given to the whole human race.

Now the signs which are connected with this covenant are two—

The Cherubim and the Rainbow,

Do not mistake as to the cherubim—there are so many strange notions respecting them. It is easy to interpret them if you take the Bible as its own interpreter. They stand before God as the representatives of the four great earth-tribes which He has pledged Himself to save. They first appeared after Adam was cast out of Paradise. Then the tree of life was guarded by a flaming sword turning every way and within its circle; nearer the tree, were placed the cherubim. Of the cherubim—four in number, because "four" is the number of terrestrial creation—we read that one had the face of a man, representing man redeemed; one the face of a lion, representing the beasts of the field; one had the face of an ox, representing the cattle; and one the face of an eagle, representing the fowls of the air. Thus are the four great earth-tribes represented.

God created two other tribes, but these—the fish and the creeping things—were not brought to man to be put under him and to be named. So also in Genesis 9 you find in the Noachian covenant mention is made of "the fowls, the cattle, and the beasts of the field," but none of the other two tribes. Why this is so we cannot tell; but we may venture to think that, as sin entered through the medium of the serpent, and as in the new earth there will be no more sea, these two earth-tribes will disappear. The other four will never, however, be destroyed from the earth. Thus we have the first hint of the truth brought out by Paul in Rom. 8, when he says that "the creature itself also shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God." The other sign is the rainbow—always present where the real cherubim are seen; and always appearing as a token of the covenant.

Now how did this covenant of God with Noah work? It was God's call to the world to arrange its government in accordance with Divine principles. We have two great instances of how the covenant was disregarded, and why God took away the power from man. These are, the rebellion of Babel, and the wickedness of the cities of the plain. Then came the election of Abraham and his seed, which, you know, failed. Then God determined to give the world another chance. He put the Gentiles in power again, choosing out the civilized race, to which He gave power over the rest of men.

That took place when God determined to destroy Jerusalem: and he signified it by a vision to Nebuchadnezzar. In that vision the king saw, as you know, a great image, with four distinct parts, and of four various metals, representing the four great world empires—Babylon, Medo-Persia, Greece and Rome.

Now, the gold, the silver, the brass, and the iron, and iron and clay represent different kinds of government.

God's Ideal of Government is absolute monarchy; therefore gold, the most precious metal, represents it. Man, however, has never succeeded in finding a righteous king who can be trusted with absolute rule. God will send a righteous King ere long, then earth will know happiness and peace again.

The second metal is silver, representing the limited monarchy of Medo-Persia, based upon an hereditary aristocracy. Thirdly, we have the brass, the limited monarchy of Alexander, based upon a military aristocracy. Fourthly, the iron, the strong Roman government, supposed to be democratic government, but democratic only in name, as any citizen who dared to oppose the will of the emperor soon discovered. Lastly, we come to the clay, which is democracy and no government at all; but iron is mingled with it, though the two cannot cohere. Therefore the Roman Empire will never be a pure democracy.

In Dan. 7 the vision of the four beasts goes over very much the same ground, The great image, however, represents human power from man's point of view, while the beast shows it from God's point of view. The beast represents human power reduced to bestiality by sin. And at the close there is One brought in "like a son of man," as the original reads; that is, man as God originally made him. The Lord Jesus is the only man now in God's universe who has preserved manhood as God gave it. The earth belongs to the sons of men, and the one Son of Man who remains intact must have it. The four beasts represent the world powers; the bodies, the masses of the people; the horns, or heads, the rulers.

Now, passing on to Rev. 4, please to pay attention to the situation. The Book of Revelation is divided into three parts. And while the first part describes a vision with which we have at present nothing to do, the second is devoted to "the things that are," the third to "the thing which shall be after these things." These correspond to the indefinite, or Church-period of Daniel's seventy sevens, in which John was living, and to the seven years of judgment which are to follow it. Rev. 2 and 3 are occupied with the first of the two periods, after which the Church is mentioned no more until we come to the epilogue of the Book; the description of the second begins with chapter 4. The Church is then understood to have been taken away, and the question is, Can God at once restore the kingdom to Israel? No; because He has given the power to the Gentile, and He cannot take it back again till the Gentile is proved to have broken his trust. In chapter 4 we see the cherubim before the throne, and the rainbow surrounding it. God is preparing to judge the Gentile in accordance with the Noachian covenant, and to take the power from him, and give it back to the Jew. How will He do this? In Isaiah 24 (one of the most wonderful chapters in the Bible) we read, "Behold, the Lord maketh the earth empty, and maketh it waste." The figure is appalling: God destroys the inhabitants of earth by His plagues as rapidly as one would pour water out of a vessel. Now, why is this done? In verse 5 we are told, "The earth is also defiled under the inhabitants thereof; because they have transgressed the laws, changed the ordinance, broken the everlasting covenant." Now in Gen. 9: 16 we have in the Hebrew the same word used, "the everlasting covenant," for the covenant with Noah.

Then in Rev. 5 the result of the judgment is given. The beasts have broken the covenant; therefore power is taken from them, and given to "One like unto a Son of Man," who is placed on the throne, and in the succeeding chapters is seen subjugating the world.

HOW A LAWSUIT WAS AVERTED.

Among some recently published reminiscences of Abraham Lincoln is one of the time when he was a practicing lawyer in Springfield, Ill. It is stated that a slight quarrel arose between two farmers who had up to that time been friendly neighbors. The quarrel grew more heated as time passed, and at last both men saw that a lawsuit would have to be tried before the difficulty could be settled. One morning Mr. Lincoln was seated in his office, when one of the farmers came to enlist his services. Lincoln heard his story with a serious face, and at its close said: "Now, if you and B—— go on with this suit, it will cost both of you your farms, and will entail an enmity that will last for generations, and perhaps lead to murder. Now B—— has just been here to engage me. He is in the other office now. I want you two to sit down here while I am gone to dinner, and talk it over and try to settle it; and to secure you from interruption I will lock the door." He did so, and did not return all the afternoon. The two men, finding themselves thus imprisoned, burst into a hearty laugh, which was the prelude to an amicable conversation. Lincoln had given them both the same warning, and advised a settlement and they took his advice. When the future President lounged in in his ungainly fashion late in the afternoon, he was pleased to find that the only use the litigants then had for a lawyer was to embody in a legal shape the settlement they had made. Mr. Lincoln probably missed a large sum of money in fees, by what he did, but he must have enjoyed the grateful respect of the farmers; and he took his place among the peacemakers, that very small company on whom Christ pronounced a blessing. (Matt. 5: 9.)

A CIRCUS-RIDER'S CONVERSION.

In his newly published work "Thirty-five years Among the Poor," Mr. Joseph Emery relates the following incident: "About twenty-five years ago, while visiting the women's hospital, I found one, recently admitted, who was quite sick and emaciated; her face betokened a dissipated life. Our conversation took the following direction: 'You are quite sick?' 'Yes, I am.' 'Are you a Christian?' 'That is none of your business.' 'True, but it is important to you.' 'I don't want to talk to you.' 'Very well, I will leave you.' So I left the room, and prayed God to change her mind. On my next visit she was very penitent, and, with tearful eyes, asked me to forgive her, and to read the Scriptures and pray with her. This I gladly did.

"Her history was a strange and sad one. When but a child six years old, she was persuaded to enter Dan Rice's circus, and performed many wonderful feats on horses. During many years she followed the circus throughout the land. All religious thoughts were soon dissipated; the very life she lived was one of gaiety, excitement and folly. Overtaken by sickness and poverty, she was admitted to the Infirmary, where she remained some seven years. On my second interview, I asked: 'Did you ever read through the New Testament?' 'No; only a little bit of it when I was in Sabbath-school.' 'If I bring one, will you read every word?' 'Indeed I will, and thank you for it.' The next time a Testament was given her. She began reading it carefully, and felt she was a sinner, and soon learned that Christ came into the world to save sinners.

"Desiring to be baptized, she came into the city and united with the High Street Baptist Church, of which I was the acting pastor. This convert was the first I ever baptized in the Ohio River. After her baptism, Ellen returned to the Infirmary, living a consistent Christian life; shortly before leaving, sickness prostrated her, but she was happy, trusting in Jesus.

DEFECTIVE LIFE-PRESERVERS.

PUBLIC attention has been called to the articles on ferry-boats and river steamers, which are placed there in compliance with the law requiring boats to carry life-preservers. It is stated that in many cases they are life-preservers only in name. On a Michigan steamer which was inspected, the life-preservers would not buoy up a weight exceeding seventeen pounds. On a Boston steamer they sank with a weight of twenty-four pounds. Experiments in other parts of the country reveal similar carelessness or fraud. The life-preservers are filled with worthless black cork or sawdust, and any persons trusting their lives to them in a wreck, would be miserably disappointed. It is a remarkable fact, however, that these fraudulent articles are in nearly all cases new. The old life-preservers, which might have been expected to deteriorate with age and exposure, are generally what they purport to be, and are capable of supporting a human body in the water. It is urged, in defence of the companies who have been putting these cheap and worthless life-preservers on board their boats, that the articles serve their main purpose—which is the moral one of averting panic and giving confidence in an emergency. The best life-preserver, it is said, cannot prevent a person drowning after a certain time in the water, and the poor ones fail a little earlier—that is all. It may be hoped that the Government Inspectors will listen to no such specious excuses, but insist on the requirements of the law being fulfilled. It is a cruel mockery to lead people to rely on life-preservers which will fail them in the time of trial. In a far more serious matter, there is reason to fear that reliance is being placed on resources which will fail. When death's dark river is to be crossed, the voyager who is trusting to good moral character, to regular church attendance, or to self-righteousness in any form, will be grievously disappointed, and only they who trust in Christ alone will be safe and triumphant. (Acts 4:12.)

A SPOILED BUSINESS.

IT is unusual for a teacher of religion to speak of his work as "a business." It is possible that men may be found even in the Christian ministry who think of their duties as business, but who have too much regard for decency to speak of them in that way. It appears, however, that Buddhist priests in Japan are not so particular. The Rev. J. P. Hearst, writing to the Church from Osaka, describes a business offer made on avowedly business motives to the missionaries by the Buddhist priests. He says:

"The Buddhist priests, finding that the 'Jesus people' had come into their midst, continued their policy of contempt until we had rented a suitable house, made the necessary changes in it, and held a couple of services, when they awakened to the danger of their situation, and began at once a system of persecution against the man who rented us the building. But fortunately for us the Japanese laws recognize the right of a tenant to remain in a house as long as he wishes to do so, provided the rent is paid; so the landlord told the priest he could not dislodge us if he wanted to, and what was more, he would not if he could. Finding no encouragement in that quarter, they changed their tactics and came to us, and told us that the people of the neighborhood were very much troubled that we had opened a preaching place there, and that they would give us 'five hundred yen' ($375). I replied that I was not particularly attached to that house, and if they would get us another just as good in that neighborhood and give me the five hundred yen besides, I would be very glad to exchange. 'But,' said they, 'another house in that neighborhood would be just as bad as this one.' It was to get us out of the neighborhood that they were willing to pay. I replied that in that case I would remain where I was; besides, the people in the community did not seem to object, so far as I could see. Then they acknowledged that the people did not care, but that they, the priests, wished us out of that place, because we spoiled their business. I think that Christianity must have begun to hurt Buddhism by this time, or the priests would not have made that offer. It is the first thing of the kind I ever heard of their doing."

AN INDIAN ORPHAN FROZEN.

THE blizzards of the past month have occasioned many fatalities, which have been reported in the newspapers, and have aroused much sympathy. There has been, however, much suffering and death which has not found a record in type. The Rev. W. F. Re Qua reports one pitiful case. It is that of a little Indian girl, an orphan, who had found refuge with a Choctaw, at Kielizco. She was but half-clad, and the Indian could find her no place to sleep in but an outhouse. It was cold and miserable, but the child was so desolate that it seemed a home to her. She crept in out of the bitter storm, on the evening of January 14, and lay down to sleep. Poor child! the sleep was her last. In the morning she was frozen stiff.

Mr. Re Qua says that there are many of these poor little Indian orphans utterly unprovided for. Their little pinched faces look up to him so wistfully, as they plead for shelter. Some kind readers of this journal sent him a few barrels of cast-off clothing, which he distributed, and since then he has made many acquaintances among the children, who, hearing that clothing was given away, came, hoping to be in time for a garment. Mr. Re Qua believes that a great work might be done through them. If a rough building could be erected, and furnished with a few common beds or bunks, a number of the orphan children might be collected there, and their lives saved and education given to them. Government aid might be secured, if it could be shown that the work was actually being done. The Roman Catholics have already availed themselves of this provision, and have established boarding and day schools in various parts of the Territory, toward the support of which the Government allows $231,880, and an additional sum for food and clothing. The school Mr. Re Qua has opened now contains twenty children, but this is a different affair from the orphanage he is desirous of establishing. The Lord has provided for him and his devoted wife so wonderfully hitherto, that they believe this enterprise of the Orphanage, which they have laid before Him in prayer, will surely be realized.

AN AFRICAN KING TESTED.

AMONG the candidates for baptism whose names were given recently to Bishop Ferguson in Africa, was that of a king. The Bishop, in a letter to the Spirit of Missions, describes the influence which overcame the aged king's better desires, and also expresses his opinion on a vexed question which is perplexing some earnest workers in the field. He says:

"The next day we went to a heathen village to visit King Tayu Segbe. Brother Vinton had enrolled his name among the candidates for baptism; he having expressed a desire for the same, and manifested considerable earnestness. A favorable circumstance, too, was the fact of his having but one wife at the time, which was quite unusual for a man of his position. On introducing the subject of his intended baptism, and questioning him in reference to the same, we discovered that his mind had undergone a change. When his intention became known, some of his chiefs and kinsmen protested against it, on the ground that it would be lowering the dignity of his office for him to renounce polygamy; besides, he would be regarded as a poor man who could not afford to buy wives; and, to make sure their aim, they had already procured another woman for him. The king yielded the point.

"What he and all others need, is to have the heart really brought under the influence of the Holy Ghost. Polygamy and every other fancied obstacle will then vanish from sight. To my mind, a greater blunder could not be committed than to declare polygamy no barrier to Christian baptism. I regard its abandonment as a sure test of that complete surrender which the law of Christ demands. Remove it, and we may be able to number converts by scores; but we would soon find that the heart which clings to this evil will likewise hold fast to other concomitant ones. Polygamy has never been a barrier to any really converted soul; but it has undoubtedly kept many false professors out of the Church. We may, without any risk, say to a would-be convert who refuses to obey the divine law of monogamy: 'Thy heart is not right in the sight of God.'"

A NORWEGIAN MISSIONARY HEALED.

IN the course of an address at Bethshan, published in Thy Healer, Mr. Nestigaard, who was on the eve of his departure as a missionary to China, said: "I wish to give a little testimony as to how the Lord has led me. His way, which is not ours, has been wonderful to me. It is four years ago since Jesus saved me. I was then a schoolmaster in Norway, but I did not know what it was to be born again. It could be said of me similarly to what was said of Nicodemus, 'Art thou a teacher, and knowest not these things?' But when I was in that state, a dear man came to the house where I was staying, and showed me how I must pray. I did then begin to pray and to weep for my sin, and I made up my mind that I would try as earnestly in future to do good, as I had been in the past to do evil. Then I felt myself getting poorer and poorer in my heart, and at last I had to cry out that I was lost. I kept on praying all that night, and in the morning I remembered the precious words. 'The blood of Jesus Christ, the Son of God, cleanseth from all sin,' and my sins were then washed away. I saw a picture in the 'Pilgrim's Progress,' and I thought that picture was mine; and when I came to the cross, my burden went away, and ever since then Jesus has been faithful to me. I have since then preached the gospel in Norway, and God has blessed me and given me many souls. I have had letters from some who were converted.

"It is two years ago since the Lord showed me He could heal me. I was very sick at the time. I could pray, but could not believe He was my Healer. I was in pain all night, and was very ill in the morning; so I thought I must go to a physician. I did so, and got to the house at eight o'clock. The servant said I must come at nine o'clock, as the physician would not be there before. The pain was then very bad, and continued so on my way home. When I got there I went to my little room and opened my Bible, and I accepted the precious promise from the Lord: 'I am the Lord that healeth thee.' I thought, If the other promises of God are true, this must be too," and the Holy Ghost came down upon me, and I was healed, and from that time I have never had a return of the pain. I have been sick once since; but I took it to the Lord, and He at once healed me, and now I know that I need no other physician."

CURRENT EVENTS.

Mr. Blaine's Letter Supplied Politicians Last week with an absorbing subject for speculation and debate. It called forth an endless variety of opinion. Mr. Blaine, writing from Florence, Italy, to the chairman of the Republican National Committee, said: "I wish, through you, to state to the members of the Republican party that my name will not be presented to the National Convention called to assemble in Chicago in June next for the nomination of candidates for President and Vice-President of the United States. I am constrained to this decision by considerations entirely personal to myself, of which you were advised more than a year ago." While some politicians accepted these expressions as a decisive and final withdrawal from a candidacy which was within Mr. Blaine's reach, others refused to regard it in that light. It was pointed out that Mr. Blaine merely stated that his name would not be presented to the Convention, and did not pledge him to refuse a nomination offered spontaneously, or by acclamation. Unless Mr. Blaine before the assembling of the Convention issues another statement, in which he definitely, and explicitly declares that he will not accept a renomination if it is offered, the Florence letter evidently will not prevent his being nominated. It will, however, relieve the convention of some embarrassment, and if after all it should decide on making Mr. Blaine again the standard-bearer of the party, the letter will relieve him of individual responsibility for the nomination. In that case he would stand before the country in the strong position of having sacrificed his own inclinations at the call of the party.

The Blair Education Bill Again Passed the Senate on February 15, but by a reduced majority. The vote this year was 39 to 29. In 1886 the majority was 22. The reduction is due both to change of opinion and to change in the personality of the Senate. Four Senators who voted for the bill in 1886, voted against it last week, and one who voted against it in the former year voted in its favor now, explaining the change by a statement that he had given his pledge to his State. Of the affirmative votes 23 were cast by Republicans and 16 by Democrats, and of the negative votes 12 by Republicans and 17 by Democrats. The bill appropriates $77,000,000 to be distributed in the States and Territories during the next eight years, "in that proportion which the whole number of persons in each who, being of the age of ten years and over, cannot write bears to the whole number of such persons in the United States." Seven million dollars is to be distributed the first year, ten the second year, fifteen the third year; then thirteen, then eleven, then nine, then seven, and finally five millions. The money is to be used for educational purposes only, and an extra $2,000,000 is appropriated for the erection of schoolhouses in sparsely populated districts. The objection urged against the bill by it opponents in Congress and the country is that the Federal Government has no right to interfere, even for the public benefit, in a matter which is constitutionally under the control of the State governments.

The New Tariff Bill on Which the House Committee are at work is not, it appears, to be a bill embodying the recommendations in the President's message. The commitee realize that such a bill could not be passed, and prefers to produce a compromise measure which would enlist the support of all Democrats, rather than a bill which would be so radical in its changes that Mr. Randall and his section would oppose it. A member of the Commitee said last week that "an effort had been made to ascertain the opinions of the Democratic members, to learn who wants to have duties reduced, who will resist reduction, and how much reduction can be undertaken without provoking so much hostility as to make it impossible to pass the bill. There is no desire manifested by any members to menace or impair the industries of the country, but there is well-settled belief that many of the interests referred to would welcome just the relief we shall try to give them." And so it comes about that as the House is "sounded," it is found necessary to make changes in schedules.

The Fishery Commission Charged with the duty of settling the dispute with Canada arrived at an agreement which was signed at Washington on February 15. It goes unto operation at once as a temporary settlement, and will remain in force until the Senate either ratifies or rejects it. No authoritative statement of its provisions was given to the public last week, as courtesy to the Senate demanded that it should pass upon it before publication. It is, however, believed to be in the main a concession of the claims made by the United States. The statement is made that the headland theory has been abandoned by the British and Canadian Commissioners, and that therefore Americans can fish in the bays three miles away from shore. Also that a commission will survey and define the limits in the smaller bays. American fishermen, however, are prohibited buying bait in Canada, though they may continue to touch and trade in other commodities, and may send their catch to the United States in bond by rail from Canadian ports, which is a privilege long desired but hitherto refused. If these are really the terms of the settlement, the United States have gained important concessions by the treaty, and we may hope that the Senate will ratify it, and so end the vexatious and irritating controversy.

The Gigantic Strike of Miners in Pennsylvania which commenced on January 3, was "declared off" on February 17, by a circular issued by the three Master Workmen, Lewis, Thompson and Renn, and Chairman Davis. The twenty thousand idle miners were therein notified that they might resume work on Monday, February 20. The basis of agreement on which this issue was reached was that the men go to work on the old terms of $2.50, that none should be refused employment for their connection with the strike, and that a conference between representatives of the Company and the miners should be held to arrange a scale of prices in accord with those being paid by other firms. These terms were declared unsatisfactory by several assemblies of miners, and the railroad men who are still out did their utmost to prevent acceptance of them. The majority of the miners, however, appear to be convinced that the railroad strike is hopeless and that further self-sacrifice is useless.

A Significant Admission by a Representative of the coal owners was made on February 16 to the Congressional Committee appointed to investigate the labor trouble in Pennsylvania. The witness was the general manager of the Reading Coal and Iron Company, and he was requested by the Committee to explain the allotment system. He said its object was "to restrict the output;" practically it amounted to an ascertainment each month of the probable demand for coal; then each section or system or operator was allotted to supply his or its share of this demand and no more. This share was in proportion to the capacity of such operator or company, as compared with the total capacity of all. Under this arrangement the Reading's share was from eighteen to twenty per cent. This allotment was made to prevent overproduction and keep up prices. He went on to say that the system was advantageous to the Company, and in reply to the question of how it affected the consumers, he said "Oh, we did not consider the consumer." The chairman of the House Committee then said that the committee meant, if possible, to pass a law that would protect the consumer.

An Ominous Cloud has Arisen in Venezuela, which may involve a dispute between our Government and that of England, as Venezuela claims that the Monroe Doctrine of the United States entitles her to expect our assistance in a contention with so powerful an antagonist. The difficulty has arisen about the boundary between Venezuela and British Guiana. Venezuela has granted a concession for the construction of a railroad to the famous Yuruari gold mines, but the governor of British Guiana issued a proclamation forbidding the making of the railroad, and declaring that the ground over which it was to run was British territory. Since then he has sent a force of soldiers to the mines and formally asserted the British claims to them. As the investors have hitherto paid tribute to Venezuela that Government contends that her claim to the mines is clear, and has instructed her consul at Washington to lay a statement of facts before Mr. Bayard.

A Vigorous Debate on Irish Affairs, Occupied the British House of Commons last week. The Government was severely arraigned by Mr. Gladstone, Sir G. O. Trevelyan, Mr. O'Brien, and other leaders of the Home Rule movement. The most severe strictures were on the arrest of members of Parliament, and their treatment in prison. Mr. Balfour, the Secretary for Ireland, defended the Government. Referring to a remark which had been made, that it was a sickening thing for members of Parliament to be imprisoned, he said it was a sickening thing that they should deserve it, and it would have been much worse if the Government had given the leading violators of the law a special privilege to defy it with impunity. A childish fuss had been made over the prison clothes, which was hardly worth while noticing. Regarding the alleged tortures in the prisons, he requested the prison inspectors to make a special inquiry, with the result of showing that it was utterly untrue that there was any harshness in treatment. As a matter of fact, Mr. O'Brien's health improved in prison. The debate showed that there was no change in the attitude of the two parties.

The French Foreign Secretary has Disturbed the feeling of security which Bismarck and other statesmen have so industriously labored to establish. M. Flourens, who has been recently elected to a seat in the legislature, said in the course of one of his campaign speeches that since other nations were concentrating their military forces, it behooved France to do likewise. As Russia is the only disturbing element in Europe, and as her movements are those which have produced all the anxiety, the remark of M. Flourens is significant, because his strength in France consists in the fact that he is the most earnest advocate of a Russian Alliance, and the man most likely to bring it about. It now appears clear to political observers, as it is to students of prophecy, that the next war, when it comes, will be in the nature of a stupendous duel, in which England also will be engaged. The evasive answers of the English Cabinet to questions put to them last week, convey the impression that England is secretly pledged to support the triple alliance in the event of war.

Sunday-school Superintendents and Teachers desirous of distributing copies of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in their schools and classes, may have assorted parcels of back numbers by applying, stating number required, to the manager, 63 Bible House.

Contributions to the Fund for Supplying Colored ministers in the South with this journal have been received since our last acknowledgment to the amount of $24.75. They were from: Philadelphia, Pa., $5; Cornwall, Conn., $1; Warner, Ill., $2; Jackson, Ont., $2; Boston, Mass., $2.50; Dundas, Ont., $10.50; Minneapolis, Minn., 50 cents; Syracuse, N. Y., 25 cents; Hamilton, Ont., $1. We are sincerely glad to receive these amounts, which will enable us to add to our list names of preachers who, as they state, need just the kind of assistance this journal affords.

Pastor C. H. Spurgeon has been Further Encouraged in his bold stand for orthodoxy by the receipt of a resolution of approval passed by the Wesleyan Reform Union. In acknowledging it, Mr. Spurgeon said: "I am unable to remain longer quiet when the war is for the authority of the Scriptures and the great doctrines of man's ruin, his redemption and the finality of the Lord's judgment. Being zealous for the old evangelical faith, I may speak too sternly against the enemies of the truth, and my words may seem unnecessarily sharp swords. We will together fight for the Word and the Gospel. We will bear our outspoken witness against this modern purgatory."

A Convention of the National Reform Association is to be held in New York in April next. The call summoning it is signed by Bishop Huntington, the Rev. Joseph Cook, Felix R. Brunot, the Rev. J. C. K. Milligan, the Rev. Dr. Crafts, the Rev. Dr. Taylor, Horace Waters, Prof. McAllister, Prof. MacCracken, and many other prominent persons. The object of the convention is to secure "the united effort of Christian patriots to maintain all our civil and religious liberties and institutions, and secure for them a more permanent legal basis." The dangers which the Association recognizes as demanding united effort are the increasing desecration of the Sabbath, the growth of the power of the liquor interest, the bitter and determined purpose of Liberalists, Anarchists and Socialists to overthrow our civil institutions, the constant and increasing influx of foreign ideas wholly opposed to the Christian Republic, and the growing tendency to license moral evils, as gambling, liquor selling and the social evil.

A Man Died while Getting Insured in the Office of a Life Insurance Company, in New York, on February 13. He had applied for a policy securing a thousand dollars to his family at his death, and called at the office on that day to complete the transaction. The preliminaries were arranged, and the medical officer was completing the physical examination, when the man staggered across the room and fell down in a fit of apoplexy. The doctor went to his assistance and administered ammonia and other restoratives, but without avail. In five minutes the man was dead. The remarkable fact was, that, though death was so near, the doctor had discovered nothing wrong with the man, and was about to endorse his application. In another half-hour the insurance might have been completed, but the man had delayed his application for it just a little too long, and, in consequence, his family is now just a thousand dollars worse off than they would have been had he applied to the company earlier. It may be hoped that he had not similarly delayed, until too late, a still more important preparation for leaving the world. Every man has the opportunity of making his peace with God through Christ, and those who postpone availing themselves of it, for a single hour, incur the awful risk of losing it by death (II Cor. 6: 2.)

The Sale of a Man for a Yoke of Oxen, is a transaction recalled by the death, on February 12, at Middletown, N. Y. of a colored man of remarkable intelligence and physical power. He was eighty-four years old when he died, was possessed of considerable property, and was much respected for his sterling Christian character, by the citizens of the locality, both white and colored. In his youth, and not long before the passing of the act of 1827, which provided for the manumission of all the slaves in New York State, he was sold for fifty-five dollars. The deed of sale, executed in due legal form, transferring the negro boy Frank to his new owner, is still in existence, and is treasured as a relic of bygone times. It records that on the consummation of the sale, the consideration was changed from lawful currency to a yoke of oxen. After he was set free, his owner gave him a furnished cottage, in which he lived until his death last week. He was the last survivor of the Orange county freedmen. It seems strange to us now to think that a yoke of oxen should ever have been deemed equivalent to the value of a man, though even now an ox or a horse often receives more care and attention from its owner than a man does from his employer. But the actual value of a man cannot be computed. We know, however, how high a value his Maker places upon him, from the fact that to save men, He gave His only begotten Son to suffer and die. (John 3: 16.)

A Singular Case of Mistaken Identity was described by a deputy sheriff who, on February 14, passed through Omaha, Neb., in charge of a prisoner. He said that his prisoner, a young man of twenty-five years of age, was one of twin brothers, who so closely resembled each other that even intimate friends were in the habit of distinguishing them by their dress rather than by their features. Five years ago he dressed himself one night in his brother's clothes and committed a robbery on a farmer, whom he beat almost to death. He wore a mask, but in the scuffle it fell off and he was recognized, with the difference that, having on his brother's clothes, it was his brother who was arrested and tried for the crime. He was sentenced to ten years hard labor, and the guilty brother actually allowed him to go to prison, while he went out to Nebraska and invested the proceeds of his crime in a share of a ranch. Happily a friend of the imprisoned brother suspected what had occurred and made investigation, which has resulted in the release of the innocent prisoner and the arrest of the real culprit. It is feared, however, that he will escape punishment on the plea that the law has already pronounced his brother guilty of the crime. That plea cannot avail him when he stands at the bar of God to answer for all his sins. It may be hoped that before that time he will repent and seek mercy. Even to so unnatural a criminal it will not be refused, if he plead for it in the name of Christ, the Elder Brother of our race, who suffered—the innocent for the guilty. (1 Peter 2: 22, 24.)

A Society Man's Discomfiture is Reported in the Boston Times. It states, that recently a young man, living on Beacon Street, feeling it incumbent upon him to make a present to a certain lady, yet having but little money to devote to the purpose, made a tour of the jewelry stores in search of an appropriate gift. He happened to be in a bric-à-brac store on Washington Street, when a valuable vase was accidently broken. "How much was that vase worth?" he asked. "Before it was broken the price was $200," was the reply. "What is it worth now?" "Why, not much of anything; it cannot be mended." "Well, I'll give you $1.50 for it." "All right." "Now please place the pieces together as nearly right as possible, pack it up, and send it with this card to Miss Z., No.— Marlborough Street." The young man departed in great elation; an elegant vase, at so slight a cost! Soon afterward he called upon Miss Z., presumably all ready to be surprised and grieved at the accident she would tell him had befallen his choice gift. "How do you like my present?" he casually asked in the course of conversation. "O," said Miss Z., "we have had such a laugh over it. There was a receipted bill enclosed for one broken vase, $1.50." The young man's confusion and shame may be imagined. Instead of getting credit in the lady's eyes for making her a handsome present, he stood before her a detected trickster of a peculiarly mean type. There are many persons who, like Ananias and Sapphira (Acts 5: 1–10) have the audacity to practice such tricks in the church. Sometimes they succeed in getting honor from men by false pretences, but they cannot deceive God who reads all hearts and who will one day expose all hypocrites and workers of iniquity. (Isa. 29: 15.)

A Marriage has Been Solemnized in the Ice Palace of St. Paul. The Globe of that city says: "Under the glare of several hundred electric lights, and amid the joyous acclaims of thousands of interested spectators, a young couple stood upon a carpeted platform in the grand court of the ice palace last evening to plight their vows in holy wedlock. This feature of the carnival has been looked forward to with great eagerness, by residents of St. Paul and visitors alike, and crowds eager to witness it flocked into the great court of the domain of Borealis. There was an absence of the elaborate toilets usually visible at matrimonial events inside a sacred edifice. Heavy woollen mittens and coverings of the same material for the ears and faces of the assemblage were conspicuous, and gayly attired tobogganers and snowshoers added to the picturesqueness of the brilliant scene. As the ceremony closed and the bride and bridegroom walked to their carriage, the vast assemblage joined in chanting the wedding march. The walls and turrets of ice formed a strange but significant surrounding for a wedding." The young couple will find that the world in which they will live can be just as cold as those walls, but like them it will pass away. Happy will they be, then if, as on their wedding day, they have a home to go to, but that will be a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. (II Cor. 5: 1.)

BRIEF NOTES.

David R. Locke, the author of the famous war letters signed Petroleum V. Nasby, died February 15.

W. C. T. U. work is progressing in Arizona; $3,000 have been subscribed to build a temperance hall at Phœnix.

Mr. Charles Herald has received a pressing invitation to labor on the Pacific Coast. The phenomenal success of his work at Cooper Union, New York, will, however, prevent his accepting it.

A Prohibition journal, published at Emporia, Kan., gives each week a list of the names of those who purchase liquor at the drug stores of that city, with the ailments for which they claim to use them.

Mrs. Cleveland is making a strong personal effort to establish a ward for contagious diseases in the Child's Hospital in Washington. There is no place in that city where a child suffering from a contagious disease can be taken.

A prize of $100 is offered by a New York merchant for the best essay on "Christ, our Nation's King," to be sent, not later than May 31, to Rev. R. H. M'Cready, 252 Broadway, New York. The conditions of competition may be obtained from Mr. M'Cready by sending a stamped envelope.

Messers. Moody and Sankey have concluded their work in Louisville, Ky. At the last service thousands of persons were unable to obtain admission to the huge tabernacle. A collection of over three thousand dollars was taken up for the mission, conducted by "Steve" Holcombe, a reformed gambler. This is a mission very much after the pattern of the Cremorne and Florence missions in New York.

A Week of Prayer is called for by a circular of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, to continue from March 18 to 25. Miss Frances E. Willard and Mrs. Caroline B. Buell, who sign the call, recommend that the meetings be held quietly in the usual places of meeting, and the prayers be for wisdom and power.

Mr. E. P. Telford concluded yesterday an eight weeks' mission in Lynn, Mass. The first four weeks were spent in the church of which Dr. Knowles is pastor, and the latter four in the First M. E. Church, of which Dr. Pickles is pastor. This latter is the oldest M. E. church in the State, having been founded by Jesse Lee in 1791. On Sunday next Mr. Telford commences a mission in Wilmington, Del. The results at Lynn have been of a most remarkable character, calling for deep thankfulness.

A remarkable revival has taken place in the University of Wilberforce, O. It commenced in a few lady students holding private meetings for prayer in each other's rooms, and it quickly spread through the university. Recitations were suspended, and a day of fasting and prayer appointed. The faculty took a deep interest in the movement, and assisted it to the utmost. Forty students have made a profession of their faith, and the number of professing Christians in the university is now ninety-eight per cent. of the whole number.

PARAMOUNT EDUCATION.

A New Sermon, by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

"And they shall teach no more every man his neighbor, and every man his brother, saying, Know the Lord, for they shall all know Me, from the least of them unto the greatest of them, saith the Lord; for I will forgive their iniquity, and I will remember their sin no more." Jer. 31: 34.

Grace Work in Dark Dress—The Effect of Knowing God—I. The One Essential Knowledge—A Common Misinterpretation—An Acquaintance with Bismarck—What it is to Know God—Knowing Him and Knowing about Him—On Speaking Terms with Him—A Divinely Imparted Knowledge—Regulates the Life—Is a Distinguishing Characteristic of the Regenerate—II. How the Knowledge is Obtained—Sin Produces Estrangement on Both Sides—Its Removal a Revelation—The King's Recognition—God Seen in Christ—A Personal Revelation.

TRUE knowledge of God is a covenant blessing. To know Jehovah as the only living and true God, to know Him personally and intimately, so as to say with David, "Thou art my God"—this is one of the choice blessings of the covenant of grace which grace bestows upon all the chosen. In this prophecy, Jehovah declares that He will yet give this knowledge to the house of Israel and to the house of Judah; and this is our hope for the long-wandering seed of Abraham, whom He will yet restore and save.

If we regard the passage before us as instructive in its order, the knowledge of God follows close upon the application of the law to the heart. Read, "After those days, saith the Lord, I will put my law in their inward parts, and write it in their hearts; and will be their God, and they shall be My people . . . . and they shall all know Me, from the least of them unto the greatest of them, saith the Lord." The work of grace usually begins, so far as we can perceive it, by the Holy Spirit's bringing the law into contact with the inner man. The law outside of a man is forgotten; he may profess a reverence for it, but it does not affect his desires and thoughts. But when the Holy Spirit begins to put the law into the inward parts, the immediate result is the discovery of our shortcomings and transgressions.

Law-Work is Grace-Work

in its darker dress. It is the axe which roughhews the timber which grace goes on to fashion and smooth. By the operation of the law upon the conscience, convincing the man of sin, of righteousness, and of judgment, the Holy Spirit works towards the transforming of the heart. He takes away the stone out of it, and makes it to be a fleshy, tender, sensitive thing. Then with His own finger He writes the divine law upon the mind and the affections, so that the divine commands become the centre of the man's life, and the governing force of his action. The man now loves that law which before he, at his very best, only feared: it becomes his will to do the will of God. By a miracle of grace his nature is changed, so that its tendencies, which were all towards evil, are corrected by new tendencies, which are all towards good. As the law is written on the heart, a manifestation is made of God Himself. The man is made to know himself, to know God's law, and thus he is led to know the Lord. Now he acquaints himself with God, and is at peace. Of this gracious knowledge of the Lord I am going to speak this morning.

I. To begin with, we have here, first of all,

The One Essential Knowledge.

It is a great truth that, "This is life eternal, to know Thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom Thou hast sent." To know God, is to live in the light. This knowledge brings with it trust, peace, love, holiness, and acceptance. Do not read this passage as some do, and tear it up by its roots, and then use it as if it were a prophecy of the universal spread of religion. Do not dream of a day when we shall not need to teach our brother and our neighbor the great truths of our holy faith: at any rate, the text before us says nothing of the kind. This prophecy is to be read as it stands.

In the first place, as we have already said, it relates to the house of Israel and the house of Judah. At the present time these have forgotten the Lord as to a true spiritual worship of Him; for they have rejected the Messiah, in whose face God's glory is seen: this nation is to be brought back to its best estate; both portions of it shall be converted, and shall come under a new covenant of a very different tenor from that which their fathers so wantonly broke. The Lord will of Israel under a covenant of grace, by which He will work in them those things which, under the old covenant, He justly required of them. Under this covenant of grace they are to have their hearts inscribed with His law; Jehovah is to be their God, and they are to be His people. Then shall they, in very deed, know the Lord as their fathers knew Him in the days of Elijah, when the fire fell from heaven, and they cried, "Jehovah, He is the God. Jehovah, He is the God." Whatever else these converts shall not know, they shall know Jehovah, "from the least of them unto the greatest of them."

Refer the passage to the spiritual Israel, as you justly may, and you learn that when God deals with men in a way of grace, and impresses obedience upon their nature, then they all know Him, from the least unto the greatest of them. The universality of the text extends to all those who come under the new covenant, and are renewed in heart; these without exception know the Lord, and there is no need that they be instructed upon that important point. These people know the Lord, and never can forget Him: henceforth they are no more strangers to Him, but sojourners with Him.

Let us consider this knowledge, that we may see what it is. And to begin with: it is emphatically the knowledge of God: "They shall all know me." They may not know everything about God. Who could? Who knows the Lord in that sense but the Lord Himself? Only the infinite can comprehend the infinite. The intellectual comprehension of the attributes of God is beyond us: how, then, could we grasp His essence? The regenerate, however, know the Lord, though they do not, and cannot, understand His incomprehensible glories.

Observe, that the prophet speaks not of knowing facts about God, nor truths as to what God is, or has done, or will do—it is Knowing God Himself.

Do you not perceive the difference? I may know, and I do know, a great deal about a certain renowned person; say, if you please, Prince Bismarck. I have read his biography, and I think I have some sort of an idea of his personal character: thus I know something about him. But if you were to ask me, "Do you know him?" I should at once answer, "No, I have not even seen him, I have never spoken with him, nor written to him, nor held any other communication with him; and therefore I cannot say that I know him."

Now, if this solemn question were passed round these pews, "Do you know God?" how would you answer it? Many would reply, "We have read the Scriptures, and so we know the attributes of God, and we remember with great reverence all that God has done, and promised to do; but still we cannot say that we know Him. Can any one say as much as that?" Let me break up the question—Have you ever spoken with God? Did He ever speak with you? Believers can say, "Truly our fellowship is with the Father;" can you say that? Were you ever conscious of the presence of God? Has He ever manifested Himself to you in any special way? Alas! many a very knowing man must honestly confess that he does not know the Lord in the sense contained in my questions. Even among professing Christians this may be sadly true; even as Paul said to the Corinthians: "Awake to righteousness, and sin not; for some have not the knowledge of God: I speak this to your shame."

I put this question to each one. Hast thou ever spoken to Him? Is it the habit to open thy heart to Him? Dost thou tell Him all thy secrets? I mean by this nothing bordering on fanaticism or superstition; but in sober earnestness I ask—Is God real to thee? Is He as real to thee as she that lieth in thy bosom, or as the friend who walketh with thee by the way? Is the invisible God as real to thee as any person that thou canst see, as much as actual fact as any substance which thou canst feel? Has the Lord ever spoken to thy soul? I will not put any special question about the medium of that speech. It may be, He has spoken through this Book, or through His minister, or by "a still small voice" within thy soul—but has the Eternal One ever spoken with thee?

Are you on Speaking Terms with your God? If not, you cannot be said to know Him; and if you do not know Him, you are not among the renewed in heart; for of them the Lord saith in this Scripture, "They shall all know Me, from the least of them unto the greatest of them." Note, dear friends, in the next place, that it is a personal knowledge. Each renewed person knows the Lord for Himself. You cannot know God except for yourself. If I am asked whether I know such a person, it would be idle to answer, "Well, my brother knows him." That would be an admission that I did not myself know him. So with regard to God. No second-hand knowledge can be admitted here. You cannot know God through other people. Personal religion, and individual knowledge of God, are indispensable. Come, my hearer, what hast thou to say to this?

Next, this knowledge is one which is wrought in us by the Spirit of the Lord. It is the duty of every Christian man to say to his neighbor, and to his brother, "Know the Lord." It is the instinct of a new-born child of God to try and tell out what he knows. God uses this effort as His instrumentality for saving men. But the man who really knows the Lord, does not know Him solely by such instruction. This may be the means used, but the knowledge obtained comes from a higher source than brother or neighbor. When Peter confessed Christ, you remember how the Lord Jesus said, "Blessed art thou, Simon Bar-jona; for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee." You may know a great deal intellectually by the teaching of men; but heart knowledge, the knowledge which is peculiar to God's elect, you can never receive except by the teaching of the Lord.

There are many truths, beloved brethren, which I feel always bound to teach to you so long as I am the pastor of this flock; but if I had an unmixed company gathered here of regenerated men and women, I should not think of saying to you, "Know the Lord"; for I should be from the least even to the greatest. We assume the presence of this knowledge when we preach to God's people: we take it for granted that they know the Lord, and, therefore, we do not again lay this foundation. A godly man's life is such that we perceive that he knows the Lord. Mark him when he gets into trade. He might take an unfair advantage; but he scorns it. Does he not want money? Yes, badly. But he has respect to One whom others cannot see. By a word of falsehood he might profit largely; he will not speak it. Why? "So did not I, because of the fear of the Lord." All who have been renewed in spirit, and have had God's law written upon the fleshy tablets of their heart, manifest to a greater or less degree that they know the Lord, and therefore their brethren perceive it, and cease to teach them what they are sure they know.

Next, this knowledge of God is universal among the regenerate. It is not universal among the sons of Adam, for multitudes know not God, and have no dealings with Him! But all those who are under the covenant of grace know the Lord. The regenerate man with one talent knows the Lord; the man with ten talents boasts not of them, but rejoices that he knows the Lord. This is the distinguishing mark of the regenerate, they know the Lord.

God is our hope, our confidence, our expectation: but we can have no hope in an unknown God. The knowledge of God lies at the bottom of every virtue and grace. The Lord is no more to us a stranger of whom we have heard—of whom a report has come to us through many hands. No; the Lord God is our personal Friend. This, in a large degree, is true of all those with whom the grace of God has dealt, to bring them under His covenant, and to give them new hearts and right spirits—they all know the Lord, from the least even unto the greatest.

II. And this leads me to the second point, whereon I ask your earnest attention: the one of God. Here it is: "For I will forgive their iniquity, and I will remember their sin no more." Do you catch the idea? The clearest knowledge of God comes out of pardoned sin. The most distinct, vivid, assured knowledge of Jehovah comes to us when our iniquity is blotted out.

Just think a little. Without the pardon of sin it is not possible for us to know the Lord. We run away from Him; we do not want to know Him. Like father Adam, we hide away among the trees of the garden; we do not desire to see our Maker; for we have offended Him. The thought of God is distasteful to every guilty man. It would be good news to him if he could be informed, on sure authority, that there was no God at all. He cannot know God, because his whole heart and mind and spirit are in such a state that he is incapable of knowing and appreciating the Holy One of Israel. Darkness covers the mind, because sin has blinded the soul to all that is best and holiest. The lover of sin does not know God, and Does Not Want to Know Him.

While sin lieth at the door, there is a difficulty on God's part, too. How can He admit into an intimate knowledge of Himself the guilty man, as long as he is enamoured of evil? Shall the great king entertain rebels? Shall two walk together, except they be agreed? "God is angry with the wicked every day." He is of purer eyes than to behold iniquity. Hence the guilty man is, by reason of his own impurity of nature, and by reason of the holy nature of God, shut out from all knowledge of God.

But, beloved, we now speak a matter which we have proved by experience—in the pardon of sin there is made to the pardoned man a clear and unmistakable revelation of God to his own soul. I venture to say that there is a clearer revelation of God to the individual in the forgiveness of his sin than can be found anywhere else. God is to be seen in nature. Who among us would wish to question it? Walk abroad, and look around you, and above you, and behold your God! But while men are under the dominion of sin, nature does not reveal God to them; their eyes are holden, and they will not perceive Him. The most eminent students of nature have some of them remained without

The Discovery of a God.

The same is true of providence. God comes very close to many men by preserving their lives from imminent peril, or by providing them with things necessary in the moment of great need; and yet we have known men living in the centre of wondrous providences, and they have only thought themselves lucky fellows, or clever persons, and so have traced God's mercy to chance or self. But let me tell you, if you have ever felt the guilt and burden of sin, and God has come to you and brought you to the Saviour's feet, and you have looked up and seen the great Sacrifice, and put your trust in Him, and the Spirit has borne witness with your spirit that your sins and your iniquities have been forgiven you—then you know the Lord with emphasis and beyond all doubt. In such a discovery of the Godhead there is a joyful conviction, an absolute certainty, a more than mathematical demonstration. The knowledge of God received by a distinct sense of pardoned sin, is more certain than knowledge derived by the use of the senses in things of this life.

In the thirty-third chapter of the Second Book of Chronicles, let me read to you concerning Manasseh, who had shed innocent blood very much: "Wherefore the Lord brought upon them the captains of the host of the king of Assyria, which took Manasseh among the thorns, and bound him with fetters, and carried him to Babylon. And when he was in affliction he besought the Lord his God, and humbled himself greatly before the God of his fathers, and prayed unto Him: and He was entreated of him, and heard his supplication, and brought him again to Jerusalem.

Then Manasseh Knew

that the Lord He was God." When Jehovah pardoned him, then the great sinner knew that Jehovah was God. There is no evidence like it. Infinite mercy personally received is a demonstration of the Godhead. The church of God, when she was in her praiseful frame of mind, and full of joy, what think you was her song? Micah 7:18 gives it to us: "Who is a God like unto thee, that pardoneth iniquity, and passeth by the transgression of the remnant of His heritage? He retaineth not His anger for ever, because He delighted in mercy. He will turn again, He will have compassion upon us; He will subdue our iniquities; and thou wilt cast all their sins into the depths of the sea." Hallelujah! Who is a God like unto thee? We wonder more at the God of pardons than at the God of thunders. There is a more vivid apprehension of the Godhead in obtaining mercy than in beholding works of power.

Beloved, you must bear with me a minute or two while I speak upon this delighful theme. How a man sees God when he comes to know in his own soul the fullness of pardon intended by this matchless word, "Their sins and their iniquities will I remember no more!" Can this be so? Does the Lord make a clean sweep of all my sins? Can it be that the Lord has cast them all behind His back? Has He blotted out the record which accused me? Has He cast my sin into the depths of the sea? Hallelujah! He is a God indeed. This is a God-like act. O Jehovah! who is like unto thee? When I know my sin to be forgiven, I need no one to say to me, "Know the Lord:" the fullness of His pardon has made Him known. Oh, the splendor of redeeming love! Does not every soul that knows the mystery of the Cross know the Lord? Jesus says, "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father."

Brethren, do not forget the great love which, when the plan was struck out, provided the august person for the working out of that plan? "He spared not His own Son, but freely delivered Him up for us all." When I think that the God who was offended by sin was Himself the sufferer on its account, my thoughts of God are raised far above any height to which the interesting facts of science have elevated them. As I see God in nature, I reverence Him; as I see Him in providence, I adore Him; as pardoning my sin, I know Him. If God deal with thee, my brother, and thou knowest Him, this is sure knowledge. Neither time with its lapse, nor suffering with its fret, nor doubt with its venom, nor death with its terrors, can take from you that certainty of faith which comes with the pardon of sin. If you do not know the Lord by His personal manifestation of Himself in pardoning your sin, I do not wonder that you are easily turned about by every wind of doctrine; but if you do know the Lord by His appearing to you in grace, you are beyond the short-range guns of the enemy. Our memories must fail us, and our senses must leave us before we can doubt the glorious Godhead of our Jehovah. We may be beaten in argument by the sophistries of the new theologians; but we cling to the facts of our experience, and cannot be parted from them. When the God of the Old Testament is decried, we glory in Him, saying, "He has pardoned my sin, and thus He has proved himself to be God indeed." Our opponents may turn round and say, "That is no argument to us"; we only reply, "We dare say it is not; but it is argument enough for us, and we must leave you to judge for yourselves. If you will not believe our testimony, we are clear."

May the Lord renew to our souls, from day to day, our sense of pardoned sin, and we shall be happily established in His faith and fear, whatever others may have to say. Oh, how I desire that all my hearers may seek and find this sin-pardoning God in Christ Jesus! Look to your Saviour hanging on the tree, bearing the curse, that you might be blessed. Look, I say, and you also shall know the Lord. The Lord help you: Amen, and Amen.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

An Asiatic Home in Trinidad.*

THE second morning after my arrival in Trinidad, my host took me to a Coolie village, three miles beyond the town. The drive was between spreading cane fields, beneath the shade of bamboos, or under rows of cocoa-nut palms, between the stems of which the sun was gleaming.

Human dwelling-places are rarely interesting in the tropics. A roof which will keep the rain out is all that is needed. The more free the passage given to the air under the floor and through the sides, the more healthy the habitation; and the houses, when we came among them, seemed merely enlarged packing cases loosely nailed together and raised on stones a foot or two above the ground. The rest of the scene was picturesque enough. The Indian jewellers were sitting cross-legged before their charcoal pans, making silver bracelets and earrings. Brilliant garments, crimson and blue and orange, were hanging to dry on clothes-lines. Men were going out to their work, women cooking, children (not many) playing or munching sugar-cane, while great mango-trees and ceibas spread a cool green roof over all. Like Rachel, the coolies had brought their gods to their new home. In the centre of the village was made up rudely out of boards, with a verandah running round it. The boards were locked. An old man who had charge, told us we could not enter. A crowd, suspicious and sullen, gathered about us as we tried to prevail upon him. So we had to content ourselves with the outside, which was gaudily and not unskilfully painted in Indian fashion. There were gods and goddesses in various attitudes, Vishnu fighting with the monkey god, Vishnu with cutlass and shield, the monkey with his tail round one tree while he brandished two others, one in each hand, as clubs. I suppose that we smiled, for our curiosity was resented, and we found it prudent to withdraw.

Contrast of Races.

The coolies are useful creatures; without them sugar cultivation in Trinidad and Demerara would cease altogether. They are useful and singularly ornamental. Unfortunately, they have not the best character with the police. There is little crime among the negroes, who quarrel furiously, but with their tongues only. The coolies have the fiercer passions of their eastern blood. Their women, being few, are tempted occasionally into infidelities, and would be tempted more often, but that a lapse in virtue is so fearfully avenged. A coolie regards his wife as his property, and if she is unfaithful to him, he kills her without the least hesitation. One of the judges told me that he had tried a case of this kind, and could not make the man understand that he had done anything wrong. It is a pity that a closer intermixture between them and the negroes seems so hopeless, for it would solve many difficulties. There is no jealousy. The negro does not regard the coolie as a competitor and interloper, who has come to lower his wages. The coolie comes to work, the negro does not want to work, and both are satisfied. But if there is no jealousy, there is no friendship; the two races are more absolutely apart than the white and the black. The Asiatic insists the more on his superiority, in the fear, perhaps, that if he did not, the white might forget it.

THE PALACE AT ZANZIBAR.

(See Illustration.)

The edifice used by the Sultan of Zanzibar as a residence, and which is dignified by the title of palace, stands on the island of Zanzibar, which is about twenty-five miles from the country of that name, on the east coast of Africa. The island forms the capital of the Sultan's dominions, and is by far the most valuable part of them. The whole territory of the Sultan of Zanzibar extends eleven hundred miles along the coast of Africa, from Magdashooa on the north to Cape Delgado on the south, and as far inland as he can make his power felt. Over much of the country, a hundred miles or even less from the coast, his authority is only nominal. The Island of Zanzibar, however, with another island named Pemba, and a third, called Monfia, are completely under his sway, and are populous and prosperous. The chief inhabitants are the Arab merchants and farmers, who possess numerous slaves, and live in Zanzibar as a convenient centre for trade; while the fertility of the island renders farming a pleasant and profitable occupation.

The Sultan maintains an army of about fifteen hundred trained soldiers, whose quaint garb is seen in the illustration. With these and a few guns he is able to keep up his dignity and authority, collect his revenues and live in the state which an Oriental potentate deems necessary. In any sudden emergency recruiting and conscription would speedily raise the army to a formidable power as the whole male population is hardy and active and composed of the best fighting material. The Sultan's name is Seyyid Bargash Bin Said. He succeeded his elder brother, Seyed Majid, who died in 1870, and who was the first independent ruler of Zanzibar, the country prior to his reign having been a dependency of Muscat. His income is estimated at half a million dollars annually. The trade of the country is considerable for its size and location. It exports annually goods to the amount of about four millions and takes in exchange mainly from England, arms, machines, etc., to the value of three millions. The Sultan is bound by treaty with European powers to suppress the slave trade, but it continues to be carried on doubtless with his connivance.

'Mother, it is five months to-day since you came to Linborough," said Dr. John Heyward, looking up from his newspaper one morning at the breakfast table. "A very short time it seems, doesn't it?"

"Yes, my son; and a very pleasant five months as well," replied Mr. Heyward, smiling across the table at her boy. "This was the place for you, after all.

"Of course it was; and, mother, I was looking up my books last night, and do you know, I have made a good deal of money since I came; not bad for a beginner, eh?" said the young doctor, gleefully.

"Very good, indeed; especially as your practice is increasing every day," said Mrs. Heyward, in a very satisfied tone.

"I think I can afford a holiday now, mother," continued the doctor. "I believe I'll run down to Kingsmead; our dear old home, for a couple of days."

"Do so, my boy, by all means. I am sure you must be wearying very much to see Edith."

Only a few months before, Mr. Heyward, who was a clergyman, highly esteemed by everyone, had died, leaving his widow dependent on the generosity and proper filial feeling of his two sons, Philip, the elder, who was in business, and Jack, the physician, with whom she was now living. Yes, five months had sped rapidly and pleasantly for the inmates of the villa, and the young doctor was now an established favorite in Linborough. But Mrs. Heyward's thoughts just now were so full of Philip, her other son, that she sat down by-and-by to write to him. He had been very selfish and unfeeling toward his mother, leaving the responsibility of her protection entirely to his brother Jack, while with all his heart and soul he devoted himself to making money.

On Christmas eve, Doctor Heyward and his mother accepted the invitation of a patient, and an influential friend of the physician—a Mrs. Lynne, to join a Christmas party at Lynnsday. They had come early by request, and none of the guests had yet arrived. They found Mrs. Lynne in the drawing-room. "Good evening, dear Mrs. Heyward," she said, "My husband has been out with his gun all day, and is late with his toilet, Doctor Heyward will you please to go down to the library for a few minutes? I have left something there, which I should like you to bring up."

Considerably mystified, Jack retired downstairs and opened the library door, and there sitting in the dim twilight, clad in delicate evening dress, was the girl the young doctor loved best on earth. Evidently, Mrs. Lynne desired to give him a most delightful surprise.

"Why! my darling Edith, is it you or your ghost?" he stammered, in the greatness of his surprise, and the next moment she was clasped to his heart. A faint flush trembled on either cheek, and on the broad white brow every blue vein was distinctly visible. Her eyes had ever been wide and bright, but now they seemed unnaturally large, unnaturally bright. Also there was a darkening shadow about them, which Jack's professional eye did not like to see, but he was too much delighted with her presence to allow forebodings of evil to find a footing in his heart that night. As he quitted the hospitable mansion with his mother, shortly before midnight, he said to Mrs. Lynne, "I will be over early in the morning for a professional call."

"But I am not sick, Doctor Heyward," she said. "You mean a lover's call."

"No;" said Jack, "I must see Edith professionally. I am afraid she needs the physician more than the lover. At any rate I will come prepared to act in either capacity."

"You will be welcome in either, Doctor," said his friend.

A sad, uneasy feeling filled the young physician's heart, as he drove away, his mother by his side. Edith had lost her own mother, and a dear sister, by that insidious foe to youth and loveliness, consumption, and now the danger-flag was fluttering in her cheeks. No wonder Doctor Heyward's heart sank, and he felt that all the professional success which seemed to be gathering before him would be like Dead Sea fruit, if Edith did not live to share it with him. He drove home silently, and having assisted his mother to alight, he re-entered his carriage and drove on a mile farther to see a patient whose life was trembling in the balance, and by whose side he intended to pass an hour or two of the night.

As Mrs. Heyward entered the home the housekeeper met her.

"Mr. Philip is here, ma'am," said Martha, when she opened the door. "He came at nine o'clock." In much surprise Mrs. Heyward hurried into the dining-room, and Philip rose, smiling slightly at her evident consternation. "You are surprised to see me, mother," he said. "I only decided to come to-day, so there was no time to write. How are you and where is Jack?"

"Seeing a patient," answered Mrs. Heyward, throwing aside her cloak, and drawing in her chair to the fire, for a talk. "Now tell me something about yourself," she said. "Jack and I were speaking of you to-day, and wondering what had become of you that you did not answer my letter. You look years older than you did in the summer. My son, why will you work so hard? Why struggle for wealth at the cost of health and every other earthly blessing?"

Philip replied, "There will be no need for me to work so hard now, Mr. Gooderich has died, and I am his sole heir."

Mrs. Heyward held up her hands. "Dear me, how extraordinary! I do not know whether to congratulate you or not, my son," she said at length, in tones which were almost sad. "Riches are sometimes a great blessing, sometimes the reverse. And they always bring with them many cares." Presently Mrs. Heyward rose and laid a tremulous hand on his arm, as she said: "Since this wealth has thus strangely fallen into your hands, Philip, see that you use it aright. God will require from you an account of the uttermost farthing. Use it to make the world a brighter place than it is. Then it will bring its own reward, for in blessing others you will be unspeakably blessed yourself."

Dr. John Heyward and His Mother.

But not so did Philip propose to use his money. It was to be the nest-egg, the beginning of a great fortune, and he had no intention of using it for any one's happiness but his own. He sat still long after his mother left him, building castles in the air, and picturing himself the owner of many millions, controlling railroads, and vast financial enterprises. So he was sitting when his brother returned, and the two greeted each other and sat down to discuss the future.

It was all hidden from them then, but if they could have pierced the veil, they would have seen each other without recognition. Philip hard, selfish, rich; Jack toiling a medical missionary in a heathen land, looking forward to the time when his labor done he would enter heaven through the merits of Christ where he once more would see the angel girl whose influence had led him to sacrifice fortune and fame for Christ's sake.

MRS. TRANSOME'S PUPIL.

A SERIAL STORY.

How The Pupil Came.

If it would do anybody good to hear my story, they are welcome to it; ay! kindly welcome. I'm too old now to be of any use as a guide; but maybe I can still be useful as a finger-post, that points the way folks should follow.

I married out of my country; my people said, out of my station. For my father held a small farm, and the squire's lady had seen that I learned to read and write, and do fine sewing; but my husband was only a handloom weaver from the north, a man that could weave and sing right well, but never cared much for the inside of a book. But he was true and faithful to the backbone, till I learned from him something of his faithfulness, and knew it was the same as Abraham's, who was called the father of the faithful. Words that were always on his lips were, "Faithful in little, faithful in much;" and it seems to me, now he is gone, those words are my chief comfort. Wherever Transome is, he is faithful still.

It was a daring thing to marry so far away from one's own people in those days. There were no railroads, and the coaches were too dear for us, even the outside of them, where in the summer you were covered with dust and parched with thirst, and nipped with frost and wind in the winter. Transome and me did not once think of taking the coach after we were wedded. The canal ran almost straight from my village to his; and though the journey took us the best part of three days, and he was winning no money, it was the cheapest way of travelling. It seems to me, when I shut my eyes and think of it, as if it had all been in some other world, when Transome and me were young, and the warm sunny days were full of light and brightness, such as the sun never gives nowadays, as if the sun itself is growing old.

The boat floated slowly, slowly along the canal, while we walked together till we were tired, gathering the blossoms from the grassy banks, or sat on the boat, plucking the water-lilies up by their long roots. How gently we were rocked as the water rose beneath us in the locks! I can hear the rush and gurgling of the water now! And with my dim old eyes shut, I can see Transome looking upon me with a smile, such as I shall never more see again, till I behold his face on the other side of death's dark river, smiling down upon me as I reach the shore. Ah! there are no times now like those old times!

It was in the cool of the evening he brought me to his house, standing on the brow of a low hill, with what he called a clough, and I called a dingle, full of green trees and underwood, running down to a little sparkling river in the valley below. We could see far away from the door, and feel the rush of the fresh air past us, as it came over fields and meadows, and swept away to other fields and meadows. The cottage was an old one even then—built half of timber, with a thatched roof pitched very high and pointed, and with one window in it to light our up-stairs room. Down-stairs was one good-sized kitchen, with a quarried floor, and the loom standing on one side. Not a bit of a parlor or spare chamber, such as I'd been used to. I knew Transome thought often of that; but the place grew so dear to me, I ceased to care about any parlor.

As for the garden, we worked in it all our spare time, till many a passer-by would stop to look at the honeysuckle, and the travellers'-joy climbing up the wall, and hanging over our window in the roof; and at the posies in the garden, the hollyhocks and roses, and sweetwilliams, which made the air all sweet with their scent. After a while, when father and mother were dead, I forgot my old home; and it seemed as if I had never dwelt anywhere else, and must dwell there till the end of my days. Nothing happened to us; nothing save the birth, and the short, short life of a little child of ours, our only child, who died when he was seven years old, and could just read to his father at the loom.

It was that year the sky began to grow grayer and the wind to blow more chilly about the house. Transome was ten years older than me, and he began in some way to feel his age, now the boy was gone. And as time went on things became duller and duller; and his rheumatism grew worse and worse, till he had to give up his loom, and at last he could do little more than work out the rent by being odd man for our landlord, who knew he could trust him with untold gold.

But all this while the country-side was changing even faster than Transome and me. The railroads had been made, and machinery invented, and all the little villages were turning into towns as if by magic. There had always been a few mills along the course of our little river, but every year more and more sprang up with their tall smoky chimneys, and streets were made, and houses built, until the dingle itself became a row of straggling cottages, creeping up towards our pretty homestead. Perhaps it was because I belonged to another country, and spoke in a different fashion, but none of the country folks about there ever took heartily to me, and I always felt shy with them and their rough ways. Transome himself was a quiet man, and never cared to make many friends; so we dwelt like strangers among our neighbors, up in our thatched cottage, which was as different from the new red brick houses about it as we were to the factory people living in them.

But I never felt strange with children, nor they with me. So when Transome was laid up from his work, I opened a little dame school for the lads and lasses living in the houses down the dingle. They soon flocked to me like chickens at the cluck-clucking of an old mother hen, till I might have filled my kitchen twice over. But my outside number was thirty, and as they paid me, Transome and I managed to get along—what with him working out the rent, and me taking in fine sewing from the ladies of the town.

Transome was always proud of my learning, and now he was glad for me to earn money in that way, instead of by washing, as many a woman has to do when her man is ailing. But he did not like little ones as I did; they pottered him, he said, and he never knew how to manage them. So after a while whenever he could not go to work, he liked better to lie abed upstairs, till the evening school was over, than sit in the chimney-nook listening to the hum of their lessons, which always sounded in his ears like a score of hives swarming. I used to be afraid he would be dreary and sad in those long days, while I was as busy as could be downstairs. But he said he had thoughts come into his head that he could not put into words, for he had always been a man of few words, fewer than any I ever met with, and as he got older they became fewer still. Maybe he'll know how to tell me those thoughts of his when we meet in heaven.

I have only one thing to tell you about my little school; the only one strange thing that happened to me all the years I kept it.

It had been a sharp frost in the night, so sharp that the panes in the window, little diamond-panes, were frosted over with so many pretty shapes that I almost wished they could stay there always. I quite wished that the children were there to see them. When I opened the door all the great, broad sweep of country stretching before me was lightly powdered over with snow, and long icicles hung like a ragged fringe to the eaves. If the dingle had been there, how sparkling and beautiful every tree and shrub would have shone in the early light! But the last bit of the dingle was gone, and a new, red brick house stood at the end of our garden. Still, the low bushes about our place were silvered over, and glittered in the frosty sunshine, which they caught before it reached the houses below.

I had overslept myself that morning, for the night before I'd been poring over a book that had been lent me, till my candle burned down in the socket, and left me in the dark. I could not put that book down; it stirred my heart so. But now I began to feel as if I'd been wasteful, for candles were not plentiful with us, nor money to buy them, though I was loath to blame myself. At any rate I was behind time, and I could not tarry at the door but must hurry more than usual in getting breakfast over and redding up the kitchen in time for school. Inside the house the place seemed dark and dreary, and everything was cold to the touch of my fingers. I began to think of how ailing Transome was, and how the frost would bite him. He had not been to work for a fortnight, and the rent was running on all the while. The rent was my heaviest care. As long as that was paid, it did not matter much to me what I had to eat and drink, so that we made both ends meet, and kept out of every man's debt. But Transome's pains had been very bad all night; and I knew well he could not go out in such a bitter frost, if the rent was never paid.

Well! I was down-hearted that morning; and I felt as if I could not afford to put more than a spoonful and a half of tea in our little black teapot, which stood simmering on the hob. I'd been in such a glow over that book the night before, it seemed as if it made me all the lower that morning. I had wanted to be doing some good in the world; trading for the Lord, so as to offer Him something more than my mere day's work, which seemed to be all for myself and Transome. But now the glow was gone, I felt what a poor old creature I was, and that I could do nothing at all extra for Him.

"Ally!" I heard Transome calling from the room up-stairs, "are yo' asleep again? Aw'm fair parched wi' drought."

The floor between that room and the kitchen was nothing but boards and beams, so I could hear if he only turned over in bed. I had no need to stir from the fire to answer him; I only raised my voice a little.

"Coming, coming in a minute," I called back, "the tea's in the pot, and's only standing to get the strength out."

"Aw nivir see such a lass for a book," I heard him mutter to himself; "hoo forgets all when hoo has a book."

That was quite true. But hearing him say it to himself, and he in such pain, was ten times worse than if he had rated at me. Ay! I'd been selfish, all in my glow of wishing to do good in the world. What better good could I do than attend to the duties the Lord had given me? He had given me Transome to nurse, and take care of, and wait upon, and I'd set up late into the night, and overslept myself in the morning, while he was parched with thirst and racked with pain. Then there was the school; and the clock was pointing to not far from school-time, and me nothing like ready. If I could not fulfil these little duties, how could I ask the Lord to set me a greater one?

I poured out Transome's tea, and carred it up-stairs. He did not seem in the best of tempers. But I took no notice of his contrariness: for how could he be cheerful when he could not lift his hand to his mouth, and I had to feed him with every morsel and every sup he swallowed? At last he smiled upon me, a very little smile, and bade me go down to my own breakfast. I had hardly time to eat it, before my scholars came trooping up from the dingle: the mischievous little urchins bringing with them icicles hidded under their jackets, which soon melted and trickled down in pools on the floor. I had need of patience that morning.

After the water was well wiped away, I sat down behind my table in the chimney-nook, with my Bible and a Catechism, a Hymn-book and a primer before me. There were four benches across the floor, besides a small one at the end of the loom, where I put my best scholars, because they were out of my sight there. All were full, till there was scarcely elbow-room; and much care and thought it gave me how to scatter the most troublesome of them among the good ones, like the tares and the wheat growing together until the harvest. Not but that I could have picked out the tares well enough; but I knew it would never do to let them all congregate together. Maybe the Lord knows it is better for the wicked themselves to be scattered about among the good; so I set the tares about side by side with the wheat, but kept them all where I could have my eye upon them.

The snow was beginning to fall pretty thickly, with large, lazy flakes drifting slowly through the air, for there was no wind, when a boy near the door all at once broke in upon a spelling-class, that stood in a ring before me.

"There's somebry knockin' at th' door," he said, in a loud voice.

It must have been a quiet knock, for I had not heard it; but then my hearing was not as quick as it used to be when I could hear the bubbling of the river below the dingle. Besides, the lads and lasses were all humming their tasks. I told the boy to open the door; and he jumped up briskly, glad to put down his lesson-book, if only for a minute. Still, when the door was open I could see nothing but the large flakes floating in, and the children catching at them.

"Eh! but he's a gradely little chap!" cried the boy at the door in a tone of surprise.

"Tell him to come in," I called, bidding the class make way for our visitor.

Well, well! I never saw such a beautiful boy, before nor since. He was about seven, but rather small and delicate for his years. His eyes were as blue as the forget-me-nots that used to grow along the river-side; and his brown hair was sunny, as if it had a glory round it. Somehow, I thought all in a moment of how the Lord Jesus looked when He was a blessed child on earth. The little fellow had on a thin, threadbare sailor's suit of blue serge—so thin that he was shivering and shaking with cold, for the snow had powerdered him over as well as everything else. He looked up in my face half smiling, though the tears were in his eyes; and his little mouth quivered so he could not speak. I held out my hand to him, and called him to me in my softest voice, wishing it was as soft as it used to be when I was young.

"What are you come for, my little man?" I asked.

"I want to come to your school," he said, almost sobbing; "but I haven't got any money and Mrs. Brown says you'll not have me without money."

"Who is Mrs. Brown?" I asked, feeling my heart strangely drawn to the child.

"She's taking care of me," he answered, "till father comes back. Father'll have lots of money when he comes home. But he's been away a long, long while; and nobody's kind to me now. Sometimes Mrs. Brown says I must go to the workhouse. Father brought me a parrot last time he came; but it flew away one night while I was asleep, and nobody ever saw it again."

I felt the tears start in my own old eyes as he spoke, and all the scholars looked to me as if there was a mist in the room.

"Poor boy!" I said. "And where is mother?"

I might have spared him the question if I had thought a moment. His little mouth quivered more than ever, and the tears slipped over his eyelids, and ran down his cheeks.

"Never mind!" I said hastily, and drawing him near to me, closer and closer till his curly little head was on my bosom, "you shall come to school, my little lad."

Yet before the words were off my tongue I began to wonder how it could be managed. There was not a spare inch of bench, not even at the end of the loom, where my best scholars sat. Only the day before I had refused steadily to take in a boy for fourpence a week; ay! sixpence a week his mother offered me if I would only have him, and keep him out of mischief. Besides, there was Transome laid up, and the rent running on, and sixpence a week ready with me if I'd take it. Still, it would cost me nothing to teach the child, and it came across me as if the Lord was saying, "This is what you can do for me!" Yes, this was the extra work He had set me to do. After that, if anybody had offered me five shillings a week to send the child away to take another, I could not have done it.

"I'll be sure to pay some day," said the boy anxiously; "when you've taught me to write I'll write and ask father to come home quick. He went away in his ship a long while ago, but he's sure to come home if I write him a letter. So I want to make haste and learn. When I begin this morning?"

"You shall begin very soon," I answered, ready to laugh and cry together at his earnest way, and his belief that his father would come back if he could only write him a letter. "Tell me what your name is."

"My father's Captain John Champion," he said, lifting his little head proudly, "and my name's Philip; but father calls me Pippin, and you may, if you like. Mrs. Brown calls me all sorts of names."

"Creep in here, Pippin," I said, making a place for him close beside me in the chimney-nook. There was barely room for me to stir; but the little lad kept so still and quiet, with his shining eyes lifted up to me, and his face all eager with hearkening to what I was teaching the other scholars that I did not care about being crowded.

CHRIST'S LAST JOURNEY TO JERUSALEM.

By Mrs. M. Baxter.

S. S. Lesson for March 4, Matt. 20:17-28. Golden Text, Matt. 20:28.

Ver. 17-19. A momentous Journey—Going Among Powerful Enemies—Christ Warns them of the Consequences—Knew He was Going to an Ignominious Death—A more Explicit Intimation of His End than the Last (Matt. 17:22) Given Six Months Earlier—Ver. 20-22, Salome a Sister of the Virgin Mary—Imagined His Kingdom would be Earthly—A Painful Request to Jesus on His Way to His Death—The Spirit of Selfish Rivalry—Ver. 23. Suffering Promised—Ver. 24-28. The Way to Eminence in Christ's Kingdom—Christ's own Exaltation Reached through Sacrifice.

PETER was a great bargainer. Jesus, in calling him, held out this inducement to him, and his brother Andrew, "Follow me, and I will make you fishers of men." (Matt. 4:19.) Peter sought to bring the Lord to terms as to how often his brother should sin against him and he forgive him; and Peter it was who said, "Behold, we have forsaken all and followed thee: what shall we have, therefore?" In Peter's renunciation of all, there was still an anxiety to know what should be the outcome; he had an eye to whether it was a safe investment, whether it would answer in the long run, and so, in order to make sure, he asked:

"What Shall we Have, Therefore?"

Jesus answered, that they which followed Him, should reign with Him, "joint heirs with Christ, if so be that, we suffer with Him:" "If we suffer, we shall also reign with Him." (Rom. 8:17; 1 Tim. 2:12.) But was Peter following Him? Jesus teaches us to "do good, and lend, hoping for nothing again" (Luke 6:35), and to repudiate the thought of any recompense on earth. Luke 14:12-14.) And while those who have forsaken any one or anything for His sake, shall receive an hundred-fold; yet this reward is not given to those who renounce anything for the sake of what they can get. In Peter's heart there was some thought of merit, some idea of so much work or so much self-denial for so much gain, and so much eternal reward.

So Jesus continued, "But many that are first shall be last, and the last first. For the kingdom of heaven is like unto a man that is an householder, which went out early in the morning to hire laborers into his vineyard; and when he had agreed with the laborers for a penny a day, he sent them into his vineyard." This was the market-price of labor in that day, and the bargain was a fair one on both sides. But it was a bargain, a transaction in which each thought his own interest, and bound over the other to consider it. It was just on a par with Peter's question; it savored of the spirit of trades unions, where class seeks to defend itself against class, and to secure its own advantage. For men who deal with men, as such, these things may be necessary; but how little Peter understood the heart of Christ when he introduced this principle into his dealings with Jesus! How little any one of us understands God's heart when we apply this principle to our answers to prayer, when we say, "I have prayed and believed as well as I knew how; I have done all I can; what shall I have, therefore? Do I not deserve to be answered? Is not God bound to do what I ask Him?" And all the time the expectation in our hearts is grounded on what we are, what we do, and what amount of faith we render to God, rather than on what He is, on the faithfulness of His promises, and the riches of His grace toward us. There is so much of the bringing of God to terms, the driving of bargains with Him, the seeking to that we don't give Him the chance to show how large is His heart of love toward us. He does not save us for the value of our repentance and our prayers, needful as they may be, but out of His own wondrous, measureless grace. He doesn't sanctify us because of the value of our consecration, needful as it is, but out of His own tender love; for it is His grace, and not our holiness, which keeps us from falling. He does not heal our bodies because of the intrinsic value of our faith, but because He "took our infirmities, and bore our sicknesses," and so secured us healing and health by grace, and not by merit. If we bring God to terms, and agree with Him for a penny a day, we shall get all we bargain for, but no more.

At the third hour, the sixth, and, once more, at the ninth hour, the householder went again into the market-place in his search for laborers, but none of them brought him to terms. "Go ye also into the vineyard, and whatsoever is right, that shall ye receive." This was all he said on the wages question, and the men trusted him, and were satisfied. Such trust might not answer with an unprincipled employer of labor; but is God unprincipled? Is He mean and miserly? Dare we not trust Him, and throw ourselves on the generosity of His great heart? At the eleventh hour the householder went again into the market-place, and found laborers standing idle, and on questioning them as to the reason, he received the answer, "Because no man hath hired us." O, how many wait for man's call to do God's work! How many fear to become missionaries without a university education! True, for the translation of the Scriptures and for advanced education, such a preperation may be needful, but for the simple preaching of the gospel, surely the anointing of the Holy Ghost and a thorough knowledge of the Word of God are the requisites; and surely we are now in the eleventh hour of this dispensation, and God is calling hundreds who have not been called of men, and is sending them into the vineyard!

The evening came, and with it the time for payment. The order of the householder was, "Call the laborers, and give them their hire, beginning from the last unto the first."

The Last First!

Was this just? Not if the householder had dealt with them on the ground of merit. But he dealt in grace. The eleventh-hour men received "every man a penny"—the very same sum for which the first-hour men bargained. The first-hour men thought within themselves, "Surely, if he is so liberal to those who have deserved nothing, he will be much more so to us!" But when their turn came, they received also every man a penny. They murmured, and were ready to go out on strike. But they had received all they bargained for—a fair day's wages for a fair day's work. They argued the point, "These last have wrought but one hour, and thou hast made them equal unto us which have borne the burden and heat of the day." "Equal unto us." They thought themselves superior to the eleventh-hour men, and all the pride and self-esteem of their nature rose up against being thought equal to the last-chosen workmen. Have none of us known this feeling of almost injustice in God when we have known prayer wonderfully answered to those who have known the Lord only a little time, and who have gone through none of the persecution which some of us have known? How we need to be confirmed in our knowledge of God's wondrous grace!

Jesus was about to take His last journey to Jerusalem, and, for the third time, He told His disciples of His coming sufferings Yet so little effect did it take upon them that, at the very time when He was occupied with this theme, the mother of two of them came to Him, with her two sons, to urge the request that they should be preferred to the highest honor in His kingdom. Did all His teaching go for nothing? Had He not just shown them that the first should be the last and the last first? Yes; but "the things of God knoweth no man, but the Spirit of God." (1 Cor. 2:11.) On the day of Pentecost all became clear, but as yet they were carnal and walked as men. (1 Cor. 3:3.)

and not heavenly. Yet Jesus did not lose patience with them; He only said, "Ye know not what ye ask. Are ye able to drink of the cup that I shall drink of, and to be baptized with the baptism that I am baptized with?" In their blindness and self-confidence "they say unto Him, We are able." They thought so, but how soon those very men "forsook Him, and fled!" Yet Jesus bore with them, and said, "Ye shall drink indeed of My cup, and be baptized with the baptism that I am baptized with; but to sit on My right hand and on My left, is not Mine to give, but it shall be given to those for whom it is prepared of My Father." These two disciples, James and John, did drink of His cup of suffering in persecution and death, and were baptized with His baptism of blood, when James was slain by Herod (Acts 12:2), and John, as tradition says, was cast into a tank of boiling oil.

When the ten remaining disciples heard of this request, they were indignant against James and John. "Who are they that they should have the pre-eminence?" "What have they done to merit such distinction?" Such were the thoughts which burned within them. "But Jesus called them unto Him." O, there is an atmosphere close to Jesus in which indignation dies, and bitterness flees away; only love can live near to Jesus. He gently explained matters. "Ye know that the princes of the Gentiles exercise dominion over them, and they that are great exercise authority upon them. But it shall not be so among you: but whosoever will be great among you, let him be your minister; and whosoever will be chief among you, let him be your servant; even as the Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give His life a ransom for many." Jesus' greatness is in His love and self-sacrifice and mercy. Man's nature finds no difficulty in exalting itself, there is no greatness in that; but he who comes, like Christ, to minister and to give himself, is great in God's sight, for he is Christ-conquered, and the self which seeks to bargain with God has been displaced in him by the Christ who gives Himself. Man loves to rule, Christ came to minister; man loves to get, Christ came to give; and it is just in proportion to our appreciation of God's loving care for our interests that we shall find it easy, natural, to give all we can and all we have unreservedly to Him, that the question "What shall we have?" will cease; our interests are more than safe with Him. The question now is, "How can I rightly follow Him?"

THE VALLEY OF SILENCE.

In the hush of the valley of silence
I dream all the songs that I sing;
And the music floats down the dim valley,
Till each finds a word for a wing,
That to hearts, like the dove of the deluge,
A message of peace they may bring.

But far on the deep there are billows
That never shall break on the beach;
And I have heard songs in the silence
That never shall float into speech;
And I have had dreams in the valley
Too lofty for language to reach.

And I have seen thoughts in the valley,—
Ah me! how my spirit was stirred!
And they wear holy veils on their faces,—
Their footsteps can scarcely be heard;
They pass through the valley like virgins,
Too pure for the touch of a word.

Do you ask me the place of the valley,
Ye hearts that are harrowed with care?
It lieth afar between mountains,
And God and His angels are there:
One is the dark mountain of sorrow,
And one the bright mountain of prayer.

Rev. L. D. Bevan, D. D., of Melbourne (late of New York)—Sir H. Parkes, Premier of New South Wales.

REV. L. D. BEVAN, D.D., LL. B.

His Position in New South Wales—Birth and Early Consecration—Local Preaching and Call to the Ministry—Co-Pastorate with Mr. Binney—Call to New York—Characteristics of his Preaching—A Remarkable Sermon—A Testimonial of $8,000—Resignation and Return—Settlement in Melbourne.

THE astonishing progress of the thriving communities in the Southern Hemisphere was evidenced at the centenary of New South Wales recently celebrated. As very little is known in this country of that land, and few persons among us have any conception of the growing importance, and vigorous intellectual and commercial activity of its people, the pictures on the first page of this number, and a brief account of the rise and growth of the colony, will be welcome to the readers of this journal. With the pictures is the portrait of the Rev. Llewellyn D. Bevan, D. D., who was formerly the esteemed pastor of the Brick Presbyterian Church in New York, but is now one of the most prominent clergymen and leaders of religious thought in New South Wales. We give also with his portrait that of Sir H. Parkes, a man who, arriving in the colony nearly half a century ago a poor immigrant, has climbed up to the proud position of its premier statesman.

Llewellyn David Bevan is a Welchman. He was born at Llanelly, in South Wales, in 1841, and is now, therefore, forty-seven years old. He had the priceless advantage of a pious ancestry, and at a very early age he was led to give himself to Christ, and consecrate himself to His service. While still in his teens he frequently preached the gospel in the neighborhood of his native town, and with such acceptance and power that he was strongly and repeatedly urged by ministers and others to devote his whole life to the work of the Christian ministry. Happily this suggestion was perfectly congenial to the young man's inclinations, and once assured that it was of God, he embraced it with cordiality.

His Education

for his work was commenced in London, at University School, from which he passed to University College, where his course was remarkably gratifying. He then entered New College, to complete his preparation for the Congregational ministry. During his brilliant academic career he carried off several valuable scholarships, and took the degrees of B. A. and LL. B. at London University, with the highest honors. Subsequently, while in America, his learning and brilliant talents were recognized by the University of Princeton which sent him the diploma of D. D.

His First Engagement was as co-pastor with the celebrated Rev. Thomas Binney, of the King's Weigh-House Chapel, in which he won golden opinions of a congregation accustomed to the most brilliant pulpit oratory of the day. After four years of this co-pastorate, during which his relations with Mr. Binney were of the happiest and most affectionate kind, he was induced in 1870 to accept the pastorate of the Whitefield Tabernacle, in London, which is now the scene of the ministerial labors of the Rev. J. Jackson Wray. There he was so pre-eminently successful that universal surprise and deep sorrow were experienced when it was announced that he had accepted an earnest Invitation to New York.

But he felt that he was following the guidance of God, and at once relinquished all the bright prospects of usefulness and influence which were opening before him in connection with the Congregational Church of Great Britain. He commenced his labors in the Brick Presbyterian church at Fifth Avenue and Thirty-seventh Street, New York, in December 1876, and at once took a prominent position in the religious community of the Empire City. A large and intelligent congregation gathered around him, and listened with earnest attention to his teachings. These were of the most practical character. Dr. Bevan is a deeply observant man, and in studying the problems of American life he perceived that the great need of the nation is the acknowledgment of Christ's rule and obedience to His commands. Early in his ministerial labors in New York he had the courage, in which attracted much attention, to denounce the growing greed of business men, and to declare that every Christian business man was bound to obey Christ's injunction, and recognize His rivals and competitors as his "neighbors." His subject was Esau selling his birthright (Gen. 25 : 29–34). He said in the course of his sermon: "What are many of our modern tradings but this purchase of a birthright with nothing but a mess of pottage? We are placed in circumstances of exceptionally advantageous character. Knowledge and power on our side conspire with hard pressure and keen difficulty in the case of our fellow-man. He is perhaps fainting, dying, and appeals to us for help. 'Oh!' he cries, 'anything you please in my present emergency,' and he swears to us, and we go off with his birthright, bonds or lands, or houses, or jewels, or business advantages, or conditions of successful merchandise. How we chuckle to ourselves! How modest we look when friends congratulate us! How affectedly perhaps we even receive the thanks of the poor wretch himself, who has saved his life at that tremendous cost! And then, ah, what then? the miserable upbraidings of conscience and the loneliness of our midnight hours! Illgotten gain, every man knows and acknowledges, turns to rottenness and disappointment and loss in the very hands that were enriched. And yet the ill-getting of gains is no difficult problem to solve. There is not a conscience today in New York but could pass a very clear and far-reaching judgment upon what are gains ill got. I leave it to every conscience to point out the ill gain for and by itself."

This application of

was a characteristic of all Dr. Bevan's sermons. He did not go out of his way to assail evils which were at a distance, but perceiving the dangers and temptations of his own hearers, told them what was their duty, whether they were offended or pleased. His courage and vigorous candor won for him the respect and admiration of God-fearing men, who were glad to find in him a guide and counsellor in the perplexing difficulties of business life. It was consequently with sincere regret that the church learned in 1882, after six years profitable association, that personal considerations had determined Dr. Bevan to sever his connection with the church, and return to England. It was not a question of money, or that would have been easily arranged, but of private and urgent necessity, which after listening to Dr. Bevan's explanation the church recognized. As a mark of their esteem they presented him with

A Testimonial of $8,000, and sorrowfully bade him farewell. His last sermon was preached on May 7, 1882, to a congregation which filled the large edifice to overflowing. In it he warned his hearers of the dangers to which our beloved country is exposed, and earnestly besought them to labor aggressively against ungodliness in the State, in politics and in business.

On his return to England, Dr. Bevan became pastor of a new church in London, where, as in every sphere he has occupied, his labors were much blessed. He remained there four years, and then he was led to another change of sphere still more distant than that to New York.

A Call to Melbourne was sent to him, and it was accompanied by such representations of the need of the young community, and the opportunities of usefulness which it afforded, that Dr. Bevan decided to renounce his lucrative engagement, his influential position as the leader of London Congregationalists, and go out to the onerous sphere in the Southern hemisphere. He has remained there until now, doing a grand work and enjoying the blessing of God on his labors. The church in which Dr. Bevan preaches, covers, with its adjacent buildings, an area of nearly two acres, will seat about 1,800 persons, is the centre of a population of more than 300,000 people, and occupies one of the most important positions in the colony. It is crowded on Sundays and on Thursday mornings with an intelligent and devout audience. Dr. Bevan's settlement in Melbourne has given an impetus there not only to Congregationalism, but also to the higher and worthier interests of our common Christianity, and it is having a beneficial influence in moulding the growing national life into a true Christian brotherhood.

SIR H. PARKES, K.C.M.G.

SIR HENRY PARKES is the Premier of New South Wales, and by his statesmanlike qualities has placed that Colony in the foremost position among the Australian provinces. His career is a notable illustration of the power of energy, industry and intelligence to raise a man in the social scale. In 1815, seventy-three years ago, he was born in a small farm-house, in a Warwickshire village. The boy's education was begun at a dame's school at Kenilworth, and so far as schools were concerned was completed at Gloucester, when he was eleven years old. His parents having fallen into poverty, he was obliged to earn his own living at a very early period of his life; but this early necessity of labor bred in him a spirit of independence, energy and self-reliance, to which, with the blessing of God, he owes the success of his subsequent career. He was apprenticed to a mechanical trade in Birmingham, where he married. Even in his days of and apparently hopeless prospects, he entered heartily into the political movements of the time, and educated himself in the study of political and social questions, and early identified himself with the Temperance movement, to which he has ever since been faithful. In 1839 he emigrated to Sydney, New South Wales, and so dependent was he then upon the labor of his hands for his daily bread that, as he told his hearers at a great public banquet given in his honor in 1881, he would one day have had to go without a dinner had he not found a sixpence on the street. He worked for some time in a hardware store, and then in a foundry; he afterwards established himself as a toy-maker, and then as a dealer in toys. He first took part in in 1848, when he acted as one of the secretaries to a committee formed to secure the election of Mr. Robert Lowe as member of the local Legislature for the city of Sydney. In the following year he interested himself prominently in the great agitations to compel the English government to cease sending the convicts to New South Wales, and for the introduction of a system of self-government. In December, 1850, he started the Empire newspaper, which he vigorously conducted for about seven years.

By this time Mr. Parkes had begun to make himself known in Sydney as a forcible public speaker and a political power to be reckoned with. In 1854 he was and in 1856 he was re-elected. He still represents Sydney in the Parliament of New South Wales. In May, 1872, he was entrusted by the Governor with the formation of a ministry, and he continued to hold office as Premier until February, 1875. In March, 1877, he became Premier for the second time, and in December, 1878, after a dissolution and re-election of Parliament, he took office as

and has had the distinction of being at the head of the longest-lived Government of Australia. In June, 1877, the Queen recognized the value of his public services by conferring upon him the dignity of knighthood, and in 1882, King Humbert, of Italy, made him Knight

Commander of the Crown of Italy, in recognition of his philanthropic services to a large number of Italian emigrants who went out to New Ireland, and who arrived in Sydney in a state of great distress.

THE TWO CAPITALS.

THE sister cities of Sydney and Melbourne are respectively the capitals of New South Wales and Victoria, the two southeast provinces of Australia. New South Wales comprises an area of about 310,700 square miles, which is about the size of Texas and Louisiana united. Its entire population is a little less than a million, of which 120,000 reside in Sidney and its suburbs. It was originally settled in 1788 as a penal colony, when Captain Arthur Philip arrived there having in charge seven hundred and fifty persons, who for various crimes had been condemned to transportation for seven years and longer periods. England continued to send her convicts there until 1850, when the protests of the free colonists induced her to choose another dumping-ground for her moral refuse.

was a mere straggling village for several years after the settlement, but it has now grown into a stately and beautiful city. It stands on a long neck of land at the mouth of the Paramatta River, between two deep creeks, which form its inner harbor, where it has excellent wharves and docks. Access is gained to it by Port Jackson, which is the largest and grandest harbor in the world, having an average depth of fifty-four feet of water, with little variation from the tide.

The picture on the first page presents a side view of some of the older parts of the city, of which still older lie more towards the main harbor. Across the water, above the bridge and immediately in front of Pyrmont, rises a portion of the Brickfield Hill, on which are seen St. Andrew's Cathedral on the right, and the Town Hall to the left, with its massive buildings and lofty tower. The ridge, of which Brickfield Hill forms a point, is continued in a northerly direction by the Flagstaff Hill, where the city reaches its highest elevation in a flat precipitous rock. The city boasts a beautiful public garden, in which tropical plants flourish in the open air. It is laid out on ground sloping from the town to the sea and is a perfect paradise of beauty.

Melbourne

is the capital of the younger and more progressive province of Victoria, which lies to the south of New South Wales. Victoria comprises an area of 87,884 square miles, about equal to the combined area of Pennsylvania and Ohio. Its population now is a little over 900,000. It was settled in 1836, and fifteen years later the discovery of gold fields attracted to it crowds of immigrants from all quarters of the world, and placed the colony in the front rank of the Australian provinces for wealth and influence.

The illustration on the first page represents Bourke Street, one of the principal streets of Melbourne. It is a busy thoroughfare, having the Houses of Parliament at its eastern end, and containing numerous public buildings and fine business edifices. Bourke Street, and Collins Street, which is a more fashionable promenade, compare favorably with the best thoroughfares in American and European cities. They bear evidences, however, of their rapid and hasty growth. The people have built as they had occasion, and according to their means; the result being that intervening between blocks of handsome and imposing edifices are structures which can only be called sheds. These are the remains of the old city—that is, the city before 1851, which year is Melbourne's era. Before that the normal population was 25,000, and they were, for the greater part, poor, struggling tradesmen. In the thirty-seven years which have elapsed, the city has grown to 300,000, with a still greater increase of wealth. At its present rate of development a very few years will suffice to remove all traces of Melbourne's inglorious past, and make it one of the most splendid cities of the world.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

An Unexpected Arrest by Death.—"I was hurriedly called lately to the death-bed of a young man who had suddenly fallen seriously ill. He said to me, 'I heard the gospel preached, yesterday and was sorely pressed to take Christ, but I put it off owing to something that I wanted to do to-day, and in which I could not indulge if I were a Christian, and now, here I am, dying, I fear. What am I to do?' I spoke to him a few encouraging words, and told him that Christ was still ready to receive him. He soon passed away, and, I hope, trusting in Christ. 'We know not what a day may bring forth.'"

The Record Inside the Hat.—Mr. Johnston observed: "There was a godly man in Belfast called Rev. Thomas Toye, who was very active in the Irish Revival of 1859. He died lately, and after his death there was found a slip of paper inside his hat containing the words, 'Born June, 1800; born again March, 1823.' He knew he had been born again, and was not ashamed to own it, but openly testified for his Lord on all possible occasions. Let us not forget that confession with the month, as well as belief with the heart, is one of the requisites of salvation. 'Whosoever therefore shall confess Me before men, him will I confess also before My Father which is in heaven.'"

An Arrow That Hit the Mark.—Mr. Arthur related: "I went into a church some years ago. There was an address, but I did not know what it was about; but after the address a young man rose and gave his testimony. He did not say much, indeed he could have scarcely said less. 'I am saved, and thank God I know it,' was his simple testimony. I for one could not say that I knew I was saved. But God's Holy Spirit sent that word home to my heart, and I resolved not to rest till I could say for myself as that young man had done, 'I am saved, and thank God I know it.' Going home that night I got face to face with that little text, 'Him that cometh unto me I will in no wise cast out,' and since then there has not been a day in which I did not rest assured of my salvation."

A Deistic Signalman Converted.—A Railway signalman says: "I was converted five years ago in a little garret. A poor widow lived there, and with her I went to lodge. She seemed to have taken me for a Christian, and at that time I had made some profession of regard for God, though in reality I was a deist, and on the highway to infidelity, and the first night in my new lodgings she asked me to read a chapter from the Bible. I was surprised, for I was not in the habit of doing so; but seeing no way to get out of it, I sat down and read the chapter. All the time I read I felt perfectly miserable, for the Lord showed me that I was doing wrong—pretending I was a Christian, when I was far from Christ. But it did me good; it brought down my pride, and was the means of bringing me at the feet of Jesus. I left all my false opinions about the Bible and God, and came simply to Christ, as an undone sinner. Bless His dear name, he accepted me and saved me. 'Except ye become as little children ye cannot see the kingdom of God.'"

Afraid to Confess Christ.—A Christian Soldier said: "When I joined the army I knew that I should at once have taken a decided stand for Christ, but I was cowardly enough not to do so, and one night I saw a comrade kneel down and pray. Some of the men laughed, and one naming me, said, 'You are in the religious room.' I was glad to hear that, but did not say so, for this remark made it worse than ever for me to acknowledge that I, too, was a Christian. Oh, I did feel mean, and hate myself for my silence. That comrade who had prayed asked me to come to the soldiers' gospel meeting. I consented, but even at the meeting I did not own Christ as my Master. On my return one of the men said to me, 'I say, don't you go to these meetings, or you will be getting converted, and we have got quite enough of that kind already!' But I continued to go, and one night God gave me courage to kneel down by my bed and openly show my allegiance to Him. Some of the others had quite a long talk over it. 'What does he need with conversion?' they asked one another, referring to me; 'he was always good enough, and a decent sort of fellow.' But one of them seriously said, 'I may be bad enough, but I am not so far gone as to laugh at a man thanking God for saving his soul. I know that it is the right thing to do, and I admire them for doing it.'"

Little Mary's Three Letters.—"I knew of a little girl who had given her heart to Jesus, and whose daily prayer was that her father might do the same. She sat down and wrote, 'Dear father, won't you be a Christian?' and she left the slip of paper on his table, where she knew he would find it. He saw it, read it, tore it into small shreds, and threw it on the floor. He said nothing about it, and the faithful child thought she would try again. 'Dear father,' she wrote, 'do be a Christian,' and placed the slip as before on the table. This time he folded it up, and placed it in his pocket, and walked away, thinking of the words of his little monitor. The child was still unsatisfied, so, for the third time, she wrote, 'Dear father, won't you be a Christian? Tell Mary.' On the following morning, seeing the third note on the table, the father was overcome. He could stand it no longer. 'Where is Mary?' he called. Mary was in sight in a moment. He embraced her with an unutterable tenderness of feeling. His hard heart was completely subdued, and his little daughter was the means of bringing him to Jesus."

Result of Cowardice.—Mr. Hunter said: "In 1881 a young man came to my house seeking the way of life. After some conversation on the subject, we knelt in prayer. When we rose to our feet, I looked into his face and said, 'I think all is well with you now.' He merely smiled, and left the house. After that I always expected him to make a public profession, but he made none, and I was greatly disappointed. Time went on, and finally I got a letter from him, stating that he had indeed taken Christ that night, but through not openly confessing Him he had fallen away. Since then he had gone to hear a certain evangelist, who again had been the means of stirring up the desire within him to seek the face of his Saviour, but he also said that he had to undergo several weeks of fearful agony of soul before the smile of his Heavenly Father rested upon him. Oh, how important it is when Christ is received into the heart that an immediate profession of Him should be made, in order to indicate the convert's sincerity, and indicate his determination and hope to continue in the sunshine of God."

A Man with Diseased Blood.—"A Gentleman was seized with a very peculiar disease. He tried many doctors, but not one could give him a remedy, or tell him what his trouble was. He went to Germany and put himself in the doctor's hands there. But it was of no avail. He returned home down-hearted, and rather worse than better. A friend advised him to obtain the advice of a certain well-known and skilful physician. He accordingly took his friend's advice, and the physician agreed to come. Entering the room where his patient sat, he looked keenly into his face. Then, taking hold of his arm, he extracted a drop of blood from it, which he carefully carried to the window and examined through a microscope. Then, turning to his patient he said, 'Your blood is diseased, but if you will promise to strictly obey me, and take the remedies I give you, you will recover.' The gentleman gladly promised that he would obey every command, which he did, and the result was, that under the care of that physician he was restored to perfect health in a few months. Dear friends, a Great Physician has come to heal the diseased soul of man, but if we do not put ourselves into His hands and obey His commands and accept of the remedy He offers, He can do nothing for us. Trust yourself to Him who forgiveth all thine iniquities, who healeth all thy diseases."

THE GRANDMOTHER.

Dr. Talmage's Eighth Sermon TO THE WOMEN OF AMERICA.

Preached last Sunday Morning, February 26, 1888.

"The unfeigned faith that is in thee, which dwelt first in thy grandmother Lois," II Tim. 1 : 5.

The Godly Influence of the Pious Ancestor—Statistics Wanted—The Dead Living for Good—American Women in the Last Century—Their Dress and Diet—A Glorious Race of Godly Women—The Grandmother in the Household—Two Eternities at One Cradle—The Mississippi-like Influence—To Outlast the World—The Legend of a Granite Column in Ceylon—The Mother's Unwise Training—Felt to the Fourth Generation—George W. Bethune's Grandmother—A Prayerful Letter—Grandmothers in Heaven—Make the Last Mile Easy—A Hard World for Women.

IN this love-letter which Paul, the old minister, is writing to Timothy, the young minister, the family record is brought out. Paul practically says: "Timothy, what a good grandmother you had! You ought to be better than most folks, because not only was your mother good, but your grandmother. Two preceding generations of piety ought to give you a mighty push in the right direction." The fact was that Timothy needed encouragement. He was in poor health, having a weak stomach, and was dyspeptic, and Paul prescribed for him a tonic, "a little wine, for thy stomach's sake"—not much wine, but a little wine, and only as a medicine. And if the wine then had been as much adulterated with logwood and strychnine as our modern wines, he would not have prescribed any.

But Timothy, not strong physically, is encouraged spiritually by the recital of grandmotherly excellence, Paul hinting to him, as I hint this day to you, that God sometimes gathers up, as in a reservoir away back of the active generations of to-day, a godly influence, and then in response to prayer, lets down the power upon children and grandchildren and great-grandchildren. The world is woefully in want of a table of statistics in regard to what is the protractedness and immensity of in the Church and world. We have accounts of how much evil has been wrought by Margaret, the mother of criminals, who lived near a hundred years ago, and of how many hundreds of criminals her descendants furnished for the penitentiary and the gallows, and how many hundreds of thousands of dollars they cost this country in their arraignment and prison support, as well as in the property they burglarized or destroyed. But will not some one come out with brain comprehensive enough, and heart warm enough, and pen keen enough to give us the facts in regard to some good woman of a hundred years ago, and let us know how many Christian men and women and reformers and useful people have been found among her descendants, and how many asylums and colleges and churches they built, and how many millions of dollars they contributed for humanitarian and Christian purposes?

The good women whose tombstones were planted in the eighteenth century are more in the nineteenth century than they were before, as the good women of this nineteenth century will be more alive for good in the twentieth century than now. Mark you, I have no idea that the grandmothers were any better than their granddaughters. You cannot get very old people to talk much about how things were when they were boys and girls. They have a reticence and a non-committalism which makes me think they feel themselves to be the custodians of the reputation of their early comrades. While our dear old folks are rehearsing the follies of the present, if you put them on the witness-stand and cross-examine them as to how things were seventy years ago, the silence becomes oppressive.

A celebrated Frenchman by the name of Volney visited this country in 1796, and he says of in those times: "If a premium was offered for a regimen most destructive to health, none could be devised more efficacious for these ends than that in use among these people." That eclipses our lobster salad at midnight. Everybody talks about the dissipations of modern society, and how womanly health goes down under it, but it was worse a hundred years ago, for the chaplain of a French regiment in our Revolutionary war wrote in 1782, in his book of American women, saying: "They are tall and well proportioned, their features are generally regular, their complexions are generally fair and without color. At twenty years of age the women have no longer the freshness of youth. At thirty or forty they are decrepit." In 1812 a foreign consul wrote a book entitled, "A Sketch of the United States at the Commencement of the Present Century," and he says of the women of those times, "At the age of thirty all their charms have disappeared." One glance at the portraits of the women a hundred years ago and their style of dress makes us wonder how they ever got their breath. All this makes me think that the express rail train is no more an improvement on the old canal-boat, or the telegraph no more an improvement on the old-time saddlebags, than the women of our day are an improvement on the women of the last century.

But still, notwithstanding that those times were so much worse than ours, there was seventy and a hundred years ago, who held the world back from sin and lifted it toward virtue, and without their exalted and sanctified influence before this, the last good influence would have perished from the earth. Indeed, all over this land there are seated to-day—not so much in churches, for many of them are too feeble to come—a great many aged grandmothers. They sometimes feel that the world has gone past them, and they have an idea that they are of little account. Their head sometimes gets aching from the racket of the grandchildren downstairs or in the next room. They steady themselves by the banisters as they go up and down. When they get a cold, it hangs on to them longer than it used to. They cannot bear to have the grandchildren punished even when they deserve it, and have so relaxed their ideas of family discipline that they would spoil all the youngsters of the household by too great leniency.

These old folks are the resort when great troubles come, and there is a calming and soothing power in the touch of an aged hand that is almost supernatural. They feel they are almost through with the journey of life, and read the old Book more than they used to, hardly knowing which most they enjoy, the Old Testament or the New, and often stop and dwell tearfully over the family record half way between. We hail them to-day, whether in the House of God or at the homestead. Blessed is that household that has in it a grandmother Lois. Where she is, angels are hovering round, and God is in the room. May her last days be like those lovely autumnal days that we call Indian Summer.

I never knew the joy of having a grandmother; that is the disadvantage of being the youngest child of the family. The elder members only have that benediction. But though she went up out of this life before I began it, I have heard of her faith in God, that brought all her children into the kingdom and two of them into the ministry, and then brought all her grandchildren into the kingdom, myself the last and least worthy. Is it not time that you and I do two things, swing open a picture-gallery of the wrinkled faces and stooped shoulders of the past, and call down from their heavenly thrones the godly grandmothers, to give them our thanks, and then persuade the mothers of to-day that they are living for all time, and that against the sides of every cradle in which a child is rocked beat

The Two Eternities.

Here we have an untried, undiscussed and unexplored subject. You often hear about your influence upon your own children—I am not talking about that. What about your influence upon the twentieth century, upon the thirtieth century, upon the fortieth century, upon the year two thousand, upon the year four thousand, if the world lasts so long? The world stood four thousand years before Christ came; it is not unreasonable to suppose that it may stand four thousand years after His arrival. Four thousand years the world swung off in sin, four thousand years it may be swinging back into righteousness. By the ordinary rate of multiplication of the world's population in a century your descendants will be over three hundred and by two centuries at least over fifty thousand, perhaps two hundred thousand, and upon every one of them you, the mother of to-day will have an influence for good or evil. And in four centuries your descendants shall have with their names filled a scroll of hundreds of thousands, will some angel from heaven to whom is given the capacity to calculate the number of the stars of heaven and the sands of the seashore, step down and tell us how many descendants you will have in the four thousandth year of the world's possible continuance?

Do not let the grandmothers any longer think that they are retired, and sit clear back out of sight from the world, feeling that they have no relation to it. The mothers of the last century are to-day in the senates, the parliament, the palaces, the pulpits, the banking houses, the professional chairs, the prisons, the almshouses, the company of midnight brigands, the cellars, the ditches of this country. You have been thinking about the importance of having the right influence upon one nursery. You have been thinking about the importance of getting those two little feet on the right path. You have been thinking of your child's destiny for the next eighty years, if it should pass on to be an octogenarian. That is well, but my subject sweeps a thousand years, a million years, a quadrillion of years. I cannot stop at one cradle. I am looking at the cradles that reach all round the world and across all time. I am not talking of mother Eunice, I am talking of grandmother Lois.

The only way you can tell the force of a current is by sailing up stream; or the force of an ocean wave, by running the ship against it. Running along with it we cannot appreciate the force. In we generally run along with it down the stream of time, and so we don't understand the force. Let us come up to it from the eternal side, after it has been working on for centuries and see all the good it has done and all the evil it has accomplished multiplied in magnificent or appalling compound interest. The difference between that mother's influence on her child now, and the influence when it has been multiplied in hundreds of thousands of lives, is the difference between the Mississippi River with up at the top of the continent, starting from the little lake Itasca, seven miles long and one wide, and its mouth at the Gulf of Mexico, where navies might ride. Between the birth of the river and its burial in the sea, the Missouri pours in, and the Ohio pours in, and the Arkansas pours in, and the Red and White and Yazoo rivers pour in, and all the States and Territories between the Alleghany and Rocky mountains make contribution. Now, in order to test the power of a mother's influence, we need to come in off of the ocean of eternity and sail up toward the one cradle, and we will find ten thousand tributaries of influence pouring in and pouring down. But it is, after all,

One Great River of Power

rolling on and rolling forever. Who can fathom it? Who can bridge it? Who can stop it? Had not mothers better be intensifying their prayers? Had they not better be elevating their example? Had they not better be rousing themselves with the consideration that by their faithfulness or neglect they are starting an influence which will be stupendous after the mountain of earth is flat, and the last sea been dried up, and the last flake of the ashes of a consumed world shall have been blown away, and all the telescopes of other worlds directed to the track around which our world once swung, shall discover not so much as a cinder of the burned-down and swept-off planet.

In Ceylon there is a granite column thirty-six square feet in size, which is thought, by the natives, to decide the world's continuance. An angel with robe spun from zephyrs is once a century to descend and sweep the hem of that robe across the granite, and when, by that attrition the column is worn away, they say time will end. But, by that process, that granite column would be worn out of existence before mother's influence will begin to give away.

Mothers Sowing Seed

If a mother tell a child he is not good, some bugaboo will come and catch him, the fear excited may make the child a coward, and the fact that he finds that there is no bugaboo may make him a liar, and the echo of that false alarm may be heard after fifteen generations have been born and have expired. If a mother promise a child a reward for good behavior, and after the good behavior forgets to give the reward, the cheat may crop out in some faithlessness half a thousand years further on. If a mother culture a child's vanity, and eulogize his curls, and extol the night-black or sky-blue or nut-brown of the child's eyes, and call out in his presence the admiration of spectators, pride and arrogance may be prolonged after half a dozen family records have been obliterated. If a mother express doubt about some statement of the Holy Bible in a child's presence, long after the gates of this historical era have closed and the gates of another era have opened, the result may be seen in a champion blasphemer.

But, on the other hand, if a mother walking with a child see a suffering one by the wayside and says: "My child, give that ten-cent piece to that lame boy," the result may be seen on the other side of the following century in some George Muller building a whole village of orphanages. If a mother sit almost every evening by the trundle-bed of a child and teach it lessons of a Saviour's love and a Saviour's example, of the importance of truth and the horror of a lie, and the virtues of industry and kindness and sympathy and self-sacrifice, long after the mother has gone, and the child has gone, and the lettering on both the tombstones shall have been washed out by the storms of innumerable winters, there may be standing, as a result of those trundle-bed lessons, flaming evangels, world-moving reformers, seraphic Summerfields, weeping Paysons, thundering Whitefields, emancipating Washingtons.

Good or bad influence may skip one generation or two generations, but it will be sure to land in just as the Ten Commandments, speaking of the visitation of God on families, says nothing about the second generation, but entirely skips the second and speaks of the third and fourth generation: "Visiting the iniquities of the fathers upon the third and fourth generations of them that hate me." Parental influence, right and wrong, may jump over a generation, but it will come down further on, as sure as you sit there and I stand here. Timothy's ministry was projected by his grandmother Lois. There are men and women here, the sons and daughters of the Christian Church, who are such as a result of the consecration of great-great-grandmothers. Why, who do you think the Lord is? You talk as though His memory was weak. He can no easier remember a prayer five minutes than he can five centuries.

This explains what we often see—some man or woman distinguished for benevolence when the father and mother were distinguished for penuriousness; or you see some young man or woman with a bad father and a hard mother come out gloriously for Christ, and make the church sob and shout and sing under their exhortations. We stand in corners of the vestry and whisper over the matter and say: "How is this, such great piety in sons and daughters of such parental worldliness and sin?" I will explain it to you if you will fetch me the old Family Bible containing the full record. Let some septuagenarian look with me clear upon the page of births and marriages, and tell me who that woman was with the old-fashioned name of Jemima or Betsy or Mehitabel. Ah, there she is, the old grandmother or great-grandmother, who had enough

Religion to Saturate a Century.

There she is, the dear old soul, grandmother Lois. In our beautiful Greenwood (may we all sleep there when our work is done, for when I get up in the Resurrection morning I want my congregation all about me)—in Greenwood there is the resting-place of George W. Bethune, once a minister of Brooklyn Heights, his name never spoken among intelligent Americans without suggesting two things—eloquence and evangelism. In the same tomb sleeps his grandmother, Isabella Graham, who was the chief inspiration of his ministry. You are not surprised at the poetry and pathos and pulpit power of the grandson when you read of the faith and devotion of his wonderful ancestress. When you read in which she poured out her widowed soul in longings for a son's salvation, you will not wonder that succeeding generations have been blessed:

This Grandmother's Letter,

"New York, May 20, 1791.

"This day my only son left me in bitter wringings of heart; he is again launched on the ocean, God's ocean. The Lord saved him from shipwreck, brought him to my home and allowed me once more to indulge my affections over him. He has been with me but a short time, and ill have I improved it; he is gone from my sight, and my heart bursts with tumultuous grief. Lord, have mercy on the widow's son, 'the only son of his mother.'

"I ask nothing in all this world for him; I repeat my petition—save his soul alive, give him salvation from sin. It is not the danger of the seas that distresses me; it is not the hardships he must undergo; it is not the dread of never seeing him more in this world; it is because I cannot discern the fulfilment of the promise in him, I cannot discern the new birth nor its fruit, but every symptom of captivity to Satan, the world and self-will. This, this is what distresses me; and in connection with this, his being shut out from ordinances at a distance from Christians; shut up with those who forget God, profane His name and break His Sabbaths; men who often live and die like beasts, yet are accountable creatures, who must answer for every moment of time and every word, thought and action.

"O Lord, many wonders hast Thou shown me; Thy ways of dealing with me and mine have not been common ones; add this wonder to the rest. Call, convert, regenerate and establish a sailor in the faith. Lord, all things are possible with Thee; glorify Thy Son and extend His kingdom by sea and land; take the prey from the strong. I roll him over upon Thee. Many friends try to comfort me; miserable comforters are they all. Thou art the God of consolation; only confirm to me Thy precious word, on which Thou causedst me to hope in the day when Thou saidst to me, 'Leave thy fatherless children, I will preserve them alive.' Only let this life be a spiritual life, and I put a blank in Thy hand as to all temporal things.

"I wait for Thy salvation. Amen."

With such a grandmother, would you not have a right to expect a George W. Bethune? and all the thousands converted through his ministry may date the saving power back to Isabella Graham.

God fill the earth and the heavens with such grandmothers; we must some day go up and thank these dear old souls. Surely, God will let us go up and tell them of the results of their influence. Among our will be, "Where is grandmother?" They will point her out, for we would hardly know her even if we had seen her on earth, so bent over with years once, and there so straight, so dim of eye through the blinding of earthly tears, and now her eye as clear as heaven, so full of aches and pains once, and now so agile with celestial health, the wrinkles blooming into carnation roses, and her step like the roe on the mountains. Yes, I must see her, my grandmother on my father's side, Mary McCoy, descendant of the Scotch. When I first spoke to an audience in Glasgow, Scotland, and felt somewhat diffident, being a stranger, I began by telling them my grandmother was a Scotch woman, and then there went up a shout of welcome which made me feel as easy as I do here. I must see her.

You must see those women of the early nineteenth century and of the eighteenth century, the answer of whose prayers is in your welfare to-day.

God Bless All the Aged Women

up and down the land and in all lands! What a happy thing, Pomponius Atticus, to say, when making the funeral address of his mother: "Though I have resided with her sixty-seven years, I was never once reconciled to her, because there never happened the least discord between us, and consequently. there was no need of reconciliation." Make it as easy for the old folks as you can. When they are sick, get for them the best doctors. Give them your arm when the streets are slippery. Stay with them all the time you can. Go home and see the old folks. Find the place for them in the hymn-book. Never be ashamed if they prefer styles of apparel a little antiquated. Never say anything that implies they are in the way. Make the road for the last mile as smooth as you can. Oh, my!

How You Will Miss Her

when she is gone. I would give the house from over my head to see mother. I have so many things I would like to tell her, things that have happened in twenty-four years since she went away. Morning, noon and night let us thank God for the good influences that have come down from good mothers all the way back. Timothy, don't forget your mother Eunice, and don't forget your grandmother Lois. And hand down to others this patrimony of blessing. Pass along the coronets. Make religion an heirloom from generation to generation. Mothers of America, consecrate yourselves to God, and you will help consecrate all the ages following! Do not dwell so much on your hardships that you miss your chance of wielding an influence that shall look down upon you from the towers of an endless future.

I know Martin Luther was right when he consoled his wife over the death of their daughter, by saying: "Don't take on so, wife; remember that this is a hard world for girls." Yes; I go further and say: It is

A Hard World for Women.

Aye, I go further and say: It is a hard world for men. But for all women and men who trust their bodies and souls in the hand of Christ, the shining gates will soon swing open. Don't you see the sickly pallor on the sky? That is the pallor on the cold cheek of the dying night. Don't you see the brightening of the clouds? That is the flush on the warm forehead of the morning. Cheer up, you are coming within sight of the Celestial City.

The Celestial City.

Cairo, capital of Egypt, was called "City of Victory." Athens, capital of Greece, was called "City of the Violet Crown;" Baalbeck was called "City of the Sun;" London was called "The City of Masts." Lucian's imaginary metropolis beyond the Zodiac was called "The City of Lanterns." But the city to which you journey hath all these in one, the victory, the crowns, the masts, of those that have been harbored after the storm. Aye, all but the lanterns and the sun, because they have no need of any other light, since the Lamb is the light thereof.

BOYCOTTED MISSIONARIES.

IN describing a recent tour, in a letter to the Church the Rev. J. G. Touzeau of Bogota in the United States of Colombia, thus refers to the action of the priest, or cura, of Panqueba: When we went, the cura prohibited all dealings with us—buying, selling, visiting, or even saluting on the street. The people generally obeyed, but gradually relaxed until nearly every one spoke in passing. All along a few principal families were friendly, and we bought all we needed, the ready money being more potent than the priest's threats. Certainly a large number, probably two or three hundred, were brought into direct personal contact with us in the region, and now know something about Protestant Christianity. On the journey in and out and during our stay we sold over thirty dollars' worth of literature, nearly all in very small amounts, cheap Testaments and tracts, perhaps about two hundred and fifty in number.

We were visited by the villagers, our neighbors; also by those who came from other towns, for Panqueba is a health resort. The foreigners were one of the sights, and these curious people are interested in something new in religion as well in other things; for if we did nothing else, we generally sang the gospel to them. Most of the work was done at night. Two of the principal men in Panqueba came nearly every evening to take lessons in English. Each evening we read in the Bible, sang and prayed, and very often there were earnest talks and questionings over what was read. One man showed great interest in us and our teaching, and finally, as he was leaving us and I pressed him to tell me if he were a believer, he told us he desired to join the church, but would come to Bogota, as he feared the fanaticism of his neighbors. He is one of the best natives with whom I have come into contact. His interest took the practical form of gifts of food for us and our beasts.

THE WORK OF A JAPANESE JAILER'S WIFE.

A WONDERFUL work of grace is reported from Yokohama, Japan, to the Presbyterian Mission Board by Rev. H. Loomis, in connection with the introduction of Christianity in Komatsu, a stronghold of Buddhism. He says: "About three years ago a Christian soldier was discharged from the army, and went to Kanazawa for the purpose of attending school. He obtained a room and board at the house of a person named Nakamura. They hated the Christian religion very bitterly, but the soldier was so pleasant and agreeable that he obtained permission to take their only child (a daughter about thirteen years of age) to the Sunday-school. At the same time he was very persistent in telling the mother about this religion he had found so full of comfort to himself.

After a while the mother and child began to attend church and prayer-meetings; and they were the most regular and punctual of all the attendants. The mother was eventually led to accept Christ as her Saviour. About three months afterward her husband, Nakamura, received an appointment as jailer at Komatsu, a town about twenty-five miles distant. The people of that place were very strong Buddhists and haters of Christianity. The priests had made their boasts that Christianity could get no footing in Komatsu, as their own religion was so well established. Two young evangelists went there to labor during their summer vacation, but could only get a few boys to attend their services.

While they were still there Mrs. Nakamura came with her husband and began to tell her friends and neighbors about this new and blessed way, They were at first offended at such talk, but she insisted that they should come and see for themselves. Then she invited the evangelists to her house, and many were thus induced to hear and study the Word of God.

When the evangelists left the city a little band was formed to meet for prayer and study of the Scriptures, with the jailer's wife as leader. This band grew to forty in number, and a Sunday-school was afterwards started. The Buddhist priests, of course, heard of the work, and they were so much afraid of the results that they put up notices that no one must go to hear this Christian woman, as it would bring upon them the wrath and vengeance of the gods. But this only helped the cause of Christianity, as it advertised it, and she was constantly beset by people who came to inquire about this strange doctrine. Christian workers were sent to help her, and a church has been formed. Recently seven converts were baptized at one service.

DR. TALMAGE ON HOT AXLES.

IN the course of his Friday evening talk, Dr. Talmage made the following remarks on an evil which is doing incalculable mischief in American life, causing men to become prematurely old, and many to break down and die in the midst of their usefulness:

We were on the lightning train for Cleveland. We had no time to spare. If we stopped for a half-hour, we should be greeted by the anathema of a committee. We felt a sort of presentiment that we should be too late, when to confirm it the whistle blew and the brakes fell, and the cry all along the train was: "What is the matter?" Answer: "A hot axle." The wheels had been making too many revolutions in a minute. The car was on fire. It was a very difficult thing to put it out; water, sand and swabs were tried, and caused long detention and a smoke that threatened flame down to the end of the journey.

We thought then, and think now, this is what is the matter with people everywhere. In this swift "express" American life, we go too fast for our endurance. We think ourselves getting on splendidly, when in the midst of our successes we come to a dead halt. What is the matter? Nerves or muscles or brains give out. We have made too many revolutions in an hour. A hot axle!

Men make the mistake of working according to their opportunities and not according to their capacity of endurance. "Can I run this train from Springfield to Boston at the rate of fifty miles an hour?" says an engineer. Yes. "Then I will run it, reckless of consequences." Can I be a merchant, and the president of a bank, and a director in a life insurance company, and a school commissioner, and help edit a paper, and supervise the politics of our ward, and run for Congress? "I can!" the man says to himself. The store drives him; the school drives him; politics drive him. He takes all the scoldings and frets and exasperations of each position. Some day at the height of the business season he does not come to the store; from the most important meetings of the bank directors he is absent. In the excitements of the political canvass he fails to be at the place appointed. What is the matter? His health has broken down. The train halts long before it gets to the station. A hot axle!

Literary men have great opportunities opening in this day. If they take all that open, they are dead men, or worse, living men who ought to be dead. The pen runs so easy when you have good ink, and smooth paper, and an easy desk to write on, and the consciousness of an audience of one, two or three hundred thousand readers. There are the religious newspapers through which you preach, and the musical journals through which you may sing, and the agricultural periodicals through which you can plough, and family newspapers in which you may romp with the whole household around the evening stand. There are critiques to be written, and reviews to be indulged in, and poems to be chimed, and novels to be constructed. When out of a man's pen he can shake recreation and friendship, and usefulness and bread, he is apt to keep it shaking. So great are the invitations to literary work that the professional men of the day are overcome. They sit faint and fagged out on the verge of newspapers and books. Each one does the work of three, and these men sit up late nights and choke down chunks of meat without mastication, and scold their wives through irritability, and maul innocent authors, and run the physical machinery with a liver miserably given out. The driving shaft has gone fifty times a second. They stop at no station. The steam chest is hot and swollen. The brain and the digestion begin to smoke. Stop, ye flying quills! "Down brakes!" A hot axle!

Some of the worst tempered people of the day are religious people, from the fact that they have no rest. Added to the necessary work of the world, they superintend two Sunday-schools, listen to two sermons, and every night have meetings of charitable and Christian institutions. They look after the beggars, hold conventions, speak at meetings, wait on ministers, serve as committee-men, take all the hypercriticisms that inevitably come to earnest workers, rush up and down the world and develop their hearts at the expense of all the other functions. They are the best men on earth, and Satan knows it, and is trying to kill them as fast as possible. They know not that it is as much a duty to take care of their health as to go to the sacrament. It is as much a sin to commit suicide with the sword of truth as with a pistol.

Our earthly life is a treasure to be guarded. It is an outrageous thing to die when we ought to live. There is no use in firing up a Cunarder to such a speed that the boiler bursts mid-Atlantic, when at a more moderate rate it might have reached the docks at Liverpool. It is a sin to try to do the work of thirty years in five years.

We need another proclamation of emancipation. The human locomotive goes too fast. Cylinder, driving-boxes, rock-shaft, truck and valve-gear need to "slow up." Oh that some strong hand would unloose the burdens from our over-tasked American life, that there might be fewer bent shoulders and pale cheeks and exhausted lungs and quenched eyes, the law and medicine and theology less frequently stopped in their progress because of the hot axle!

A MORAVIAN MISSIONARY'S TESTIMONY.

DURING the recent tour in the West Indies, taken by Mr. J. A. Froude, he inquired as to the truth of the reports circulated about the laziness of the colored race in the islands. He says:

I received a far pleasanter impression of the colored race from a Moravian minister, who called on me with a friend who had lately taken a farm. I was particularly glad to see this gentleman, for of the Moravians everyone had spoken well to me. He was not the least enthusiastic about his poor black sheep, but he said that, if they were not better than the average English laborers, he did not think them worse. They were called idle. They would work well enough if they had fair wages, and if the wages were paid regularly; but what could be expected when women servants had but three shillings a week, and "found themselves;" when the men had but a shilling a day, and the pay was kept in arrear, in order that if they came late to work, or if they came irregularly, it might be kept, or cut down to what the employer chose to give? Under such conditions any man of any color would prefer to work for himself if he had a garden, or would be idle if he had none. "Living" costs next to nothing, either to them or their families. But the minister said, and his friend confirmed it by his own experience, that the same fellows would work regularly and faithfully for any master whom they personally knew and could rely upon, and no Englishman coming to settle there need be afraid of failing for want of labor, if he had sense and energy, and did not prefer to lie down and groan. The blacks my friend said, were kindly-hearted, respectful, and well-disposed, but they were children; easily excited, easily tempted, easily misled, and totally unfit for self-government. If we wished to ruin them altogether, we should persevere in the course to which, they were sorry to hear we were so inclined. The real want in the island was of intelligent Englishmen to employ and direct them, and Englishmen were going away so fast that they feared there would soon be none of them left. This was the opinion of two moderate and excellent men, whose natural and professional prejudices were all on the black man's side.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE SEVENTIETH WEEK.

By G. H. Pember.

Preparations Now Going on—Signs of its Near Approach—Antichrist Aided by Rome—Origin of Romanism in Babylon—Feminine Element in the Trinity—Relics of Pagan Superstition in Romish Churches—The Seventh Roman King—Napoleon a Probable Fulfilment—The Eighth to Ascend from the Abyss—Uses and then Overthrows his Romish Ally.

WE see around us on all sides the preparatory stages of the events described in Rev. 17. The judgments of the Lord will soon come on the earth. These judgments are to take place in the last week, or the last seven years, as Daniel predicted. During that time the scene in Rev. 17 will take place, and the fact that the preparations are going on around us shows how necessary it is that we should be ready for the prior event, the coming of the Lord for His saints. We have in Scripture the description of the seven years which are to follow our Lord's coming; and if we see that these events are about to take place we know the Lord not only may, but must be Near at Hand.

This chapter has been interpreted as having to do with a past age. One thing which leads people into mistakes is that they do not look at little words. For example, the parable of the ten virgins in Matt. 25 is introduced by the word "then," that is at the time of which our Lord has just been speaking—the time of the end. So here little words give the clue. John is called to see the judgment, or final destruction of the harlot. No doubt, the early Fathers were right in pointing out that the destruction of the harlot and the beast takes place during the last seven years. Antichrist gathers up his forces by the help of the harlot, but attains to his full power by destroying her. Thus his full manifestation is about three and a half years—just about the time Christ spent in His public ministry. Now the harlot is seen seated on the beast. Our Lord speaks about "the leaven of the Pharisees and Sadducees," the of human thought and error. First, the devout spirit of the Pharisees. This often develops into a desire, not to find out God's will, but to build up some earthly system, creed, or philosophy. So men go astray on their own ideas, and soon begin to persecute those who disagree with them. The ultimate outcome of that school is seen in the harlot. Then, on the other hand, we have the liberal man of advanced thought, who ever wanders farther and farther away from God, until he strays into the land of fools, who say in their heart, "There is no God." But human nature won't stay long there; and bye-and-bye we may see the change from the present Atheism to the worship of man, or, rather, of the Man of Sin. These two principles working side by side in the world are soon to come into violent opposition.

Now the harlot is represented as the "mother of harlots and the abominations of the earth." Some suppose her to be Popery, but, while Popery is included, this goes farther, for the harlot is the great source of wickedness from earliest times. Therefore we must search for some system whence all others may have sprung. There is one such, and it is the Babylonian, the great feature of which is a Trinity in imitation of the blessed Holy Trinity. But is Father, Mother and Son, which may be traced in all Pagan systems. This idolatry commenced with the worship of the sun-god, doubtless Satan himself. It is remarkable that the very name of Satan passes through its Chaldean form "Sheitan," into the Greek "Titan," the sun-god. And this Babylonish form of idolatry betrays itself in Theosophy and Romanism by the feminine element in the Trinity, Father, Mother and Child; but the Father soon passes out of notice, and everywhere is seen Woman and Child; moon goddess and sun-god.

Now you may have been astonished at some of the vestments in so-called Protestant churches. Whence do they come? Not from the Bible; not from any Jewish source. Whence then? Go to the museums and study the sculptured slabs, and signets and clay tablets; there you will discover the source.

These Robes are Babylonish.

When you understand this, then, if you see such in any church, you know whose service is going on. Again, if you see a tonsured priest, you recognize him as attached to the sun, and as a rebel against God, for God has commanded His priests not to make bald the head. The head of a picture or image surrounded with a circular halo reveals to you one of the minor deities or saints, invested with some attribute of the sun. The round wafer administered to the communicant is recognized as the sacrament of Mithras. Nor do you fail to notice how it breaks up the Christian symbolism, which demands that all the bread distributed be parted from one loaf.

The turning of worshippers towards the East reminds you of the

and you remember that the Creator commanded His holy of holies to be set towards the West, in order that He might at once distinguish between His worshippers and those of the sun and of Satan. Nor do you forget the incident of Ezek. 8:15, 16, where the greatest of all the abominations of Jerusalem is exemplified in the twenty-five men, between the porch and the altar, with their backs towards the temple of the Lord and their faces towards the East, worshipping the sun. Wherever you see these things, there is the finger of the harlot; the influence of Babylon, of Babylon in mystery it may be, but unmistakably of Babylon.

The harlot, then, is the organizer of this secret sect, the chief propagator of false religion. Her system of evil arose in Babylon, eventually found its seat in Rome, and, doubtless, will finally be transferred to Babylon at the time of the end. Rome is only part of it, though at present its headquarters.

So much for the harlot. As regards the beast, with his seven heads and ten horns, representing the Roman Empire, we must notice a canon of interpretation which is without exception. We may have a little trouble when symbols are not explained, but whenever God gives an explanation of the figure we are obliged to accept that as final. Now the beast has seven heads, and with regard to the woman these are said to be seven mountains on which she sits. So Rome, the seven-hilled city, is where she is sitting now; but Rome is her seat, not herself. And, with regard to Antichrist, the seven heads are said to be seven kings. That is God's Own Explanation.

These seven kings are probably emperors of Rome, because "one was," that is to say, Domitian, in John's day. Hence some little clue to the others, though we can't be quite certain who they were. No doubt all were grand masters in the great conspiracy against God, resulting in Popery. Five had fallen: probably they were Julius Cæsar, Tiberius, Claudius, Caligula, and Nero; one was reigning at the time, that is Domitian: the seventh was yet to appear, and the expression, "and when he cometh" perhaps indicates that some time would previously elapse. It is likely that who put an end to the long line of Roman emperors, and whose ideal would have made him the Antichrist himself could he have realized it, but the time had not then come.

We must avoid the mistake of supposing the Antichrist to be an eighth head of the beast. There is no eighth head, but one of the seven heads resuscitated will be the eighth king. "The beast that thou sawest was, and is not, and shall ascend out of the abyss," that is, he had passed through one earth-life when John saw the vision (A. D. 97). was then in the abyss, and should afterwards ascend out of it to play his part. He is said to be the beast himself; because, although properly a revived head, he will be so identified with the wishes and aspirations of the people that he may be regarded as their complete representative and exponent.

For his ascent out of the pit Satan is already preparing the minds of men by accustoming them to the supernatural in spiritualism, and especially to the idea of the return of the dead in the seances of the spiritualists and the revival of the doctrine of the transmigration of souls, now held by theosophists and Buddhists, who during the last three years have multiplied in America and England.

The Deification of Majorities.

Such are the two symbols: but how are we to connect them in the present time? The whole body of the beast is scarlet, and that is the imperial color. Compare Matt. 27:28. Hence when the vision is fulfilled the body politic will be sovereign, that is, the Government will be democratic. Similarly the whole body of the beast is full of names of blasphemy; whereas in Rev. 13:1 it is only his heads that are so: for in former times the Roman Emperor alone was called Divus, or God; and his bust was set up for worship in every magistrate's office. Thus he was the forerunner of the Antichrist, for the Pope never dared to do such a thing. But now we are being told that the "voice of the people is the voice of God," and the name of blasphemy is being transferred to the body politic. A majority of men is to outweigh everything.

Rome, then, is to regain, for a moment, her seat on the beast, her ascendency in Christendom, in democratic times such as the present. And she is already doing so. A change has taken place: she is beginning to seek Power Through the People.

A few years ago she was opposed to Fenianism, and consequently many of her chapels were forsaken; now two of her archbishops are at the head of the conspiracy. An even more abrupt change of front has lately taken place in regard to the Knights of Labor in America, to the discomfiture of a bishop who had fulminated against them; and Rome is everywhere seeking popularity. Her community is increasing in the three Protestant countries, Germany, England and America. She has lately been called in to arbitrate between two European nations, as in the Middle Ages, and she has also received the public thanks of the German Emperor for her assistance in the matter of Prince Bismarck's Septennate Bill. On every side she is succeeding, and she is likely to, for in the autumn of last year she placed her affairs once more in the hands of the Jesuits. And as soon as she feels her power she will doubtless persecute, for at the time of her destruction John perceives that she is "drunken with the blood of the saints."

But her confidence will be the cause of

Her Downfall.

Secure on her seat, she will attempt to control the beast, and then there will be an explosion. A storm will arise in the Sadducean element, for the ten kings will hate the harlot, and make her desolate and naked, and eat her flesh, and burn her with fire. Thus the way will be cleared for Satan's blasphemous king, and the Great Tribulation will follow.

But the Lord does not wish His people to experience these miseries. Between the fall of the seventh king, which is now in the past, and the rise of the eighth, He will call for His own, and He has commanded, "Watch ye, therefore, and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass." Do we obey His command?

CURRENT EVENTS.

The Text of the Fishery Treaty was Given to the press on February 22. It appears to be less satisfactory to all parties, except England, than was the sketch of it referred to in this place last week. A Canadian member of Parliament declared in the Senate that Canada could have done much better for herself by negotiating directly than by sending to England for a diplomat, who came out with the sole object of securing peace between Great Britain and the United States. Senator Frye, of Maine, was equally emphatic in his disapproval of the treaty from the American standpoint. He claims that American fishermen ought to have the right to purchase in Canadian ports provisions, bait, ice, seines, lines, and all other supplies and outfits for a fishing voyage. He also dwells on the advantage it would be to American fishermen, and which, it was at first stated, was secured by the treaty, to land and transport their catch by land in bond. The much vexed question of the headlands, however, appears likely to be finally and definitely settled if the treaty is ratified.

The House Pension Committee Have Unanimously agreed upon a bill for granting pensions to prisoners of war during the rebellion. It provides that each man in the military or naval service of the United States, who was a prisoner of war for sixty days or more, and who is now suffering from any disability which can reasonably be presumed to be the result of exposure and hardships endured while in confinement as a prisoner of war, and not the result of his own misconduct or vicious habits, shall be paid the pension now provided by law for similar disabilities, provided that no person shall be allowed to receive more than one pension. It is stated that there are a considerable number of men who have been rendered, by the hardships of prison life, unable to earn an adequate support and who are now, in old age, suffering want or living on charity. The number is not very great, and it is likely to decrease rapidly in time.

The Admission of Four Territories as States is proposed under a bill introduced by Congressman Springer, of Illinois, reported favorably on February 23, by the House Committee on Territories. Mr. Springer's bill is to enable the people of Dakota, Montana, Washington Territory and New Mexico to form Constitutions and State Governments and to be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States. The bill authorizes residents of these Territories to elect delegates to conventions proportionate in number with the population of the counties. They are to meet at the seat of Government of each Territory on the second Tuesday of September next, adopt the Constitution of the United States, and form Constitutions and State Governments. They are required to assume the Territorial debts, and provide and maintain a public-school system. The Constitutions are to be submitted to a vote of the people on the Tuesday after the first Monday in November next, and if a majority are in favor of it, the results shall be certified to the President of the United States. Until the next general census the new States, with the exception of Dakota, are to be allowed one representative each in the House of Representatives; Dakota is to be allowed two Representatives.

The Venerable and Highly Respected Philanthropist, Mr. Wm. W. Corcoran, passed away on Friday morning, Feb. 24, in the ninety-first year of his age. He was a native of Georgetown, D. C. For a short time he attended Georgetown College, but left in his sixteenth year. For several years he was engaged in the dry goods business, but failed; he obtained a situation as clerk in a bank, and finally opened a bank on his own account in Washington. It was there that he made his immense fortune by his loans to the Government. In 1835 he married Miss Louise Amory Morris, who died in 1840, leaving one son, who died soon after his mother, and a daughter, Louise, who became the wife of Mr. George Eustis, of Louisiana. Among Mr. Corcoran's many gifts, to his country, are the Corcoran Art Gallery, at Washington, and the Louise Home, in the same city, for "ladies who have seen better days."

The Devastation by a Tornado of Mount Vernon, a thriving town in southern Illinois, on February 19, has sent a thrill of horror through the country. The catastrophe was sudden and overwhelming, no premonitory signs prepared the inhabitants for the coming calamity. The day was fair and the sky clear; but about four o'clock in the afternoon a dense black cloud spread itself swiftly over the sky, and a distant rumbling, like the passing of a heavily laden freight train was heard. Almost instantly the dreaded cyclone struck the town. The funnel-shaped cloud with its terrible rotary motion swept across it, leaving in its track uprooted trees, overturned houses, and solid blocks of masonry which it tore out of substantial buildings. In five minutes it was gone and anxious people turned out to search for the dead and injured. From under the ruins thirty-nine dead bodies were recovered, and scores of persons, injured more or less seriously, were extricated from the débris. The wounded, maimed and bleeding sufferers presented a most pitiable spectacle. Over three hundred houses were utterly destroyed, leaving about a thousand persons homeless, and in many cases penniless. Distressing as the calamity was, it is a matter for thankfulness that it did not occur half an hour earlier, as at that time the Baptist and Methodist churches, which were laid in ruins, were filled with children at Sunday-school.

An Austrian Warning to Russia has been Indirectly administered. Roumania has notified Turkey that Austria gives her assurances that a Russian violation of Roumania territory would be considered a movement against Austria and a cause of war. The march of Russian troops into Roumania would not only be aggression of a positive kind, but would specifically threaten Austria's own defences. It is a safe conclusion, therefore, that it would be resented by the latter as a hostile movement. Still, to make a hypothetical case, and act upon it by a specific promise is noticeable, and Austria's purpose is presumably not only to warn Russia but to increase her friendly relations with Roumania. This kingdom must have an addtional bias toward Austria, as having voluntarily given her pledges of protection. Russia could convey forces to Bulgaria by sea without violating Roumanian soil, but in any extended war in the peninsula Roumania would find it almost an impossibility to preserve her neutrality.

Dr. Mackenzie Still Reiterates his Statement that the Crown Prince's disease is not cancer, and that no trace of cancer has ever been detected by microscopical examination. Other accounts are contradictory, but the fact remains, and it impresses the public both in Germany and elsewhere probably more than the reports of the doctors, that the Prince grows somewhat worse from month to month, and that a more formidable operation than the last one is now talked of. He may yet recover, as the whole civilized world hopes he may, but the present signs are ominous.

A Gladstone Candidate for Parliament was defeated at the polls last week. The election was at Doncaster, which was formerly represented in the House of Commons by Mr. Walter S. Shirley, a faithful follower of Mr. Gladstone. At the election last week both candidates were Liberals, but Mr. Fitzwilliam is a follower of Lord Hartington; but his opponent, Mr. Balfour, is a Gladstonian. A much larger vote was polled on both sides than at the previous election, when the Gladstonian was elected. But the Liberal Unionist developed a much larger increase than his opponent, and was elected by a majority of 211 in a vote of over 11,000. This will reduce the voting strength of the Home Rule party by two votes, on a division.

The Interior Department will Modify its order prohibiting the use of the Indian language in Indian schools. Ex-Justice Strong and a number of delegates from the Bible Society and the Missionary societies have waited on President, Cleveland and explained to him the difficulties the order caused in giving religious instruction to Indian children and adults. It was represented that there are about 40,000 Indian children of school age, of which 15,000 are pupils and about 25,000 adult Indians, who cannot understand any language but their own. Consequently, to discontinue instruction in the Indian language will deprive them of any religious instruction. The delegates said they were heartily in sympathy with the Government's effort to teach the Indians English, but believed that an exception should be made in religious instruction until the Indians understand the English language. The President said the order had been construed more literally than was intended, and new instructions modifying it would be issued.

The Financial Condition of the Country, as indicated by the report of the Director of the Mint, published last week, is unique in the history of nations. When specie payments were resumed on January 1, 1879, the value of our gold coin was $275,000,000, and of our silver $95,000,000. The Government now reports the gold at $575,000,000, and the silver at $353,000,000. This is an increase of $558,000,000 since the Government resumed the payment of its obligations in hard money. The contraction in paper currency being insignificant, in comparison with this enormous increase, it is evident that there must have been a huge expansion of commerce, and a vast increment of accrued wealth, during the past nine years.

Anxiety about Mr. H. M. Stanley Continues. Whether he has penetrated to Emin Pasha's stronghold is not known. Explorers and persons who have some knowledge of the character of the country and people on this route are still hopeful of his safety. A Paris journal last week published an interview on the subject with M. de Brazza, who has recently returned from the Congo. In the course of it the French explorer expressed the opinion that after leaving the Aruwimi River, Stanley, in order to feed his men, would be required to make daily raids upon the tribes in the districts through which the expedition passed. This, of necessity, would have obliged him to push on with all possible speed. Stanley, M. de Brazza thinks, has probably joined Emin Pasha, and will return home via Khartoum or Suakim, as he would not return by way of Zanzibar, unless he felt that the strength of his expedition would enable him to force his way.

is Undoubtedly Difficult to Devise any ndment to the inter-Sate commerce law hich the railroads shall be able to give re-d rates or free transportation to religious charitable bodies without opening a door raud. Nevertheless the prohibition con-ed in the law will operate to the injury of y a beneficent work. A case in point is Children's Aid Society. One of the most ortant features of the Society's work is the ding to suitable homes in the West of chil-n rescued from lives of poverty and vice. ore the law was passed, the railroads gave e children and the Society's agents accom-ying them free transportation. The society's ers desire to have this privilege restored, they are to lay their case before the Senate er-State Commerce Committee. Various er charitable institutions have joined in the uest for changes in the law, and Young n's Christian Associations in several cities o ask for amendments which will enable their mbers to accept certain courtesies from the lroads.

The United States Evangelical Alliance pro-ses to conduct a canvass among the non urch-going classes of Brooklyn, N. Y. In gard to the direct methods by which the liance proposes to reach these masses of non-urch-going people, Rev. Dr. Josiah Strong, cretary of the Alliance, said that Brooklyn d been divided into thirteen sections, and at the churches of each section were being or-nized into branch Alliances. For every 100 embers there was to be one supervisor, and for ery supervisor ten visitors. Each community ill be divided into as many districts as there e supervisors, and each district will be assign-l to the care of one supervisor. Then each strict will be subdivided into ten fields, and ch field assigned to a visitor, who shall learn e church preference of the non-churchgoer hom he visits, and will extend to him in the ame of the Alliance an invitation to attend the earest church of that denomination, and his ame will be sent to the pastor of the church. his plan is now being successfully worked in Mansfield, Ohio, and in Oswego, in this State.

A Southern Senator Confesses to a Ludi-rous blunder. He had occasion to travel from Washington to New York, and, having pur-hased his sleeping-car ticket, he went to the lepot and boarded a train. Being exceedingly ired and sleepy, he undressed immediately, went to bed, and was soon in a sound slumber. He awoke in the morning much refreshed, and proceeded to make his ablutions and dress, pre-paratory to crossing the ferry from Jersey City to the metropolis. When he issued from the car, however, he was overwhelmed with surprise. Washington's scenes were around him as they were when he went to bed the night before. On inquiry he learned that he had slept all night in the Washington depot, having entered a car which had not been attached to the New York train. Mortifying as the Senator's mistake was, it would have been still far worse if, instead of re-maining still, he had been carried in an opposite direction. That mistake in a more serious mat-ter is being made by many who "hope" they are Christians, and who "expect" to go to heaven when they die. When they awake to the discovery of their blunder their despair will be unbearable. (Luke 13: 26–28.)

Exclusion From a Grave in Calvary Ceme-tery, Brooklyn, N. Y., appears likely to involve a lawsuit. On February 19, an aged gentleman fell down dead suddenly of heart disease while attending a meeting in New York. The under-taker, to whom was confided the charge of the funeral, was informed that the deceased owned a grave in Calvary Cemetery, in which his wife was buried sixteen years ago, and in which, dur-ing his life, he had expressed a wish to be in-terred beside her. The undertaker, therefore, notified the authorities of the cemetery, but was astonished to learn that the interment would not be permitted. The body has, there-fore, been temporarily deposited in Greenwood, to await the result of an appeal to the law, or to ecclesiastical authorities, whose mandate the cemetery officials will obey. The reasons for the refusal have not been divulged, but a clue to them is obtained, in the fact that Calvary is a Roman Catholic cemetery, and the meeting which the deceased was attending when he was stricken down was one to hear a discourse by the excommunicated priest, Dr. McGlynn. The issue of this case is a matter of public concern. Thousands of persons, who have purchased lots in cemeteries, want to know whether, after mak-ing provision for a last resting-place for their bodies, it is possible for any one to exclude them. Happily, no similar question can dis-turb the Christian about the destination of his soul. Though men may prevent his body lying in the resting-place he has provided for it, nei-ther men nor demons can shut his soul out of the mansion which Christ has prepared for him. (John 14 : 2.)

An Eccentric Widow's Death was Reported from Lewiston, Me., last week. She lived quite alone, in an old cottage in the business part of the town, avoiding all intercourse with neigh-bors and relatives, and never allowing any one to set foot inside her dwelling. Every window was closely curtained, and no signs of life were ever perceptible about the house. Her death was discovered almost by an accident, and no one could say exactly when it had taken place. Every room in the house, except the one in which she lived, was found covered with dust, no article of furniture having been moved since her husband died, thirty-three years ago. It was at that time that she commenced the hermit life, which continued till her death. Property to the amount of $30,000 in money and bonds was found secreted about the house. It was the carefully saved capital and its proceeds which her husband left her in his will, attaching to it the condition that she remain single. It is supposed that her motive for seclusion was an exaggerated and morbid desire to fulfil his wishes. It so, she probably misunderstood them, as no sane man would wish his widow to lead such a life. The whole system of monas-ticism is based on a similar error. Though Christ wishes His followers to be separate from the world, He does not wish them to neglect their duties, which they cannot fulfil when they seclude themselves. (John 17:15.)

A Bequest Contingent on Change of Name occurs in a will presented for probate in New York. This is the clause referred to: "I give and bequeath unto my godchild, Frederick Ru-dolph Peipers, the sum of $2,000, lawful money of the United States of America, for his own use, benefit and behoof forever; provided, how-ever, and this legacy is upon the express condi-tion, that my said godchild shall, from and after the time that this bequest shall have been made known to him, continue to so spell and write his name for all time forth, and in default of his so doing, this legacy to him shall be wholly void and of no effect, and the sum herein be-queathed shall fall into and become part of my residuary estate, and shall be disposed of ac-cording to the provision of the clause in this my will disposing of my residuary estate." The testator was evidently anxious that his name should be remembered after his death, and doubted whether his god-son would use it, un-less it was clearly to his interest to do so. The desire that a family name be perpetuated is com-mon, and the gratification of it was among the blessings promised in the Old Testament to those who keep His commands, "I will give them an everlasting name that shall not be cut off" (Isa. 56 : 5), while we are assured that in spite of all precautions "the name of the wicked shall rot" (Prov. 10 : 7).

A Self-Imposed Lenten Penance, Performed by a Brooklyn lady, was described recently by a police officer in the Eastern District. He said: "On the first day of Lent a lady presented her-self at the police station in the evening and asked permission to sleep there. She was well dressed, modest-looking and sober, and I won-dered at her request. I told her that I didn't think she could stand the place. 'Oh, yes, I can, and could if it were twice as disagreeable,' she replied. The next night she came again and stayed all night, and every night afterward until the end of Lent. When I found that she did herd with these drunken and dirty unfort-unates who sleep here, I thought she would soon become as bad as the rest, and I watched her, to note the change which her associates would bring upon her. But no change showed itself. She preserved her tidy appearance and continued just as modest and well-behaved as when she first came." Some inquiries were made about her, and it was found that she be-longed to a respectable family and had a good home, but that she had determined on sleeping among the wretched, drunken offscourings of the streets every night as a self-imposed pen-ance. It was a vain effort, if undertaken with the idea that it would merit pardon for sin; but if having first obtained pardon through the merits of Jesus she went among the vicious and depraved to tell them of the Friend of sinners, it was an act of devotion which God would bless. (1 Cor. 13 : 3.)

BRIEF NOTES.

It is reported that all the American missions in Bur-mah have incorporated total abstinence in their work.

Among the results of Rev. George C. Needham's work in Springfield, is the wonderful demand for Bibles. The number sold during and since his visit is unprece-dented.

Mr. and Miss Parker's gospel mission at Sharon, Pa., closed on February 19. Over one hundred persons made a public profession of faith. They are now at New-castle, Pa.

Senators Dingley and Frye, of Maine, are about to in-troduce into Congress bills for the better protection of women in the District of Columbia.

The Good Templars have entered actively upon the work of raising a fund for the erection of a suitable monu-ment to the late John B. Finch. Circulars soliciting subscriptions have been sent out.

The Evangelical Alliance has prepared a form of constitution suitable for any branch Alliance. Copies can be had on application to the Secretary, the Rev. Josiah Strong, D. D., 42 Bible House.

It is proposed to commemorate the centenary of the birth of Adoniram Judson, which will occur August 9, 1888, by erecting a Judson Memorial Church in Man-dalay, the capital of Upper Burmah.

Rev. Dr. Thomas S. Hastings has been elected Pres-ident of the Union Theological Seminary. The semi-nary has been without a president since the death of Dr. Roswell D. Hitchcock, last summer.

At Nashville, Tenn., the Theatre Vendome was en gaged for revival meetings recently, under the conduc of Mr. S. M. Sayford. Fully two thousand persons at-tended each night, and there were many conversions.

The police of Constantinople are closing all liquor shops kept by Europeans, on the ground that they are demoralizing the Turkish people. The Consulates are invaded by liquor-dealers complaining of the police.

Bishop Taylor's reports of his work in Africa are most encouraging. He has now a chain of stations far into the interior, the most advanced being located at a point on the Upper Kassai. Dr. Harrison, one of the two physicians who have joined the mission, is now at Lulu-aburgh, in the Congo State.

Twenty thousand dollars annually are paid by the city of Chicago to the support of the Washingtonian Home for Inebriates. The amount is derived from the proceeds of the licenses to saloon-keepers. The city is thus interested in the manufacture and reform of drunk-ards. Every city that issues licenses should also support such a home.

The fund now being raised by the Presbyterian Church for endowing a Board of Relief for aged ministers, wid-ows and orphans, has been increased by a second gift of $10,000. This gift is anonymous, but it comes from St. Louie, Mo. The first gift of $10,000 was from an Eastern donor. The Committee engaged in the work of raising this fund believe that they will have a million dollars in hand by the time the Centennial of the Church is cele-brated in May next.

Statistics of the Mormon Church show that there are 400 Mormon bishops in Utah, 2,423 priests, 2,947 teach-ers and 6,854 deacons. Salt Lake City is divided into wards of eight or nine blocks each, and a bishop is put in charge of each ward. Under him there are two teach-ers, whose business it is to learn the employment and income of every resident of the ward and report the same to the bishop. Then the bishop collects one-tenth of each man's income and turns it in to the Church.

HOLDING FAST THE FAITH.

A New Sermon, by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

"And to the angel of the church in Pergamos write; These things saith H. which hath the sharp sword with two edges; I know thy works, and where thou dwellest, even where Satan's seat is: and thou holdest fast my name, and hast not denied my faith."—Revelation 2: 12, 13.

Christ Coming Armed to the Church—Hypocrites There to be Purged out—The Circumstances of Christians Noted—Allowance Made for Evil Surroundings—I. The Fact about Pergamos—How the Faith may be Denied—By Keeping Silence—By Unholy Living—II. What Pergamos Did—Holding the Name of Christ—The Deity of it—Its Royalty—Its Saving Power—Its Immutability—III. What Christ's Name is to the Church—Comfort—Power—A Possession to be Defended—A Spurgeon in Jail.

SPECIALLY note, dear friends, at the opening of this morning's meditation, the character under which the Lord Jesus Christ presents Himself to the church at Pergamos. "These things saith He which hath the sharp sword with two edges." Does the Lord Jesus come to His church in that way? Does He at the door of the church bear a sword? a sword unscabbarded? a sharp sword? a sharp sword with two edges? Yes, even to His visible church this is how our Lord Jesus Christ appears. To His own spiritual and faithful ones He is to each one a husband, full of unutterable tenderness and love; but to the visible church, which at its best estate is never altogether pure, He appears in severer form. To a church He comes as Captain of the Lord's host, and He wields a sharp sword with two edges. It is the parallel of that passage where John the Baptist saith to Him: "His fan is in His hand, and He will thoroughly purge His floor, and He will gather His wheat into His garner; but He will burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire." We think of

as a joy and a blessing; but, oh, remember that question, "But who may abide the day of His coming? and who shall stand when He appeareth?" The Lord bears the sword, and He beareth it not in vain. Time has not blunted its edge, it is "sharp;" and it hath two edges, as of old. But what will He do with that sword in reference to a church? We are not left in any doubt upon that point. Having mentioned some whose doctrines and lives were unclean, the Lord says: "Repent; or else I will come unto thee quickly, and will fight against them with the sword of My mouth." He turns the sword against those within the church who had no right to be there. It is no trifling thing to be a church member. I could earnestly wish that certain professors had never been members of a church at all; for if they had been outside the church, they might have been in far less peril than they are within its bounds. Outside, their conduct might have been tolerated; but it is not consistent with avowal of discipleship towards Jesus. I say this with deep sorrow. I introduce the subject as the Spirit Himself introduces it. I would make the sermon sweet to the saints, but the preface must be sharp, lest any seize upon comforts to which they have no right.

Notice that this blessed Saviour watches his church with an observant eye. He looks at the church in Pergamos, and He says, "I know thy works, and where thou dwellest, even Where Satan's Seat is."

The Lord sees the position and the peril of the church at Pergamos, "where Satan dwelleth." Probably there were horrible idolatries, with obscene orgies in the city, or it may have been a place of peculiar licentiousness, or of special persecution. We cannot at this distance of time exactly tell what it was; but the Lord regarded it as the citadel of Satan. There are places in the world at this day where sin has so much the upper hand, or where error and unbelief reign so supreme, that the devil would seem to have there taken up his residence, and to have made it his capital city. You, dear friend, may be living in society where the evil one rules with undisputed sway. You are not favored to dwell with your fellow-Christians, but you go home to be met with blasphemies at the door; and all the week sights and sounds assail your eyes and ears which make you feel like Lot in Sodom. I am sorry for you; but let it comfort you that and He can either remove you from the trying position, or else He can still more glorify His grace by supporting you in it, and enabling you to overcome the enemy. He knows that "Satan desires to have you, that he may sift you as wheat;" and He prays for you that your faith fail not. He knows your perils, and He considers your trials. If you are holding fast His name and have not denied the faith, even that may be to Him a surer proof of your truthfulness of heart than works of labor and patience might be in other instances. When we have little strength, and are placed in positions of great difficulty, then the Lord thinks all the more of what we produce, and regards it as all the surer proof of fidelity. In the text it is commendation enough for Pergamos, under the circumstances that, dwelling so close to Beelzebub's own capital, close under the shadow of the throne of hell, that church could earn this praise: "Thou holdest fast My name, and hast not denied My faith."

I. The first head will be, let us consider this fact. I hope it is a fact with many here present as surely as it was a fact with Pergamos. I trust it can be said of this church and of its members—"Thou holdest fast My name, and hast not denied my faith."

How May the Faith be Denied?

In several ways this may be done. Let me say it very tenderly, but very solemnly, some deny the faith, and let go the name of Jesus by never confessing it. Remember how the Lord puts this matter in the gospels: "Whosoever shall confess Me before men, him shall the Son of Man also confess before the angels of God; but he that denieth Me before men shall be denied before the angels of God." Here it is clear that to deny is the same thing as not confessing. I know people who almost boast of their neutrality. They have tried not exactly to hold with the hare and run with the hounds, but neither to hold with the hare nor yet to run with the hounds. These have hoped to find in their discretion the better part of valor; but, believe me, it is a valor which will be rewarded with everlasting contempt. This way you hope to lead an easy life. An easy life of such a kind will end in a very uneasy death. A life in which we have shunned the Cross of Christ will lead to a state in which we shall miss the crown.

But then it is very possible to deny the name and the faith

By Unholy Living.

Let none of us imagine that an orthodox creed can be of any use to us if we lead a heterodox life. No, Christ Jesus is to be obeyed as a Master, as well as to be believed as a Teacher. The disciple is to be practically obedient, as well as attentively teachable. "Without holiness no man shall see the Lord." Alas! we can deny the faith by actually forsaking it, and quitting the people of God. Some do so deliberately, and others because the charms of the world overcome them. We are told of some who went away from our Lord because of what He had taught. They cried, "This is a hard saying; who can hear it?" My friends, if you are not prepared to accept hard sayings, you need not profess to be disciples of Jesus. "Horrible doctrine!" cried one the other day. Granted that it is horrible, may it not also be true? Many horrible things take place around us, and yet none can deny the facts. You cannot exclude from your knowledge many things which are true, by merely crying, "Horrible!" It is not ours to judge of our Lord's teaching by our sentiment; we are to receive it by faith. He speaks terribly of the doom of the wicked, and He is not capable of exaggeration. What the Lord Jesus says is certain, for "He is the faithful and true witness," and therefore we will not turn from Him, whatever His teaching may be.

In what way may we be said to hold fast the name of Christ and the faith of Christ? I answer, by the full consent of our intellect, yielding up our mind to consider and accept the things which are assuredly believed among us. If we hold fast the name of Jesus, we must hold the faith in the love of it. We must store up in our affections all that our Lord teaches. We also hold it fast by holding it forth in the teeth of all opposition. We must confess the faith at all proper times and seasons, and we must never hide our colors. Only brave soldiers are worthy of our great Lord. Those who sneak into the rear, that they may be comfortable, are not worthy of the kingdom.

What Will our Captain say of Cowards in that day when He distributes rewards to His faithful ones? Brethren, we must be willing to bear ridicule for Christ's sake, even that peculiarly envenomed ridicule which "the cultured" are so apt to pour upon us. We must be willing to be thought great fools for Jesus' sake. Some of us have forgotten more than many of our opponents ever knew, and yet they style us ignorant; we are bearing shame because we have the courage of our convictions, and yet they call us cowards. For my part, I am willing to be ten thousand fools in one for my dear Lord and Master, and count it to be the highest honor that can be put upon me to be stripped of every honor and loaded with every censure, for the sake of the grand old truth which is written on my very heart.

II. In the second place, having considered the fact, let us further enlarge upon it. What do we mean by holding fast the name of Christ? I reply, first, we mean holding fast

The Deity of that Name.

We believe in our Lord's real Godhead. "His name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, the mighty God." One of the names by which He is revealed to us is Immanuel. The word "El" is one of the great Oriental names of God. You get in Hebrew Elohim, and in Arabic "Allah." Our Lord Jesus is Immanu-el, that is, God with us; and we believe Him to be so. We also hold fast the name of Jesus, and the faith of Jesus, as to the royalty of His name. When we bow the knee in prayer, and say, "Thy kingdom come," we mean the kingdom of God, and we mean also the kingdom of Christ Jesus, He it is that as a Lamb is seen in the midst of the throne where saints and angels pay adoring homage. Soon shall the seventh angel sound his trumpet, and great voices shall be heard in heaven saying. "The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of His Christ; and He shall reign for ever."

We hold fast the name of Christ, as we believe in its saving power. "Thou shalt call His name Jesus: for He shall save His people from their sins." We hold fast the belief that Jesus saves us from the guilt of sin by having borne it in His own body on the tree. He died as a victim in our stead.

He Saves Us

from the power of sin by His Spirit, and by faith in His death; we overcome sin by the blood of the Lamb. Salvation in every department, salvation from its hopeful dawning to its glorious noontide in perfection, is all of Christ Jesus. He is Saviour, and He alone. "There is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved." He is the unique Saviour, there is no other possible salvation now or in the world to come. Believest thou in Christ? Then thou hast salvation. "But he that believeth not shall be damned." Pronounce the word hard or soft as thou wilt, it will come to the same thing in the end—thou shalt be condemned, and condemned hopelessly, if thou believeth not in Jesus Christ, the one sole propitiation for the sins of men. This we hold fast.

Once, more we hold fast this name in its immutability, We are told to-day that this is an age of progress, and therefore we must accept an improved gospel. Every man is to be his own lawyer, and every man his own Saviour.

We are getting on in the direction of every man putting away his own sin, just as every chimney should consume its own smoke. But, dear friends, we do not believe these idle dreams. We want no new gospel, no modern salvation. Our conviction is that Jesus Christ is "the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever," the way that Paul went to heaven is good enough for me. When I remember my dear brethren and sisters in Christ who have fallen asleep, whom I saw die with triumph lighting up their faces, I feel quite content with the salvation which saved them, and I am not going to try experiments or speculations. To talk of improving upon our perfect Saviour is to insult Him. He is God's propitiation; what would you more? My blood boils at the idea of

Improving the Gospel.

There is but one Saviour, and that one Saviour is the same for ever. His doctrine is the same in every age, and is not yea and nay. What a strange result we should obtain in the general assembly of heaven if some were saved by the gospel of the first century, and others by the gospel of the second, and others by the gospel of the seventeenth, and others by the gospel of the nineteenth century! We should need a different song of praise for the clients of these various periods, and the mingled chorus would be rather to the glory of man's culture than to the praise of the one Lord. No such mottled heaven, and no such discordant song, shall ever be produced. There is one church and one Saviour. This is what we mean by holding fast the name and faith of Jesus.

III. Thirdly, dear friends, to lead you a step further in the same road, let me show the practical place of the name and of the faith with us. The practical place of it is this: first of all, it is our personal comfort—The faith which we hold is our daily and hourly

Joy and Hope.

The doctrines which I believe in connection with the divine Person in whom I trust are the pillow of my weariness, the anodyne of my care, the rest of my spirit. Jesus gives me a look-out for years to come which is celestial, and at the same time I can look back with thankfulness on the years which are past. For all time the Lord Jesus is our heart's content. Nothing can separate us from His love, and therefore nothing can deprive us of our confident hope. Through this blessed name and this blessed faith believers are made glad and strong.

This also is our power in preaching; indeed, it is our power, our only power, in living before God. Brethren, the devil will never be cast out by any other name—let us hold it fast. If we conjure by eloquence, talent, music, or what not, the evil one will say, "Jesus I know, and Paul I know; but who are ye?" When we draw near to God, what is our strength wherewith to prevail in prayer? Is it not that we ask in the name of Jesus? That name prevaileth with God concerning everything, and so enables us to prevail with man; wherefore, hold it fast, and deny not the faith; for what can you do if the name of Jesus be given up?

Now, in closing, I will urge reasons for holding fast the name and faith of Jesus. I hope we hold it so fast that we can never give it up while reason holds its throne. There is an old Christian legend concerning Ignatius, that he never spoke without mentioning the name of Jesus, whom he loved. His speech seemed saturated with love to his Lord, and when he died, the name of Jesus was found to be stamped on his heart. It may not have been so literally, but no doubt it was true spiritually. The name of Jesus is, I hope, written in our hearts so as to be inseparable from our lives. That it may be so I will put the question thus:

Why Should We Give Up

the faith? I fail to see a reason. Why should I change my belief, or cease to hold fast the name of Christ Jesus my Lord? It is an irrational suggestion. "I am open to conviction," said a man who knew his ground. "I am open to conviction, but I should like to see the man that could convince me." I am in very much the same condition with regard to the gospel of my Lord Jesus: I am open to conviction, but I shall never see the man that can convince me out of my experience, my conviction, my consciousness, my hope, my all. Before I could quit my faith in the substitutionary work of the Lord Jesus Christ, and my confidence in the everlasting convenant ordered in all things and sure, I should have to be ground to powder, and every separate atom transformed.

We must defend the faith; for what would become of us if our fathers had not maintained it? If confessors, reformers, martyrs and covenanters had been recreant to the name and faith of Jesus, where would have been the churches of to-day? Must we not play the man as they did? If we do not, are we not censuring our fathers? It is very pretty to read of Luther and his brave deeds? Of course, Everybody Admires Luther!

Yes, yes; but you do not want any one else to do the same to-day. When you go to the Zoological Gardens you all admire the bear; but how would you like a bear at home, or a bear wandering loose about the street? You tell me that it would be unbearable, and no doubt you are right. So, we admire a man who was firm in the faith, say four hundred years ago; the past ages are a sort of bear-pit or iron cage for him; but such a man to-day is a nuisance, and must be put down. Call him a narrow-minded bigot, or give him a worse name if you can think of one. Yet imagine that in those ages past, Luther, Zwingle, Calvin, and their compeers had said, "The world is out of order; but if we try to set it right we shall only make a great row, and get ourselves into disgrace. Let us go to our chambers, put on our night-caps, and sleep over the bad times, and perhaps when we wake up things will have grown better." Such conduct on their part would have entailed upon us a heritage of error. Age after age would have gone down into the infernal deeps, and the pestiferous bogs of error would have swallowed all. These men loved the faith and name of Jesus too well to see them trampled on.

Note What We Owe

them, and let us pay to our sons the debt we owe our fathers. It is to-day as it was in the Reformers' days. Decision is needed. Here is the day for the man; where is the man for the day? We who have had the gospel passed to us by martyr hands dare not trifle with it, nor sit by and hear it denied by traitors, who pretend to love it, but inwardly abhor every line of it. The faith I hold bears upon it marks of the blood of my ancestors. Shall I deny their faith, for which they left their native land to sojourn here? Shall we cast away the treasure which was handed to us through the bars of prisons, or came to us charred with the flames of Smithfield? Personally, when my bones have been tortured with rheumatism, I have doubtless of my own stock, who in Chelmsford Jail was allowed a chair, because he could not lie down by reason of rheumatic pain. That Quaker's broad-brim overshadows my brow. Perhaps I inherit his rheumatism; but that I do not regret if I have his stubborn faith, which will not let me yield a syllable of the truth of God. When I think of how others have suffered for the faith, a little scorn or unkindness seems a mere trifle, not worthy of mention. An ancestry of lovers of the faith ought to be a great plea with us to abide by the Lord God of our fathers, and in the faith in which they lived. As for me, I must hold the old gospel: I can do no other. God helping me, I will endure the consequences of what men think obstinacy.

Look you, sirs, there are ages yet to come. If the Lord does not speedily appear, there will come another generation, and another, and all these generations will be tainted and injured if we are not faithful to God and to His truth to-day. We have come to a turning-point in the road. If we turn to the right, mayhap our children and our children's children will go that way; but if we turn to the left, generations yet unborn will curse our names for having been unfaithful to God and to His word. I charge you, not only by your ancestry, but by your posterity, that you seek to win the commendation of your Master, that though you dwell where Satan's seat is, you yet hold fast His name, and do not deny His faith. Stand fast, my beloved, in the name of God! I, your brother in Christ, entreat you to abide in the truth. Quit yourselves like men, be strong. The Lord sustain you for Jesus' sake. Amen.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

An Adventure with Wolves in Norway.*

THE last weeks before Christmas are in Norway always the busiest season in all trades, and coopers are no exception to the rule. They have so many orders that they are often in arrear with them. That was the case with a well-known cooper named Tollef Kolstad, one night about the middle of December. He had been at work since dawn on a huge tub, which had been ordered by Grim Berglund, the richest peasant in the parish. It was about ten o'clock at night when Tollef made the last stroke upon the tub, and placed it on the flat sleigh which with a swift horse he had borrowed of a neighbor. He was about to take his place on the sleigh, to drive to Berglund's house on the other side of the lake, with the barrel, for he knew Berglund would be glad to get it that night, when he heard a shrill voice call him.

"Father, do take me with you."

"No, my boy, there may be wolves out to-night, and they will eat little boys if they can get them."

"I am not afraid, father; do take me," and Tollef, who did not easily deny his little boy any innocent pleasure, consented. He lifted him up, wrapped him warmly in his little sheepskin coat and put him between his knees. Then taking the reins he urged the horse on toward the shore, beyond which was the broad expanse of ice that glittered like silver in the light of the moon and the spear-like gleams of the Aurora Borealis. They were soon on the frozen lake and speeding quickly across it. The wind cut them keenly; then it roared and whistled round their heads. But it was not that which made Tollef's heart stand still and clutch his boy convulsively in his arms. It was a terrible long-drawn howl which came floating toward him from the pine forest behind.

"What is that, father?" asked Thor, a little tremulously.

"It was wolves, my boy," said Tollef.

"Why do we not go back home?"

"Because they are behind us. Our only chance is to go on and try to get to the other shore before they overtake us,"

The horse, sniffing the presence of wild beasts, snorted wildly as it ran, but electrified, as it were, with the sense of danger, strained every nerve in its efforts to reach the farther shore. The howls now came nearer and nearer, and they rose with a frightful distinctness in the clear wintry air, and resounded again from the border of the forest.

"Why don't you throw away the barrel, father?" said Thor, who strove hard to keep brave. "Then the sleigh will run so much the better."

"If we are overtaken, our safety is in the barrel. It is large enough for two, and will fit close to the ice." Tollef was still calm; but with his one disengaged arm, hugged his little son convulsively.

"Now, keep brave, my boy;" he whispered in his ear, "they will soon be upon us." The horse was showing signs of exhaustion, and Tollef, seeing that only one chance was left, rose up with his boy in his arms, and, upsetting the barrel on the ice, concealed himself and the child under it. Hardly had he had time to brace himself against its sides, pressing his feet against one side and his back against the other, when the short, whining bark of the wolves told him that some had followed the horse, while the greater number remained to investigate the contents of the barrel. The howling and barking of these furious creatures without, was now incessant.

The father was less warmly clad than the son, and, moreover, was obliged to sit on the ice, while Thor could stand erect without knocking against the bottom of the barrel; and if it had not been for the excitement of the situation, which made Tolleff's blood course with unwonted rapidity, it is more than probable that the intense cold would have made him drowsy, and thus lessened his power of resistance. The warmth of his body had made a slight cavity where he was sitting, and whenever he remained a moment still, his trousers froze fast to the ice. It was only the presence of his boy that inspired him with fresh courage, whenever hope seemed about to desert him,

About an hour after the flight of the horse there was a lull in the attack, but a sudden increase of the barking noise around the barrel. From this, Tollef concluded that some wolves were hurt and their fellows were killing them.

But hark! what is that? It sounds like a song, or, rather, like a hymn. The strain comes nearer and nearer, resounding from mountain to mountain, flowing peacefully through the pure and still air:

"Who knows how near I am mine ending;
So swiftly time doth pass away."

Tollef, in whose breast hope was again reviving, put his ear to the ice, and heard distinctly the tread of horses and many human feet. He comprehended instantly that his only chance of life was in joining these people before they were too far away; and, quickly resolved, he lifted the boy on his left arm, and grasped the hatchet in his disengaged hand. Then, with a violent thrust, he flung the barrel from over him, and ran in the direction of the sound. The wolves saw him, and a pack of about a dozen immediately started in pursuit. They leaped up against him at once, while he struck furiously about him with his small weapon. Fortunately, he had sharp steel pegs in his boots, and kept his footing well; otherwise the combat would have been a short one. His voice, too, was powerful, and his shouts rose high above the howling of the beasts. He soon perceived that he was observed, and he saw in the bright moonlight six or eight men running toward him. Just then, perhaps in his joy, his vigilance was, for a fraction of a second, relaxed; he felt a pull in the fleshy part of his right arm. He was not conscious of any sharp pain, and was astonished to see the blood flowing from an ugly wound. But he only held his boy the more tightly, while he fought and ran with the strength of despair.

Now the men were near. He could hear their voices. But his brain was dizzy, and he saw but dimly.

"Hello, friend; don't crack my skull for my pains!" someone was shouting close to his ear, and he let his hatchet fall, and fell himself too, prostrate on the ice.

The wolves, at the sight of the men, had retired to a safe distance, from which they watched the proceedings, as if uncertain whether to return.

As soon as Tollef had recovered somewhat from his exhaustion and his loss of blood, he and his boy were placed upon a sleigh, and his wound was carefully bandaged. He now learned that his rescuers were on their way to a funeral, which was to take place on the next day, but, on account of the distance of the church, they had been obliged to start during the night. Hence their solemn mood, and their singing of funeral hymns.

After an hour's ride they reached the cooper's cottage, and were invited to rest, and share such hospitality as the house could afford.

THE MARKET-PLACE OF BAGDAD.

(See Illustration.)

THE name of Bagdad is so closely associated in the minds of young people with the famous wildly romantic but fascinating "Arabian Nights," that the fact of an actual city of Bagdad existing can scarcely be realized. Nevertheless Bagdad is a visible city on the banks of the Tigris, in Turkey in Asia, not far from the frontiers of Persia. Its ancient glory is departed, but sufficient of its ancient buildings still remain to convey to the visitor's mind an idea of the former grandeur of the city. The view depicted in the illustration of the market-place, with the magnificent mosque in the background, is a specimen of the general aspect of the city.

Bagdad is built on both sides of the river Tigris, its two portions being connected by a bridge of boats. It is a walled city, the walls of brick and earth being about five miles in circumference. Several large towers are built upon the wall, and it incloses many a large garden and date plantation. The present population of the city is about one hundred and fifty thousand.

Ancient Bagdad was founded by the Arabs about A. D. 762. They brought with them their religion, which had been given them by Mohammed, and which they thought their mission to carry by force of the word or the sword to the uttermost parts of the earth. For a time all was peaceful and prosperous in Mesopotamia, the land between the rivers Euphrates and Tigris, in which Bagdad is situated, and of which it is now the most important city. But in a few hundred years fresh hordes of barbarians broke in from the far East, of which the Turks now remain. Under their oppressive Government, everything is going to ruin and desolation, and Bagdad, though still the capital of the province, has dwindled into insignificance compared with what it once was, when it was said to rival Babylon in magnificence and power. It was the capital of the ancient Saracen Empire, and the principal seat of Mohammedan learning. For a long period this city recived all the trade of the surrounding countries, but now it has declined greatly, most of the products being carried by way of Trebizonde, partly on account of the hordes of robbers which infest Bagdad and the neighborhood, and partly on account of the frequent visitations of the plague, which finds a rich harvest in the filthy streets of the city.

The streets of the old town are narrow and irregular, and the majority o the houses are poor and meanly built Bagdad was greatly beautified and enlarged in the time of the famous caliph Haroun-al-Raschid, of whose work many fine structures still remain, among the most interesting of which are the renowned "Gate of the Talisman," a lofty minaret, built in 785, and the tomb of Zobedie, the beloved wife of Haroun-al-Raschid.

A CHINESE GARDEN.

(See Illustration.)

THE river gardens of China have interested all travellers in that strange country. Built out on piles driven in the bed of the stream, and connected with the owner's residence by a light bridge, they form a pretty yet somewhat fantastic feature of the landscape. There they rear their dwarf plants, which, to the eyes of a Chinaman, are far more beautiful than the stoutest oak or most graceful cedar.

Such gardens as that depicted in the illustration belong, of course, to the wealthy classes, though the poorer classes make use of the rivers too, though in a more practical way. Some of them have actually built houses in this way on piles, regardless of the fact that a sudden rise in the river means certain death to them and their families.

The overcrowding of the Chinese cities has led other families to seek refuge in boats on the river, where they live from one year's end to another. These boat people constitute the lowest class of the Chinese people. They are found more or less in all districts, but most of all in the neighborhood of Canton, where they number about two hundred thousand. Their customs are somewhat different from those of the land people, and their worship is not the same. Another divergence is, that they never bind the feet of their women. This custom of foot-binding is almost as prevalent as ever. Absurd as it seems, the people cannot be induced to relinquish it. They regard natural feet as a badge of poverty. Mothers believe that small feet secure a life of ease; the woman with large feet, it is inferred, has to work for her living, and to go out in all weather. No man of good family would ever form an alliance with a lady having large feet. If such a thing should happen, his friends would make her life miserable.

No other land has such a wonderful system of waterways, but it was not until comparatively recent times that the Chinese fully realized their utility. There are thousands of miles of rivers and canals, the banks of which are now lined with thousands of towns and villages. There are few places in the empire, and none of any importance, but can be reached easily by boat—a mode of travelling offering many advantages to a people like the Chinese, but notably the one essential advantage of economy.

The houses are all built on the same plan, those of the wealthy having more rooms, and being easily distinguishable by the profusion of ornamentation. The rooms frequently open into a court filled with trees and shrubs, and having a small fish-pond or fountain in the centre.

A River Garden in China.

The traveller is amazed wherever he goes, and the more, as he penetrates to the interior, at the extraordinary manners and customs of this wonderful people. To the Christian, however, the most distressing and awful consideration is, that this land teeming with immortal souls is still practically given over to the most degrading superstition. No generation has done so much as this to spread the knowledge of the Gospel in China, but, compared with the vast field, the progress made, encouraging as it is intrinsically, is but slight. Prayer, men and money are required of the Church, that the gospel should be preached even as a witness only in the cities of these perishing millions.

MRS. TRANSOME'S PUPIL.

A SERIAL STORY.

A Parting.

THERE was a small, low chair of Willie's, my only boy who was dead, that was kept strung up to a hook in the strong beam by a bit of rope. It was a pretty chair, painted green, with roses along the back, and many a time my scholars had admired it. But no child had ever sat in it since Willie died. When morning school was over I climbed up on one of the benches, in spite of my stiff limbs, and unfastened it. The tears stood agin in my eyes, for I fancied I could see my boy sitting in it by the side of the fireplace, and watching me while I was busy about my work. But I dusted it well, and set it down just in Willie's own place in the chimney-nook, where Pippin was still quietly squatting on the floor; for he had not run away the moment school was over, like the other children.

"There!" I said, "that's your seat now, my little lad. It belongs to my Willie, who's been in heaven these twenty years, waiting for me and father. Nobody but a good boy ought to sit on a chair that belongs to him, now he's an angel.

"I'm going to be a good boy now, and an angel some day," said the child, smiling up into my face.

"The Lord help him and me!" I said to myself, as I put the room to rights after the lads and lasses; "it's not that easy to be good."

In the evening, after school was over, and I'd helped Transome to get up and come down-stairs, and had settled him quite comfortably in his own chair out of all draughts, I told him about my new scholar.

"Why, my lass!" he cried, aw do believe as it's oud measter's own nephew? He'd a gradely fine lass for's sister, and hoo wedded beneath her, like thee, Ally. Captain John Champion was na' captain o' one o' the bettermost sort o' ships; and oud measter swore 'at he'd never forgie' her."

I coaxed Transome to tell me all he knew about it, though his words were as scarce as silver. He had seen the little lad's mother scores of times before she was married, when she was living with her brother, our landlord. But when she had died, or how her poor child came to be living in our town, he could not tell.

"Transome," I said, as I poured out his tea, "if God had asked me what I wished for as He asked Solomon, I'd have chose to have written a book."

"Eh! but aw nivir did see sech a woman for a book!" he said again, looking across the table at me with such a pleasant look that I could not keep myself from going round to kiss him. He was sore changed since we came home together along the canal, and picked flowers from morning till night; but I loved him as much, ay! ten times more now than then.

"If I could write a book," I went on, as I sat down again in my chair, "I'd write one that would prick our old master's heart to the quick."

"Eh, lass! it u'd take a pen very long and very sharp to prick his heart," he answered.

"Yet," I said, half to myself, "he's a church member, and takes the sacrament; he's chairman at the meetings. If that boy belonged to me, and me rolling in riches like him, I'd give him the best schooling in all England. I suppose he's too proud to forgive his poor dead sister for marrying below her."

"He's a gradely rich man," said Transome, shaking his head gravely, "and aw reckon he can afford to have his likes and dislikes."

"No," I answered; "the Lord hasn't made any one rich enough for that."

"Aw were wrung," he said, "rich and poor are all alike to Him; but that's hard to mind, Ally."

Well! to go on with my story. Pippin came to school for nigh upon twelve months, never missing, morning or evening. I got so used to him being close beside me in the chimney-nook, that I should not have been myself if he was away. Never, no! never had I such a scholar as him. He learned as if he was hungry and thirsty for learning, and could never have enough. Many and many a question he asked that I could not answer, any more than if he had been a little angel come from heaven to learn all about this world. What little I knew I taught him; but I soon saw he would be quickly beyond me. He was like a young bird with unfleged wings nestling under my care for a little while; but soon his wings will be strong enough to carry him away, and he would fly out of my sight, and think no more of me than a bird thinks of last year's nest, left in the branches of a tree. As soon as he could hold a pen, or make an a, and a b, he was wild to write a letter to his father. And many a letter he wrote, and directed them all "To father, Captain John Champion, on the Sea." Even Mrs. Brown had not the cruel heart to tell him that his letters could never, never find his father.

But one night, when Transome and me were sitting quiet in the fire-light as usual, I heard a low rap at the door. Now it was an understood thing that none of the scholars were to come to the house of an evening, lest they should disturb Transome, being, as I said, a silent man, and not used to children's talk since Willie died. I opened the door by a hand-breadth, and who should be breaking the rule save Pippin himself! There he stood, panting as if he had been hunted up the hill. The cold air was rushing in upon Transome through the open door, and as the boy could not find his voice to speak, I drew him inside. His handsome face was crimson, and his eyes were glowing and sparkling with excitement. I took him up to the hearth, and poked the fire into a blaze for Transome to have a good look at him.

"This is Philip Champion," said I.

Transome put down his pipe, and wiped his glasses on his sleeve, before looking at him.

"He favors his uncle," he said, as the boy faced him; "but he's the born image o' his mother, poor lass!"

"I've come to say good-bye," cried Pippin, all eagerness and excitement; "I'm going a long way off to-morrow—to London."

"Going to London!" I repeated, in amazement; "is your father come back, Pippin?" I could not get rid of the notion that his father would come back some time, and that helped the boy to be so fond of me.

"No," he said, sorrowfully; "Mrs. Brown's sure he'll never come home now. So I'm going away."

"But where to?" I asked, drawing him within my arms to the very front of the fire. I felt my heart very heavy all at once; and the cold wind, whistling round the house, made it chilly even at the fireside.

"Why," he answered, squeezing my arm to his side, "it's partly because you taught me how to write letters. Just read this up, loud, Mrs. Transome."

He drew a crumpled bit of printed paper out of his little pocket. But I could not read the small print without my glasses, which were at the end of the mantel-shelf. When I had found them, and lit a candle, I smoothed out the bit of paper, and read these words—

"A lady wishes to adopt an orphan, the child of respectable parents, and will provide for the maintenance and education of the same. A boy preferred, must come for three months on trial. All expenses paid. Address: E. D. G., P. O., London."

"Well?" I exclaimed, more puzzled than before.

"I wrote to her out of my own head," said Pippin, "and she's sent money for me to go to London to-morrow."

"I never heard of such a thing!" I cried. "Don't you know any more about her, Pippin, my dear child?"

"No," he said. "Wrote of my own self, and she's sent the money to Mrs. Brown for me to go. Only if I don't do for her, you know, I'm to be sent back in three months; and Mrs. Brown says she doesn't know who's going to have me, for she can't. She says I must go to the union, and that's a dreadful place."

"Ay—so it is," said Transome, whose eyes were fastened on the boy.

"Couldn't you have me?" he asked, coaxingly, and putting his little arm around my neck. "You're kinder to me than anybody else." Don't you let me be sent to the union—please don't."

I looked across at Transome, and his face looked happy and pleasant, and he nodded his head at me. We had lived together so long there was no need for him to speak. It was as much as if he had said, "Ally, my lass, do as thee likes!" It was getting harder work than ever to win bread for him and me; but I could not bear to think of my clever, bonny boy being sent to the union; and his uncle rolling in riches.

"Yes, yes, my laddie," I said, "if you come back we'll find a corner for you, and a morsel to eat, and a sup to drink. The Lord, He'll provide for us all. But she won't send you back; the lady in London is sure to love you, if she hasn't a heart of stone."

"But I must come back some time to pay you," answered Pippin. "I'll not forget it, never. So I've brought you a bit of money father gave me long ago. That's all I've got now; but I'll pay you when I'm a rich man."

"That's reet and honest, lad," said Transome, "'faithful in little, faithful in much.'"

It was nought but a small foreign coin, with a hole bored through it, and hung on a blue ribbon, like a medal. But it was all Pippin had, and he would not take it back again, so I put it away carefully into a small box, where I kept a curl of Willie's hair, and the little Testament he had learned to read in.

"It's earnest money," I said. "The Lord will know when to give us the rest."

So we bid Pippin good-bye, not without tears even in Transome's eyes, though he was growing too old to shed tears at little things. And I stood to watch him, in spite of the searching bitter wind blowing over the brow of the hill, as he ran down the street until he was fairly out of my sight, That night I strung up Willie's chair again to the ceiling.

No, such another child ever came again to my school. I had good scholars and bad ones, and they were constantly changing, old ones leaving and fresh ones coming in; but never one like Pippin. Not one of them had his hungry brain and loving heart; and now he was gone, all the others seemed commonplace and at a distance from me. They could not creep into my heart as Pippin had done.

He did not come back at the end of three months. We never even heard of him. He was little more than a babe in years, and children cannot remember as old folks remember their friends. Mrs. Brown told me, when I made a purpose journey to inquire after him, that the lady had written to say he was safe and quite content, but she did not wish him to have any communication with his former home. Soon after that Mrs. Brown went away to live in Manchester, so we could ask for no more news about Pippin. I had, at times, an unsatisfied yearning when I thought of him; but, as years slipped away, I only recollected him as a child, who was dearest to me next to my own Willie.

Transome's rheumatism did not mend as he grew older and more infirm, and the burden of earning the rent as well as the living fell upon me. But times were very prosperous in the town just then, and trade was increasing every year. New mills were built along the river, and the mill-hands had constant work. Money was plentiful, and not a soul grumbled when I raised the school wage just enough to pay our rent.

Ah! I shall never, never forget that sunshiny evening early in May, when I followed my scholars down the garden, and stood for a moment or two leaning over the wicket. The broad open land lay all before me, with a great sweep of sky-line resting on the brows of distant hills. The sky was all blue; and the yellow stone-crop on the thatch shone like gold. The withy branches were covered with soft, fluffy little tufts, called goslings by children; and though the poplar-tree, growing so tall and slender at at the corner of the house, had no leaves yet, there were tassels of long crimson catkins hanging on its topmost twigs, and floating down when the soft pleasant spring breeze shook them a little. There were the rosemary and lavender bushes, that I had carried all the way from home when I was married, to plant under our kitchen window, and they were just coming into bud. I looked down what used to be the dingle, and thought of the primroses and hawthorn and bluebells, that used to grow in its green and grassy nooks. It was no wonder that I could not help shaking my head a little at the ugly houses that had sprung up in their place. Yet when I turned my back upon them, and could see nothing but our own home, with the blue sky only behind the thatched roof, I was more than content.

"The Lord knows exactly what I love best," I said to myself as I walked back up the garden path more slowly and toilsomely than when I was a young wife; "I wouldn't change it for the grandest house in all the town."

Transome had been hearty enough that afternoon to go down to his old master's to carry the month's rent. It was not far to go, but he would be weary and worn-out more than enough before he could climb up home again; so it would not do for me to loiter and tarry in the sweet air and sunshine. I hurried in to redd up the house, pile away the benches, and lay the tea all ready. The benches began to feel much heavier than they used to be. "It's the grasshopper," I thought, smiling to myself; "the grasshopper shall be a burden. Yes, yes! that time'll come to me as well as poor Transome. But God Almighty, He'll help me to bear the burden and heat of the day."

But I had not put everything as it should be before Transome came in slowly, slowly dragging one foot after another, and groaning heavily. Poor old man! I had not got my glasses on for fear of breaking them over my rough work, and I could not see his face clearly, but his groans went right to my heart. He had never given way so badly before, and I hastened to pull his arm-chair forward.

"Transome," I said, "is the pain so very bad this evening?"

"Ally!" he answered, in a stammering, choking voice; "Ally, lass! aw've gotten ablow."

All at once his old gray head fell on my shoulder, and he broke out into bitter sobbing and wailing, like a little child crying on its mother's bosom; only it was a thousand times more pitiful than a child, who can be hushed and sung to sleep in its worst trouble.

"What blow, Transome?" I cried; "who'd strike an old man like thee?"

"Th' oud measter," he said, amid his sobs; "we've got to go, Ally—to quit. He's goin' to sell th' oud place, to build bigger housen on; and we're bound to quit in a month's time. Oh, Ally, my lass!"

It fell upon me that sudden I was quite stunned and dazed at first, as if, as Transome said, somebody had struck me a heavy blow. All the house-place seemed swimming round me. I could hear his sobs and groans; but I felt as if I could not understand why he was in such trouble. Then all at once it came over me, like a great wave, and all the trouble stood out clear. I felt as if the house was crumbling away. Better it should fall upon us, and crush us to death, than we be driven out of it in our old age.

That was a night to be remembered. We sat down to the tea-table, but we could not swallow a morsel, though our throats were parched and our tongues dry. Whichever way we looked, all was darkness and blackness. There was no one to comfort him nor me, and no one to help. Neither had any hope of changing our master's mind. After we were gone to bed and both lay awake, making pretence to sleep, I could see no way—no way at all—out of our bitter sorrow and distress.

"Lord!" I heard Transome whisper, in the dead of the night, "only gie us strength to be faithful in little, and aw 'm sure thee'll gie us much when the reet time is come."

But how could we be faithful in little, if even that little was taken from us?

CHRIST ENTERING JERUSALEM.

By Mrs. M. Baxter.

S. S. Lesson for March 11, Matt. 21:1-16. Golden Text, Ps. 118:26.

Ver. 1-3. The Close of a Momentous Journey—The Commission to the Disciples a Proof of Superhuman Knowledge—The Consent of the Owners Foreseen—Ver. 4, 5. The Prophecy of Zech. 9:9 Fulfilled—Christ's Usual Concern for the Fulfilment of Old Testament Prediction—Ver. 6-9. On the Colt (see Luke 19:30)—The Spread Garments a Usual Homage to Oriental Royalty (see II Kings 9:13)—Leaves Rather than Branches—Evidences of Popular Recognition—Ver. 10, 11. Citizens of the Capital Enlightened by Provincials—Ver. 12, 13. Probably the Next Day (see Mark 11:12-15)—A Second Cleansing—Executing a Law not Enforced by Proper Authorities—Ver. 14. A Fit Work for the Temple—Ver. 15, 16. Christ's Explicit Acceptance of Homage.

IN the life of our blessed Lord there was no pressure, no hurry, no perplexity. He could say what very few of His disciples could say, "I do always those things which please Him." (John 8:29.) He lived in the consciousness of the truth, which is left in His Word, for us, "All things work together for good to them that love God." (Rom. 8:28.) Consequently, Jesus never recognized an interruption, and was never tried by it; it was permitted by His Father, and that was enough. On His way up to Jerusalem, having set His face as a flint (Isa. 50:7), He was teaching His disciples, and "as they departed from Jericho, a great multitude followed Him." Jesus did not complain of the distraction and noise, which necessarily accompanied such a throng, although it could not but have broken the thread of his discourse, and interfered with His teaching, which was so soon to come to an end. Jesus could trust the Holy Ghost, whom He would send to guide His own into all truth, and to bring to their remembrance whatsoever He had said unto them; and He could trust His Father's love, that whatsoever should seem to interfere with His teaching should, in the end, only go to illustrate and send home to heart and conscience all which He had said. Worry, vexation, impatience, hurry, are all and are forms of unbelief. A Christian is worried, vexed, impatient, hurried, when he thinks that things are working together against his spiritual good, against his bodily health, and against the work of God in his hands. He beholds circumstances mightier than God, and frets against them. He does not see God in them, does not feel that God is in them, and so he walks in a vain shadow and disquiets himself in vain (Ps. 39:6), instead of confidently reckoning on God, and believing that He will extricate him from all perplexities and bring greater glory to Himself out of them.

On His way up to Jerusalem, Jesus passed through Jericho. There, in addition to the distraction of the multitude, awaited Jesus—"two blind men sitting by the wayside, when they heard that Jesus passed by, cried out, saying Have mercy on us, O Lord, Thou Son of David." The evangelists, Mark and Luke, say it was one blind man, but, wherever there is a man physically or spiritually blind, there is another, often many others, not far away. The multitude were not so patient under interruptions as Jesus was; they "rebuked them, because they should hold their peace." The multitude thought of themselves—they wanted to hear the words of the great Teacher, and they could not brook that two blind beggars should interfere with the comfort of such a large congregation. There are many congregations in churches and chapels whose one object is to enjoy the preacher; they sit in cushioned pews, in a nicely warmed and nicely appointed church, and expect an intellectual treat, or, maybe, a little spiritual comfort; and it would be most unseemly in such a congregation for a lost sinner, just alive to the fact that he was on the way to endless perdition, to cry out aloud, "Have mercy on me, O Lord." Yet the sympathies of the angels of God are not with the comfortable, cushioned hearers: there is not joy in heaven over every one who is at ease in Zion, but "there is joy in the presence of the angels of God over one sinner that repenteth."

Another Interruption

The One in all that crowd who sympathized with the blind men was He who was most of all interrupted by them. Jesus could understand the intensity of earnestness with which they grasped the first opportunity they had had in their whole life-time to receive their sight. With them it was

Now or Never.

When a lost sinner comes to this point, when a believer in conflict about indwelling sin comes to this point, when one who is sick, blind, or deaf comes to this point, now or never, "now is the accepted time, behold, now is the day of salvation;" then something happens. "Jesus stood still and called them, and said, What will ye that I shall do unto you?" "What will ye?" Could it be that He who has all power, both in heaven and on earth, should put Himself and His Almighty resources thus at the command of two blind beggars? Yes; it was even so. They did not say, as hundreds of half-convicted souls say in inquiry meetings, "Not to-night." No; without a moment's hesitation, they cried, "Lord, that our eyes may be opened. So Jesus had compassion on them, and touched their eyes, and immediately their eyes received sight, and they followed Him." The opened eyes were used to keep them close to Jesus.

"And when they drew nigh unto Jerusalem, and were come to Bethphage, unto the Mount of Olives, then sent Jesus two disciples, saying unto them, "Go ye into the village over against you, and straightway ye shall find an ass tied, and a colt with her; loose them, and bring them unto Me. And if any man shall say aught unto you, ye shall say, The Lord hath need of them; and straightway he will send them." These were the simple orders for the triumphal entry into His own city of Him who was the King of kings and the Lord of lords! No wonder He was "despised and rejected of men," who look on the appearance, and judge from the outside. He had, "no form nor comeliness," in the eyes of such as see glory in waving banners, bands of music, triumphal chariots and flattering orations! The glory of Jesus was not in a manifestation of the greatness of man, but it was

God Manifest in the Flesh.

The glory was God's indwelling. Thus, in His triumphant entry into Jerusalem, there was nothing to distract the eye from God in Christ. Anyone who has an artist's eye shrinks from anything in the bonnet or the dress which attracts the eye from a beautiful face: the true artist instinctively dresses so that the face, and not the dress, may strike the eye. In the triumph of Jesus there was the same principle. The asses' colt, the coarse garments of the poor, in the place of lordly trappings, and the hurriedly cut branches of palm-trees, mingled with an extemporized carpet of yet more of the homely outer garments of the poor, did not distract the eye from Him who rode in meek and quiet dignity upon "an ass, and a colt the foal of an ass," as had been foretold (Jer. 9:9) more than five hundred years before. In the triumphs of kings and generals, the trophies of their victories were generally carried with them—kings in chains, slaves in chains, captive officers of the rival armies, captured horses, elephants, camels or lions, would be led in procession. Jesus had around Him souls saved from everlasting death, hearts set free from sin and misery, blind with restored sight, and deaf with restored hearing, those healed of all manner of diseases, and all of these acquainted with the living God. The kings of the earth exhibit their bound ones, but Jesus was surrounded with freed men, whom He, the Son of God, the Son of Man, had made free indeed. In the ready devotion which laid their garments at His feet, they spoke of devoted hearts surrendered to His service, and the palm branches told of a victory greater than that of the kings of the earth, a victory over sin and Satan for ever.

"I receive not honor from men," said our blessed Lord; but this sudden and most unwonted triumph was an exception. No doubt, those who looked that He should establish an earthly kingdom, were grievously disappointed; there was nothing in this strange procession to oppose the Roman power and rid the Jews of their hated subjection to a foreign power. No; Jesus was come to establish a kingdom which is "not meat and drink," nor yet horses and chariots, armies and landed possessions, but "righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Ghost." (Rom. 14:17.) There was no sound of the trumpet in the triumph of Jesus, the human voice was the only music which reached His ear, but believing hearts took up the words of the Psalmist, and cried, "Hosanna to the Son of David! Blessed is He that cometh in the name of the Lord; Hosanna in the highest!" "Hosanna!" "Save now!" They thought of an outward deliverance, and knew not that, six days later, Jesus would indeed by bearing its sins in His own body on the tree! Does it strike any of my readers as strange that, while Jesus, in this moment of His greatest triumph, was so lowly, some of His followers are so hurt if people do not make a great fuss about them! Have we not all of us, some time or other, been hurt that we were not more appreciated and thought, in our foolish conceit, that it was the Lord's cause for which we were jealous. The yoke of Jesus makes us "meek and lowly in heart." (Matt. 11:29.)

When Jesus was come into Jerusalem, "all the city was moved, saying, Who is this?" "He was in the world, and the world was made by Him, and the world knew Him not. He came unto His own, and His own received Him not." (John 1:10, 11.) However great a work of God may be going on in a place, there are numbers of the people who know nothing about it: souls are saved and bodies are healed next door to them or in the very same street, but they know nothing about it; it is not in their line. But when the great day of account comes, will they not be held responsible? The multitude replied, "This is Jesus, the prophet of Nazareth of Galilee." Arrived in Jerusalem, Jesus did not ride on His lowly steed to the Sanhedrim or to the home of the Roman governor; the temple was the point of attraction to Him. It was His Father's house, and there He was at home. Those who had expected Him to restore the kingdom to Israel must have been strangely disappointed, when He occupied Himself in clearing the temple of the money changers, and all who were there for another purpose than to worship. He said, "It is written, My house shall be called the house of prayer; but ye have made it a den of thieves." Having cleansed the temple, He healed the blind and the lame there, ever occupied with others rather than Himself.

But even this little triumph of Jesus was sufficient to arouse the enmity of the chief-priests and scribes; they were mortified that so large a multitude had been attracted to Jesus, mortified that there were such manifest tokens of His power, and they reproached Him that the multitude and the children cried, "Hosanna to the Son of David!" Jesus referred them to Scripture, "Have ye never read, Out of the mouth of babes and sucklings Thou hast perfected praise." Such was the earthly triumph of the Son of God!

An Illustrated Work on the Unfulfilled Prophecies of the Bible, by the Rev. M. Baxter, entitled, "Forty Coming Wonders," may be had from the office of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 63 Bible House, New York, by remitting 75 cents. It is a book of 528 pages, is handsomely bound in cloth, and contains fifty full-page pictures and diagrams representing the scenes described in the prophecies of Daniel and in the book of the Revelation. It also contains a résumé of the opinions of other expositors, and extracts carefully collated from the works of all the most eminent writers on prophecy from the earliest ages of the Christian era down to those of recent date. It thus forms the most useful and complete guide the student can have on entering the study of that portion of the Word of God.

JESUS ALWAYS.

I always go to Jesus,
When troubled or distressed;
I always find a refuge
Upon His loving breast.
I tell Him all my trials,
I tell Him all my grief;
And while my lips are speaking
He gives my heart relief.

When full of dread forebodings,
And flowing o'er with tears,
He calms away my sorrows,
And hushes all my fears.
He comprehends my weakness,
The peril I am in,
And He supplies the armor
I need to vanquish sin.

When those are cold and faithless
Who once were fond and true,
With careless hearts forsaking
The old friends for the new,
I turn to Him whose friendship
Knows neither change nor end:
I always find in Jesus
An ever faithful Friend.

I always go to Jesus;
No matter when or where
I seek his gracious presence,
I'm sure to find him there.
In times of joy or sorrow,
Whate'er my need may be,
I always go to Jesus,
And Jesus comes to me.

PRINCE OSCAR, of Sweden—MISS EBBA MUNCK, His Fiancee—A View in Stockholm.

PRINCE OSCAR OF SWEDEN,
And Miss Munck, his Bride-Elect.

Royal Prejudices Against Plebeian Marriages—The Origin of the Swedish Royal House—Lawyer Bernadotte, of the French Bar—Napoleon Making Kings—The Descendant of the Lawyer Scorning the Descendant of the Noble—Miss Munck's Circumspection and Modesty—Her Hospital Service—The Queen Won Over—The King's Opposition—Arrangements for the Wedding—Stockholm and Its People.

ANOTHER chapter is soon to be added to those love romances which have a man of royal lineage and a girl of humble origin for central figures. Such marriages of pure inclination are called mesalliances in monarchical Europe. Among royalty there exists a deep-rooted prejudice against such alliances, and, in order to prevent the dreaded admixture of plebeian blood with the blue blood of the kings, love-matches of the kind alluded to are always strenuously opposed. The latest case in point is the approaching marriage of Prince Oscar of Sweden, to Miss Ebba Munck. Prince Oscar, whose portrait appears on our frontispiece, was born at Stockholm in November, 1859, and is now therefore in the twenty-ninth year of his age. Miss Munck is about one year older. It is stated that the young lady's lineage is in reality more aristocratic than that of the Prince himself. The of Sweden was an obscure attorney named Bernadotte, in a small French town. When a young man, he wasted his affections on one of the maidens of the district, who, after giving his suit encouragement, jilted him for what she considered a better match, in the person of a neighboring farmer. But success did not smile on her, and she was reduced to such poverty as obliged her to become a laundress. Bernadotte meanwhile, from being a private in the French army, rose gradually in the favor of Napoleon I. until he attained the rank of general in the Emperor's victorious army. So much confidence had Napoleon in him, that when, desiring to strengthen his position in Europe, the latter gave his brother Joseph the throne of Spain, he gave Bernadotte the throne of Sweden. Hence, the family of the present King of Sweden was not royal until two generations ago, and the blood that flows in its veins is, therefore, not very strongly impregnated with the royal element.

The Swedish royal family has, however, some claims on higher than those of ancient lineage. Its members, especially the ladies of the House, have been famous for their love of the people, and their efforts to alleviate their sorrow and suffering. The mother of the present King was a conspicuous illustration. She was a grand-daughter of the beautiful Empress Josephine, whom Napoleon divorced. She married Oscar I., who was the second of the Bernadottes to reign over Sweden, and from the date of her settlement in the country grew in love and respect of the people. When her first child was born, the thoughts which were suggested to her mind by the comfort and luxury in which the royal babe was cradled, were of babes, just as much beloved, whose mothers could not provide common comforts for them. During her convalescence she thought out a scheme out of which grew a noble institution, to which many infants in poor homes all through the country owed health, if not life itself. She also introduced the home cultivation of silk, and had the necessary white mulberry-trees brought and planted at her own cost in Sweden. Aged and invalid women and delicate children were able by this industry to add to the family income, and lose their sense of dependence.

Diamonds Transformed.

Another noble lady of the Bernadotte house is the Princess Eugenie. She is the daughter of the last-mentioned lady, the sister of the present King, and therefore the aunt of the young man, whose portrait we give. A large fortune was bequeathed to her, when she was a child, by her grandmother. A part of it consisted in magnificent diamonds, collected at vast labor and with great care in matching them for color and shape. Many young ladies, especially those about a court, would have treasured these gems, but the Princess was interested in the erection of a great public hospital, and funds were lacking to make the institution the beneficent agency she had planned; she therefore sold her diamonds, and finished and endowed the hospital. She visited it incognita afterward but in one of the beds was a patient who recognized her. As tears of gratitude ran over his wan cheeks, the Princess said, "Now I see my diamonds again."

The Prince and the Maid.

The acquaintance, which has developed into a romance and has distressed the family, originated in the household of the Crown Princess of Sweden, the wife of Prince Oscar's elder brother. She is a daughter of the Grand Duke of Baden, and a granddaughter of the Emperor William of Germany, and in October, 1885, she had amongst her maids of honor a young Swedish lady, Miss Munck, known for her beauty, grace and charming manner. Wherever she went she was admired; but although of high birth, Miss Munck was poor and an orphan. Her father, Colonel Munck, had left her an untarnished name, which had been borne by a long line of ancestors—all gallant soldiers—but very little money. Eventually, Miss Munck, yielding to the pressing advice of her friends, from a wealthy young officer belonging to a crack cavalry regiment, and everything was prepared for the wedding. The day was fixed, the "trousseau" was bought, and presents had arrived, when Miss Munck suddenly broke off her engagement, for reasons which convinced her that she did not possess the exclusive affections of her suitor. She resisted all attempts at a reconciliation, and retired from court for some time. When she returned, her former high spirits had gone, and her face bore an expression of melancholy, which, however, enhanced her beauty.

Accepted an Offer of Marriage

It was then that she met Prince Oscar, who had been for a two years' trip round the world in the Swedish frigate Vanadis. After his return his friends discovered that he was in love with her, and the fact likewise became evident to Miss Munck herself. She could not fail to be complimented by the admiration of the young sailor Prince, but, being familiar with court laws and regulations, she was aware of the great gulf of caste which lay between them. According to the Swedish Constitution, a Prince marrying any lady but one of a royal family, forfeits his rights to the Throne and his privileges as a member of the Royal Family. Miss Munck had too much nobility of mind to be willing for her royal lover to make sacrifices for her sake, and she again left the Swedish court. She announced to her relatives her intention never to marry, and and the charge of a ward in one of the large charity hospitals of Stockholm. Her conduct won the admiration of the King and Queen; and during several months she performed the services of one of the lady nurses at the "Home for the Sick," established by the Queen, in place of a lady who had become an invalid from overwork. Prince Oscar at length ascertained the occupation of the girl he loved, and discovered her retreat. By the time he found her, however, overwork and watching had laid her prostrate on a bed of sickness. He waited anxiously for her convalescence, and then renewed his suit. Miss Munck finally admitted that she reciprocated the Prince's love, but no pleadings could induce her to consent to marry him. On one condition alone would she yield, and that was, that the Queen herself should give explicit sanction to the match. This sanction the Queen, who had herself grown to love the girl, eventually gave.

The remaining obstacle to the union, and one that for a time seemed insuperable, was the opposition of the King. He was opposed to an alliance that would do nothing to strengthen his Throne, when many such alliances were attainable. In vain did Prince Oscar at first plead that as his brother, the Crown Prince, had already two sons, his own chances of ever ascending the throne, were practically nil, and that he therefore might be allowed to abandon the privileges of Royalty and renounce his interest in the succession without imperiling the perpetuation of the family dynasty; but as the time wore on, and the King saw his son could not be influenced in the matter, His Majesty was induced to yield, principally owing to the entreaties of the Queen, who was on the eve of an operation from which she was not expected to recover. The King could not resist the pleading of his beloved wife, whom he feared he was going to lose, and gave his consent.

In virtue of the Swedish Constitution, Prince Oscar will lose, besides his rights to the throne, his titles of "Royal Highness" and "Duke of Götland," the yearly allowance granted by the Swedish Diet, and his palace at Stockholm. He will in future be called Prince Bernadotte.

He will retain his position as commander in the Swedish Navy, which rank he has earned fairly in the ordinary course of promotion. The Prince, it is said, seems the happiest of men. He and his affianced bride are now with the Queen of Sweden, who is travelling in England. The wedding is announced to take place on the 15th of this month, and the ceremony will be conducted by eminent Swedish clergymen. After their return from their honeymoon the young couple will settle at Carlskrona, a naval establishment in southern Sweden, where the Prince will be stationed.

The Bride-elect,

(whose portrait appears on our frontispiece) is described as of medium height, with fair hair, and large and expressive blue eyes. She has a certain dignity of manner, though quiet and unobtrusive, seeming to evade rather than court observation in any way. By the Queen she is treated with great kindness and affection, and Her Majesty and she are inseparable. Miss Munck's family belong to the lower order of Swedish nobility.

Precedents of Royal Mesalliances.

There are quite a number of precedents regarding so-called mesalliances within the recollection of the present generation. Prince Carl, the brother of the Grand Duke of Baden, married a plain Miss Von Beust; Prince Gustav de Saxe Weimer, Mlle. Marcocchia; the reigning Duke of Saxe Meiningen, a Mlle. Franz; the Count of Bari, a half brother of the last King of Naples, Francis II., a Mlle. Marconnay. The Princess Carl of Hesse was a Miss Von Grote; Princess Julius of Schleswig-Holstein, sister-in-law of the King of Denmark, was the charming Mlle. Riegsaer, whose father was only a captain in the Saxon army. The Princess Nicolas of Nassau was plain Mlle. Pouchkin; the widow of the late King of Portugal, Dom Ferdinand, was an American, a Miss Henules; Prince Louis de Bourbon gave his hand to a penniless creole beauty, Mlle. Hamel; and the Duchess Nicolas of Oldenburg was once known as Mlle. Bulazel. Nor have princesses hesitated to bestow their hand where their heart has already been given. It is a

Historical Fact

that Anne of Austria was secretly married to Mazarin; so was Marie Louise, after the death of Napoleon, to the Austrian colonel, Count Neipperg; and the Duchess of Berry left several children by her union with an Italian nobleman. The Princess Frederica of Hanover, a daughter of King George V., followed the advice of Queen Victoria to become the Baroness of Pawel-Rammingen. Princess Elizabeth of Saxony, King John's daughter, mother of the present Queen of Italy, married, in the first instance, the Duke of Genoa, Victor Emanuel's brother, and afterwards the Marquis of Rapallo. Princess Frederica of Oldenburg is the Baroness de Washington. Princess Henrietta of Schleswig-Holstein, the aunt of the future Empress of Germany, gave up rank and position to wed a simple professor, Dr. Esmarch, the eminent German surgeon.

THE CITY OF STOCKHOLM,

a picture of which is given on our first page, is the metropolis of Sweden, and is the centre of a large trade in pitch, tar and timber, which are exported to different parts of the world. It has some exceedingly handsome buildings, commercial, religious and philanthropic, and parks and gardens of considerable extent, and, during the summer-time, of much beauty. It stands in a situation remarkable for its enchanting scenery and for its favorable position; and from the fact that it is built upon seven rocky islands, it is often styled

The Venice of the North.

Near the Palace, which is a magnificent building, is the Church of St. Nicholas (a picture of the interior of this church appears on page 157). This ancient edifice derives its name from Nicholas Breakspeare, who was a missionary in the city, but was in 1154 made Pope of Rome, with the title of Adrian IV. He was the haughty prelate who compelled King Frederick I. to prostrate himself in the dust before him, kiss his foot, hold the stirrup of his saddle while he mounted, and then lead by the bridle the white palfrey on which he rode. In this building the Kings of Sweden and Norway are crowned. The Church of St. Catherine, not far off, is on the spot called Blood Bath, where ninety-seven eminent citizens were put to death by Christian II. in 1520, for some heinous but unproved offence against the laws.

The Kingdoms of Sweden and Norway were united under one sovereign in 1815. The dual kingdom embraces the entire northwestern peninsula of Europe, usually called Scandinavia, and numbers about six million of inhabitants. The majority of the Swedes are Lutheran Protestants, and, owing to a system of excellent national instruction, are well educated and intelligent. Agriculture is a favorite industry, a large number of the farmers being owners of the land they cultivate.

Every since the year 1559, the Swedes have made vigorous efforts to propagate the gospel in heathen lands. The special sphere of their operations was Lapland, and their work was conducted under royal auspices. Gustavus Vasa headed the missionary movement for the enlightenment of the Laps, and succeeding monarchs threw the weight of their influence into the Christian enterprise. In 1775 the New Testament, translated into the Lap dialect, was published. The mission was far from prosperous, however, and after years of hoping against hope, it was reluctantly abandoned. Nor is this to be wondered at, if the reports of the customs and propensities of both priests and people are true. After an interval of nearly three centuries, the spiritual needs of Lapland again engrossed the attention of the Swedes. In 1835, was formed, and sent forth a young man of burning piety and irrepressible enthusiasm in the cause of Christ, named Carl Ludovic Tellstroem, a convert of the Wesleyan Mission in Stockholm, as a catechist to Lapland. He had many difficulties to encounter, from the migratory and dissipated habits of the people, but by following them to their markets and fairs, with his Bible, to instruct them in the truths of the gospel, there is reason to believe that with God's blessing his incessant and apostolic labors were productive of good results. Schools were afterwards established for the training of the rising generation, and the children were taught, fed and clothed at the expense of the society, and at the end of two years were sent home with tracts and books to interest and instruct their parents, families and friends. The British and Foreign Bible Society have for many years been doing a most gratifying work in the country.

The Swedish Missionary Society

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

Five Hundred Converts at Once.—The Pastor of a church in Scotland said: "At the town of Kirk O'Shotts, the minister who was to preach the communion sermon there thought to himself, 'How unfit I am to preach; I shall not go. There will be people gathered from all parts of the country to hear the gospel, and there will be present older and more experienced ministers than I; how much better they would deliver the Master's message, and if I do not go, some experienced pastor will break the Bread of Life to the people.' He rose from his knees, saying, 'I shall not go.' Just then the word of the prophet came to him, 'Have I ever been a dry place or a wilderness to thee?' He stopped, and turning, said, 'No, Lord, Thou hast never been a wilderness or a dry place to my soul. I will go in the strength of the Lord.' And he did go, trusting in Him who is the strength of the weak. That day, at the communion service, over 500 souls gave themselves to Christ, passing from darkness into the marvellous light of His kingdom. It is the weak things of this world that God uses to confound the strong, and a weak though trusting servant is one that can be made mighty for the purpose of God."

A Student and His Mother.—The Rev. Mr. Stalker narrates: "A short time ago a mother showed me a letter which she had received from her son, a student in one of the great colleges. He stated that one day a number of companions came into his room and asked if he would take part in a certain amusement. Without thinking, he answered good-humoredly that he would. But as soon as they were gone from his room he began to think of his Christian mother, and the godly home which he had so recently left. The mother had made a friend of her son; there had never been any secrets between them; and as he now thought of his home, and of her, he was not at all sure that the amusement in which he had promised to take part would be quite agreeable to his mother. Getting up from his desk he went to his friends, and said, 'You must consider that promise off until I hear from home.' The letter which I was shown was that in which he asked his mother's opinion concerning the purposed amusement, and promised that he would be guided by her advice and decision. What a grand thing it would be if Christians would just treat God as that student did his mother. Let us go to Him and ask His guidance on every point."

A Life Lost for a Pocketbook.—A Friend narrated the following: "I read lately about a shipwreck. The ship was slowly but surely going down, and the last lifeboat was being put off. The mate of the vessel was about to step in, when, starting back, he exclaimed, 'Oh, I have forgotten my purse.' The captain shouted to him to come away, and leave his purse; but the mate called out, 'I'll be back in a minute,' and dived below into his cabin for his much-loved purse. As he disappeared the vessel gave a lurch, and those in the boat were reluctantly compelled to push off, and they were only just in time, for with a roll the vessel sunk like lead beneath the waters. Next morning, the dead body of the mate was washed up on the neighboring beach. In his hand was rigidly clasped the purse of money for which he had risked and lost his life. It was opened, and what did it contain, think you? Only eighteenpence! For that paltry sum he had lost his life. Similarly, there are some men who are losing their souls for something of ridiculously small value. To gratify an evil passion, to gain the favor of some companion, to accumulate more or less wealth to obtain a certain social or commercial position—for these they rashly spurn the love of God, and sacrifice their never-dying souls."

A Sceptic on His Knees.—The Rev. Wm. Ross observed: "On New Year's morning, 1887, there came to me an intoxicated man, who boasted that he had never been overcome in argument by a believer in God, and glorified in the fact that he had turned some from being nominal Christians to declare themselves irreligious like himself. After speaking to him as kindly as I could for some time, I inquired, 'Can you tell me who it is that says, "To-day, if you will hear my voice, harden not your hearts"?' 'It is the Holy Spirit,' was his reply. 'And can you tell me who it is that says, "To-morrow, and at a more convenient season, I will hear you concerning this thing?"' He would not answer at first, but when I pressed him, he replied, 'It is the evil spirit.' 'Now,' I said, 'you have acknowledged that the Holy Spirit says, "To-day," and the evil one, "To-morrow." Now I hope that never again will you strive by ridicule to keep your fellow-creatures from coming to Christ at once. To do so, when you know the truth, would be inhuman.' Before I left him that morning he was upon his knees asking for mercy from that God whom, but lately, he had been despising and deriding, and he is now, I am happy to say, one of the most earnest and energetic Christians in the city where I live. 'Is there anything too hard for the Lord?'"

A Mother's Sad Disappointment.—Mr. R. B. Stewart said: "There was a friend of mine who was coming home from abroad with his son, who was unwell. His wife went to South Italy to meet them. She was there some time before them, and was anxiously awaiting their arrival. As soon as the ship came in sight she took a boat and was rowed out to meet them. When they got within shouting distance, they hailed the ship, and shouting the name of the lad, asked if he were on board and well. Answer came that he was there, but in a dying condition. The mother asked if she might come on board, but was told that the ship was under quarantine, and before she could get to see her son she must get an order from the consul. She pleaded, but the captain was firm; she could not come unless she had the warrant from the consul. 'Is he very ill?' she asked, as the boat was turned towards the shore. 'Yes, very ill,' was the reply. She procured the order and hastened back to the ship, and as they neared it they shouted, 'We have got the order.' The captain helped the mother on board and said, 'I am sorry that since you left the side of the ship your son has passed away; the dear lad is dead.' It was that she might get her boy's last words that the mother had struggled, and now she was too late. Does not this remind one of the parable of the ten virgins, five of whom found they had no oil, and going to buy oil, came back too late?"

A Most Risky Venture.—A Minister Related: "The local secretary of a Y. M. C. A. was dealing with a young man, who, in the course of conversation, said to him, 'And do you mean to tell me, sir, that I have to give myself wholly up to Jesus Christ?' 'Yes, that is it,' replied the secretary affectionately; 'and you have to do it at once if you would be saved. We have not a moment except the present that we can call our own.' The young man coolly answered, 'I do not believe that, and I will put this matter off, for a time at least.' At half-past one A. M. next morning the secretary's door-bell was violently rung, and a messenger breathlessly asked if he had spoken to a young man about his soul at a meeting last night. On being told that he had, the messenger said that the young man had hardly reached home when he was suddenly taken seriously ill, and was now very anxious about his soul, and wished the friend who had spoken to him but a few hours before to come to him at once. The secretary went, pointed out to him the way of salvation, but left without producing much impression. The young man lingered in much agony both in body and mind, but it seemed impossible for him to accept the Saviour. Just as he was at his last gasp, he almost shrieked, 'Lord Jesus, save me, I perish.' God only knows whether he was saved. It was a terrible risk to run. No one can reject the blessed Son of God and think to take Him up at any turn of the road. If you reject Him now, there is no promise for the future. 'Now is the accepted time: now is the day of salvation.'"

CHRIST THE SONG.

Dr. Talmage's Sermon, Preached Last Sunday Morning, March 4, 1888:

When one hundred and twenty new members were admitted to the Church at the Brooklyn Tabernacle. The present number of communicants is now four thousand one hundred and fifty.

"Now will I sing to my Well Beloved a song concerning my Beloved." Isa. 5.

The Grandest Pantheism—The Celestial Sounding-Board—An Electric Word—Christ Our Song—The Cradle Song—Echoes from Heavenly Gates—A Protective Influence—The Tears Over the Empty Cradle—The Old Man's Song—The Tune of Fifty Years Ago—The Song of Salvation—The Night Song—John Welch's Plaid—People who need a Song for the Night—The Sabbath-Song—His Birth Celebrated—The Everlasting Song—A Sailor's Song—The Children's Song—The Heavenly Song—Angelic Songs heard by the Dying Wife of a Clergyman—A Victorious King Prostrate on a Battle-field.

THE most fascinating theme for a heart properly attuned is the Saviour. There is something in the morning light to suggest Him, and something in the evening shadow to speak His praise. The flower breathes Him, the star shines Him, the cascade proclaims Him, all the voices of nature chant Him. Whatever is grand, bright and beautiful, if you only listen to it, will speak His praise. When I come in the summer-time and pluck a flower, I think of Him who is "the Rose of Sharon and the Lily of the Valley." When I see in the fields a lamb, I say, "Behold the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world." When, in very hot weather, I come under a projecting cliff, I say:

"Rock of Ages, cleft for me,
Let me hide myself in Thee!"

Over the old-fashioned pulpits there was a sounding-board. The voice of the minister rose to the sounding-board, and then was struck back again upon the ears of the people. And the ten thousand voices of earth rising, find which strikes back to the ear of all the nations the praises of Christ. The heavens tell His glory, and the earth shows His handiwork. The Bible thrills with one great story of redemption. Upon a blasted and faded paradise it poured the light of a glorious restoration. It looked upon Abraham from the ram caught in the thicket. It spoke in the bleating of the herds driven down to Jerusalem for sacrifice. It put infinite pathos into the speech of uncouth fishermen. It lifted Paul into the seventh heaven; and it broke upon the ear of St. John with the brazen trumpets and the doxology of the elders, and the rushing wings of the seraphim.

Instead of waiting until you get sick and worn out before you speak the praise of Christ, while your heart is happiest, and your step is lightest, and your fortunes smile, and your pathway blossoms, and the overarching heavens drop upon you benediction, speak praises of Jesus.

The Electric Word.

The old Greek orators, when they saw their audiences inattentive and slumbering, had one word with which they would rouse them up to the greatest enthusiasm. In the midst of their orations they would stop and cry out, "Marathon!" and the people's enthusiasm would be unbounded. My hearers, though you may have been borne down with sin, and though trouble and trials and temptation may have come upon you, and you feel hardly like looking up, methinks there is one grand, royal, imperial word that ought to rouse your soul to infinite rejoicing, and that word is "Jesus!"

Taking the suggestion of the text, I shall speak to you of Christ, our song. I remark, in the first place, that Christ ought to be

The Cradle Song.

What our mothers sang to us when they put us to sleep is singing yet. We may have forgotten the words; but they went into the fibre of our soul, and will forever be a part of it. It is not so much what you formally teach your children as what you sing to them. A hymn has wings and can fly everywhither. One hundred and fifty years after you are dead, and "Old Mortality" has worn out his chisel in re-cutting your name on the tombstone, your great-grandchildren will be singing the song which this afternoon you sing to your little ones gathered about your knee. There is a place in Switzerland where, if you distinctly utter your voice, there come back ten or fifteen echoes, and every Christian song sung by a mother in the ear of her child shall have ten thousand echoes coming back from all the gates of heaven. Oh, if mothers only knew the power of this sacred spell, how much oftener the little ones would be gathered, and all our homes would chime with the songs of Jesus!

Preserving Power.

We want some counteracting influence upon our children. The very moment your child steps into the street, he steps into the path of temptation. There are foul-mouthed children who would like to besoil your little ones. It will not do to keep your boys and girls in the house and make them house-plants; they must have fresh air and recreation. God save your children from the scathing, blasting, damning influence of the streets! I know of no counteracting influence but the power of Christian culture and example. Hold before your little ones the pure life of Jesus; let that name be the word that shall exorcise evil from their hearts. Give to your instruction all the fascination of music, morning, noon and night; let it be Jesus the cradle-song.

This is important if your children grow up, but perhaps they may not. Their pathway may be short, Jesns may be wanting that child. Then there will be a soundless step in the dwelling, and the youthful pulse will begin to flutter, and little hands will be lifted for help. You cannot help. And a great agony will pinch at your heart, and

and the nursery will be empty, and the world will be empty, and your soul will be empty. No little feet standing on the stairs. No toys scattered on the carpet. No quick following from room to room. No strange and wondering questions. No upturned face, with laughing blue eyes, come for a kiss; but only a grave, and a wreath of white blossoms on the top of it; and bitter desolation, and a sighing at night-fall with no one to put to bed, and a wet pillow and a grave and a wreath of white blossoms on the top of it. The heavenly Shepherd will take that lamb safely, anyhow, whether you have been faithful or unfaithful; but would it not have been pleasanter if you could have heard from those lips the praises of Christ? I never read anything more beautiful than this about a child's departure. The account said, "She folded her hands, kissed her mother good-by, sang her hymn, turned her face to the wall, said her little prayer, and then died."

Oh, if I could gather up in one paragraph the last words of the little ones who have gone out from all these Christian circles, and I could picture the calm looks and the folded hands and sweet departure, methinks it would be grand and beautiful as one of heaven's doxologies!

I next speak of Christ as

The Old Man's Song.

Quick music loses its charm for the aged ear. The school-girl asks for a schottisch or a glee; but her grandmother asks for "Balerma" or the "Portuguese Hymn." Fifty years of trouble have tamed the spirit, and the keys of the music-board must have a solemn tread. Though the voice may be tremulous, so that grandfather will not trust it in Church, still he has the psalm-book open before him, and he sings with his soul. He hums his grandchildren asleep with the same tune he sang forty years ago in the old country meeting-house. Some day the choir sings a tune so old that the young people do not know it; but it starts the tears down the cheek of the aged man, for it reminds him of the revival scene in which he participated, and of the radiant faces that long since went to dust, and of the gray-haired minister leaning over the pulpit, and sounding the good tidings of great joy.

I was one Thanksgiving-day in my pulpit, in Syracuse, New York, and Rev. Daniel Waldo, at ninety-eight years of age, stood beside me. The choir sang a tune. I said, "I am sorry they sang that new tune; nobody seems to know it." "Bless you, my son," said the old man, "I heard that seventy years ago!"

There was a song to-day that touched the life of the aged with holy fire, and kindled a glory on their vision that our younger eye-sight can not see. It was

The Song of Salvation.

Jesus, who fed them all their lives long; Jesus, who wiped away their tears; Jesus, who stood by them when all else failed; Jesus, in whose name their marriage was consecrated, and whose resurrection has poured light upon the graves of their departed. Blessed the Bible in which spectacled old age reads the promise, "I will never leave you, never forsake you!" Blessed the staff on which the worn-out pilgrim totters on toward the welcome of his Redeemer! Blessed the hymn-book in which the faltering tongue and the failing eyes find Jesus, the old man's song. I speak to you again of Jesus as

The Night-Song.

Job speaks of him who giveth songs in the night. John Welch, the old Scotch minister, used to put a plaid across his bed on cold nights, and some one asked him why he put that there. He said, "Oh, sometimes in the night I want to sing the praise of Jesus, and to get down and pray; then I just take that plaid and wrap it around me, to keep myself from the cold." Songs in the night! Night of trouble has come down upon many of you. Commercial losses put out one star, slanderous abuse put out another star; domestic bereavement has put out a thousand lights, and gloom has been added to gloom, and chill to chill, and sting to sting, and one midnight has seemed to borrow the fold from another midnight to wrap itself in more unbearable darkness; but Christ has spoken peace to your heart, and you can sing:

"Jesus, lover of my soul,
Let me to thy bosom fly,
While the billows near me roll,
While the tempest still is high.
Hide me, oh, my Saviour! hide
Till the storm of life is past,
Safe into the haven guide;
Oh, receive my soul at last."

Songs in the night! Songs in the night! For the sick, who have no one to turn the hot pillow, no one to put the taper on the stand, no one to put ice on the temple, or pour out the soothing anodyne, or utter one cheerful word—yet songs in the night!

For the Poor

who freeze in the winter's cold, and swelter in the summer's heat, and munch the hard crusts that bleed the sore gums, and shiver under blankets that cannot any longer be patched, and tremble because rent-day is come and they may be set out on the sidewalk, and looking into the starved face of the child and seeing famine there and death there, coming home from the bakery and saying, in the presence of the little famished ones, "Oh, my God, flour has gone up!" Yet songs in the night! Songs in the night! For the widow who goes to get the back pay of her husband, slain by the "sharp-shooters," and knows it is the last help she will have, moving out of a comfortable home in desolation, death turning back from the exhausting cough, and the pale cheek, and the lustreless eye, and refusing all relief. Yet songs in the night! Songs in the night! For the soldier in the field-hospital, no surgeon to bind up the gun-shot fracture, no water for the hot lips, no kind hand to brush away the flies from the fresh wound, no one to take the loving farewell, the groaning of others poured into his own groan, the blasphemy of others plowing up his own spirit, the condensed bitterness of dying away from home among strangers. Yet songs in the night! Songs in the night! "Ah!" said one dying soldier, "tell my mother that last night there was not one cloud between my soul and Jesus. Songs in the night! Songs in the night!

The Sabbath Song.

The Sabbath-day has come. From the altars of ten thousand churches has smoked up the savor of sacrifice. Ministers of the gospel are now preaching in plain English, in broad Scotch, in flowing Italian, in harsh Choctaw. God's people have assembled in Hindoo temple, and Moravian church and Quaker meeting-house and sailors' Bethel and kings' chapel and high-towered cathedral. They sang, and the song floated off amidst the spice groves or struck the icebergs or floated off into the Western pines or was drowned in the clamor of the great cities. Lumbermen sang it, and the factory-girls and the children in the Sabbath-class and the trained choirs in great assemblages. Trappers, with the same voice with which they shouted yesterday in the stag-hunt, and mariners with throats that only a few days ago sounded in the hoarse blast of the sea-hurricane, they sang it. One theme for the sermons. One burden for the song. Jesus for the invocation. Jesus for the Scripture lesson; Jesus for the baptismal font; Jesus for the sacramental cup; Jesus for the benediction. But the day will go by. It will roll away on swift wheels of light and love. Again the churches will be lighted. Tides of people again setting down the streets. Whole families coming up the church aisle. We must have one more sermon, two prayers, three songs and one benediction. What shall we preach to-night? What shall we read? What shall it be, children? Aged men and women, what shall it be? Young men and maidens what shall it be? If you chose to break the silence of this auditory, there would come up thousands of quick and jubilant voices, crying out, "Let it be Jesus! Jesus!"

We Sing His Birth,

the barn that sheltered Him, the mother that nursed Him, the cattle that fed beside Him, the angels that woke up the shepherds, shaking light over the midnight hills. We sing His ministry—the tears He wiped away from the eyes of the orphans; the lame men that forgot their crutches; the damsel who, from the bier, bounded out into the sunlight, her locks shaking down over the flushed cheek; the hungry thousand who broke the bread as it blossomed into larger loaves—that miracle by which a boy with five loaves and two fishes became the sutler for a whole army. We sing His sorrows—His stone-bruised feet, His aching heart, His mountain loneliness, His desert hunger, His storm-pelted body, the eternity of anguish that shot through His last moments, and the immeasurable ocean of torment that heaved up against His cross in one foaming, wrathful, omnipotent surge, the sun dashed out, and the dead, shroud-wrapped, breaking open their sepulchres, and rushing out to see what was the matter. We

Sing His Resurrection—

the guard that could not keep Him, the sorrow of His disciples: the clouds piling up on either side in pillared splendors as He went through, treading the pathless air, higher and higher, until He came to the foot of the throne, and all heaven kept jubilee at the return of the Conqueror. I say once more, Christ is

The Everlasting Song.

The very best singers sometimes get tired; the strongest throats sometimes get weary, and many who sang very sweetly do not sing now; but I hope, by the grace of God, we will, after a while, go up and sing the praises of Christ where we will never be weary. You know there are some songs that are especially appropriate for the home circle. They stir the soul, they start the tears, they turn the heart in on itself and keep sounding after the tune has stopped, like some cathedral bell, which, long after the tap of the brazen tongue has ceased, keeps throbbing on the air. Well, it will be a home song in heaven; all the sweeter because those who sang with us in the domestic circle on earth shall join that great harmony.

"Jerusalem, my happy home,
Name ever dear to me;
When shall my labors have an end
In joy and peace in thee?"

You know there is no such time on a farm as when they get the crops in; and so in heaven it will be a harvest song on the part of those who on earth sowed in tears and reaped in joy. Lift up your heads, ye everlasting gates, and let the sheaves come in! Angels shout all through the heavens, and multitudes come down the hills, crying, "Harvest home! harvest home!"

There is nothing more bewitching to one's ear than the song of sailors far out at sea, whether in day or night, as they pull away at the ropes—the music is weird and thrilling. So the song in heaven will be

A Sailor's Song.

They were voyagers once and thought they could never get to shore, and before they could get things snug and trim the cyclone struck them. But now they are safe. Once they went with damaged rigging, guns of distress booming through the storm; but the pilot came aboard, and he brought them into the harbor. Now they sing of the breakers passed, the light-houses that showed them where to sail, the pilot that took them through the straits, the eternal shore on which they landed. Ay, it will be

The Children's Song.

You know very well that the vast majority of our race die in infancy, and it is estimated that eighteen thousand millions of the little ones are standing before God. When they shall rise up about the throne to sing, the millions and the millions of the little ones—ah! that will be music for you! These played in the streets of Babylon and Thebes; these plucked lilies from the foot of Olivet while Christ was preaching about them; these waded in Siloam; these were victims of Herod's massacre; these were thrown to crocodiles or into the fire; these came up from Christian homes; and these were foundlings on the city commons—children everywhere in all that land; children in the towers, children on the seas of glass, children on the battlements. Ah, if you do not like children, do not go there. They are in vast majority, and what a song when they lift it around the throne!

The Heavenly Song.

The Christian singers and composers of all ages will be there to join in that song. Thomas Hastings will be there. Lowell Mason will be there. Bradbury will be there. Beethoven and Mozart will be there. They who sounded the cymbals and the trumpets in the ancient temples will be there. The forty thousand harpers that stood at the ancient dedication will be there. The two hundred singers that assisted on that day will be there. Patriarchs who lived amidst threshing-floors, shepherds who watched amidst Chaldean hills, prophets who walked with long beards and coarse apparel, pronouncing woe against ancient abominations, will meet the more recent martyrs who went up with leaping cohorts of fire; and some will speak of the Jesus of whom they prophesied, and others of the Jesus for whom they died. Oh, what a song! It came to John upon Patmos; it came to Calvin in the prison; it dropped to John Knox in the fire; and sometimes that song has come to your ear, perhaps, for I think it sometimes breaks over the battlements of heaven.

A Christian woman, the wife of a minister of the Gospel, was dying in the parsonage near the old church, where on Saturday night the choir used to assemble and rehearse for the following Sabbath, and she said, "How strangely sweet the choir rehearses to-night; they have been rehearsing there for an hour." "No," said some one about her, "the choir is not rehearsing to-night." "Yes," she said, "I know they are, I hear them sing; how very sweetly they sing!" It was not a choir of earth that she heard, but

The Choir of Heaven.

I think that Jesus sometimes sets ajar the door of heaven, and a passage of that rapture greets our ears. I wonder, will you sing that song? Will I sing it? Not unless our sins are pardoned, and we learn now to sing the praise of Christ, will we ever sing it there. The first great concert that I ever attended was in New York, when Julien, in the "Crystal Palace," stood before hundreds of singers and hundreds of players upon instruments. Some of you may remember that occasion, it was the first one of the kind at which I was present, and I shall never forget it. I saw that one man standing, and with the hand and foot wield that great harmony, beating the time. It was overwhelming. But oh,

The Grander Scene

when they shall come from the East, and from the West, and from the North, and from the South, "a great multitude that no man can number," into the temple of the skies, host beyond host, and Jesus shall stand before that host to conduct the harmony, with His wounded hands and His wounded feet! Like the voice of many waters, like the voice of mighty thunderings, they shall cry, "Worthy is the Lamb that was slain to receive blessings, and riches, and honor, and glory, and power, world without end. Amen and Amen!" Oh, if my ear shall hear no other sweet sounds, may I hear that! If I join no other assemblage, may I join that!

I was reading of the battle of Agincourt, in which Henry V. figured; and it is said after the battle was won, gloriously won, the king wanted to acknowledge the divine interposition, and he ordered the chaplain to read the hundred and fifteenth Psalm of David; and when he came to the words, "Not unto us, O Lord, but unto thy name be the praise," the king dismounted, and all the cavalry dismounted, and all the great host, officers and men, threw themselves on their faces. Oh, at the story of the Saviour's love and the Saviour's deliverance, shall we not prostrate ourselves before Him now, hosts of earth and hosts of heaven, falling upon our faces, and crying, "Not unto us, not unto us, but unto thy name be the glory!"

A MAGICAL ROCK IN CHINA.

An incident reported by Dr. Wilson, one of the Missionaries of the China Inland Mission, illustrates the superstition of the people. He says: "Mr. Pearse, Mr. Beauchamp and I, thinking that we should have a grand opportunity of preaching, visited a holy mountain about twenty miles to the north, which is frequented by many thousands of worshippers. About half-way, at the place where we left our mules and commenced the ascent, we rested at a temple, near to which was a small pool, and round it were congregated a number of pilgrims, watching the water very intently and then occasionally dipping their cups into it and drinking. I noticed a man who, with a large stone in his hand, was vigorously pounding away at a rock down by the waters edge. On asking what he was doing, he explained that the rock had magic virtue, and that if beaten for a few minutes water would flow from it. I watched' and, true enough, after a few minutes, water began to trickle from under it, and the whole surface of the pool quickly rose six or eight inches, and then as quickly receded. As soon as it began to rise all the people round the edge dipped in their cups and drank 'the holy water,' as they called it; others filled little earthenware bottles which they had brought with them on purpose, and corked them up to take home, believing in the magic efficacy of this water to heal diseases or keep away calamity. After watching a short time, one saw that the intervals were quite short, the water rising about every five minutes; so I persuaded them all to desist from pounding, assuring them that it had no effect whatever, and to leave the case to Nature; so they desisted, whilst we told them of the water of everlasting life, and they were no little surprised to see the water rise as before."

DISINTEGRATING FORCES
In the Church and the Family.

By Rev. A. C. Tris, of Howard, Kan.*

Restlessness a Prominent Sign of the Times—Deistical Tendencies in the Church—A Religion for the Times—One Wanted Giving More Authority to Man—Three Different Characters Developing as Predicted—Religious Communism—Changes in Family Life—Display and Extravagance—Children's Training Neglected—Parental Authority Ignored—False Views of Marriage.

IT is not our purpose to speak of the forces of evil which will unite and bring about revolution and anarchy among the kingdoms of the Fourth world dominion, that great catastrophe which is drawing nigh. Our object is to speak of other forces of evil, which are doing a disintegrating work in church and family here and at the present time.

expresses the true character of this age. Not only the disturbances of terrestrial occurrences, the migration and emigration of nations, but, especially, the dislocated condition of church organizations and secret workings of revolutionary ideas and principles among all classes of society, warn us to pause and to take heed in regard to these ominous signs of the times. Let us not close our eyes to "the power of the forces," which under the leadership of Satan and his allies are shaking the very foundations of our holy religion and are working with irresistible energy to get dominion. The period in which we live is not only a time of dissatisfaction and uneasiness, but of change, of hankering after new ideas, of accepting strange doctrines, of "a new Christianity," and of cleaving to principles which must and will prepare the mind for Agnosticism and lawlessness. In II Tim. 3:1 it is emphatically declared: "That in the last days perilous times shall come, in which men shall have a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof."

Deistical Tendencies.

The present time has a tendency to embrace the religious tenets, both of Rome and of the Asiatic nations, and to make or compile a religion consisting in abstinence and works of devotion and charity, worshipping according to circumstances and to the precepts of men. Matt. 23:26. It is proposed to get rid of Christianity as a development of Judaism, and in its place have a religion in which the "whole world" can participate, and in which the Triune God is mentioned, nearly as Amita Buddha is mentioned in the Orient. A general idea has taken hold on the mind of the people that man has inalienable rights of freedom in will and choice, and that he has the prerogative to carve out his own way and select his future destiny at his own pleasure. This is an assumption of the sovereign rights of the Most High, and is called "rebellion" in 1 Sam. 15:23. It is dwelling deep in our depraved nature; it is becoming the spirit of the age, and is manifested in the wanton actions of nations, individuals and church members, is recognized in our universities and taught in our books of philosophy.

Before the Lord cometh with ten thousand of His saints. (Jude 11:15).

Three Different Characters

will be revealed: church members having no brotherly love, who "are going in the way of Cain;" church members, unscrupulous in word, thought and action, who like "Balaam run greedily for reward;" and church members seeking the honor and ministerial offices for money's-sake; who follow and "perish in the gainsaying of Kore." Every one of those three characters are pointed out as rebels or anarchists. Examining the state of the Church at the present day, we perceive grounds for suspecting their presence among us already. Religion has lost her pristine purity and chastity, which distinguished her from the world, from politics and from secular institutions. The Bride of Christ has lost "her veil" and is exposed to the gaze and the scorn of the world. Ministers have lost their prestige as ambassadors, accredited by the King of heaven, and the holy office is often looked upon as a secular office, and is graded in the scale of occupying "a position" in the community. How many of the clergy do not like to be questioned about their personal and inward calling to that holy office, and do not know what it is "to be sent forth by the Holy Spirit." History reveals the fact that the decay and the falling away of churches always did commence with uncalled, unscrupulous and unprincipled ministers.

Another great danger menacing the Church at the present time is that of Centralization, or by which I mean that spirit of freedom and latitudinarianism which has permeated all denominations and all religious circles. The differences between churches and doctrines, are now too often regarded as consisting only in names, in small differences, in associations and in higher class, the sharp edge of doctrinal differences is blunted and worn away. In many families and religious circles is manifested a scoffing, contemptuous attitude toward church offices, which is so powerful in all its ramifications, that it defies and sets at naught all church rule and church government, so that the word excommunication has become, in Protestant churches, almost an obsolete word.

Seen in the light of history, we can easily discern how changed all this is from the practices of the early Christians and even from those of our own ancestors only three or four generations back. The decadence is very manifest when the present religious exercises, attendance and spirit are compared with those of the former stern Puritans or Scottish fathers, with the former plain Methodists, or with the Bible-loving Huguenots; we fear, if those sainted fathers and mothers could attend the present religious meetings, that they would hardly recognize their spiritual descendants, and their unanimous cry would be heard: Ichabod: The glory is departed.

In Our Family Life

there is a mighty change in principles and habits. Taking a retrospect of only eighty years, we see a startling difference. Then the fathers and mothers of young and rising American States did enjoy more true love, joy and contentment, and above all, "more quietness of mind" (1. Peter 3:4), than the present generation. Indeed, they had more real trouble in the hard work of clearing the forests, marketing their products, educating their families and of vigilant watching their treacherous enemies, than this generation; and yet, they generally enjoyed life and lived to a good old age. Suicides, defalcations and bankruptcies were scarcely heard of. And what is now the condition in which thousands are? The struggle for social place and honor exhausts the energy on one side the house and the struggle for money the other side. Many families are spending more money than they really can afford, to keep up a false social position; and surrounded by associates, neighbors, friends, church and society connections, they follow the fashions lest they lose their standing in society, and be left behind. The consequences are that many families live in a feverish state, bearing a daily burden, harassed for the future, and worried about lacking so many things, real and imaginary, so that "the milk and sweet of life" is taken away; and rather than to curtail their expenses, or retrace their steps, they try to drown their apprehensions in excitement and worldly pleasure; in one word, they easily yield to the inevitable, silence their consciences, and set examples of folly for the rising generation. It is a sign of the last days, "that the anxiety of the age, and the deceitfulness of riches thoroughly choke the word, and it becometh unfruitful." Indeed, the word "ICHABOD" (the glory has departed) can be written also on the family hearth—as an ominous word for the future.

Neglected Children

growing up without parental religious training is a consequence of this feverish family life, and from a consequence becomes itself a cause of further mischief. We are not unmindful that in the Sabbath-schools a great work is done by proxy, but taking this in due account, we say; after reflection, that the work of religious training has lost its proper channel, because the family altar, the daily reading of God's word, and family prayer, followed by parental admonitions and instruction, are commonly omitted, or entirely neglected. Parental authority is now not only on the wane, but, in many families it is set aside; and the consequences are that pride, callousness, indifference, irreverence and an unreligious spirit have taken its place, so that the children rule the household. The same spirit we find in many congregations, in which "the young progressive party" often rules the whole congregation. (1 Kings 12:9-11.) It is a sure sign of the last days that men shall be disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, despisers of those that are good (II Tim., 3:2-4), and the history of the church and nations proves abundantly that the neglect of the family altar and family duties have always been the forerunners of lawlessness and destruction.

Godless Marriages

among young people is one of the results of this laxity of parental discipline. No civilized or Christian country on the globe has a young and rising generation which manifests so much self-will and unbridled liberty in choosing partners for life, and in marrying persons according to their choice, as this western New World. The sacred rights and prerogatives of parents are not regarded, as a common rule, in such engagements; neither is the word of the Most High consulted. The young people think that they possess all the required qualifications and wisdom needed to guide them in this most solemn affair of life, and the consequences are often deplorable, bringing misery on themselves and others. These are too numerous to be described at length; it is sufficint to enumerate the following: the favor and blessing of the Lord are withholden from many families; instead of true connubial love and fellowship, is manifested a disposition of wildness and negligence; wedlock has become unsavory, and marriage is regarded as little more than a civil contract, which can be broken or dissolved at will. It is an appalling fact to consider, what a myriad of separations and divorces are obtained for causes not sanctioned by divine law; and how that evil is growing rapidly. Remember, too, that laxity of the marriage ties is the sure forerunner of revolution and anarchy.

The Bible declares that perilous times are in store for the world. With the light of history to guide us we look at our own times, and we see that movements and tendencies which, working singly in past ages, have brought dire calamities on the nations, are now coming upon us together and with horrible unity. Thus we see how the warning of God's Word will be fulfilled, and fulfilled soon.

PARALYSIS CURED BY A DOG.

AN incident recently related by an eminent specialist on brain diseases, in the course of a lecture to medical students in Philadelphia, while illustrating his theory, also serves to illustrate the change which takes place in souls apparently insensible and incapable of Christian life and service, when the Holy Spirit removes the burden of sin and imparts the living energy of grave. (Ezek. 11:19, 20.)

The professor was explaining the affliction of paralysis, and said that cases apparently incurable, which the most skilful physicians had been unable to relieve, had been known to yield to sudden and violent emotion. He mentioned as an illustration, the case of a man who, for more than a year, had gone about on crutches, his left leg hanging a dead weight without feeling or power. There was no suspicion of shamming, for the leg had been examined and subjected to electricity and other tests. The man had not the slightest power or control over it. He abandoned hope of cure, but obtained such work as he could do to support himself. In going to and from his employment he had to pass a gate near which a savage dog was chained, and the cripple took care to keep well out of the dog's reach, as he hobbled by on his crutches. One day, however, the dog, making a sudden bound as the paralytic passed, broke his chain and rushed at him. The man looked around in terror, involuntarily dropped his crutches and ran like a deer. His paralysis was gone, and the use of his limb was restored to him. The helplessness of the leg, the professor said, was caused by the pressure of a clot of blood upon the brain, which the sudden emotion of fright expelled.

A HIDDEN CHINESE CONVERT.

"SOME time ago," says the Rev. Arthur Elwin, describing the Christian work in mid-China, "when persecution was raging, Andrew Chow, of the Chuchee district, was one who suffered much for the Lord's sake. The Chuchee magistrate found it necessary to visit Great Valley, Hang Chow, where Andrew lived, that he might see the damage done to the property of the Christians by the heathen. The heathen went out in a body to prevent his visiting their village; they waited for him at a village about three miles off, and when he came, told him there was no occasion for him to visit their village. The magistrate asked, 'Is there anyone here who belongs to this foreign religion?' Andrew stepped out before the magistrate, and in answer to questions, confessed his faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. The heathen followed Andrew to his house, determined to punish him severely for daring to speak as he had before the magistrate. They searched the house all through, but the bed in the room near the door, doubtless because it was in such a public position, they never thought of examining. The heathen left the house, declaring Andrew was not there. Young Andrew, quite unconscious of his danger, had slept soundly all the time, and awoke to find all the heathen had gone. When, some time afterwards, conversing with Andrew by the very bed on which he had slept, I asked him how it was the heathen had not found him; with a smiling face, the answer was given, 'The Lord hid me.' In the Church book at the Great Valley, there are three entries on three successive Sundays. On the first, Andrew's name is among those who received the Holy Communion at the hands of Bishop Moule. On the second, his name is down as having led the Christians at their service. The third Sunday there is note that on that day Andrew went home to heaven; so the event is expressed in the book. Now, far, far up on the lovely Chuchee hills he rests, and quietly awaits the Resurrection morn. Happy Andrew! hidden once for a time by the Lord on earth, and now hidden forever in the Saviour's presence in the glory."

ZULU GIRL FARMERS.

A PLEASANT surprise was experienced recently by Mr. Ireland, of Amanzimtote, who paid a visit to a seminary established for Zulu girls at Inanda, in Zululand. It seems that Mrs. Edwards, the Christian lady who is at the head of it, discovered that she could obtain a grant from the Government of Natal if she could make the school an "industrial school." Zulu girls and women are accustomed to field work, the warrior deeming it below his dignity to labor; the pupils therefore gladly co-operated in a scheme Mrs. Edwards mapped out to work a farm. Mr. Ireland, in a letter to the Missionary Herald, thus describes what has been accomplished:

"We found a beautiful little farm, comprising some fifteen acres or more, enclosed by wire fencing, and with the exception of a few acres, where the primeval sod was turned over once by the plow, the whole has been (or soon will be) brought into a fine state of cultivation by these Inanda schoolgirls. When the hour arrived for field work, we accompanied Mrs. Edwards and her girls to that part of the field not yet brought under cultivation. At a signal from their leader the girls, some thirty-two of them, fell into line, each armed with a strong and rather heavy hoe, and went lustily to work upon the greensward in front of them. During the hour and more they were at work they left some twenty yards behind them. Mrs. Edwards expects to raise, the present season, all the corn, pumpkins, beans, and potatoes that will be required for the year's consumption. A part of her plan of work is the planting of trees. Last year more than a thousand trees were planted, and this number will be more than doubled the present season if these energetic plans are carried out. Thus are this good lady and her coadjutors endeavoring to realize, in an indirect and individual way, not only morally but physically, the prophecy of Isaiah: 'The wilderness and the solitary place shall be glad for them; and the desert shall rejoice and blossom as the rose.'" (Isa. 35: 1.)

THE TIGER AND THE MISSIONARY.

AMONG the remarkable stories related by the Rev. A. E. Haegert of his experience in Santhalistan, is the following, which he says occurred in February of last year: One evening, after tea we had worship, and commended ourselves and the Mission to God. After worship I had to go outside, and right under the window was a tiger, about twelve feet off. My first thought was to turn and flee, but fearing that he would jump on my back, I looked to the heavens and begged Jesus to help. Then I walked up to the tiger, who had already been to the cowhouse and scratched a hole to get at the cow and calves. The walls, however, were thick and hard, and he gave it up as a bad job. Now he walked round the house seeking his supper. I was unharmed as I approached him. On the verandah my dog was lying. He was from Scotland, and had never seen a tiger before, but he rushed at him and barked furiously. The tiger snarled at us and went a few steps on one side, so I passed quietly on. After walking about twenty yards, I realized that I was safe, and thanked God. I thought, 'Poor doggie, you will pay with your life for your master's safety.' So I whistled for him. To my great joy he came, wagging his tail, and still turning to bark at the tiger. 'The angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear Him.'"

THE FAMINE IN PERSIA.

HARROWING reports have been arriving now for two months past of suffering and death from starvation in Persia. Three calamities, either of which is much dreaded in Persia—inundation, drought and locusts — visited the country last year, and the food-supply finally harvested after the three visitations was utterly inadequate to maintain the people until next harvest. Among the appeals being made for help by the various missionary societies is one of much pathos, which is sent to us by Mr. Yaroo M. Neesan, the Persian missionary student whose portrait and life were published in this journal December 23, 1886. He is naturally deeply concerned about the peril of his countrymen, and is earnestly endeavoring, by lecturing and by the sale of Persian curiosities, to swell the fund in the hands of Dean Hoffman, of the General Theological Seminary, 426 West 23d Street, New York, where Mr. Neesan is being trained for missionary work. The following facts are extracts from his simple yet pathetic statement.

A journal published in Oroomiah, in Persia, says, "The famine that is now raging here and in Koordistan as far as Mosul, is very sore." Canon Maclean says, "This year the people in the mountain districts are suffering much from famine and from the destruction of their fields, houses and bridges by the great floods of last spring." A letter from the village of Sir says, "While writing, ———'s wife is in our house crying. She says, 'I have nothing in my house for my children to eat.'"

Rabbi Abraham Moorbach, whose work was described in this journal of June 8, 1887, in an appeal to Mr. Neesan, written from Oroomiah, says, "The famine is very sore, and hundreds will die. We beg you to aid us in whatever way you can. In our village of two hundred families, ten only of that number have provision for the winter, and we do earnestly pray God that He will be merciful to our afflicted state."

Another writer says, "The keenness of the suffering increases with each day; many will perish if assistance does not come, many will perish even before assistance can reach us."

There are five months remaining before harvest time, the first opportunity the poor will have of helping themselves, and unless speedy assistance comes to them many will starve.

They are our brethren. They are suffering from hunger. Will you not help to save these Christian lives? Twenty dollars will preserve one life until the August harvests. "Verily I say unto you, Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto Me."

Funds remitted to the Rev. E. A. Hoffman, D. D., Dean of the General Theological Seminary, will be forwarded by telegraph to Canon Maclean, the missionary in charge, at Oroomiah, Persia.

THE PEACE AT PONAPE.

THE events in Ponape, described in these columns on January 19 (page 39), naturally caused some solicitude to the friends of the missionaries. What course the Spanish Government might take toward the islanders who had slain the Governor and his soldiers was a question to be left in the hands of God, and doubtless that was what the missionaries did, for, in a letter from Mr. Doane to the American Board of Commissioners, he joyfully reports conduct on the part of Spain so magnanimous as to surprise everyone:

"A strong Spanish force of eight hundred men has," he states, "been sent to the island with a new Governor. The Spanish prestige being re-established, a proclamation was issued stating the terms on which the expedition would refrain from war. The proclamation began by offering a full, free pardon to all the chiefs, especially those called rebels. They were to meet at my house at Old Kenan, as neutral ground. This was the first point, with the further idea of complete submission on the part of the Ponapeans to the Spanish monarch. He demanded that all royal arms in the hands of the people should be given up; also, all the goods looted in July last during the émeute, the return of some runaway Manila soldiers, and the delivering over of some three natives accused of killing the Governor in July last.

"These five points were presented to the people, giving them a week to consider them. We went to work in good earnest to save the people. War, once opened, meant the destruction of all homes, farms, dwellings, the shooting of many men, and the deportation of many more. We plainly told the people there was no hope for them, and the sooner they were on their knees the better. Then we pushed out in drenching rains, threading paths almost impossible to walk in, running miles inland, scaling mountains buttressed by huge bowlders so slippery that they were difficult to climb.

"On the final day, four chiefs came in. One delayed, but grace was asked and granted, and the next day he came in. More time was asked for the accused natives. This was soon obtained, and it brought sunlight and joy; for the main features of the proclamation were met. My heart has ever since been singing her Te Deum and shouting her hallelujahs; for peace was brought back, not the demon of war.

"Now the old homes can be entered and re-occupied by natives who had fled to the mountains and forests for protection. We rejoice over what has been obtained. God be praised!"

CURRENT EVENTS.

An Important Financial Measure has Passed the House. It is a bill which authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to use any part of the surplus that, in his judgment, is expedient for the purchase of bonds in the open market. The Senate has already practically committed itself to the financial policy embodied in this bill, and there is little doubt that it will become a law.

The Tariff Bill, Reported by the House Committee on Ways and Means, bears marks of the influence of the chairman, Mr. Mills, of Texas. It makes substantial additions to the free list, reducing the revenue on the basis of importations of the fiscal year 1887 by about $28,000,000. This includes the repeal of the duties on lumber, on salt, on wools, on flax, hemp, jute, and like fibres, and on some of their manufactures; on a considerable number of chemicals, embracing boracic acid and vegetable dyeing substances; on copper ore, tin plates and cotton ties; on books printed in foreign languages, or published for free distribution; on paintings and statuary, and on numerous articles yielding a small revenue. The reductions made in the duties that are not abolished, are expected, on the basis of the fiscal year 1887, to produce a decrease in revenue of about $24,000,000, in addition to the $28,000,000 mentioned above. The tariff issue is thus now officially before Congress, and—being the leading issue of the Presidential campaign—its progress will be watched with more than ordinary interest.

A National Art Commission is the Latest contemplated innovation proposed to Congress. A bill providing for such a commission, to consist of fourteen members, has passed the Senate. It provides that four of the commissioners shall be eminent sculptors, four eminent painters, three eminent architects, and the other three shall be selected from other employments, for their knowledge and good taste in art. It is to be their duty to report upon the character and value of such plans of public buildings, monuments, or works of art as shall be referred to them by Congress, and to select from designs offered by competitors for works of art ordered by Congress. Inasmuch as the members of the Commission are to serve without pay, there seems at least no harm done should the bill become a law.

Monopoly of the Public Lands is to be made impossible. The Committee on public lands has reported a bill to the House, by which it is sought to secure to actual settlers all the remaining public lands adapted to agriculture, and to protect the forests on the forest lands of the United States from destruction. The bill does not change the present mineral land laws, except to restrict the definition of such lands in the interests of homestead settlers, and to classify iron and coal lands together at a uniform rate of $10 per acre. In reporting the bill the Committee called special attention to the fact that every provision of the existing law under which public lands in large bodies have by fraudulent and dishonest methods been obtained by unscupulous parties is proposed to be repealed by the bill, and under its terms monopoly of the public lands will be impossible, and all public lands adapted to agriculture, even to a partial extent, or on which a citizen can establish a home, is made available in securing him a freehold estate. An official estimate places the public lands, excluding Alaska, classified as arable lands, on which crops can be raised without irrigation, at 75,000,000 acres.

The Bill to Incorporate the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua has passed the Senate, and it is said that its passage in the House is probable. It is claimed that the ship canal across Nicaragua, contemplated by this company, possesses vast advantages over M. Lessep's Panama scheme, which has already swallowed up much more capital than was originally expected, and which is in a bankrupt condition, with only a fraction of the work completed. As regards the Nicaragua canal, all that is asked of the United States Government is a charter of incorporation and political sanction for the enterprise. The Government is not asked to lend its credit, or give any financial guarantee. The canal will be constructed with private capital, and have the character simply of a commercial enterprise, unless contingencies should arise to give it unforeseen political importance.

The Will of the Late W. W. Corcoran, the Washington philanthropist, has been made public. He has added to his magnificent charities during his lifetime by bequeathing $100,000 to the Corcoran Art Gallery, to which he had already given $1,500,000; $50,000 to the Louise Home, to which he gave in life $500,000; $5,000 each to the three orphan asylums of the District, and $3,000 to the Little Sisters of the Poor. He makes many bequests, ranging from $100 to $15,000, to relatives, personal friends, and servants. The remainder of the estate is left in trust for his three grandchildren.

A Gigantic Strike of Engineers and firemen commenced on February 27, on the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad, which comprises in its system some of the most important arteries of travel, extending as far West as Omaha and comprising 6,000 miles of track. This inaugurates a strike of considerable magnitude. The strikers are all members of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers and Firemen. The principle for which this organization is contending is the much vexed and disputed one, that those who do the same work for the same length of time shall be paid the same wages, without regard to degrees of skill and experience. The railroad company had followed the plan of classifying its engineers and firemen and paying different rates of wages, according to the difficulties of the work or the degrees of skill, experience and responsibility required, having its own examinations for employment and promotion. The strikers claim that this system is wrong, and want it abolished. They contend for a general schedule of wages, under which all shall be treated alike. The strike seems likely to be a long and stubborn one. A curious feature of it is, that among the men who have applied for places left vacant by the strikers are said to be a number of Knights of Labor. It is difficult to believe that members of an organization which has been so outspoken about "scab labor" should become "scabs." It is explained, however, that the Knights of Labor bear a grudge against the Brotherhood for not supporting them in the past by sympathetic strikes. The number of engineers and firemen on strike the first day was estimated at 1,600, but unless speedily settled it is feared that the strike will spread to other roads, and many more men will be idle.

An Unequivocal Vote of Approval of the British Government in the question of the Trafalgar Square Riots was given in the House of Commons on March 2. Sir Charles Russell proposed that the House appoint a committee to inquire into the conduct of the Government in prohibiting the meeting, and the police in suppressing it. He was powerfully backed up by Bradlaugh, and the Government, feeling sure that they had the support of the country, made the question one of confidence, meaning that they would stand or fall according as they were supported. The followers of Lord Hartington and Mr. Chamberlain therefore voted almost solidly for the Government, and for the suppression of the right of public meeting in crowded business thoroughfares. It is thus decided by a vote of 316 to 224 that the people have not the right to meet in Trafalgar square, but that is no deprivation, as they can meet in Hyde Park which is more convenient for those attending the meetings, and for those who wish to use the streets for business traffic.

The French Reply to the Great Speech of Bismarck in the German Reichstag was delivered by the Marquis de Breteuil in the French Chamber of Deputies, reviewing the situation in Europe caused by the triple alliance. He said he had no faith in its stability. France, he added, must wish the Czar to remain the arbiter of peace, and France must seize every opportunity to show him sympathy and make him understand, without exaggerated demonstration, that the French are strong but discreet friends. In conclusion the Marquis said: "Let us show ourselves a nation desiring peace, but not fearing war. Let us reject all idea of an offensive war, and desire only to live and work, taking care that nothing shall compromise our honor and dignity."

The Fortifications of British Seaports was the subject of Parliamentary inquiry last week. To the American visitor, accustomed to the sight of defences so feeble as those of New York and other home ports, the defences of the naval strongholds of Great Britain appear formidable, but they are declared inefficient relatively. Mr. Stanhope, Secretary for War, has issued a memorandum, in which he admits that after a careful inquiry it has been ascertained that deficiencies exist in the defences of Portsmouth, Plymouth and the Thames, which render England's position dangerously insecure. This condition of affairs, he says, is mainly due, not to the misspending of credits, but to the rapid increase of the offensive power of other navies.

The Conviction and Sentence of M. Wilson, the son-in-law of Ex-President Grévy startled the French capital on Thursday last. As will be remembered, M. Wilson was charged with accepting money, in return for which he undertook to use his influence with the President, to secure contracts, decorations, titles, etc., for the persons paying him. As a matter of fact, several men were made members of the Legion of honor who had done nothing to merit the distinction, but had secured it by paying money to certain agents, who said, truthfully or falsely, that it went to Wilson. He was placed on his trial, and last week he was convicted and sentenced to two years' imprisonment, to pay a fine of 3,000f. ($600), and to be deprived of his civil rights for five years.

The Presidential Election in Mexico, Which takes place next June, appears to be decided in advance, as no one of the candidates yet named against Porfirio Diaz, the present incumbent, whose portrait and life appeared in this journal, on November 23, 1887, seems to be able to concentrate anything like an effective opposition. There seems to be no doubt that General Diaz will be re-elected by an overwhelming majority. He has made a strong and able President, and proved a sincere and dignified friend of the United States.

A Change for the Better in the Condition of the German Crown Prince is indicated by the latest bulletins. The British Medical Journal announces by authority that he is now slowly improving, though his windpipe is still in an irritated condition. On the other hand, however, the Lancet comments upon the scarcity of official bulletins, and says it regrets that it is forced to the conclusion that the Crown Prince is proceeding from bad to worse.

A Request to Clergymen is Made by the National Women's Christian Temperance Union to which we are asked to give prominence. The Union, through its President and the Superintendent of its Sabbath Observance Department, Mrs. J. C. Bateham, of Painesville, O., asks ministers to preach on April 1, or on Easter Sunday, April 8, upon "the Christian Sabbath," calling special attention to the twofold peril threatening the Sabbath from adverse legislation and the growing desecration of the day. In this request the World's Sabbath Observance Prayer Union and similar organizations join, as also in asking that the first week in April be made a week of prayer for Sabbath observance.

A Boston Pulpit Relinquished for Foreign service, is an interesting fact communicated to a contemporary. It states that the exchange of a Boston church for pioneer mission labor is being made by the Rev. R. Henry Ferguson, pastor of the Dorchester Temple Baptist Church, Boston, who has decided to go to the Ka Chins, a people occupying the hills of northern Burma, southern China, and Thibet. The people have no written language, and Mr. Ferguson goes to reduce their language to writing, make the necessary grammars and dictionaries, and translate the Old and New Testaments for them. Bhamo, where he will make his home and station, is a city, inhabited chiefly by Chinese, Shans and Burmese, with some few English, and situated at the head of navigation of the Irrawaddi River. It is connected with Rangoon at the mouth of this river by a line of steamboats, making the distance by water 860 miles. Mr. Ferguson has resigned his pastorate in order to make special preparation for his work, and is now at work upon the Shemitic languages and medicine, and expects to sail in October.

A Tugboat, with no Engineer at the Levers, caused some excitement in the crowded East River a few days ago. The tugboat went into a slip for water about noon, and, having procured it, the engineer turned on steam and backed out into the river. Almost instantly another boat struck her near the stern, causing her to give a swift lurch. The engineer, who had stepped out to see what had occurred, lost his balance and fell into the river. He was rescued in a stunned condition by another boat. No one on his own boat saw him fall into the river, and the pilot was amazed, and then alarmed, to find no notice taken of his signals. The boat went forging on, and it required all the pilot's dexterity to keep her from collisions. He continued shouting to the deck hands to see what was wrong in the engine-room, and finally, the discovery was made that there was no engineer on board. The deck hands were a long time before they found out the lever with which they could shut off steam, and the boat damaged a pier and another boat, besides injuring herself, before her headlong course was stopped. Many souls, in their early efforts after salvation and before they surrender to Christ, are like that boat and her pilot—with good intentions and right resolves, but without power to execute them. (Rom. 7: 15, 19.)

A Supernatural Warning to a Mother is cited by a recent writer as evidence that natural law is not sufficient to explain even the events which occur within human experience. He states that a short time ago an inquest was held at New Albany, Ind., on the body of a boy killed at a railroad crossing. The boy's mother stated that, having sent her son, ten years old, on an errand, she distinctly heard him shriek and moan about half an hour after he left the house. Her daughter said that at the time named, her mother called her and bade her go and look for the boy, for she had heard him cry, and was sure he was hurt. Her daughter looked around the house, but could not see the boy, and concluded that her mother had been mistaken. Shortly afterward the mangled body of the boy was brought home. At the very time the mother heard his shriek, he had fallen under the wheels of a train of cars more than a mile away. It was impossible that his scream could have been heard at his home, yet the mother, who could have known nothing of what was occurring, evidently did hear it, as was proved by her solicitude in sending her daughter to search for him. Scientists, who cannot explain this phenomenon by any known law, yet who have to admit the fact, are inconsistent when they contend that the prayers of God's suffering children cannot reach His ears. (Isa. 65: 24.)

An Heir in Hiding is the Central Figure in a remarkable story given to the press last week. On February 24 a lawyer in Indianapolis received a telegram, inquiring if he would be in his office at a certain hour on the following day. The lawyer did not know the name attached to the telegram, but he sent an affirmative answer, and expected to receive a call from a new client. Instead of a client, a messenger waited upon him at the time indicated and placed a package in his hands containing $2,900. With the money the lawyer found a letter from a former partner, who eight years ago absconded, leaving a shortage in his accounts. This is the second amount that has been sent by the missing man, and it covers, with the sum before sent, the whole deficiency. He took extraordinary precautions to preserve the secrecy of his hiding-place, and in the letter he expressed his determination never to emerge from it, though there is now no charge against him. A remarkable fact is, that he has fallen heir to a large estate, but there is no way of communicating the fact to him. It is believed that he is working as a common sailor, or at some laborious occupation about ships or docks, and has been denying himself ordinary comforts to restore the money. Had he known of it, he need not have labored and denied himself, as the property which is waiting for him to claim it, would have paid the debt many times over. Many anxious souls are acting in the same way as to the eternal inheritance. They are toiling and striving to win salvation, when the perfect salvation of Christ is placed at their disposal, if they would only claim it. (Rom. 4: 4, 5.)

A Physician's Interdict on Kisses was among his most emphatic directions to his wife on leaving home sometime ago. "Remember," he said, "and do not let the children kiss any one." "Is it possible," asked a surprised third party who was present, "that you consider it necessary to give such instructions as that? Where is the danger?" "The danger is complicated and certain, said the doctor. "In my case, all kinds of people come to my house to consult me, and they often wait hours. If one of my children happens to come in they are almost certain to talk to it, and you know almost the first impulse with people who notice children is to kiss them. Bah! it makes me shudder—tainted and diseased breaths, lips blue with cancer, foul and decayed teeth. You would be tempted to kill a stranger who would waylay your daughter and kiss her by force, but the helpless, unsuspecting six-year-old child susceptible as a flower to every breath that blows, can be saluted by every one who chances to think of it. Hundreds of lovely children are kissed into their graves every year." The physician did not dread his children coming to harm through violence or hatred, but through a token of affection thoughtlessly given. Moral and spiritual evil is often similarly communicated. Young people are allured from the paths of religion and virtue, not by the hatred, but the false love of the world (II Peter 2: 18.)

An Amateur Matrimonial Agency of a Very successful kind is described in the Charleston News and Courier. It states that at its first introduction, at a large wedding reception, eleven marriages resulted from it. All the young people present selected a gentleman of known honor and reserve as president of a lovers' confidence bureau, and he was duly sworn to keep entirely secret all communications that should be forwarded to him in his official capacity that night. Each unmarried gentleman or lady not engaged nor resolved on celibacy, undertook to write his or her name on a piece of paper, and under it the name of the person they wished to marry, then hand it to the president for inspection; and if any gentleman and lady had reciprocally chosen each other, the president was to inform each of the result, and to keep strictly secret the communications of those who had not been reciprocal in their choice. After the appointment was made, communications were handed at intervals during the evening to the president, who at the close examined and sorted them. It was found that twelve young ladies and gentlemen had made reciprocal choices. In eleven cases the revelation of the mutual regard has, it is stated, led to marriage, and the young gentlemen of eight couples of the eleven have declared that their diffidence was so great that they certainly should not have addressed their respective wives had they not been apprised in this curious way that the ladies were favorably disposed toward them. It sometimes happens with souls anxious for salvation, that they are kept from peace by a similar lack of knowledge. When they realize that God is not hostile to them, but Himself desires their salvaton, they go to Him and find peace. (Ezek. 33: 11.)

BRIEF NOTES.

Mrs. John Wannamaker, of Philadelphia, has built a children's ward for the Pennsylvania Hospital of that city, at the cost of $35,000.

The American Church Missionary Society has received the names of twenty young men who volunteer for missionary work in either China or Japan.

Dr. Meredith's Tuesday evening Bible Class in Brooklyn is growing to the proportions of the one he conducted in Boston, Mass.; it is attended by at least 1,500 persons.

The Hon. J. V. Farwell, of Chicago, during his recent visit to London, conducted evangelistic services for Mr. Charles Cook, at the Metropolitan Music Hall.

In the Ontario Legislature, now in session, a bill has been introduced empowering municipal councils to pass by-laws defining the hours for closing any particular class or classes of retail shops.

Seven churches have united in the meetings conducted by Rev. B. Fay Mills, in Providence, R. I., Baptists, Presbyterians and Methodists are working together harmoniously in the harvest of souls.

The President has offered the post of Minister to Liberia to the Rev. J. O. Price, President of Livingston College, Salisbury, N. C. Mr. Price is one of the most cultured colored men in the United States.

Dr. William Ormiston, the famous and popular New York preacher, has resigned the pastorate in the Collegiate Reformed Church. Dr. Ormiston, after eighteen years of successful labor, resigns on account of obstinate throat trouble and loss of voice.

Messrs. Crossley and Hunter have been holding evangelistic services in the Dominion Methodist Church, Ottawa, Canada, for some time past. There have been a number of converts. Great interest has been taken in the work by Sir John and Lady Macdonald.

A series of evangelistic meetings at Dallas, Texas, have been commenced by Evangelist Harold F. Sayles, His first congregation numbered seven hundred. The Congregational, Second Presbyterian, Cumberland Presbyterian and First Methodist churches co-operated.

The Vienna correspondent of the London Standard, says: "Russia is promising concession to the Poles, and the Czar has been bestowing distinctions on the Polish noblemen of late—two ominous signs. An influential Pole, coming from Warsaw, where he had been visiting his estates, said to me, 'We shall have war in May.'"

The union revival meetings, conducted by Dr. L. W. Munhall, in Buffalo, were blessed to an unprecedented degree in that city. More than seven hundred persons made a public confession of Christ, ascribing their conversion to God's blessing on the meetings. The influence of the meetings on the churches in quickening spiritual life has also been most evident.

Mr. Wm. McK. Gatchell, who died suddenly in Washington, D. C., on February 21, was an earnest and active worker in the Prohibition cause, was Secretary of the National Prohibition Bureau, but was acting at the time of his death as agent of the National Anti-Nuisance League. This League is organized to operate against the saloons, under the nuisance laws.

Canvassers Wanted to Sell, from House to House, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. THE LORD AND THE LEPER.

A New Sermon by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

"And there came a leper to Him, and kneeling down to Him, and saying unto Him, If Thou wilt, Thou canst make me clean. And Jesus, moved with compassion, put forth His hand, and touched him, and saith unto him, I will; be thou clean. And as soon as He had spoken, immediately the leprosy departed from him, and he was cleansed." Mark 1 : 40–42.

Healing Power Received in Communion—I. The Leper Eager to be Healed - Spiritual Lepers Who are not Eager The Despairing—The Indifferent—A Dreadful Confraternity—II. Believing he Could be Healed—Leprosy Incurable—The Basis of the Leper's Faith—III. His Faith Fixed on Christ—IV. A Real Cure—V. A Hesitancy—VI. His Earnest Action—VII. His Reward—The Cure Bearing Examination.

Our Lord had been engaged in special prayer. He had gone alone on the mountain-side to have communion with God. Simon and the rest search for Him, and He comes away in the early morning with the burrs from the hillside upon His garments, the smell of the field upon Him; He comes forth among the people, charged with power which He had received in communion with the Father; and now we may expect to see wonders. And we do see them; for devils fear and fly when He speaks the word; and by and by, there comes to Him one, an extraordinary being, condemned to live apart from the rest of men, lest he should spread defilement all around. A leper comes to Him, and kneels before Him, and expresses his confident faith in Him, that He can make Him whole. Now is the Son of Man glorious in His power to save. The Lord Jesus Christ at this day has all power in heaven and in earth. He is charged with a divine energy to bless all who come to Him for healing. Oh, that we may see to-day some wonder of His power and grace!

I. I will begin my rehearsal of the gospel narrative by remarking, first, that this leper's faith made him

Eager to be Healed.

He was a leper; I will not stay just now to describe what horrors are compacted into that single word; but he believed that Jesus could cleanse him, and his belief stirred him to an anxious desire to be healed at once. Alas! we have to deal with spiritual lepers eaten up with the foul disease of sin; but some of them do not believe that they ever can be healed, and the consequence is that despair makes them sin most greedily. "I may as well be hanged for a sheep as for a lamb," is the inward impression of many a sinner when he fears that there is no mercy and no help for him. Because there is no hope, therefore they plunge deeper and yet deeper into the slough of iniquity. Oh, that you might be delivered from that false idea! Mercy still rules the hour. There is hope while Jesus sends His gospel to you, and bids you repent. "I believe in the forgiveness of sins": this is a sweet sentence of a true creed. I believe also in the renewal of men's hearts; for the Lord can give new hearts and right spirits to the evil and unthankful.

We have a number of lepers who come in among us whose disease is white upon their brows, and visible to all beholders, and yet they are indifferent: they do not mourn their wickedness, nor wish to be cleansed from it. They sleep on upon the bed of sloth, and care neither for heaven nor hell. Indifference to spiritual things is the sin of the age. Men are stolid of heart about eternal realities. An awful apathy is upon the multitude. The leper in our text was not so foolish as this.

Lepers were obliged to consort together: lepers associated with lepers, and they made up

A Dreadful Confraternity.

How glad they would have been to escape from it! But I know spiritual lepers who love the company of their fellow lepers. Yes, and the more leprous a man becomes, the more do they admire him. A bold sinner is often the idol of his comrades. Though foul in his life, others cling to him for that very reason. Such persons like to learn some new bit of wickedness; they are eager to be initiated into a yet darker form of impure pleasure. Oh, how they long to hear that last lascivious song, to read that last impure novel! It seems to be the desire of many to know as much evil as they can. They flock together, and take a dreadful pleasure in talk and action which is the horror of all pure minds. Strange lepers, that heap up

Leprosy as a Treasure!

Lepers were not allowed to associate with healthy persons, except under severe restrictions. Thus were they separated from their nearest and dearest friends. What a sorrow! Alas! I know persons thus separated who do not wish to associate with the godly; to them holy company is dull and wearisome; they do not feel free and easy in such society, and therefore they avoid it as much as decency allows. How can they hope to live with saints forever, when they shun them now as dull and moping acquaintances?

II. In the second place, let us remark that this leper's faith was strong enough to make him believe that of his hideous disease. Leprosy was an unutterably loathsome disease. As it exists, even now, it is described by those who have seen it in such a way that I will not harrow your feelings by repeating all the sickening details. The following quotation may be more than sufficient. Dr. Thomson, in his famous work, "The Land and the Book," speaks of lepers in the East, and says: "The hair falls from the head and eyebrows; the nails loosen, decay and drop off; joint after joint of the fingers and toes shrinks up and slowly falls away. The gums are absorbed and the teeth disappear. The nose, the eyes, the tongue and the palate are slowly consumed." This disease turns a man into a mass of loathsomeness, a walking pile of pests. Leprosy is nothing better than a horrible and lingering death. The leper in the narrative before us had sad personal experience of this, and yet he believed that Jesus could cleanse him. Splendid faith! Oh, that you who are afflicted with moral and spiritual leprosy could believe in this fashion! Jesus Christ of Nazareth can heal even you. Over the horror of leprosy faith triumphed. Oh, that in your case it would overcome the terribleness of sin!

Leprosy was known to be incurable. There was no case of a man being cured of by any medical or surgical treatment. This made the cure of Naaman in former ages so noteworthy. Observe, moreover, that our Saviour Himself, so far as I can see, had never healed a leper up to the moment when this poor wretch appeared upon the scene. He had cured fever, and had cast out devils, but the cure of leprosy was, in the Saviour's life, as yet an unexampled thing. Yet this man, putting this and that together, and understanding something of the nature and character of the Lord Jesus Christ, believed that he could cure him of his incurable disease. He felt that even if the great Lord had not yet healed leprosy, He was assuredly capable of doing so great a deed, and he determined to apply to Him. Was not this grand faith? For a real, conscious sinner to trust the Saviour is no mean thing. When you hope that there is some good thing in you, it is easy to be confident; but to be conscious of total ruin, and yet to believe in the divine remedy—this is real faith. To see in the sunshine is mere natural vision; but to see in the dark needs the eye of faith: to believe that Jesus has saved you when you see the signs of it, is the result of reason; but to trust Him to cleanse you while you are still defiled with sin—this is the essence of saving faith. His moral and spiritual miracles are often wrought upon cases which seem beyond all hope, cases which pity itself endeavors to forget, because her efforts have been so long in vain.

I like best about this man's faith the fact that he did not merely believe that Jesus Christ could cleanse a leper, but that He could cleanse him? He said, "Lord, if Thou wilt, Thou canst make me clean." It is very easy to believe for other people. There is really no faith in such impersonal, proxy confidence. The true faith believes for itself first, and then for others. Oh, I know some of you are saying, "I believe that Jesus can save my brother. I believe that He can save the vilest of the vile. If I heard that He had saved the biggest drunkard in Southwark, I should not wonder." Canst thou believe all this, and yet fear that He cannot save thee? This is strange inconsistency. If He heals another man's leprosy, can He not heal thy leprosy? If one drunkard is saved, why not another? If in one man a passionate temper is subdued, why not in another? If lust and covetousness and lying and pride have been cured in many men, why not in thee? Even if thou art a blasphemer, blasphemy has been cured; why should it not be so in thy case? He can heal thee of that particular form of sin which possesses thee, however high a degree its power may have reached; for nothing is too hard for the Lord.

The Only Healer.

III. Now notice, thirdly, that this man's faith was fixed on Jesus Christ alone. Let me read the man's words again. He said unto Jesus, "If thou wilt, thou canst make me clean." Throw the emphasis upon the pronouns. See him kneeling before the Lord Jesus, and hear him say, "If thou wilt, thou canst make me clean." He has no idea of looking to the disciples; no, not to one of them or to all of them. He had no notion of trusting in a measure to the medicine which physicians would prescribe for him. All that is gone. No dream of other hope remains; but with his eye fully fixed on the blessed Miracle-worker of Nazareth, he cries, "If thou wilt, thou canst make me clean." In himself he had no shade of confidence; every delusion of that kind had been banished by a fierce experience of his disease. He knew that none on earth could deliver him, and that by no innate power of constitution could he throw out the poison; but he confidently believed that the Son of God could by Himself effect the cure. This was God-given faith—the faith of God's elect, and Jesus was its sole object.

Heard Jesus Preach.

How came this man to have such faith? I cannot tell you the outward means, but I think we may guess without presumption. Had he not heard our Lord preach? Matthew puts this story immediately after the Sermon on the Mount, and says: "When He was come down from the mountain, great multitudes followed Him. And, behold, there came a leper and worshipped Him, saying, Lord, if thou wilt, thou canst make me clean." Had this man managed to stand at the edge of the crowd and hear Jesus speak, and did those wondrous words convince him that the great Teacher was something more than man? As he noted the style and manner and matter of that marvellous sermon, did he say within himself, "Never man spake like this man. Truly He is the Son of God. I believe in Him. I trust Him. He can cleanse me"? My hearer, have you not Seen Jesus Save Others.

Have you not at least read of His miracles of grace? Believe Him, then, for His works' sake, and say to Him, "Lord, if thou wilt, thou canst make me clean."

O my dear hearers, cannot you trust the Lord Jesus Christ in this way? A divine Saviour must be able to cleanse thee from all sin. Only Jesus can do it, but He can do it—do it Himself alone, do it now, do it in thee, do it with a word. Say, "Lord, if thou wilt, thou canst make me clean." Faith must be fixed alone on Jesus. None other name is given among men whereby we must be saved. I do pray the Lord to give that faith to all my dear friends present this morning who as yet have not received cleansing at the Lord's hands. Jesus is God's ultimatum of salvation: the unique hope of guilty men both as to pardon and renewal. Accept Him even now.

IV. Now let me go a step further: this man's faith had respect to a real

Matter-of-Fact Cure.

He did not think of the Lord Jesus Christ as a priest who would perform certain ceremonies over Him, and formally say, "Thou art clean;" for that would not have been true. He wanted really to be delivered from the leprosy; to have those dry scales, into which his skin kept turning, taken all away, that his flesh might become as the flesh of a little child; he wanted that the rottenness, which was eating up his body, should be stayed, and that health should be actually restored. Friends, it is easy enough to believe in a mere priestly absolution if you have enough credulity; but we need more than this.

No sanctifying power comes with outward ceremonials in and of themselves. To believe that the Lord Jesus Christ can make us love the good things which once we despised, and shun those evil things in which we once took pleasure—this is to believe in Him indeed and of a truth.

None of us would imagine that this leper meant that the Lord Jesus could make him feel comfortable in remaining a leper. Some seem to fancy that Jesus came to let us go on in our sins with a quiet conscience; but He did nothing of the kind. His salvation is cleansing from sin, and if we love sin we are not saved from it.

Emancipation.

The man who frets under the yoke of sin will not long be a slave to it; if he can believe that Jesus Christ is able to set him free, he shall soon quit his bondage. Some sins which have hardened down into habits, yet disappear in a moment when Jesus Christ looks upon a man in love. I have known many instances of persons who, for many years, had never spoken without an oath, or a filthy expression, who, being converted, have never been known to use such lauguage again, and have scarcely ever been tempted in that direction. This is one of the sins which seem to die at the first shot, and it is a very wonderful thing it should be so. Others I have known so altered at once that the very propensity which was strongest in them has been the last to annoy them afterwards: they have had such a reversion of the mind's action that, while other sins have worried them for years, and they have had to set a strict watch against them, yet their favorite and dominant sin has never again had the slightest influence over them, except to excite an outburst of horror and deep repentance. Oh, that you had faith in Jesus that He could thus cast out your reigning sins!

V. And now we will go another step: This man's faith was attended with what appears

A Hesitancy.

But after thinking it over a good deal, I am hardly inclined to think it such a hesitancy as many have judged it to be. He said, "If thou wilt, thou canst make me clean." There was an "if" in this speech, and that "if" has aroused the suspicions of many preachers. Some think it supposes that he doubted our Lord's willingness. I hardly think that the language justly bears so harsh a construction. What he meant may have been this: "Lord, I do not know yet that thou art sent to heal lepers; I have not seen that Thou hast ever done so; but still, if it be within the compass of thy commission, I believe thou will do it, and assuredly thou canst if thou wilt. Thou canst heal not only some lepers, but me in particular; Thou canst make me clean." Now, I think this was a legitimate thing for him to say, as he had not seen a leper healed: "If it be within the compass of thy commission, I believe thou canst make me whole."

See, also, how the leper, to my mind, really speaks without any hesitancy, if you understand him. He does not say, "Lord, if thou puttest out thy hand, thou canst make me clean;" nor, "Lord, if thou speakest, thou canst make me clean;" but only, "Lord, if thou wilt, thou canst make me clean:" Thy mere will can do it. Oh, splendid faith! If you are inclined to spy a little halting in it, I would have you admire it for running so well with a lame foot. If there was a weakness anywhere in his faith, still it was so strong that the weakness only manifests its strength. Sinner, it is so; and I pray God that thy heart may grasp it—if the Lord wills it He can make thee clean. Believest thou this? If so, carry out practically what thy faith will suggest to thee—namely, that thou come to Jesus and plead with Him, and get from Him the cleansing which thou needest.

VI. In the sixth place, notice his faith had flowing out of it. Believing that, if Jesus willed He could make him clean, what did the leper do? At once he came to Jesus. I know not from what distance, but he came as near to Jesus as he could. Then we read that he besought him; that is to say, he pleaded, and pleaded again. He cried, "Lord, cleanse me! Lord, heal my leprosy!" Nor was this all; he fell on his knees and worshipped; for we read, "Kneeling to Him." Now, poor soul, thou that art full of guilt, and hardened in sin, and yet anxious to be healed, look straight away to the Lord Jesus Christ. He is here now. In the preaching of the gospel He is with us alway. With the eyes of thy mind behold Him, for He beholdeth thee. Thou knowest that He lives, even though thou seest Him not. Believe in this living Jesus; believe for perfect cleansing. Cry to him, worship Him, adore Him, trust Him. Go home, and on thy knees say, "Lord, I believe that thou canst make me clean." He will hear you and will save you.

VII. Lastly, his faith had its reward. Have patience with me just a minute.

The Reward

of this man's faith was, first, that his very words were treasured up. Matthew, Mark, Luke, all three of them, record the precise words which this man used: "Lord, if Thou, wilt, Thou canst make me clean." They evidently did not see so much to find fault with in them as some have done; on the contrary, they thought them gems to be placed in the setting of their gospels. Three times over are they recorded, because they are such a splendid confession of faith for a poor diseased leper to have made. This man's first faith-words are folded up in the fair linen of three evangels, and laid up in the treasury of the house of the Lord. God values the language of humble confidence.

His next reward was, that Jesus echoed his words. He said: "Lord, if thou wilt, thou canst make me clean"; and Jesus said, I will; be thou clean." As an echo answers to the voice, so did Jesus to His supplicant. The Lord Jesus was so pleased with this man's words that He caught them as they leaped out of his mouth, and used them Himself, saying: "I will; be thou clean." If you can only get, then, as far as this leper's confession, I believe that our Lord Jesus, from His throne above, will answer to your prayer.

Christ's Compassion.

So potent were the words of the leper, that they moved our Lord very wonderfully. Read the forty-first verse: "And Jesus, moved with compassion." The Greek word here used, if I were to pronounce is in your hearing, would half suggest its own meaning. It expresses a stirring of the entire manhood, a commotion in all the inward parts. Oh, to think that a poor leper should have such power over the divine Son of God! Yet, my hearer, in all thy sin and misery, if thou canst believe in Jesus, thou canst move the heart of thy blessed Saviour. Yea, even now His bowels yearn towards thee.

No sooner was our Lord Jesus thus moved than out went His hand, and He touched the man and healed him immediately. It did not require a long time for the working of the cure; but the leper's blood was cooled and cleansed at once. To make Him quite sure that he was cleansed, the Lord Jesus bade him go to the priest, and seek a certificate of health. He was so clean, that he might be examined by the appointed sanitary authority, and come off without suspicion. The cure which he had received was a real and radical one, and, therefore, he might go away at once, and get the certificate of it. If our converts will not bear practical tests, they are worth nothing; let even our enemies judge whether they are not and women when Jesus has renewed them. If Jesus saves a sinner, He does not mind all men testing the change. Jesus does not seek display, but He seeks examination from those able to judge. Our converts will bear the test. Dear hearer, if thou believest on Jesus Christ, and if thou wilt trust Him, as the sent One of God, fully and entirely with thy soul, He will make thee clean. Behold Him on the cross, and see sin put away. Behold Him risen from the dead, and see new life bestowed. Behold Him enthroned in power, and see evil conquered. I am ready to be bound for my Lord, to be His surety, that if thou, my hearer, wilt come to Him, He will make thee clean. Believe thy Saviour, and thy cure is wrought. God help thee, for Jesus Christ's sake. Amen.

YEARS OF DUTY AND SELF-DENIAL.*

EUNICE MARSH might well say that the first seventeen years of her life had been happy years. Her father, a man useful and much beloved, had during that time been minister of the only church in Hopeville, a town in the southern part of the State. She had lost her mother when she was a little child, but her loss had been well supplied by the love and care of her mother's mother, with whom she had lived, in the house that was now her home, till the time of her father's second marriage. Her new mother did not love her own little daughter, when she came, more dearly than she loved Eunice, and so the happy years moved on to

A Sorrowful Ending.

Suddenly, in the midst of happiness and usefulness, with no warning which those who loved him could understand, the minister died. Then Eunice returned to her grandparents' home, on the hill; and her stepmother, with her little daughter, came there also, to stay for a little while; and they never went away again. It was not a very large house, and the old people were far from being rich; but they offered the widow a home while she needed one. She did not need it long. She never quite recovered from the shock of her husband's death, and she died within the year, leaving her little girl to her sister Eunice, "to love and care for always—to be her very own." After a while came again to Eunice. Why should she not be happy? Those who had gone from her had only "gone before," and those who remained were very dear; and life was before her—a mystery!—but a mystery of gladness and blessing, as she believed. Dr. Everett had been the minister's classmate in college, and his life-long friend; and when the minister died, he became the guardian and the life-long friend of his daughters. In his house they found a second home, and from him Eunice had the counsel and the guidance which, in their old age and with their failing powers, her grandparents could no longer give her. Strong, eager, ambitious, it would have pleased the girl well to be allowed to choose her own lot and work, and to make her own way in the world. But she was dutiful, and she loved her little sister dearly, and so she was willing to be restrained and guided, and to give herself to work, which seemed at first very humble work, which almost anyone might do, but which was —a blessing to others and herself; so time went on. Happy? Looking back over those first years, Eunice told herself that no one could have been happier than she was then. Yes, and afterwards also. For that which made much of the happiness was not taken from her at a single blow, nor was she called upon to choose between her duty and her happiness all at once. She knew there was no choice for her. When Justin Everett, the doctor's youngest brother—and like him, a physician—saw his way open to go West, to an uncle, to establish himself with him in his profession, Eunice might have gone with him as his wife, if circumstances at home had been different. But it was impossible. There was no choice to be made, and nothing to be said. Her grandfather had been stricken helpless, with little hope of ever being otherwise than helpless. Over her grandmother, younger than him by many years, hung an awful dread. She, too, must die; but she might be years in dying. Some one would have to watch by her dying bed, as she, in her youth, had watched by the dying bed of her own mother, till the slow months wore on to years, before her tired eyes closed at last in painless rest. No one needed to say to Eunice that she could not leave her grandmother to be cared for by others, while she went away to find her own happiness. She never even paused to consider the matter. It was impossible. Her lover thought quite otherwise, and pleaded with her with words which made her glad, and which hurt her sorely, but which did not move her from her purpose. Over one thing only she hesitated. Should she give him back his word before he went away? "No," said Dr. Everett; "you are both young. Wait." And so she waited, and was not unhappy. No woman can be unhappy whose life is lived not to herself but to others. Her service was truly willing service, and was

God-Given Work

Its Own Reward.

She had cares, many and heavy, weary nights and anxious days, but she had kind friends, who took care for her and helped her; and her cares and labors and daily self-denials, and the hourly sight of her grandmother's faith and patience, and of her joyful release at last, did for heart and soul more than many prosperous years of untroubled happiness could have done.

A SWEDISH CHURCH.

(See Illustration.)

The venerable building whose interior is depicted in our illustration, is familiar to all travellers in Europe, being interesting both intrinsically and from its associations. Among other churches of the capital of Sweden, are the wonderful old Cathedral and the Horsemen's, or Knights', Church, which is, perhaps, the most venerated and peculiar of all churches in the north of Europe. It is to the Swede what Notre Dame is to the Frenchman, and what Westminster Abbey is to the Englishman; for here the kings of the country have been buried for many a century. Only once every year is service held in it. The lofty stone spire, which was destroyed by lightning, has been replaced by one of cast iron; on each side the door are the equestrian statues which have given the church its name, both horses and riders being covered with solid armor. The building is one huge mausoleum. Every stone in the aisles forms the covering of a grave, and originally bore the name and style of the man whose prowess won for him the coveted distinction of burial in the Knights' Church. Now, however, the stones are broken, and the legends are undecipherable. The walls are adorned with ancient flags, drums, swords, and other implements of war. It is in this church that we find the tomb of Gustavus Adolphus, whose name is revered by every Protestant, and whose memory is cherished by the people of Sweden with the veneration and affection which Washington's name arouses in the breasts of the people of America. His body reposes in a sarcophagus of green porphyry placed on the right of the high altar, and inscribed with the short and fitting epitaph in Latin, "Dying, he Triumphed." Since his time the established religion of Sweden has been Lutheran, and at the present time the King of Sweden is ineligible to the throne if he be not a Lutheran, as Queen Victoria would become incapable of wearing the English crown if she became a Roman Catholic. The clergy are not, as a rule, men of much learning, and have, in consequence, very little influence over the people. They are paid by the Government, which doles out to them very small salaries. There are in the entire kingdom about three thousand five hundred clergymen.

In travelling through Sweden, the visitor notices that every village has a church, conspicuous from a long distance by its tapering spire rising out of its nest of trees, and around its walls the green God's-acre in which lie the bodies of the villagers of past generations. On Sunday mornings fresh flowers are placed on most of the graves by the people who come from the surrounding country. As soon as they have entered the church the sexton locks the door, which he opens again after the invocatory prayer. Each of the pews are locked until the arrival of the owner, whose name is upon it. There are plenty of benches placed along the walls for strangers, or the poorest of the people, although there are but few who are actually in indigence, for the Swedish race, as a whole, is very thrifty, and, what is more important, of a devout and contented disposition.

A visitor to Sweden says: "In most of the churches the pulpits, always of wood, are elaborately carved with scriptural scenes and figures. These pulpits are often surmounted by a sounding-board, also carved. An old sounding-board in the village of Soderkoping has the word Jehovah in Hebrew letters inscribed on the most conspicuous part, while on top is an image of a human figure, very probably intended for the Saviour. As the people enter, they place what offerings they bring with them (and few come without anything at all) in receptacles near the door; often these are plain earthen pitchers placed on stools. All carry books of the service, and the stranger would be impressed with the dignified and serious behavior of the congregations. The same variety of dress is seen as in our rural churches; rich and poor meet together. The fashionable ladies wear the French bonnet, but the majority have only a shawl or kerchief tied over the head, in a bow more or less elaborate. The men are for the most part rustic in garb and manner, and there are very few but are enthusiastic devotees of the snuff-taking habit. Boxes of the pungent stuff are passed from one hand to another, and even from pew to pew during service, and are freely used."

LOST AND FOUND.

My name is Anthony Hunt. I am a drover, and live miles and miles away upon the Western prairie. There wasn't a house in sight when we first moved there, my wife and I, and now we haven't many neighbors, though those we have are good ones.

One day, about ten years ago, I went away from home to sell some fifty head of cattle. I was to buy some groceries and dry goods before I came back; and, above all, a doll for our youngest, Dolly. She had never had a store doll of her own—only rag babies her mother had made for her.

Dolly could talk of nothing else, and went down to the gate to call after me to get a big one. Nobody but a parent can understand how full my mind was of that toy, and how, when the cattle were sold, the first thing I hurried off to buy was Dolly's doll. I found a large one, with eyes that would open and shut when you pulled a wire, and had it wrapped up in a paper and tucked it under my arm while I had the parcels of calico and tea and sugar put up. Then, late as it was, I started for home. It might have been more prudent to stay until morning, but I felt anxious to get back, and eager to hear Dolly's praises about her doll.

I was mounted on a steady-going old horse, and pretty well loaded. Night set in before I was a mile from town, and settled down as dark as pitch, while I was in the middle of the darkest bit of road I know of. I could have felt my way, though, I remembered it so well. When the storm that had been brewing broke, and the rain came down in torrents, I was five miles, or may-be six miles, from home.

I rode as fast as I could, but all of a sudden I heard a little cry like a child's voice. I stopped short and listened. I heard it again. I called, and it answered me. I couldn't see a thing, all was as dark as pitch. I got down and felt around in the grass—called again, and again was answered. Then I began to wonder. I'm not timid, but I was known to be a drover, and to have money about me. It might be a trap to rob and murder me. I am not superstitious, not very, but how could a child be out on the prairie in such a night, at such an hour? The bit of a coward that hides itself in most men showed itself to me then, but once more I heard the cry, and I said:

Anthony Hunt and the Lost Child.

"If any man's child is hereabouts, Anthony Hunt is not the man to let it die."

I searched again. At last I bethought me of a clump of trees about fifty yards to the left of the road. In the stillness of the night I prayed to the Lord that he might guide me to the right path and lead me through the darkness of that stormy night to the spot where I thought a little child was in sore need of help. The Lord heard my prayer. Cuddled up under one of the trees, I found a little dripping thing that moaned and sobbed as I took it in my arms. I called my horse, and the beast came to me, and I mounted and tucked the little soaked thing under my coat as well as I could, promising to take it home to mamma. It seemed so tired, and pretty soon cried itself to sleep on my bosom.

It had slept there over an hour when I saw my own windows. There were lights in them, and I supposed my wife had lit them for my sake, but when I got to the doorway I saw something was the matter, and stood with a dread fear of heart five minutes before I could lift the latch. As last I did it, and saw the room full of neighbors, and my wife amid them weeping. When she saw me she hid her face.

"Oh, don't tell him," she said; "it will kill him."

"What is it, neighbors?" I cried, and one of the neighbors inquired:

"What's that you have in your arms?"

"A poor lost child," said I; "I found it on the road. Take it, will you? I've turned faint." And I lifted the sleeping thing and saw the face of my own child, my Dolly.

It was my own darling, and none other, that I had picked up on the drenched road. My little child had wandered out to meet papa and the doll, while the mother was at work, and they were lamenting her as one dead. I thanked the Lord on my knees before them.

It is not much of a story, neighbors, but I think of it often in the nights, and wonder how I could bear to live now if I had not stopped when I heard the cry for help upon the road, hardly louder than a squirrel's chirp.

That's Dolly yonder with her mother in the meadow—a girl worth saving, I think; the prettiest and sweetest thing this side of the Mississippi.

MRS. TRANSOME'S PUPIL.

A SERIAL STORY.

In the Almshouse.

How the days sped I do not know; but they seemed to pass by like the rushing of a river just before you come to a deep, dreadful waterfall, down which you must plunge into a flood that will drown you. Every morning and every evening carried us on to the terrible day when we must quit our old house for ever. I kept my school open till the very last; for this was no time to lose a single penny I could win. There was no other house near that place where we could move to. So my school would be lost, as well as our home, and I must try to begin again in a strange neighborhood, on the other side of the town, where the rents were lower. What was to become of Transome and me, baffled me whenever I looked forward. He did not lie in bed any more, but sat beside me in the chimney-nook, while I taught the children; now and then stretching out his hand—his poor hand—crooked and drawn together with rheumatism, just to touch me. I knew after a while what he was thinking of then, though he never put it into words.

Well, we had to sell some of our goods; the rest we carried with us to the other side of town, into a small house, in a close, pent-up street, where the wind never blew across one's face with a sweet, fresh breath. I did my utmost to gather together a few scholars; and sometimes I had a few, and sometimes none. Transome took to sitting always at my side; and if I was away for half an hour, doing a few errands, he'd welcome me back as though I had been away from him all day. He began, too, to talk more, at times quite eagerly, as if he was afraid he might some day want to tell me something, and would not have the chance. I never knew him talk so much as that long, dreary summer, when we were treading slowly down those steps poor folks know of, step after step, downwards and downwards, never stopping, till the last step crumbles away under one's feet and all is lost!

We trod on the last step, and it crumbled away underneath our old feet when the first sharp touch of winter came. We had kept up till then, pawning and selling our few goods to buy bread. But when the biting cold came, and our blankets were in the pawnshop, and I had not a morsel of flannel towrap about Transome's poor pained limbs, and no fire to give a little warmth to our worn-out frames, when I knew that all was lost! I was sorely bewildered and beset. Had the Lord been deceiving us all these years? Had He brought us to old age, and to the very gates of death, to forsake us at last? Transome had been faithful, if a poor ignorant man can ever be faithful to his God. If either of us had been unfaithful, it was me; and surely the Lord would not visit my sins and shortcomings upon him!

"Ally!" said Transome, one day, "bring th' book, and read me again how th' blessed Lord came to's end upo' th' cross."

So I opened my old Bible, and I read aloud to him, shivering and shaking with cold as I read. There was not a spark of fire in the grate, or a crust of bread in the cupboard. I had not a penny in the world, and did not know where to turn to find one. We had not any friends. Transome being such a silent man, and me a foreigner in that country; and all my kinsfolk were dead and gone. It was forty years since I had married away out of my county.

I was thinking all these thoughts, taking no heed of the blessed words my tongue repeated; for I had read those chapters so often to Transome, I did not need to think of them. How far even I had read I did not know, till all at once I heard Transome saying to himself—

"Scourged, and mocked, and crucified! God's own Son! That were ten times waur nor deein' i' th' poor house."

That word stung me to the core of my heart; though in my secret thoughts I had known it must come to that. But to hear Transome say so! I threw down the Bible, and cried with a loud and very bitter cry. It seems as if I could hear myself even now; and as if I could see Transome's thin, pale face, as he looks at me.

"Ally!" he says, "thee'rt a scholar. Is na' there a verse somewhere, 'faithful unto death.'"

"Ay!" I sobbed, "'be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life.'"

"That's it!" he cried; "learn it me, Ally, as yo' learn the little childer."

I could not say him nay, though my heart was like to break. He caught hold, fast, firm hold, of my hand, as I said it to him over and over again; him repeating it after me like the least of my scholars in our old house. It seemed hard to him; or maybe he wanted the lesson to be long, for it was growing dark in the afternoon, before he stopped saying it.

"We'll stay one other neet," he said. "We've been together many a long year. But to-morrow morn, Ally—"

There was no need for him to finish what he was saying. To-morrow we must go into the union workhouse. Nothing else lay before us. We had fought our fight; and this was the end of it! I could not believe that it was aught save a dream; only I was cold and hungry, and so was Transome; so cold and so hungry it could not be a dream.

"My lass!" he said tenderly, very tenderly, and my mind called back the sound of his voice as we came home picking flowers along the cannal-side, "we mun remember as't were God's own Son as deed upo' th' cross. If thee had to see me hang, it 'ud be far, far waur nor deein. i' th' union; but it would na 'be waur nor what He bore for us. No, no, Ally; God Almighty's dealin' wi' us is softer nor wi' Christ. And, Ally, His poor mother stood by to see him dee upo' th' cross."

"Oh! if it was only me," I cried, "I could bear it!"

"Ah, but thee'lt have to bear it for me," he said, smiling on me; "it's just the same wi' me. If it were na' for thee, Ally', aw could go cheerfu' and glad to th' union; for aw've noan so long to live. But never to hear thee say 'Good neet' as I fa' asleep, nor, 'Good day,' when th' morn breaks, that's th' hurt, lass, that's th' hurt."

In the dark cold night I took the few things we had left and pawned them, spending part of the money in coal and food; and thinking that with the rest we might come out of the poorhouse again in the spring, and I could get a little school together once again.

The long, long night wore away too soon; and then I went to the relieving-officer and got an order to go into the poorhouse.

There was a glimmer of pale sunshine in the sky as Transome and I crept along the streets toward the union workhouse, feeling as if everybody we met knew where we were going. He could not drag himself along save at a very slow pace; and here and there, wherever there was a doorstep to an empty house, we were forced to sit down and rest. Transome did not speak many words as we went along, for he was very weary with the journey; but every now and then his poor fingers clasped my arm more tightly, as if he meant to say, "Cheer up, Ally; it must come right in the end." But at length we reached the end, the long, blank wall, and the great black doors; and though we stood outside full five minutes, looking into each other's face, no help came. I was forced to ring the loud, clanging bell, and we crossed over the black doorsill into the poorhouse.

We stood inside the great black doors which swung to behind us, shutting us in as though they would never open again, save, maybe, when we were borne out through them in a pauper coffin. Transome leaned more heavily on my arm. A man in the poorhouse suit was sitting in a little room just within the doors, and as we stood staring about us he called out sharply,

"Na then! whatten yo' standin' there for?" he shouted; "canna' yo' come on and tell me whatten yo' want here?"

"I and my husband have brought an order to go into the house," I said.

"Inside birds, eh!" he said, laughing a little; "caught and caged! Go on then t' th' measter's office. First dur t' th' reet across th' yard."

I guided poor Transome across a large square yard, with nought to be seen save high walls on every side, with windows in them that had no curtains, like eyes without eyelids, looking down on us. But there was not a face to be seen at any of them; and a mournful stillness filled the place. It was Transome that knocked at the master's door, a quiet, feeble knock that could never have been heard if there had been much noise. We were called to go in, but we did not stay there many minutes; and the master sent a man with us to show us our separate wards.

Once more we had to cross the great yard, Transome clinging to my arm, till we came to a door in the wall, where we must say good-by to one another. We never had said good-by all those long years, those forty years, since he had taken me from my father's home in another county. How could I let him go out of my sight? It was not like him setting off for his day's work, sure of coming in again in the evening. How could him and me spend our time apart?

"Could na' yo' leave us for two or three minutes?" said Transome to the man, feebly. "She's been th' best wife as ever a man had these forty years; and I dunno how to bid her good-by. Gie us a minute longer to be together."

"That I will," answered the man, "but it canna be more nor a two or three minutes. Bless yo'! yo'll see one another at prayers morn and neet, if yo' chosen to go; and yo'll ha' half an hour o' Sunday, besides half a day out once a month. It's noan so bad, is th' house, so as yo' getten reet side o' th' measter."

He went off for a little while, leaving Transome and me against the door into the women's ward; with all those dark, staring windows looking down on us. I laid my head against the door-post, and broke out into heavy, heavy sobs.

"Na, Ally," cried Transome, "na, my lass! Hush thee! hush thee! God A'mighty's here as well as out yonder i' th' world. He knows where we are; and sure He loves us both, same as He's loved us all along, We mun put our trust in Him, and go through it; thee and me mun part. Eh! but I wonder if God A'mighty looks down on ony hearts sorer nor ours at this moment o' time?"

"Only promise," I said, through my sobbing, "promise me faithfully, you'll be careful of yourself, and keep up, so as we can get out again in the spring, when the warm weather is come. Oh! Transome, if I could only keep nigh you, and take care of you, I shouldn't mind."

"There's One as 'll take care on us both," he answered, his voice trembling; 'One as says, I'll never leave thee, nor forsake thee.' On'y think o' that, my lass. He's here i' th' poorhouse itsen; and nought'll part Him away from thee nor me. Good-by, Ally. Aw hear th' man comin' back to us."

He stretched out both his hands to me, and I put mine into them, and we kissed each other solemnly, as if we were both about to die, and enter into another world. I saw his face quiver all over, and then there came across it a patient and quiet look, which never left it again, never! I knocked at the door before me, and passed in; just catching a last sight of him turning away with nobody to lean upon. Then the door was thrust to between us, and I could see him no more.

I did not heed much what was said to me, and I did not look about my new dwelling-place; only I followed a woman, who passed through many rooms, where the windows were high up in the walls so that nobody could reach the sills, and where there were groups of women all dressed alike, chattering, most of them; and there was a strange close smell. Oh! how different from the sweet air in our old home! At last, when I came to myself, as it were, I found I was sitting on a chair at the head of a little narrow bed, in a long room, with two long rows of beds down the sides of it, and a narrow path up the middle. All the beds were alike, and the bare whitewashed walls closed us in, with nothing to be seen through the high windows, save a little bit of gray November sky. There were old women all around me; some of them many years older than me, even a few of them bed-ridden; but they seemed too dull to take any notice of me, as if everything that was like life had died out of them, save the bare life itself.

Well! there's no need to tell you much about the poorhouse. Most poor folks know more of it than they care to know, either through their own troubles, or the troubles of their friends. I don't say a word against it; only I could not be with Transome. There! think what it was to have been his wife forty years, with scarcely a brangle between us, and never a sulking quarrel, and all at once to be shut up in different parts of the same building with only a few walls and yards to part us, yet not be able to see him, or even send a loving message to him. I wet my pillow with my tears that night, ay! more than when my Willie died, as I wondered and wondered how he was faring, and if he was warmly wrapped up, and how his pains were. But I could do nothing for him, no more than if I was lying in my shroud and coffin. At last my loneliness and my trouble drove me to remember Him that is everywhere, and was with Transome as He was with me. "Lord," I said in my heart, for it was not altogether a prayer such as I had generally said to Him, "Lord, if they'd only make his bed comfortable, and wrap him up well in the blankets! Do put it into their hearts, Lord, for he's tried to serve Thee faithful all his life long."

After that I felt a little easier in my mind; I fell asleep, and dreaming of the days when Willie was alive, only sometimes the child was Willie, and sometimes Pippin. I suppose it was because I had close to my pillow the little box that held the curl of Willie's hair, and Pippin's piece of money. It was the only thing I had brought in with me, except a few bits of linen Transome had woven for me years ago.

Ah! how wearily the long hours of the day dragged by! I had been an active woman all my life; and now there was nothing for me to do. I begged that I might help to scour out the old men's ward, thinking I might get a word with Transome; but they said I was past the age at which women were set to work. I asked the matron to find me some sewing to do; but she told me that it was all done by the girls at school in the poorhouse. I saw then how the miserable old women about me had sunk lower and lower, till they were little better than idiots; and nothing lay before me but the same fate.

The only time of the day when I felt myself alive was morning and night, when prayers were read in the big room. We old folks were not required to attend, for the room was cold and draughty; but I would not have missed it for anything less than the chance of getting out of the house again; not that I thought God would listen to me more there than in the ward, but Transome never missed going. We could neither speak to one another, nor sit side by side; but we could see each other's faces, and we felt that we were together while we were hearing the same prayers, and repeating the same words. When we said, "Our Father," I would have kept silent, hearkening if I could catch his voice, only I was afraid he might be hearkening for mine; and I said it, and listened, said it, and listened, till at times I fancied I could hear a word or two from him amid all the hum of the other voices; just as a mother hears her baby sob in its sleep, though there may be a hundred louder noises about her. It was the rule for the women to go out from prayers first; and when I went by in my turn I could always see Transome looking towards me, with his patient smile upon his face. It used to go to my heart to think of him dragging himself across the yard when the rain was falling, or the snow was under foot, and him so weak with rheumatism. But then, it was our only comfort, his as well as mine; and he never missed coming morn and night.

Rev. G. H. Pember's New Prophetic Work entitled "Earth's Earliest Ages and Their Connection With Modern Spiritualism and Theosophy," is for sale at THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Office. Price $1.50.

An Illustrated Work on the Unfulfilled Prophecies of the Bible, by the Rev. M. Baxter, entitled "Forty Coming Wonders," may be had from the office of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 63 Bible House, New York, by remitting 75 cents. It is a book of 528 pages, is handsomely bound in cloth, and contains fifty full-page pictures and diagrams representing the scenes described in the prophecies of Daniel and in the book of the Revelation. It also contains a résumé of the opinions of other expositors, and extracts carefully collated from the works of all the most eminent writers on prophecy from the earliest ages of the Christian era down to those of recent date. It thus forms the most useful and complete guide the student can have on entering the study of that portion of the Word of God.

THE SON REJECTED.

"HE came unto His own, and His own received Him not." It was strangely significant that Jesus, after His triumphal entry into Jerusalem, should have found no lodging-place within her walls! "He left them and went out of the city into Bethany, and lodged there." The stones of Jerusalem were as dear to Him as the stones of Bethany, but at Bethany were hearts which owned and loved Him, while Jerusalem said, "Who is this?" God had chosen Zion; He had desired her for His habitation; He had said; "This is My rest forever: here will I dwell, for I have desired it." (Ps. 132 : 13, 14.) Yet Zion and found no beauty in Him that she should desire Him. He wept over her, yearned to save her, fain would have gathered her children as a hen gathers her chickens under her wings, but she would not.

Knew Him Not,

On the following morning, as He took His way into Jerusalem, He saw a fig-tree, which, in its leafy promise, but real fruitlessness, was like Jerusalem, and like every human soul where Jesus does not dwell. Jesus said unto it: "Let no fruit grow on thee henceforward forever." And the word which called all things into being was as powerful in taking away life. "Presently, the fig-tree withered away! It was the exception when Jesus exercised His mighty power in destruction. Generally He spoke—sight, hearing, life, health, reason, comfort—into souls and bodies. But Jerusalem was courting judgment, rushing to destruction, and choosing the fate of the fig-tree. The disciples remarked on the suddenness of the fig-tree's withering, and Jesus took occasion to tell them that if they had faith, and doubted not, all things, whatsoever they should ask in prayer, they should receive. Jesus would encourage us to ask in faith, just as though He entreated us to stay Him from words and works of judgment, by showing the almightiness of real faith in God to stay it. It is as though He said, "I am powerless; I must judge, but I put in your power authority to move mountains if you have faith and doubt not. Jerusalem was destroyed, but not before thousands of redeemed souls were safe in the arms of Jesus—men and women who, at this very time, took their part against Jesus, and, so soon after, swelled the cry, "Crucify Him, crucify Him."

When He was come into the temple, the chief priests and elders of the people, who always stood upon their dignity, came unto Him, as He was teaching, and said, "By what authority doest Thou these things?" What things? Jesus had never worshipped any God but One, His Father; Jesus had made no graven image to worship; Jesus had never taken His Father's name in vain; had never really broken the Sabbath-day; had never failed to honor His Father or His mother; had not killed, but saved life, and healed disease; had never done, thought or spoken impurely, but had saved many, many an outcast; had never borne false witness, but was Himself the Faithful and the True; had never coveted, for all things were delivered unto Him, both in heaven and on earth. And now the elders of the people want to know by what authority He lived a life so holy and so faultless,

By What Authority

He "went about doing good, and healing all that were oppressed of the devil." (Acts 10 : 38.) Alas, the same spirit is abroad to-day. A man swears, gambles, commits the most flagrant sins against common morality, and no one asks him his authority! But let this man be converted, and stand up in the street to warn others of the ruin he has escaped, and of the sin from which God has delivered him, and, very often, clergy and magistrates come and ask him "by what authority" he does these things! A so-called aristocract, who is really only a bond-slave of Satan, may ruin the life and break the heart of a fair young girl, but if any one pulls off the mask and exposes the hideous wickedness of her betrayer, the authorities compass sea and land to know "by what authority" sin is dragged to light, as though sin were not sin unless people know about it! As though the guilt did not lie in the breaking of God's law and the ruin of a fellow-creature, but only in the widely deserved shame of a man whose interest it is to walk about as a whited sepulchre! Man needs no authority for doing evil—alas, it is such a common thing!—but he needs authority for doing good! He may ruin souls, and no one interferes with him, but he must ask the clergyman, the minister, the magistrate, the mayor, the police, for leave to do what he can in saving them. Perhaps nothing more manifests the spirit of enmity to the gospel than this common interrogation, "By what authority" do you do this? O how men reject the Son of God! Men make up their minds that there is something unlawful in people being healed of disease by the hand of Jesus alone, and that it is absolutely wrong, sinful and "tempting Providence," as it is called, to go out as a missionary on apostolic lines, without purse or scrip or outfit, living on the food and wearing the clothing of the natives, and trusting God for supplies day by day. Whence comes this thought? Surely from an absolute disbelief in God, a putting of God out of the question. If God were shut out of the universe we should have to do the best possible for ourselves, but the terrible anomaly that we see around us is that God is outwardly acknowledged; but when it comes to a practical issue, God is set aside, and man's devices take precedence.

Jesus answered by another question, "The baptism of John, whence was it? from heaven, or of men?" The elders, who were ready enough to assert their dignity when questioning Jesus, quite forgot themselves when He questioned them. There was no dignity, but quite the contrary, in their reasoning with themselves. "If we shall say, From heaven, He will say unto us, why then did ye not believe him? But if we shall say, Of men, we fear the people; for all hold John as a prophet." These would-be administrators of justice and righteousness did not want to know what was true, or what would be a righteous answer, but only what would best. They would not say, "From heaven," or they would condemn themselves; they would not say, "Of men," because of the popular voice; so they took neutral ground, and said, "We cannot tell." Whereupon He also said, "Neither tell I you by what authority I do these things." What a lesson for us in dealing with questioners. First prove them, as to whether they are real. Then, if they shuffle, simply refuse to enter into an argument. There is such a thing as casting pearls before swine. Jesus next spoke the parable of the two sons; the professing Jew, who said, "I go, sir: and went not" into the vineyard, and the converted Gentile, who said, "I will not," but afterward he repented and went. And Jesus showed them how publicans and harlots are the first to enter into the kingdom of heaven. These appreciated John the Baptist, whom the scribes could not condemn, and yet the rulers of the people received Him not.

Thus Jesus Was Rejected,

not only in His own person, but in that of His forerunner, and always because of the pride and self-sufficiency of those who rejected him. He then spoke another parable: "There was a certain householder which planted a vineyard, and hedged it round about, and digged a wine-press in it, and built a tower, and let it out to husbandmen, and went into a far country: and when the time of the fruit drew near, he sent his servants to the husbandmen, that they might receive the fruits of it." It was but his right; it is true he was a non-resident landlord, but it was his due that he should get in the rents or the crops, at any rate a large share of them. But his claim was disputed, and his messengers killed. He sent again a larger deputation, but with a similar result. Last of all, he sent unto them his son, saying, 'They will reverence my son.' Now things came to a crisis, and the revolt in the vineyard grew desperate. They said 'This is the heir; come, let us kill him, let us seize on his inheritance.' And they caught him, and cast him out of the vineyard, and slew him." It was a prophecy, in large part, already fulfilled. "This people have I

Formed For Myself,"

(Isa. 43 : 21), was God's claim, yet the house of Israel had gone astray from Him, turned every man to his own way, rejected God's rule, chosen them a king, and then fallen into idolatry. And now, centuries after their return from captivity in Babylon, their religion was all outside, they drew near to God with their lips, but their hearts were far from Him, and, whether in worldly matters or religious, self was still their centre; if they prayed, it was to be seen of men; if they did alms, it was to gain glory for their religiousness; they disputed the fruit of the vineyard with the Owner, and persecuted all who asserted His claim! But is not this the spirit of the age in which we live? Is it not still a fact that, "all seek their own, not the things which are Jesus Christ's"?—from the comfortable minister who rides to church in his carriage, in spite of the fourth commandment, and when he gets there, enjoys the flattery of the people, to the millionaire who gives his thousands, and then expects to get the worth of it in flattery, or the luxurious hearer who enjoys the eloquence of the preacher, or the earnest worker who loves to be the idol of the souls which he has gathered. Where is God getting the fruits of the vineyard? Where is the evidence that He rules, and that He is Lord and Master? The object of the vineyard is that God shall have His due, and that Jesus the Son of God shall be glorified. "Whosoever shall fall on this stone shall be broken." Jesus has power to break down the pride and self-importance, and use His vessel to His own honor, "but on whomsoever it shall fall, it will grind him to powder." Christ must either break our hearts with His love now, or execute vengeance by and by.

IS THIS ALL?

Sometimes I catch sweet glimpses of His face.
But that is all.
Sometimes He looks on me and seems to smile,
But that is all.
Sometimes He speaks a passing word of peace,
But that is all.
Sometimes I think I hear His loving voice
Upon me call.

And is this all He meant when thus He spoke,
"Come unto me?"
Is there no deeper, more enduring rest
In Him for thee?
Is there no steadier light for thee in Him?
O come and see!

O, come and see! O, look, and look again!
All shall be right;
O, taste His love, and see that it is good,
Thou child of night!
O, trust thou, trust thou in His grace and power!
Then all is bright.

Nay, do not wrong Him by thy heavy thoughts
But love His love.
Do thou full justice to His tenderness,
His mercy prove;
Take Him for what He is; O, take Him all,
And look above!

Then shall thy tossing soul find anchorage
And steadfast peace;
Thy love shall rest on His; thy weary doubts
Forever cease,
Thy heart shall find in Him and in His grace
Its rest and bliss!

Christ and His love shall be thy blessed all
For evermore!
Christ and His light shall shine on all thy ways
For evermore!
Christ and His peace shall keep thy troubled soul
For evermore!

Dry Goods for Spring Wear.

Messrs. James McCreery & Co. are now opening a large stock of Spring Styles, both in Silks and Woolens. There are many novelties, and a great variety of wearing material that is elegant and tasteful as well as moderate in cost.

A fine selection of faille Francais Silks, made altogether in solid colors, deserves popularity. These silks wear well, and don't pull in the seams when made into waists. The firm has an endless variety of them in hand, among others a rousse, gray, chasseur, gobelin gray, golden brown, bismuth, golden brown; girofle, terra-cotta; canard, saphire blue; terra-cotta; tenplier, mousse green; acier, light gray; noyer, dark beige; and chandron, rich terra-cotta brown.

Plaid and striped surah silks are in demand to trim woolen goods for ordinary wear. Tussah silk is a nice silk for summer. It is not much heavier than India silk, yet stronger in point of wear.

The stock of draperies and trimmings which the firm now has on hand is a large one, and there is a variety to suit all tastes and all purses. In the line of woolen goods there is as much elegance and variety as in the silks, and the whole spring stock is well worthy of inspection.

THE CROWN PRINCE OF GERMANY.

Interest Taken in the Illustrious Patient — Dr. Lennox Browne's Opinion as to the Cause of His Condition—Life at San Remo—Medical Consultations—Dr. Mackenzie's High Opinion of the Crown Princess—The Importance of the Present Crisis Brought about by the Crown Prince's Illness—The Influence of Germany upon the Future of Europe.

THE attention of the civilized world is still concentrated in sympathetic sorrow and suspense on San Remo, where the struggle has been now for many weeks so gallantly waged between the Crown Prince of Germany and the mysterious malady which threatens his life. It is not the least painful feature of this momentous case that the differing opinions of the physicians have developed in the public mind, and have led to painful public discussions. It is said that in diseases of this nature, whether the patient is tending toward recovery or decline, the course is rarely uniform, and there is nothing in an occasional return of suffering in the Prince's case that should compel us to believe the worst. The illustrious patient has seemed just as often on the point of recovery as he has seemed in serious danger. No one will have forgotten the alarm of December last, when Sir Morell Mackenzie, whose portrait and life we gave in the Christian Herald on January 12 (page 28), was hastily summoned to San Remo, and when, for a moment, many did not venture even to hope. The sufferer rallied so completely after that as to reassure those who had the keenest interest in his welfare, if any marked distinction on this point can be said to exist between his family and the vast majority of mankind.

The operation of tracheotomy, which was performed on February the 9th, was entirely successful in its immediate results, but as it was avowedly a measure of relief and not of a curative character, it has left the disease, whatever the disease may be, exactly where it was. The violent inflammation of the cartilages of the larynx continued for some time, but late reports describe it as subsiding, though it has proceeded so far that the larynx will never be of use to the Prince if he recovers. Probably if he were stronger, the surgeons would remove it by an operation; as it is, they may allow the disease to eat it away. This operation of Nature herself may, or may not, wear out the malady, and, while it goes on, the patient cannot hope to be free from lassitude and pain. As the nothing seems to be positively known as to the true character of the Prince's mysterious affliction. Many of the German doctors seem to adhere to their earlier diagnosis of cancer; and though in November last Sir Morell Mackenzie seemed to yield a reluctant assent to their reasonings, he has since returned to his earlier and more hopeful view that the disease is not necessarily cancer. Professor Virchow is said to be positive that nothing submitted to his examination compels a belief in the worst, and his recent departure for Egypt has been taken by many persons to signify that he has no anticipation of any further call upon his services, while others believe that his departure was prompted by his reluctance to stand any longer between the English and German physicians in a position which must be painful to him.

Dr. Lennox Browne, the well-known author of several authoritative books dealing with the throat and its diseases has published on the Crown Prince's case, in which he retorts on Dr. Mackenzie's German critics that his Imperial Highness's recent serious condition was largely due to previous mistreatment. He says the original cause of the irritation is undoubtedly the attack of measles "from which the Prince suffered early last year, and to this inflammation of the larynx following measles has to be added 'repeated traumatisms,' not by removal of the new growth by Sir Morell Mackenzie, but by the electric cauterizations which were employed even daily by one of the Prince's physicians for a period of several weeks before his Imperial Highness came under Sir Morell Mackenzie's hands at all."

An Outspoken Letter

The operation of tracheotomy recently performed with Dr. Mackenzie's sanction, by the German doctor, Dr. Bramann, consists in making an artificial opening into the wind-pipe, when, from obstruction by inflammation or otherwise of the natural air passages, the breathing is impeded to an extent threatening life. It is one of two operations adopted in such cases at the discretion of the physician. He may decide on laryngotomy, in which the opening is made in the membranous junction of the two principal cartilages of the larynx, and in which the tube has to remain in the passage but a short time, but is contra-indicated where, as in the case of the Crown Prince, there is already disease of the cartilages themselves. In such a case the opening is made as low as possible in the trachea or wind-pipe and this is the operation known as tracheotomy. Into the opening made in the windpipe a silver tube is introduced, with an inner tube that can be removed for cleansing. As air enters and passes out by the artificial opening, the voice is of course lost, because there is no breath passing through the natural passages to throw the vocal cords into sonorous vibration. If the patient wishes to speak, therefore, he is obliged to close up the external orifice of the tube with his finger.

After a time, an opening is made in the upper part of the silver tube as an experiment, for the purpose of endeavoring to re-establish the permanent breathway, and a valve is fitted to the external orifice so that the patient is able to speak at will. Although the operation is of some danger when performed for acute infantile diseases, as croup and diphtheria, there is little or no immediate risk when performed on the adult. An officer has been known to command his regiment with a tracheotomy tube in his wind-pipe, and there are many hack-drivers—a class peculiarly liable to inflammations of the throat—and other workingmen, who are going about their daily duties with this artificial auxiliary breathing-place in their throats, feeling but little inconvenience from it. They have, however, to cover the tube in the throat with the finger when they speak, but otherwise they are examples of the success of this beneficent operation.

LIFE AT SAN REMO.

(See Illustration on first page.)

THE Crown Prince's life at San Remo is essentially quiet and homely. His study is situated on the first floor of the Villa Zirio, as also the drawing-room and the sleeping-rooms of the Prince and Princess, and of the Countess Brull, the inseparable attendant of the Princess. The daily routine begins with early coffee at seven and breakfast at nine, after which, if fine, the Prince walks out with his wife and daughters. In our illustration he is shown inspecting one of the curiosity shops of the town. His eldest daughter is in front with him, the Princess and her youngest daughter being behind. Lunch is at one o'clock, and then the Prince drives out, always sitting with his back to the horses, so that the wind may not affect his throat. By his side in our sketch sits Dr. Schrader. The Prince takes as much walking exercise as the weather and the state of his health will allow, but his daughters are constantly out of doors, while the Princess is an indefatigable walker. Their second son, Prince Henry, also frequently takes a sea-trip in the torpedo boat which has been courteously placed at the disposition of the Crown Prince and his family by the Italian Government.

Medical Consultations

The Crown Princess

has won golden opinions from the physicians, by her composure and the assiduity of her attention as a loving and tender nurse. Dr. Mackenzie's opinion of her has been admiringly expressed in an interview which he had recently with the representative of a society journal. The interviewer said: "That must have been an awful moment when you had to disclose the real state of things to the Prince." Dr. Mackenzie replied, "It was, for me. It is very seldom that we make such a communication to the patient himself; and even to the friends it is conveyed with all sorts of humane euphemisms. It was received with the most perfect calmness. The Prince, after an instant of silence, put out his hand with his usual winning smile, and grasping mine, said, 'I have been lately fearing something of this sort. I thank you, Sir Morell, for being so frank with me.' At dinner that evening he was the most cheerful of the party. In all my long experience, I have never seen a man bear himself, under similar circumstances, with such unaffected heroism." Sir Morell Mackenzie, who has a warm heart, though he does not exactly wear it on his sleeve, paused and looked rather sadly at the fire. After a few minutes I ventured to say, "And the Princess?" Sir Morell replied: "She is just such a wife as such a man deserves.

She is a Model Nurse, having all her feelings under strict control, and suffering without making any sign. It is the simple truth that she is the most remarkable woman I have ever met. Her knowledge of science is something quite extraordinary, and she is now thoroughly posted in the pathology and surgery of the larynx. I consider that very few medical men not specialists would be able to acquit themselves so satisfactorily on these subjects as the Crown Princess. Her manner, when she cares to please, has an indescribable fascination about it which makes one understand the devoted feeling of personal loyalty that has sometimes been felt for Princes. I can only say that if all royal personages were like this exalted lady and her gallant husband, Republicanism would soon be an extinct tradition. You may easily conceive, therefore, that being still honored, as I have been throughout this sad case, with the fullest confidence of both these august persons—and, I may add, of their Royal relatives in this country—unfriendly criticism and unjust condemnation, alike pass by me like the idle wind.'" is that now hanging in the balance at San Remo. So far from thinking that the public exaggerates the importance which ought to be attached to the health of the German Heir-Apparent, we only wonder that Europe is not, during the period of suspense, hushed in alarm. There has hardly been, in history a period when the future of Europe, and therefore of the world, appeared to hang, under Providence, more completely upon the health of a single man than it now does on this invalid.

A Life of Value to Europe

The outbreak or the postponement of a war which, once begun, must cover all Europe, depends almost exclusively upon the attitude of Germany; and Germany, besides being a mighty State, is also an armed camp governed and directed by a hereditary Commander-in-Chief, whose will must be and is the ultimate motive-power in the gigantic machine. To every trained man—that is, to nine-tenths of all males in Germany between sixteen and forty—the Emperor has on certain subjects the legal right to give orders, enforced instantly and easily by the sovereign penalty of death. So strained is the situation of affairs, so deep the cleavage between the nations, that if the Emperor of Germany desires war, there will be war; and if he desires peace, war may be postponed, perhaps until a completely new condition of affairs has arisen either in France or in the East. The venerable Emperor has reached the confines of human life; he is satiated with victory and honor, and he notoriously desires peace; but he is so old, so feeble, so deeply affected by change in the weather, that his life is admitted by his ablest physicians to hang upon a thread, which may be cut by the smallest accident, even by shock so light as a slip on an over-polished floor. His son, who must succeed him by law, and who would succeed him were the Monarchy elective, is at present prostrated by disease. If he dies, or is incapacitated, his reversionary power passes to a young man of twenty-eight, as yet little known to the public, but believed by all who have access to him, and especially by his grandfather, who in his long life has never misjudged the powers of any man, to be a competent Hohenzollern; that is, a man who can and will govern strongly, and who is also believed to be, like his grandfather, before all things a soldier, with a confidence not unnatural in such a man, that all questions can be most easily solved by the sword. The army is his favorite occupation, and the long suspense of his nation under its heavy armor wearies and disgusts him. He would prefer a final, and therefore a military, solution of all difficulties. It is obvious that such a man will be more ready to give the signal for battle than either his grandfather or father, and this will probably continue his disposition even if he changes on becoming emperor, as much as history shows that the heirs to crowns have changed upon accession to the throne.

There would be, therefore, in the accession of Prince William, if he is as martial as he is believed to be, a positive increase in the liability of Europe to a war which, unless all calculations are at fault, might end in that awful calamity, a long-drawn contest between two nearly equal halves of the European continent. That under such circumstances Europe should be deeply moved, shows only its political judgment; while in Germany itself there is the additional cause of emotion, the personal regard which, explain it as we will, is evoked by crowned heads and those who may hereafter reign. The Crown Prince, on the steps of the highest throne in Europe, regarded with feeling of envy by the potentates of the European world, with the eyes of the peoples of the civilized world upon him, struck down at a crucial moment, physically helpless by disease, is a most pathetic figure, and one which brings home to men the powerlessness of the wise to look forward for one day, with the most painful force. That, as Sir Arthur Helps once said, is the first of human disabilities.

The Crown Prince has some, at least, of his father's qualities—his moderation and his love of peace. His brief experience of the Regency, after Nobiling's dastardly attempt at assassination, gave him scant opportunity of proving his inheritance of the others. He would make a prudent ruler, and such a ruler, perhaps, is what is most wanted in the present crisis of the history of the world. Russia, France, Austria, Turkey—in short, all Europe is watching the events at San Remo with absorbing interest. Germany under a pacific Emperor could almost compel peace; but if that Power gave the signal, it is impossible to say in what remotest region it would fail to be heard. Even China is said to be attentively listening for the first shot to be fired on the Danube. If one thing is certain in a world of political illusions, it is that the Empire of Kaiser Wilhelm is peace, in so far as peace depends on his determined will, and wellnigh irresistible power. His son's influence would be exercised with no less energy in the same direction. His son's son, Prince William, would bring us at least to the unknown. It might, indeed, be the unknown of sagacity and perfect moderation, but where the event is necessarily so uncertain, every one must long for a continuance of the assurance of these precious influences which is involved in the preservation of the Crown Prince's life.

Such is the view of the statesman and the politician; to the Christian man who knows that the whole future is mapped out and controlled by his Heavenly Father, the anxieties of empires are unknown. All is in the hands of God, who ruleth all the kingdoms of the world.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

The Rabbit Among the Cabbages.—Mr. Campbell White relates: "I remember a garden, one part of which was protected by a net, but the meshes of the net were rather large, and through one of them a tiny rabbit managed to squeeze. It was a little rabbit when it went through, but feeding on the cabbages it soon grew a big rabbit, too big to get back through the net, and there it stayed until the owner of the garden caught and killed it. Satan gets much of his prey in that way. The young people who venture into his meshes do not mean to stay, but they grow in sin until they cannot return by their own power, and they are ashamed or afraid to ask Christ's help."

A Saved Carter's Testimony.—Mr. Stewart says: "I stepped into a horse-car the other day and sat down beside an aged friend of mine, who held out his hand to me saying, with such a look of peaceful rest upon his face, 'My dear sir, I have almost reached the end of my journey, and even if it were possible to do so, not a day of my life would I live over again, and although I have often lost communion with my Heavenly Father, I have never lost union with Him. And now, I am going to everlasting glory, through the merits of that dear Saviour who died on Calvary for me, and whose precious blood purchased and cleansed me. Oh, how I long to be with Him and see Him!' I knew that man in his younger days when he was a swearing, drinking carter, who had earned a most unenviable notoriety for his daring and defiant blasphemies, but the Spirit of the Lord drew nigh to him, and he was constrained to give himself into Christ's keeping. Such is the power of God to save."

Losing the Power to Feel.—Mr. J. Campbell White remarks: "I was speaking some time ago to a young man who had recently yielded himself to the Lord Jesus Christ, and he told me that what made him think more of accepting Christ than anything else, more than even the earnest appeals and entreaties of earnest friends, was because he feared that slowly but surely his heart was being hardened, and spiritual death creeping upon him. He had heard so many impassioned addresses and solemn exhortations from the lips of Mr. D. L. Moody and other evangelists, and had stifled his convictions of sin, and resisted the affectionate strivings of the Holy Spirit so frequently and so long, that it was more and more difficult to move his feelings or excite his interest in any way. This fact vividly flashed into his mind one day, and he was appalled, and at once, cried to the Lord for mercy. The Lord answered his prayer, took away the heart of stone, and gave him a heart of flesh instead. To-day he is rejoicing in the salvation of Christ, and finds unspeakable delight in His happy service."

Called From a Sugar Refinery.—Mr. Johnson, missionary to the inhabitants of West Africa, wrought for his living until he was thirty-five years of age in a Scotch sugar refinery as a day laborer. When he was converted, he thought he ought to tell the Gospel of God's salvation to the heathen; but when he looked at himself, he said, "I am not fit to be a missionary." Again he felt, "I must go to the heathen in Africa," and again he stifled the voice by pleading his own inability. Yet again it was borne in upon his mind that it was God's will that he should go. He went to his minister and laid the case before him. The minister thought he was unfit for a missionary; he was so ignorant and illiterate. He next consulted his friends, but they were of the same opinion. He was in a quandary, but at last he determined resolutely to go, and after twelve months' schooling he and his wife set out for Africa. He thought, "I cannot preach, but I can tell them about Jesus." His first work there was to begin a school for children. That succeeded, and he started one for adults. His principal mode of teaching was by teaching all about Jesus. His pupils, young and old, were steeped in that knowledge only. When he examined them to see what progress they had made, he judged of their standing by the answers which they gave to the following questions: 'Who was Christ Jesus? What has Christ done? What is He doing? What will Christ Jesus do?' The result of the efforts of this unlettered laborer was indeed marvellous. Before he had been at the station five months there was a church formed, with a goodly number of members. Surely the Lord can use simple things to confound the wise, and the weakness of His servants to manifest His own infinite strength.

A Wife-beater's Home Changed.—Mr. Aaron Matthews, a converted Russian Jew, said: "For ten years I labored as a missionary in one of the lowest parts of Liverpool, and while there I knew a man who before his conversion to Christ was one of the worst, if not the worst, in that evil locality. One day, while visiting the people, I came unexpectedly upon him, and found him beating his wife. He was in a frantic rage; his hands were entwined in her hair, by which he dragged her about, while he belabored her in a most brutal manner. His wife was almost as wicked as himself; but what a change there was when Christ came into that family! No more wife-beating and drinking and blasphemy. Instead of constant misery and quarrelling, peace and joy and love reigned. That woman, who formerly had trembled at the approach of her husband, now listens eagerly for his footstep, that she may be ready to welcome him; for he now is a true husband, loving and protecting the wife whom God has given him. Christ in the heart not only gives us heaven in the future of eternity, but a sweet foretaste of it here."

How to Give Milk to a Calf.—Mr. Campbell White, speaking of the necessity for Christians to use a little tact when personally dealing with unsaved sinners, said: "One day, when walking in the country, I saw a maid giving a little milk to a calf. When she came with the pail of milk she placed the pail upon the ground, expecting the calf at once to drink. The creature looked at it, capered about, and, kicking up its heels, at length knocked the pail over, spilling its contents upon the ground. The second time the girl brought milk, but now she held the pail with one hand while she gave the calf the other, which had been dipped in milk, to suck. As it sucked, the hand was gradually lowered into the pail, and soon the calf was drinking freely. Some Christians, in dealing with anxious souls, often act as that girl did at first with the calf. They present the gospel in a way that seems to say, 'There it is, take it or leave it; it is nothing to me; I have done my duty.' Should we not rather try to gain their confidence, and persuade them to come, until, though they scarcely know it themselves, they are actually drinking in 'the sincere milk of the Word,' and accept Christ as their own Saviour."

No Pain in the Broken Leg.—Mr. King, an evangelist, says: "When I was down in Peebles not long ago, a lady told me of an accident which had occurred to a friend of hers. He had been out driving, when his horse ran off, and in attempting to get out of the vehicle he fell, and the wheels ran over his leg. He was not thought to be dangerously hurt at first, but as time went on he did not seem to recover nor his leg to mend. His friends at length became anxious. One day his wife entered the sick-room, and she found the invalid smiling and happy, 'Oh, I am ever so much better,' he said; 'the pain is all gone from my leg; I'll soon be about again now.' Just then the doctor came in, and being told of the sudden improvement he shook his head mournfully, for he knew that, now the pain was gone, mortification had set in, and there was no possible hope of recovery. In a very short time he was dead. Similarly there are people with whom the preaching of the Gospel arouses no pangs of conscience, no conviction of sin, and from that they argue that they are not in danger, and rest satisfied. Oh, take care that spiritual mortification has not set in, and that the soul be not already dead, and reprobate!'

THE AGE OF SWINDLE.

Dr. Talmage's Sermon preached last Sunday Morning, March 11, 1888.

"Whose trust shall be a spider's web." Job 8: 14.

The Two Skilful Architects—The Marauding Spider—A Type of the Unscrupulous Financier—Men who Watch and Prey—A Pestilence of Crime—Bankrupt Executors and Trustees—The Causes of the Epidemic—Careless Bank Directors—Their Character Attractive to Depositors—Producing Confidence—Their Responsibility—Orthodox Swindlers the worst of All—Ancient Banks—The Wheat Gamblers—Thwarting the Blessing of Providence—Advice to Financiers—Never Speculate on Borrowed Capital—Borrowing often only Stealing—Live within your Income—Be Careful of Trust Funds—Strange Effect of a Missionary's Sermon—A Cunning Abbot's Harvest—Thank God Harbor.

THE two most skilful architects in all the world are the bee and the spider. The one puts up a sugar manufactory, and the other builds a slaughter-house for flies. On a bright summer morning, when the sun comes out and shines upon the spider's web, bedecked with dew, the gossamer structure seems bright enough for a suspension bridge for supernatural beings to cross on. But alas for the poor fly, which, in the latter part of the day, ventures on it, and is caught and dungeoned and destroyed. The fly was informed that it was a free bridge, and would cost nothing, but at the other end of the bridge the toll paid was its own life. The next day there comes down a strong wind, and away goes the web, and and the victimized fly. So delicate are the silken threads of the spider's web that many thousands of them are put together before they become visible to the human eye, and it takes four million of them to make a thread as large as the human hair. Most cruel as well as most ingenious is the spider. A prisoner in the Bastille, France, had one so trained that at the sound of a violin it every day came for its meal of flies. Job, the author my text, and the leading scientist of his day, had no doubt watched the voracious process of this one insect with another, and saw spider and fly swept down with the same broom, or scattered by the same wind. Alas, that the world has so many designing spiders and victimized flies!

There has not been a time when the utter and black irresponsibility of many men, having the financial interests of others in charge, has been more evident than in these last few years. The unroofing of banks and disappearance of administrators with the funds of large estates, and the disorder amidst post office accounts and deficits amid United States officials, have made that solemnizes every thoughtful man and woman, and leads every philanthropist and Christian to ask: What shall be done to stay the plague? There is a monsoon abroad, a typhoon, a sirocco. I sometimes ask myself if it would not be better for men making wills to bequeath the property directly to the executors and officers of the court, and appoint the widows and orphans a committee to see that the former got all that did not belong to them.

The simple fact is that there are a large number of men sailing yachts, and driving fast horses, and members of expensive club houses, and controlling country-seats, who are not worth a dollar if they return to others their just rights. Under some sudden reverse they fail, and with afflicted air seem to retire from the world, and seem almost ready for monastic life, when in two or three years they blossom out again, having compromised with their creditors; that is, paid them nothing but regrets, and the only difference between the second chapter of prosperity and the first, is that their pictures are Murillos instead of Kensetts, and their horses go a mile in twenty seconds less than their predecessors, and instead of one country-seat they have three. I have watched and have noticed that nine out of ten of those who fail in what is called high life, have more means after than before the failure, and in many of the cases failure is only a strategem to escape the payment of honest debts and put the world off the track while they practice a large swindle. There is something woefully wrong in the fact that these things are possible.

First of all, I charge the blame on careless, and boards having in charge great financial institutions. It ought not to be possible for a president or cashier or prominent officer of a banking institution to swindle it year after year without detection. I will undertake to say that if these frauds are carried on for two or three years without detection, either the directors are partners in the infamy and pocketed part of the theft, or they are guilty of a culpable neglect of duty, for which God will hold them as responsible as He holds the acknowledged defrauders. What right have prominent business men to allow their names to be published as directors in a financial institution, so that unsophisticated people are thereby induced to deposit their money in or buy the scrip thereof, when they, the published directors, are doing nothing for the safety of the institution? It is a case of deception most reprehensible.

Indifferent Bank Directors

Many people with a surplus of money, not needed for immediate use, although it may be a little further on indispensable, are without friends competent to advise them, and they are guided solely by the character of the men whose names are associated with the institution. When the crash came, and with the overthrow of the banks went the small earnings and limited fortunes of widows and orphans, and the helplessly aged, the directors stood with idiotic stare, and to the inquiry of the frenzied depositors and stockholders who had lost their all, and to the arraignment of an indignant public, had nothing to say except: "We thought it was all right. We did not know there was anything wrong going on." It was

Their Duty to Know.

They stood in a position which deluded the people with the idea that they were carefully observant. Calling themselves directors, they did not direct. They had opportunity of auditing accounts and inspecting the books. No time to do so? then they had no business to accept the position. It seems to be the pride of some monied men to be directors in a great many institutions, and all they know is whether or not they get their dividends regularly, and their names are used as decoy ducks to bring others near enough to be made game of. What first of all is needed is that 5,000 bank directors and insurance company directors resign or attend to their business as directors. The business world will be full of fraud just as long as fraud is so easy. When you arrest the president and secretary of a bank for an embezzlement carried on for many years, have plenty of sheriffs out the same day to arrest all the directors. They are guilty either of neglect or complicity.

"Oh," some one will say, "better preach the gospel and let business matters alone." I reply: "If your gospel does not inspire common honesty in the dealings of men, the sooner you close up your gospel and pitch it into the depths of the Atlantic Ocean the better.

An Orthodox Swindler

is worse than a heterodox swindler. The recitation of all the cathechisms and creeds ever written, and drinking from all the communion chalices that ever glittered in the churches of Christendom, will never save your soul unless your business character corresponds with your religious profession. Some of the worst scoundrels in America have been members of churches, and they got fat on sermons about heaven, when they most needed to have the pulpits preach that which would either bring them to repentance or thunder them out of the holy communion, where their presence was a sacrilege and an infamy.

We must especially deplore the misfortune of banks in various parts of this country, in that they damage the banking institution, which is the great convenience of the century, and indispensable to commerce and the advance of nations. With one hand it blesses the lender, and with the other it blesses the borrower.

The Bank was Born

of the world's necessities, and is venerable with the marks of thousands of years. Two hundred years before Christ the Bank of Ilium existed, and paid its depositors ten per cent. The Bank of Venice was established in 1171, and was of such high credit that its bills were at a premium above coins, which were frequently clipped; Bank of Genoa, founded in 1345, Bank of Barcelona, 1401; Bank of Amsterdam, 1699; Bank of Hamburg, founded 1619, its circulation based on great silver bars kept in the vaults; Bank of England, started by William Patterson in 1642, up to this day managing the stupendous debt of England; Bank of Scotland, founded in 1695; Bank of Ireland, 1783; Bank of North America, planned by Robert Morris, 1771, without whose financial help all the bravery of our grandfathers would not have achieved independence.

But now we have banks in all our cities and towns, thousands and thousands. On their shoulders are the interests of private individuals and great corporations. In them are the great arteries through which run the currents of the nation's life. They have been the resources of thousands of financiers in days of business exigency. They stand for accommodation, for facility, for individual, State and national relief. At their head and in their management there is as much interest and moral worth as in any class of men—perhaps more. How nefarious, then, the behavior of those who bring disrepute upon this venerable, benignant and God-honored institution!

We also deplore the abuse of trust funds, because they fly in the face of that divine goodness which seems determined to bless this land. We are having the eighth year of unexampled national harvest. The get hold of the wheat, and the corn gamblers get hold of the corn. The full tide of God's mercy towards this land is put back by those great dykes of dishonest resistance. When God provides enough food and clothing to feed and apparel this whole nation like princes, the scrabble of dishonest men to get more than their share, and get it at all hazards, keeps everything shaking with uncertainty and everybody asking, "What next?" Every week makes new revelations. How many more bank presidents and bank cashiers have been speculating with other people's money, and how many more bank directors are in imbecile silence, letting the perfidy go on, the great and patient God only knows!

My opinion is that we have got near the bottom. The wind has been picked from the great bubble of American speculation. The men who thought that the Judgment Day was at least 5,000 years off, have found it in 1888, 1887, 1886; and this nation has been taught that men must keep their hands out of other people's pockets. Great businesses built on borrowed capital have been obliterated, and men who had nothing, lost all they had. I believe we are started on a higher career of prosperity than this land has ever seen, if, and if, and if.

If the first men, and especially Christian men, will learn never to speculate upon Borrowed Capital.

If you have a mind to take your own money, and turn it all into kites, to fly them over every commons in the United States, you do society no wrong, except when you tumble your helpless children into the poorhouse for the public to take care of. But you have no right to take the money of others and turn it into kites. There is one word that has deluded more people into bankruptcy and State prison and perdition than any other word in commercial life, and that is the word borrow; that one word is responsible for all the defalcations, and embezzlements, and financial consternations of the last twenty years. When executors conclude to speculate with the funds of an estate committed to their charge, they do not purloin, they say when a banker makes an overdraught upon his institution, he does not commit a theft, he only borrows. When the officer of a company, by flaming advertisement in some religious papers, and gilt certificate of stock, gets a multitude of country people to put their small earnings into an enterprise for carrying on some undeveloped nothing, he does not fraudulently take their money, he only borrows. When a young man with easy access to his employer's money-drawer, or the confidential clerk by close propinquity to the account-books, takes a few dollars for a Wall Street excursion, he expects to put it back; he will put it all back; he will put it all back very soon. He only borrows. What is needed is some man of gigantic limb to take his place at the curb-stone in front of Trinity Church and when that word borrow comes bounding along, kick it clean through to Wall Street ferry-boat, and if, striking on that, it bounds clear over till it strikes Brooklyn Heights or Brooklyn hill, it will be well for the City of Churches.

Why, when you are going to do wrong, pronounce so long a word as borrow, a word of six letters, when you can get a shorter word more descriptive of the reality, a word of only five letters, the word steal?

There are times when we all borrow, and borrow legitimately, and borrow with the divine blessing, for Christ, in His Sermon on the Mount, enjoins "from him that would borrow of thee, turn not thou away." A young man rightly borrows money to get his education. Purchasing a house and not able to pay all down in cash, the purchaser rightly borrows it on mortgage. Crises come in business when it would be wrong for a man not to borrow. But I roll this warning through all these aisles, over the backs of all these pews,

Never Borrow to Speculate;

not a dollar, not a cent, not a farthing! Young men, young men, I warn you by your worldly prospects and the value of your immortal souls, do not do it! There are breakers distinguished for their shipwrecks—the Hanways, the Needles, the Caskets, the Douvers, the Anderlos, the Skerries—and many a craft has gone to pieces on those rocks; but I have to tell you that all the Hanways and the Needles, and the Caskets, and the Skerries, are as nothing compared with the long line of breakers which bound the ocean of commercial life north, south, east and west, with the white foam of their despair and the dirge of their damnation: The breakers of borrow!

If I had only a worldly weapon to use on this subject I would give you the fact fresh from the highest authority, that ninety per cent. of those who go into speculation in Wall Street lose all; but I have a better warning than a worldly warning. From the place where men have perished—body, mind and soul—stand off, stand off! Abstract pulpit discussion must step aside on this question. Faith and repentance are absolutely necessary, but faith and repentance are no more doctrines of the Bible than Commercial Integrity.

Render to all their dues. Owe no man anything. And while I mean to preach faith and repentance, more and more to preach them, I do not mean to spend any time in chasing the Hittites and Jebusites and Girgashites of Bible times, when there are so many evils right around us destroying men and women for time and eternity. The greatest evangelistic preacher the world ever saw, a man who died for his evangelism—the peerless Paul—wrote to the Romans, "Provide things honest in the sight of all men;" wrote to the Corinthians, "Do that which is honest;" wrote to the Philippians, "Whatsoever things are honest;" wrote to the Hebrews, "Willing in all things to live honestly." The Bible says, that faith without works is dead; which being literally translated, means that if your business life does not correspond with your profession, your religion is a humbug.

Here is something that needs to be sounded into the ears of all the young men of America, and iterated and reiterated, if this country is ever to be delivered from its calamities, and commercial prosperity is to be established and perpetuated.

Live Within Your Means.

I have the highest commercial authority for saying, that when the memorable trouble broke out in Wall Street four years ago, there were $225,000,000 in suspense, which had already been spent. Spend no more than you make. And let us adjust all our business and our homes by the principles of the Christian religion. Our religion ought to mean just as much on Saturday and Monday as on the day between, and not be a mere periphrasis of sanctity. Our religion ought to first clean our hearts, and then it ought to clean our lives. Religion is not, as some seem to think, a sort of church delectation, a kind of confectionery, a sort of spiritual caramel or holy gumdrop, or sanctified peppermint, or theological anæsthetic. It is an omnipotent principle, all-controlling, all-conquering. You may get along with something less than that, and you may deceive yourself with it; but you cannot deceive God, and you cannot deceive the world.

The keen business man will put on his spectacles, and he will look clear through to the back of your head, and see whether your religion is a fiction or a fact. And you cannot hide your samples of sugar or rice or tea or coffee if they are false; you cannot hide them under the cloth of a communion-table. All your prayers go for nothing so long as you misrepresent your banking institution, and in the amount of resources you put down more specie and more fractional currency and more clearing-house certificates and more legal-tender notes and more loans and more discounts than there really are, and when you give an account of your liabilities you do not mention all the unpaid dividends, and the United States bank notes outstanding, and the individual deposits, and the obligations to other banks and bankers. An authority more scrutinizing than that of any bank examiner will go through and through and through your business.

I stand this morning before many who have trust funds. It is a compliment to you that you have been so intrusted; but I charge you, in the presence of God and the world, be careful, be as

as you are careful of your own. Above all, keep your own private account at the bank separate from your account as trustee of an estate, or trustee of an institution. That is the point at which thousands of people make shipwreck. They get the property of others mixed up with their own property, they put it into investment, and away it all goes. and they cannot return that which they borrowed. Then comes the explosion, and the money market is shaken, and the press denounces, and the church thunders explosion. You have no right to use the property of others, except for their advantage, nor without consent, unless they are minors. If with their consent you invest their property as well as you can, and it is all lost, you are not to blame; you did the best you could, but do not come into the delusion which has ruined so many men, of thinking because a thing is in their possession, therefore it is theirs. You have a solemn trust that God has given you.

In this vast assemblage there may be some who have misappropriated trust funds. Put them back, or, if you have so hopelessly involved them that you cannot put them back, confess the whole thing to those whom you have wronged, and you will sleep better nights, and you will have the better chance for your soul.

What a sad thing it would be, if after you are dead your administrator should find out from the account-books, or from the lack of vouchers, that you not only were bankrupt in estate, but that you lost your soul. If all the trust funds that have been misappropriated should suddenly fly to their owners, and all the property that has been purloined should suddenly go back to its owners, it would crush into ruin every city in America.

A Missionary's Sermon.

A missionary on one of the islands of the Pacific preached on dishonesty, and the next morning he looked out of his window, and he saw his yard full of goods of all kinds. He wondered, and asked the cause of all this. "Well," said the natives, "our gods that we have been worshipping permit us to steal, but according to what you said yesterday, the God of heaven and earth will not allow this, so we bring back all these goods, and we ask you to help us in taking them to the places where they belong." If next Sabbath all the ministers in America should preach sermons on the abuse of trust funds, and on the evils of purloining, and the sermons were all blessed of God, and regulations were made that all these things should be taken to the city halls, it would not be long before every city hall in America would be crowded from cellar to cupola.

Let me say in the most emphatic manner to all young men, Dishonesty Will Never Pay.

An abbot wanted to buy a piece of ground, and the owner would not sell it, but the owner finally consented to let it to him until he could raise one crop, and the abbot sowed acorns—a crop of two hundred years! And I tell you, young man, that the dishonesties which you plant in your heart and life will seem to be very insignificant, but they will grow up until they will overshadow you with horrible darkness, overshadow all time and all eternity. It will not be a crop for two hundred years, but a crop for everlasting ages.

I have also a word of comfort for all who suffer from the malfeasance of others, and every honest man, woman and child does suffer from what goes on in financial scampdom. Society is so bound together, that all the misfortunes which good people suffer in business matters come from the misdeeds of others. Bear up under distress, strong in God. He will see you through, though your misfortunes should be centupled. Philosophers tell us that a column of air forty-five miles in height rests on every man's head and shoulders. But that is nothing compared with the pressure that business life has put upon many of you. God made up his mind long ago how many or how few dollars it would be best for you to have. Trust to his appointment. The door will soon open to let you out and let you up. What shock of delight for men who for thirty years have been in business anxiety, when they shall suddenly awake in everlasting holiday!

On the maps of the Arctic regions there are two places whose names are remarkable, given, I suppose, by some Polar expedition: "Cape Farewell" and "Thank God Harbor." At this last the Polaris wintered in 1871, and the Tigress in 1873. Some ships have passed the Cape, yet never reached the Harbor. But from what I know of many of you, I have concluded that though your voyage of life may be very rough, run into by icebergs on this side and icebergs on that, you will in due time reach Cape Farewell, and there bid good-by to all annoyances, and soon after drop anchor in the calm and imperturbable waters of Thank God Harbor—"Where the wicked cease from troubling, and the weary are at rest."

An Illustrated Work on the Unfulfilled Prophecies of the Bible, by the Rev. M. Baxter, entitled, "Forty Coming Wonders," may be had from the office of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 63 Bible House, New York, by remitting 75 cents. It is a book of 528 pages, is handsomely bound in cloth, and contains fifty full-page pictures and diagrams representing the scenes described in the prophecies of Daniel and in the book of the Revelation. It also contains a résumé of the opinions of other expositors, and extracts carefully collated from the works of all the most eminent writers on prophecy from the earliest ages of the Christian era down to those of recent date. It thus forms the most useful and complete guide the student can have on entering the study of that portion of the Word of God.

AN INCENSED UNCLE THWARTED.

MISS MACINTOSH, of the China Inland Mission, writing from Sa-kung-ling, says: "Hu Chin-fah is the son of a well-to-do farmer, and a sincere Christian. He was formerly a vegetarian, and very much opposed to the religion of Jesus Christ, and very earnest in the service of Satan. He is now as earnest in serving God as he was before in serving the devil. He has had a good deal of persecution since he believed. His father is an opium-smoker, and Chin-fah was most anxious that he should come here and worship God, and give up the opium. He consented, and we gave him some medicine. In a short time he had quite given the opium up, and came to worship one Sunday, looking so much better that the son's heart was filled with joy. But, alas! a bitter trial awaited him. A brother of his father's, who is very rich, hearing about this, was very angry, and told him he ought not to give up the opium, and that his 'son was very wicked for bringing him here, and not fit to live; he ought to go home and kill him.' The poor man listened to him, and one day lifted a large knife to kill his son, who happened to have a long pole in his hand, with which he defended himself, and escaped to his grandmother's house. The rich brother got the father more incensed against his son, so that he determined to go to the mandarin, and get him to take off his head. He came into the city for the purpose. The Christians in Sa-kung-ling met for prayer, and one of them followed the old man, and succeeded in persuading him to return home and be reconciled to his son, who was only seeking to do him good. On his return, Chin-fah came and knelt down before his father, asking his forgiveness if he had grieved him. Since then his father has been very good to him, and does not object to his coming to worship the Christians' God. We visited them lately, and were very kindly received. We believe God will yet hear and answer prayer for his father and mother."

A DAY'S WORK IN INDIA.

IN an interesting account sent by Mr. Hume to the Missionary Herald of a tour in the Ahmednagar district of the Bombay Presidency in India, he thus describes the programme generally followed for the day after the missionary tent is pitched:

"We go early in the morning, about sunrise, into the town proper, and preach to the people, who are usually seated at that time near the gate, around a fire; and those who are passing frequently stop to listen. Sometimes we have ten or twelve hearers, frequently from twenty to forty, and sometimes as many as seventy-five. We talk from half an hour to an hour there, and then go to the quarters of the lower caste, the Mahars, and do the same thing over again for from half to three-quarters of an hour. Then back to the tent for breakfast. The middle of the day is occupied with conversations with mission agents, Christians and Hindus who call, and with writing, etc. Sometimes in the early afternoon a company of people come and, we have a long talk with them. And at any rate, toward sunset we go again to the town and Mahar quarters, and again preach. Sometimes in the evenings I show in the village rest-house the pictures of a stereopticon, giving some general views, a few humorous ones, and many scriptural events and teachings. This lasts for an hour or more, and always attracts a large audience. If our tents remain many days in one place, then we visit the near villages and work in the same way, and return to our tents. Mrs. Hume and a Bible-woman visit the women, and I with a preacher go to the men. Though Mrs. Hume means to talk only to women, yet the baby-organ often draws quite a crowd of men also.

"Last Sunday I baptized two men and three children in this place, and one man and woman in another town near by. Some of these people are still exposed to a good deal of ridicule and opposition because they throw in their lot with Christ's people. For example: not long ago I had a long conversation with a large company of Hindus on 'Acquaintance with God.' Every one of them said he was not acquainted with God, and did not know how to get acquainted. I asked the government school-teacher and others to pray. But they said they did not know how. I then asked one of our Christians to pray. He rose and made a humble, suitable prayer. I said: 'This acquaintance with God, and freedom in speaking to Him, is what Christ has done for a plain man of your village, and what He wishes to give you.' Ever since then those people have made sport of the Christian. But I believe the incident will help both them and him."

ADRIFT ON A COFFIN.

A REMARKABLE deliverance from a watery grave is described by the saved man in this month's number of Thy Healer.* He says: "I was employed to convey an empty coffin to Moho Caye, in British Honduras, to bury a poor white boy who had died there of fever. Soon after leaving the wharf of our Belize Hospital, at 8 P. M., a squall came down, and our dory, being cranky, was turned over; thus Moore (my assistant) and I, were plunged in the sea.

"For four hours we were in this state, screaming for help, sharks around, night dark and dismal, and the Caye a long way off. Oh! how I did pray! I went down twice under the waves; but even under the sea, my spirit cried for help, and the Master answered me. Our boat drifted back, and we laid hold of it, getting a little rest, while we cried again for help, but we were very cold and worn out. Then the Lord gave fresh courage, and a strange thing happened. The coffin, which had drifted off a long way and time, came right up to us, just as we were giving up, briny, weary and cold-struck; but suddenly I got strength, and laying hold of the coffin, swam ashore on it to Moho Caye. As I reached the shore, the clock struck twelve, but I was too exhausted to get to the house, and so I laid down on the beach till I revived; then I crawled to the house, was taken in and warmed. Poor Moore, who was left on the dory, was also helped, for soon after my revival we heard a cry on the beach, and behold, it was Moore. Thank God!"

LITTLE LIGHTS IN THE HOMES.

A REPORT full of encouragement is published among some intelligence sent home by Miss Maltbie, from Bulgaria. She has been visiting the out-stations, and in the course of her tour paid special attention to the girl's schools and women's meetings. She says: "The first Sabbath was spent in Bansko, and the large, attentive congregation assembled in the pleasant church; the earnestness of the Christian women, who improved the time between services in seeking hungry souls that they might speak to them of the love of Jesus; the large number gathered at noon to hear the Word read and explained; the intensely interesting meeting of more than sixty children; the prayer-meeting late in the afternoon, led by the earnest, devoted preacher; and finally, the sweet half-hour with the dear little children who have lately given their hearts to the Saviour—all of these things left a deep impression upon me.

"Perhaps one of the most interesting features of the blessed work of grace which has been going on in Bansko for the past few months has been the awakening and conversion of about thirty children, who are now letting their light so shine in their homes that their thankful mothers gladly testify to the power of Jesus' love in the heart to change the worst of them into gentle, patient, obedient children. These young Christians gladly enlisted as soldiers against King Alcohol, and I put the symbolic ribbon of blue or white upon all the twenty-five who were gathered in Mrs. Ralu's room on that Sabbath evening. Mrs. Ralu leads the children's meetings, and the Holy Spirit has enabled her to accomplish a good work among the women and children the past year. These small lights set in these homes may become great lights, enlightening many souls, and I rejoiced much in this small beginning."

PERSECUTION IN MEXICO.

REPORTS from the Rev. Hubert W. Brown, in Mexico, to The Church show that the Presbyterian mission in that country is still struggling bravely, and now with some hope of success, against Romanist persecution and intrigue. The martyrdom of the two preachers Hurtado and Gomez, reported in these columns last year, has, it appears, caused apprehension among the aggressors. Mr. Brown says: "The offenders are in prison, fear has taken hold on the entire community, and some fifty of the participators in the riot have secretly stolen away. The relatives of those on trial came with every mark of respect to our minister, Rev. Felix Gomez, whose father and brother have been assassinated, and besought him to intercede in behalf of the men on trial. Catholics are learning that Protestantism is recognized, and is to be protected in its rights by the Chief Magistrate of the Republic."

By the side of these encouraging facts must be placed the darker picture supplied by other provinces. Mr. Brown says: "Persecution has scattered some of our congregations for the time being. This has been especially true in the province of Guerrero. Tuxpan, Platanillo and Ahuacuatitlan have suffered most, but other points also had to be temporarily abandoned. In the province of Tobasco, Jesuit intrigue cost the life of a church-member in Comalcalco, and through poison nearly deprived of reason our teacher in Paraiso, Miss Balcazar. Only five leagues from the capital, in San Lorenzo, the local authorities attempted to drive away the Protestants by false imprisonments. For three months only women and children attended the services. The matter was put into the hands of a trusted lawyer, Mr. Alfaro, who in the end secured the release of the imprisoned men. Near Ozumba similar methods were tried and with partial success. Only the other day I received word from Zitacuaro that the owner of the ranch of Colmena told the Indians that they must discontinue their Protestant services or leave the ranch. This widespread and determined persecution is a notable feature of the past year.

A SUFFERER'S CLAIM ON A PROMISE.

A TESTIMONY published in Thy Healer from a Mr. Grossmith, records his recovery from a malady which has many victims in this country. He says:

"I was attacked by my former enemy, congestion of the liver, two weeks ago. I was perfectly powerless, and could not even raise my hand to feed myself. I gave it to the Lord, but was still ill next morning. I thought then how the Lord appointed the Twelve to go forth to heal sickness and disease; and how they went and healed those who were sick, and then how at last, Jesus said: 'And these signs shall follow them that believe; In My name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; they shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover.' I thought, perhaps, it would be well to get some one to anoint me, but I did not know whom to get. My little boy, who went to the Sunday-school, was told by the deacon, who was Superintendent, that he would come and see me. He did so, and I asked him to anoint me, and pray according to God's word, but he was afraid to do so. I then sent for a niece of mine, who believes in Divine Healing. She is only about two or three and twenty, but she came and anointed me. She also prayed and believed, and I just rested on God's promise, but could not move. When night came on

I was still quite powerless, and continued in great agony all night, but rested in the Lord. My wife said, 'You had better send for a doctor,' but I kept on trusting. My wife came and fed me, for I could not raise my hand to my mouth. Just then, I lifted up my heart to the Lord, and asked if there was anything else I ought to do, and the thought at once came: 'Claim it.' I did claim it in the name of the Lord Jesus, and then I got up and went to business. I was pained just in the same way on the Tuesday, but claimed healing, and received it; and again there was the same thing on the Wednesday, and then it entirely left me, and I have been perfectly free since. I praise the Lord for His mercy."

THE EVOLUTION OF PROPHECY.

By Rev. N. West.*

The Classification of Old Testament Prophets—The Five Prophetic Epochs—Daniel's Far Reaching Vision—Ezekiel Still More Extended—Reaching Beyond the Millennium—John's Compilation—The Seventy Weeks—The Length of the Metallic Image—The Successive Recipients of the Apocalyptic Revelation.

THE catastrophe which broke Solomon's, or, rather, David's kingdom into two kingdoms, called Israel, i. e., the ten-tribed Israel, and Judah, i. e., the two-tribed Israel—the Northern Kingdom with Samaria as its capital, and the Southern Kingdom with Jerusalem as its capital—and prepared the way for the captivity of both, lays the foundation for all the prophecies we have in the Old Testament concerning Israel and Judah. The Babylonian Exile lays the foundation for our common into Pre-exile, Exile and Post-exile prophets. There is another convenient and instructive division, if we group them around the epochs, or critical junctures and times of Israel's history. We get thus (1) the Pre-Assyrian prophets, or prophets of the Pre-Assyrian period. (2) The prophets of the Assyrian period. (3) Of the Transition period. (4) Of the Chaldean period, or time of the Exile; and (5) of the Persian period, or Post-exile prophets, the prophets of the restoration to the Close of the Old Testament Canon. The first are Obadiah, Joel and Jonah, Hosea and Amos. The second are Isaiah, Micah and Nahum. The third are Habbakuk, Zephaniah and Jeremiah. The fourth are Ezekiel and Daniel. The fifth are Haggai, Zechariah and Malachi. Sixteen in all; all speaking distinctly, save one or two, of Messianic times, all pointing to the last times, the Day of the Lord, and the Messianic redemption for Israel and the nations. They cover a period of 450 years of prophetic activity, from Joel to Malachi, and foretell the final triumph of the Kingdom of God on earth.

In the prophet Daniel, there is a coming of Messiah in humiliation, and to be "cut off" at a certain specified time. This you see in Daniel 9: 25. Then there is a coming of Messiah in the clouds of heaven, at the end of a long period following the first end. This you see in Daniel 7: 9, 22. Messiah comes at the beginning of the fourth prophetic empire. He comes also at its close. You have sailed up to your sky-line, and another one lies beyond it. You have reached the advent and find that it is parted into two advents with the age we ourselves are living in, the age when Israel is nationally cast away, the Church—historical period, the age of the Colossus or metallic image, the "times of the Gentiles," during the fourth or Roman empire in its various phases. Daniel has bequeathed to all succeeding time the great problem of Israel's future with respect to the nations, and of the nations also in relation to Israel throughout the whole course of history. It is here we learn what Israel's national condition is to be during the intermediate or parenthetic Age that has sprung up between these two ends, viz., our present Age, or the Roman portion of the "Times of the Gentiles." We find, also, that he has given us the solution of this great problem, in three different ways; first in the interpretation of the four-empired colossus or image Nebuchadnezzar saw; again, in the vision of the four beasts; and, once more, in the celebrated "seventy sevens," or "weeks of years," as found in the ninth chapter. In the first case, the Messianic Kingdom comes in its glory, and comes to Israel, only at the End of the fourth Empire; in the second case, only at the End of the life of the fourth beast, or, what is the same thing, at the overthrow of the "Little Horn," the last Antichrist into which the fourth empire runs out; and, in the third case, it comes at the close of the seventieth of the seventy weeks.

The Termini are Identical in all these cases. The end point in all is the Second Coming of the Son of man. The solution of the great problem of the future history and final destiny of Daniel's people is just this, that, because of their national rejection of Messiah, they themselves will be rejected, and remain rejected, as a nation, during the times of the Gentiles, or until the Second Coming of Messiah, when they will, as a nation, be converted, and the Kingdom be restored to Israel, as the prophets have predicted.

Ezekiel sees farther than even Daniel does. Daniel sees an end following our present Age, and an Age following that End, an Age to him an endless one. Ezekiel, however, sees an End even to that last age. He sees the insurrection of Gog and Magog, not merely at the opening of the Age that follows the Second Coming of Messiah, but at its close. He sees Israel restored and in their land, dwelling safely "many days" in peace and blessedness, following the resurrection of the dry bones, and the overthrow of the Colossus, in judgment on the World-Power. He announces in a very remarkable prediction, that "After many days" Gog shall be visited for final punishment. Those "many days" are a long period of time, the time of restored Israel's blessedness in the Kingdom. They follow the Second Coming of Messiah, just because they follow Israel's resurrection and rehabilitation. You see what is done to Israel in Ezekiel, chapter 37—you see their blessedness and peace asserted in chapter 38, the full expansion of which is pictured in Old Testament colors in chaps. 40–48. But in 38: 8 you read that "after"

That Long Period

of "many days" Gog and Magog shall be visited for final punishment. This is precisely what John has in the Apocalypse. The "many days" of Ezekiel are the "Millennium" of John? It is folly to try and make the final judgment on Gog and Magog the last phase of the judgment on Antichrist and the world-power, at the Second Coming of Messiah. It is a different judgment altogether, and occurs "many days" after Israel's rehabilitation in their fatherland. It is post-millennial. Once for all, and in obedience to the fixed law of prophetic development, and building on Ezekiel, and guided by the Holy Spirit, John has made it sure that his "thousand years" are Ezekiel's "many days" and fall between the Second Advent and Gog's final destruction. What John does is to combine

The Eschatta of Isaiah,

Daniel, Ezekiel, Zechariah, in short, the Eschatta of all the Old Testament prophets, and arrange them in their temporal order and succession. In place of Isaiah's One End, and One Advent, and one Age following, we get three Ends, and three Ages, the last Age of course, being the endless age. Or, if we take into account the pre-Messianic or Jewish Age, then what we have is four Ages, and three Ends, viz., first, the Jewish or pre-Messianic with its End, viz., the first Advent; next our present Age, with its End, the Second Advent; third, the Yamim Rabbim, or "Many Days," i. e., the Millennial Age, with its End, in Gog's final Destruction; and fourth, the Endless Age, yet to be developed in the Apocalypse of John. And this is the whole evolution of the Ages and the Ends in the old Testament, reaching down from the Babylonian Captivity to the Last Judgment into which the Judgment on Gog expands itself, even down to the creation of the New Heaven and Earth.

If we put the whole Old Testament Chronological prophecy together concerning Israel, after David's Kingdom was broken, we shall get the formula of the combined 70 years Captivity, and the Seventy Year-Weeks, including the great interval between the 69th and 70th week, thus: 70 years, plus 483 years, or 69 weeks, plus the interval of our present age, plus the closing or seventieth week, i. e., seven years. And what is of special interest to the student of prophecy is this, viz.: that the formula 70 plus 7 plus 62 plus (our interval) plus 1 measures chronologically the whole

from head to feet, and measures also the whole lifetime of the four beasts, the last of which ends in the last personal Antichrist. We get the total æonology and teleology of both Old and New Testament prophecy with respect to Israel and the nations; and in all we see how Israel, God's "choice forever," stands out, in rejection and in their calling and commission, recovery, death and resurrection, as the bringer, nationally, of Salvation to mankind. It is God's plan, and full, as Paul tells us, of the unsearchable wisdom of God. (Rom. 11: 33.)

Of post-exile prophecy I need only speak to you a word. We have Paul's word for it that Haggai's oracle, as to the shaking of the nations, of heaven, earth, sea and dry land, refers to the Second Coming of Christ. The prophet, moreover, connects the appearing of the "Glory" with the second temple then in existence, an appearing, however, only precursive of one more glorious, and in a temple built of all the wealth and treasure of the nations. Two advents are here, therefore. In Zechariah these Advents are so clearly predicted, Messiah riding on a colt, and again Messiah standing on the Mount of Olives, having come with all His holy ones, that it is impossible to mistake them, the one for suffering, the other for judgment and glory. In Malachi, also, you will find separated by the period when, the Jews having rejected Messiah, His name becomes great among the Gentiles, while yet, before the final "Day of the Lord," Elijah is sent to restore Israel to a spiritual understanding of the words of Moses, after which, the storm having passed away, Israel redeemed at last, rejoices with gladness in the Kingdom, like calves let loose from the stall, upon the pasture refreshed and brightened with the beams of the rising sun. So ends Old Testament prediction. If we sum up the result, as to the development of the Ages and the Ends, what we get is the Jewish, the Christian, the Millennial and the Endless Ages; four Ages, three Ends and two Advents of Messiah. The Apocalypse assumes the truth of all Old Testament prediction concerning Israel and the Nations. I feel as certain of this as I do of any truth in the Bible, and it belongs to the reproach due to the superficial knowledge of so many, in our day of widespread Scripture study, that they have not recognized this fact, but still keep harping on the old and tuneless string that "the Millennium is found in only one passage of the Bible, and that in a very obscure book called the Apocalypse." Dear friends, the Apocalypse of Isaiah is a light. The Apocalypse of Daniel is a light. The Apocalypse of Ezekiel is a light. And the Apocalypse of John is a supreme and seven-fold unclouded light, which combines all other lights, and blazes like the sun at noon.

* From his recent lecture at Niagara, contained in full, revised by himself, in The Word, a pamphlet of 192 pages, comprising also prophetic lectures by Rev. H. M. Parsons, Rev. James H. Brooks, D. D., of St. Louis; Pastor E. P. Marvin, Rev. Albert Erdman, D. D.; Rev. S H. Kellogg, D. D.; and other able expositors of prophecy. Owing to the large demand for this work, a supply of copies has been procured by Mr. J. E. Jewett, 77 Bible House, who will mail a copy to any address for fifty cents.

CURRENT EVENTS.

The Long Expected Bill for the Reduction of Internal Revenue taxes has been submitted by the Democratic majority of the Ways and Means Committee. It is supplementary to the Customs Tariff Reduction bill, the essential features of which were published in these columns last week; both measures combined will, it is claimed by the committee, reduce taxation to the extent of $75,000,000 annually. The bill repeals all the laws taxing tobacco growers and manufacturers of tobacco, except those of cigars, cheroots and cigarettes. The special license for retailers of spirits and malt liquors is also removed. The bill was consolidated with the Tariff bill, and will be so reported to the House.

The Promotion of Commercial Union With Canada is the object of a bill introduced in the House by Mr. Hitt, of Illinois, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs. It provides that when the Dominion Government has declared a desire for commercial union, the President shall appoint three Commissioners to meet those who may be likewise designated to represent the Government of Canada, to prepare a plan for the assimilation of the import duties and internal revenue taxes of the two countries, and an equitable division of receipts in a commercial union.

Open Sessions for the Consideration of Treaties whenever a majority of the Senators are in favor of it, is a new rule adopted by the United States Senate. The immediate purpose is to secure a public consideration of the fisheries treaty with Great Britain, and there seems to be little doubt that this course will be followed. The correspondence which led to the appointment of a joint commission to settle the fisheries troubles, and protocols of the conferences which took place between the Commissioners, have been submitted to the Senate, accompanied by a letter from the Secretary of State. These documents show that an earnest effort was made by the representatives of both sides to reach an agreement which would secure the just rights of all parties. This is also apparent from the despatches received by the Foreign Office in London, from Mr. Chamberlain, during the progress of the negotiations at Washington, and made public last week. Mr. Chamberlain says the satisfactory result of the conference was due in a large degree to the spirit of conciliation manifested by both sides. Mr. Chamberlain has now returned to England.

The Dependent Pension Bill Passed the Senate on March 8. It provides that all persons who served in the military or naval services of the United States during the last war, and who are now, or may hereafter be, suffering from mental or physical disability, not the result of their own vicious habits, which totally incapacitates them for manual labor, and who have no other means of support, be entitled to $12 pension a month. In regard to dependent soldiers' parents, it is provided that they are entitled to pension in case they are without other means of support than their own manual labor or the contributions of others not legally bound for their support. The increase of pension for minor children is fixed at the rate of $5 a month instead of $2, as now provided. The assurance is given that the bill will also pass the House. Whether the President will approve, it is not known. The principal difference between this bill and the one vetoed by the President last year, is that "total disability" is now required, while in the vetoed bill the degree of disability was not definitely limited. It was on this point mainly that the President based his veto.

The Strike of Engineers and Firemen on the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad still continues. It is stated that the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers is prepared to spend a quarter of a million dollars, and stand out for weeks, to win the battle. On the 8th inst. they issued, however, an address to the public that they are willing to place the whole controversy in the hands of three railroad managers, and abide by their decision. It is rumored that the brakemen are also on the verge of a strike, getting discontented because of their fear to run with "green" engineers.

An Outrage on the Frontier Between Texas and Mexico was reported lasr week. The Texan account of the affair is, that a party of Mexican troops, consisting of a lieutenant and three soldiers, crossed the Rio Grande on March 3, in pursuit of a deserter. They caught the man near Eagle Pass, on Texan soil, and were endeavoring to drag him over the frontier when a deputy sheriff interfered, and warned the soldiers to desist, as they were violating international law. The Mexicans drew their pistols, and defied the officer, who, having obtained assistance, endeavored to arrest them. In the conflict that ensued, one of the Mexicans was killed, and the American deputy sheriff severely wounded. The case has been referred to Secretary Bayard for presentation to the Mexican Government.

A Two-fold Bereavement Has Befallen the literary world. Amos Bronson Alcott, one of the exponents of that mystic transcendental philosophy known as the Concord School, died on March 4, and his gifted and more renowned daughter, Louisa May Alcott, died on March 6, within forty-eight hours of each other, in their quiet home at Concord, Mass. Mr. Alcott was born in Wolcott, Conn., November 29, 1799. In early life he took up the profession of teaching, which he continued through life—in the schoolroom, on the lecturers' platform and through his writings, which latter, however, owing to the unpopular philosophy taught in them, were far from successful. His daughter entered upon a different and more congenial field. She was the children's friend par excellence, one of the most popular authors of juvenile stories we have had. Her fame rested chiefly on her first successful story, "Little Women," and it was that story which endeared her to so many thousands in this country and Europe alike. "An Old-fashioned Girl" and "Little Men" were nearly equal successes. Though she was the author of nearly a score of other books, her fame will rest chiefly on these three. Miss Alcott was born at Germantown, Pa., on November 29, 1832—the 29th of November was also her father's birthday—and removed with her parents to Boston when two years old, and in Boston and its immediate vicinity she made her home ever after.

Emperor William of Germany is Dead. After an illness of only a few days' duration the aged monarch was called hence at half-past eight on the morning of March 9. On the day previous the Court chaplain administered the last sacrament, and special services were held in many of the Berlin churches, when the edifices were crowded. The congregations joined fervently in the prayers for the Emperor's recovery, and many were so overcome as to give vent to their feelings in sobs. Divine services were also held in the palace. All the members of the Imperial family, the Court dignitaries and the members of the household were present. Hundreds of people stood bareheaded in the rain outside the palace and joined in the prayers offered by Chaplain Koegel. Eye-witnesses of the scenes at the Emperor's death state that during the last few hours of his life he suffered no pain. Half an hour before his death all the members of the family staying at the palace, the Court dignitaries, generals and ministers of State, were summoned to the chamber in which the Emperor lay dying. The Emperor was in a half sitting position on a camp bedstead. All the members of the royal family took places at the bedside. The room was crowded. Prince William stood nearest the Emperor, half bending over the couch. He earnestly watched the face of the dying monarch until he expired.

Frederick William of Prussia, Now King Frederick III. of Prussia and Frederick I. Emperor of Germany, is by no means out of danger, and most people expect the end to be reached before summer. Dr. Mackenzie and the German physicians attending him have issued a bulletin declaring that no divergencies of opinion regarding the nature of their august patient's illness exist. They emphasize that they do not maintain that a dangerous turn in the malady is imminent, and say that the sole responsibility for the conduct and treatment of the case remains, as prior to the recent operation, in the hands of Dr. Mackenzie. On receiving the sad news of the aged Emperor's death, Emperor Frederick III. and Empress Victoria made immediate preparations for leaving San Remo for Berlin.

The Motion for the Appointment of a Royal Commission to ascertain and report upon military measures necessary for the protection of Great Britain, was negatived in the House of Commons on the 8th inst., notwithstanding a strong speech in its favor by Lord Randolph. Churchill, who contended that a rigid and vigorous inquiry and radical reforms were imperatively necessary. He could not, he said, vote confidence in the existing system; it was hopelessly bad. To this Mr. Stanhope, Secretary of War, replied that the Government would sanction an inquiry into any definite matter connected with the estimates, but would resist the appointment of a royal commission of a vague, general character.

An Important Letter from John Bright was read at a public meeting on March 7. The letter severely condemned the Gladstone wing of the Liberal party for "shirking discussion" of Mr. Gladstone's Irish policy generally, and his two bills in particular. Mr. Bright said: "They do not try to defend the bills. Nobody familiar with the details of the bills is able or willing to defend them. The Gladstonians prefer to attack the Government, to denounce Mr. Balfour, and to spread abroad extravagant falsehoods about the barbarous manner in which the Crimes act is enforced. They have great sympathy for disloyal Irish leaders, and for priests who forget that their true mission is one of peace, not of violence; but they say nothing in behalf of humbler men imprisoned for offences incited by gentlemen disturbes of the peace. The severity of the punishment inflicted for common offences in England is far beyond the severity of the sentences of the men whose writings and speeches have caused the terrorism, boycotting outrages, and murders that have disgraced Ireland and shocked mankind during the last seven years. Surely, in all modern history there is no instance of humiliation so great as that to which the bulk of the Liberals have been reduced by blindly following a leader who, toward the close of a great career, has committed the grievous error of adopting a policy to which the country will never consent."

Canvassers Wanted to Sell, from House to House, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Any man, woman or youth may easily add to their income every week by selling the paper in their spare hours in their own neighborhood. One man has sold one hundred copies on a Saturday. The Installation of Dr. Talmage as Chaplain of the famous Thirteenth Regiment took place in the Brooklyn armory on March 7. The new chaplain was duly sworn in by Col. Austen, and took the oath to support the constitution of the State and the United States. The regiment hailed the conclusion of that ceremony by a loud shout, and a resounding blow with the butts of their rifles on the armory floor, which might have been a shock to nerves less strong than those of the new chaplain. His coolness aroused a fresh outburst of cheering. Dr. Talmage in a few graceful words thanked the regiment for its reception of him, and said he had accepted the office because it opened a new field of usefulness.

A Clergyman's Sudden Death at a Prayer-meeting is reported from Detroit, Mich. The First Presbyterian Church being without a pastor invited the Rev. Charles N. Waldron, D. D., to conduct the prayer-meeting on March 2. He had scarcely entered the room when he complained of feeling faint, and sat down in a chair. Friends came to his assistance, but he at once became insensible and died in less than two minutes. Dr. Waldron was a retired clergyman. His home was originally at Cohoes, N. Y., where he served as pastor of the Reformed Dutch Church of that city for thirty years. Dr. Waldron removed to Detroit in 1882, many members of his family having drifted westward. He was held in high esteem in the city, where he was in almost constant demand to supply pulpits, owing to his superior intellectual and oratorical gifts. He leaves a widow and three sons. He was in his sixty-sixth year.

A Remarkable Historical Sermon was preached on March 4, by Rev. C. E. Dunn, pastor of the oldest Presbyterian church in America. The church stands at Hempstead, Long Island, and its history runs back to the year 1644. It is not to be supposed, Mr. Dunn said, in tracing this wonderful record, that the church building, erected over two centuries ago, is standing to-day. That building was seized during the Revolutionary War by British soldiers, who converted it into a stable for a time, and it was afterward destroyed by fire. But the church organization, it is claimed, never died, and has existed until this day. The church was organized by the Rev. Richard Denton, and its members were a part of his old English congregation who followed him to America and settled in the peaceful Long Island hamlet. Mr. Denton remained at Hempstead and served the church there until 1659, when he returned to England. The building subsequently passed into the hands of the Congregationalists, and then of the Episcopalians, who had the support of the British Governor, but the Presbyterians built a smaller edifice near at hand, and of that site they have kept possession ever since, rebuilding and enlarging as occasion required.

Diamonds from the Skies were Exhibited in Philadelphia, on March 2, at a meeting of the Academy of Natural Sciences. Professor Lewis, who lectured that evening, produced a fragment of a meteorite containing diamonds, which fell in Siberia last October. He had extracted from the specimen two minute oval bodies, transparent, with traces of polarization, and having a high index of refraction. Having been able to scratch a sapphire with portions of the meteorite, he had come to the conclusion that it contained microscopic diamonds; and two Russian professors, who had examined it, agreed with him. The important bearing of this discovery upon the question of the origin of the diamond was dwelt upon, and attention was called to the similarity existing between the composition of meteorites and the diamond-bearing rock of South Africa. The facts and the theories founded upon them may be as important as the Professor thinks, but it will be by scientists rather then the general public that the importance will be perceived. The attention of the latter is too much absorbed by worldly affairs to think much of the bodies which come from the skies, and when their attention can be diverted in that direction, it is far more important that it be directed to another celestial visitant, whose value infinitely transcends diamonds — the Bread which came down from Heaven, whereof if a man eat he shall live forever. (John 6 : 51.)

The Value of an Arm Was the Subject of a dispute which came before the Supreme Court of New York for decision last week. A man had sued the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad in the Court below for the loss of one of his arms, and had gained a verdict for twenty-five thousand dollars. The Railroad Company contended that the amount was excessive, and appealed to the Supreme Court, but the appeal was dismissed. The judge, in handing down the judgment of the court, said: "There are other elements which enter into compensation for the destruction of an arm than pain and suffering and loss of power to earn money. Among them are the great deprivation of the capacity which follows to do many things essential to the common comforts of life, and the inexpressible sense of the want of that member. If the test were what any human being in full health would take for an arm, the sum named would be considered absurd." Unhappily the same test does not apply to the soul, which is of infinitely greater value than a limb. Multitudes of men are sacrificing their souls for money. (Matt. 16 : 26.)

Steel Filings Coated With Gold Were Sent to the Mint recently by some unsuspecting dealer. The officials at the Mint received a package by express from Little Rock, Ark., purported to be grains of gold. The size of the package, however, compared with its weight, convinced them that there was deception there in some form. The general appearance of the grains was much like that of the metal daily received, and they also bore successfully the acid test. Subsequently, a careful analysis was made to ascertain what the article really was and of what it was composed. The result was astonishing, revealing an ingenious device for the deception of parties dealing in gold bullion. The grains were found to be nothing more nor less than steel filings; and to give them the appearance of grains of the precious metal, they were covered with fine gold, which was made to adhere by the use of a composition of turpentine. The Church and the world are often similarly imposed upon. Men and women, who are really base metal, are often able to pick up a coating of cant phrases and wear a sanctimonious appearance, which is sufficient to deceive society and the Church. Though the deception may succeed here, and for a time, ultimate detection is inevitable. (Ezek. 33 : 31.)

An Astonished Captain and Crew Had a Narrow escape from death on March 7. They were on board a schooner, loaded with bricks, which was lying at the foot of West One Hundred and Twenty-ninth Street, New York. The schooner arrived the night previous, and made fast to the slip. There appeared to be no need for watching, as the vessel was safely at the end of her voyage, so the captain went to sleep in his cabin, and the crew also turned into their bunks below. Early in the morning a large ice floe came rapidly down the North River, borne by the receding tide toward the sea. As it was carried past the slip where the schooner lay, it received a swirling motion from the eddying water, and a sharp point projecting from it was driven into the schooner's side with mighty force. The ice floe passed on, leaving the schooner with a great hole in her timbers, through which the water was pouring. The vessel began to sink quickly, and as there was no one watching, no alarm was given to the sleeping captain and crew. They were, however, awakened by the shock and the deluge of water, and rushed on deck in their night-clothes. They managed to scramble on the slip, and so escaped with their lives, but they lost their clothing and all belonging to them on board. There are many Christians in a similar state of false security who are neglecting the Master's injunction to watch. A day of awakening is now near at hand, in which they will lament that they were found sleeping. (Mark 13 : 35, 36.)

A New York Belle's Disappointment was Described last week to a reporter by the baggage-master at the Central Depot. He said that one evening recently two trunks were checked by two young women. One trunk, a large Saratoga, belonged to the daughter of a millionaire, who was travelling to Washington. The other was a big, queer looking sea-chest, which was checked by a stout, healthy, immigrant girl from Sweden. In some inexplicable way, the checks were reversed and the trunks missent. The young lady, who had invitations to balls and dinner-parties, could not attend them, as she had nothing to wear but her travelling costume or the coarse woollen dresses and petticoats contained in the immigrant girl's trunk, while the immigrant girl, who had gone to Kansas, was mourning the loss of useful garments, for which the flimsy dresses and finery of the city belle were a poor substitute. It took three weeks to get the error rectified, and during that time both girls were much inconvenienced by the change inadvertently made. It may be hoped that at the end of the journey of life no such disappointment may await either of them. Then both will need the same garment—the robe of Christ's righteousness, which is offered alike to rich and poor, and without which there is no admission to eternal mansions. (Matt. 24 ; 11-13.)

BRIEF NOTES.

The Rev. George F. Pentecost, D. D., has been holding evangelistic meetings in Norwich, Conn., under the auspices of twelve churches of different denominations.

Dr. L. W. Munhall is announced to commence services in Macon, Ga., on March 14 (yesterday). He has accepted a united invitation from the churches of St. Paul, Minn., to visit that city at an early date.

Gen. Neal Dow, who ran as candidate for Mayor of Portland, Me., his own city, was defeated on March 5 by a Mr. Chapman, who had nearly 1,600 majority over Dow. The opposition to Dow is said to have been personal rather than political.

Rev. E. Payson Hammond's meetings for children, at Sacramento, Cal., have had good results; they were held in the Old Pavilion, and were very largely attended, the ministers of the various churches co-operating. A large number of children professed faith in Christ.

The great convention of Christian Endeavor societies, to be held in Chicago, in July, is already occupying the attention of the various committees. Arrangements have been made with the hotels for the reception of delegates at reduced rates, and appeals made to the trunk lines of railroad for special fares.

A bill passed by the House in the Ohio Legislature takes from the city councils the right to permit saloons to remain open on Sundays. By the provisions of the bill, all saloons throughout the State must be kept closed on Sunday. Democratic journals say that the Republican support given to this bill places Ohio among the doubtful States.

Evangelistic services are being held at Providence, R. I., by the Rev. B. Fay Mills. Two meetings are held each day, that in the afternoon in the First Baptist Church, and that in the evening in the Music Hall. Mr. Mills has held conferences with the Sunday-school teachers of the city, and on March 4 a gigantic mass meeting of the scholars, which has led to blessed results.

The first book ever printed in the Nbungoni dialect has been produced by Dr. Elmslie, the American missionary who has been stationed for some time among the Zulus, west of Lake Nyassa. The book was issued from the press of a neighboring mission station called Blantyre. It contains the decalogue, passages from the Psalms, Proverbs and the Gospels, with fourteen hymns.

Major Whittle's work in Iowa is being attended with great blessing in each of the cities he visits. In Cedar Rapids, Burlington and Sioux City the movement has astonished the citizens, who have never witnessed anything like it before. The Christian Convention held by Messrs. Moody and Sankey, at Burlington, gave an impetus to the work, which promises to render it a permanent missionary organization.

Mr. and Mrs. Willson have been assisting Dr. L. W. Munhall in his meetings at Buffalo, N. Y., during the absence of Prof. and Mrs. Towner. The wonderful success of the meetings has led the united churches to continue them after the conclusion of the four weeks for which arrangements had been made. One of the most important features of the services is the large number of youths who attend and have asked for prayers. They came in response to tickets of invitation sent to the houses of business.

JOB AMONG THE ASHES.

A New Sermon by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

"I have heard of Thee by the hearing of the ear: but now mine eye seeth Thee. Wherefore I abhor myself, and repent in dust and ashes." Job. 42 : 5, 6.

God's Revelation to Job—Inspires him with Awe—Yet Attracts him to God—I. Vivid Impressions of God Vouchsafed—Connected with Affliction—Prosperity a Painted Window—A Special Manifestation Necessary—II. Humility Produced—Christ the Standard of Righteousness—Sin an Impertinence—Pride and Culture Disappearing in God's Presence—III. Repentance Developed—What Job Had to Repent of—Despair—Impatience of Life—His Repentance a Sign and Precursor of his Deliverance.

JEHOVAH had spoken, Job had trembled. The Lord had revealed Himself, Job had seen Him. Truly, God did but display the skirts of His robe and unveil a part of His ways; but therein there was so much of ineffable glory, that Job laid his hand upon his mouth in token of his silent consent to the claims of the Everlasting One. God spoke to Job out of the whirlwind, concerning the greatness of His power, the wonders of His workings, the splendor of His skill, the infinity of His wisdom. Read the divine address, that you may see how Jehovah caused the afflicted patriarch to feel Him near.

In the confession which now lies before us, Job acknowledges God's boundless power; for he exclaims, "I know that Thou canst do everything, and that no thought can be withholden from Thee." He felt that whatever the Lord chose to think or desire, He could at once accomplish. Job had of which the height and depth no mind can ever measure. Job sees his own folly. He speaks like a man in a maze or a muse, and he says, "Who is he that hideth counsel without knowledge?" Look at the second verse of chapter thirty-eight, and you will see that he is quoting what God had said to him. The Lord's words are ringing in his ears, and in his anguish he repeats them, accepting them as justly applicable to himself. It is not far from being right with us, when the words of God can fitly become our words. "The Lord answered Job out of the whirlwind, and said, Who is this that darkeneth counsel by words without knowledge?" And now Job replies, "I am that foolish one: I uttered that I understood not; things too wonderful for me, which I knew not." Many a holy prophet has done this, for inspired men are described as those who "enquired and searched diligently; searching what, or what manner of time the Spirit which was in them did signify, when it testified beforehand the sufferings of Christ, and the glory that should follow." It is not the thoughts of the prophet which have been inspired of God so much as their words; for frequently they were moved to speak prophecies which were quite beyond their own understanding. Hence I assert that there is a

Verbal Inspiration, or No Inspiration

at all worthy of the name. Job, as he comes before us in the text, is impressed with his own folly. He had to a large degree spoken what he felt sure was true, but he now feels that he did not understand what he said; and he at the same time tacitly confesses that he may have said in his bitterness many an unwise and unseemly thing, and therefore he bows his head before the Lord his God, and confesses that he has darkened counsel by words without knowledge, and uttered things that he understood not.

Notwithstanding, the man of God proceeds to draw near unto the Lord, before whom he bows himself. Foolish as he confesses himself to be, he does not therefore fly from the supreme wisdom. This was brave and wise action. Whatever Job might be or might not be, he was a firm believer in his God, and in every word which the Lord was pleased to speak. Let us do as Job did, and make our approach unto the Lord in childlike confidence even when He seems to frown. Let us get where Job was when he said, "Though He slay me, yet will I trust in Him." When we bow lowest before His throne, let not our humble bending have anything of distance in it. Lowlier before Thee, O Lord, would we be; but at the same time our cry is, "Nearer to Thee." Thus we come to the text, having used the connection as a step to its door.

I. First, then, we have sometimes very Vivid Impressions of God.

Job had long before heard of God, and that is a great matter. He had been a reverent believer in the teachings of God, and an obedient servant to His commands; thus he had really heard God. The man who can say this can say a great deal. If God has ever been on speaking terms with you, you have much cause for gratitude. It is clear that you are not dead in sin, or if you were so when the Lord spoke to you, you are now alive; for His voice causes the dead to live. Job had heard God, but now he has more apprehension of Him. Of course, Job could not literally see God, he does not mean to assert that he did; for "no man hath seen God at any time;" but Job means that he now had a view of God very much more clear than any which he had obtained before; in fact, as much clearer as eyesight is more clear than hearing.

Notice, that in order to this close vision of God affliction had overtaken him. It was not till after he had scraped himself with the potsherd, nor till his friends had scraped him with something worse than the potsherds, that Job could say, "Mine eye seeth Thee." Not till every camel and every sheep had been stolen, and every child was dead, could the afflicted patriarch cry, "Now mine eye seeth Thee." Happy is that man who in prosperity can hear the voice of God in the tinkling of the sheep-bells of his abundant flocks, can hear Him in the lowing of the oxen which cover his fields, and in the loving voices of dear children around him. But which shuts out much of the clear light of God, and only when the blue and the crimson, and the golden tinge are removed, is the glass restored to its full transparency. Adversity thus takes away tinge and color and dimness, and we see our God far better than before, if our eyes are prepared for the light. The Lord had taken everything away from Job, and this paved the way to his giving Him more of himself. In the absence of other goods the good God is the better seen. In prosperity God is heard, and that is a blessing; but in adversity God is seen, and that is a greater blessing. Sanctified adversity quickens our spiritual sensitiveness.

Possibly, also, helpful to this was Job's desertion by his friends. Job's three friends! Ah me, I know their kindred! They were most devotedly attached to him, no doubt; and how warmly they proved it! They had met together with him, and said soft and sweet things to him in those days when he moved like a prince among the nobles of his people, and every eye that saw him blessed him. But when they found him sitting "down among the ashes," they had altered thoughts of him. They suspected him; and though they knew nothing against him, yet they perceived that he was not in the same honor as before. Between a prince in ermine and the same man in sackcloth there is, to some minds, a great difference.

Before Job could see the Lord, there was a special manifestation on God's part to him. "Then the Lord answered Job out of the whirlwind." God must really come and in a gracious way make a display of Himself to His servants, or else they will not see Him. Your afflictions will not of themselves reveal God to you. If the Lord Himself does not unveil His face, your sorrow may even blind and harden you, and make you rebellious. There must be a special revealing of the Lord to our own souls before we shall get such a clear apprehension of Him as Job intended by the words, "Now mine eyes seeth Thee." Read through the thirty-eighth chapter, and see how Jehovah declares His wisdom and His power: "Where wast thou when I laid the foundations of the earth? declare, if thou hast understanding. Who hath laid the measures thereof, if thou knowest? or who hath stretched the line upon it? Hast thou entered into the treasures of the snow? or hast thou seen the treasures of the hail? Canst thou bind the sweet influences of Pleiades, or loose the bands of Orion?" Here was a marvellous field for thought. The Lord speaks in nature, and it is done. His glory is seen in heaven and earth, in the sea and all deep places.

I need not tarry to say to you that all through that wonderful address of the Lord to His servant, He is saying, in so many words, "I am God; but who art thou?" The Lord is proving that nothing is impossible to His power and His wisdom. He had, after all, not allowed His servant to sink out of His reach. He was always able to rescue him. You learn here, also, that God is not amenable to our judgment. He giveth no account of His matters. He makes Job feel that He is God, and then there is an end to the matter. No apology is made to Job, and no explanation is given him; he must bow in unreserved submission, and surrender unconditionally; and he does so. Thus far he worshipped; but he must yet go further, until he cries, "I abhor myself, and repent in dust and ashes."

II. We have now reached our second point—when we have these apprehensions we have Lowlier Views of Ourselves.

Why are the wicked so proud? It is because they forget God. Why did Pharaoh dare to say, "Who is the Lord, that I should obey His voice? It was because he did not know Jehovah: but after those ten plagues, he altered his tone, and cried out, "Intreat the Lord for it is enough." Even his great pride was forced to bow before Jehovah when judgments were let loose upon him. If men knew God, how it would change their thoughts and talk! If they could have even an indistinct idea "by the hearing of the ear," many of them would never be so irreverent as they now are, nor so lofty in their ideas of their own wisdom; but if they could "see" Him as Job did, and behold His inexpressible glory, they would become meek and lowly.

If you would know what God is, He sets Himself before us in the person of His dear Son. In every respect in which we fall short of the perfect character of Jesus, in that respect we sin. There is no better description of sin that I know of than this: "Sin is any want of conformity to the law of God," and God's law is the transcript of His own mind. Wherein in any moral or spiritual respect, we fall short of the divine character, we to that extent fall into sin. Permit me to suggest to each one here who has a high idea of himself, and has no sense of self-abhorrence, that such self-honor must arise from ignorance of God: for there is such an immeasurable distance between the perfection of God and our faultiness that our true position is that of Penitent Humility.

Note, next, the impertinence of sin. How dare we trangress against God? O man, who art thou that rebellest against God? How darest thou to do to His face that which He forbids thee? How darest thou to leave undone in His very presence that which thy Lord commands thee to do? This makes sin a piece of presumption, a daring and glaring provocation of the Lord God. Although some of us can hold our heads high among our fellow-men, and we can say, "I am neither a drunkard, nor a thief, nor a liar, neither have I offended against the laws of integrity and charity," yet when we come before God, we perceive that we have not dealt towards Him as we ought to have done. To Him we have been thieves, robbing Him of His glory. "Will a man rob God?" To Him we have been liars: we have dealt treacherously, and we have broken our promises. To Him we have been ingrates; to Him we have been worse than brutes. Instead of equity, we have dealt towards God iniquity. Instead of love, we have dealt out enmity. Oh, when we think of this, we can understand why Job says, "Now mine eye seeth thee. Wherefore I abhor myself."

Once more, when God is seen with admiration, then of necessity we are filled with self-loathing. The more you appreciate God, the more you will depreciate yourself. While the thought of God rises higher and higher and higher, you also will sink lower and lower in your own esteem. The word used by Job, "I abhor myself," is a strong one. Do you know

What Self-Loathing Means?

Some of you do, I know. And I am sure that in proportion as you truly love, reverence and worship God, in that proportion you are full of abhorrence of self. You fine gentlemen, who often hold your heads so high that you can scarcely get through common door-ways, you know nothing of this! You high and mighty ladies, who cannot condescend to associate with any who are not of your superior rank; and you purse-proud men, who expect all to worship the golden calf which you have set up—you know nothing about this. O you wonderfully wise men, you intellectual persons, who so modestly dub yourselves "thoughtful and cultured," you snuff out a poor evangelical believer as if he were an idiot; may the Lord give you an hour of Job's "I abhor myself," and then you will be bearable; but as you now are, you are a trial!

III. Thirdly, I have to show you that such a sight fills the heart with True Repentance.

Job says, "I abhor myself, and repent in dust and ashes." The word "myself" has been added by the translators; and they could hardly have done otherwise. Job's expression, however, refers to all that had come out of himself, or had lurked within himself. He abhored all that he had been doing and saying. He says, "I abhor, and repent in dust and ashes." What did he repent of? I think Job repented first, of that tremendous curse which he had pronounced upon the day of his birth. It was terrific. See third chapter. Next, Job heartily repented of his desire to die. In the sixth chapter he expresses it as he did several times: he says, "Oh that I might have my request; and that God would grant me the thing that I long for! Even that it would please God to destroy me; that He would let loose His hand, and cut me off! Do you wonder that he said this? Was ever man so tried? I do not wonder at all, even at his cursing the day of his birth, considering all the bodily pain and mental irritation he was enduring at the time.

I do not doubt but what Job repented of his despair. The ninth and tenth chapters, and many other passages wherein Job speaks, are tinged with hopelessness. He felt as if God had left him a prey to the enemy; but this was not true. The Lord has never deserted any one of His people. There is not on record, in all the history of the ages, a case in which God has failed them that trust Him. Has He not said, "I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee"? and He never has left nor forsaken any believer; yet Job evidently thought that He had done so, and he was greatly troubled.

His critics goaded him by cruelly charging him with hypocrisy and wickedness, and Job vindicated himself with great earnestness, appealing to God, and saying, "Thou knowest that I am not wicked." This was true. He could plead his innocence in the common courts of men, and there he could well enough defend himself; but when the matter came into the King's own court, he could not answer in the same strain, but felt compelled to plead guilty. Job has to retract all his pleadings and challenges. If the case is to be heard as then Job yields the point unreservedly. Job had also to confess that his statements had been a darkening of wisdom by words without knowledge. Sometimes we say, "I perfectly understand that; I could clear up that mystery." We define this and define that to our brethren; but when we get into the presence of God, we find that our definitions are the proofs of our ignorance. While we see not God, we fancy that we can read all the riddles of His word; but when we behold Him more nearly, we say with David, "So foolish was I, and ignorant: I was as a beast before thee." In the presence of God Job bowed his head and repented of all his suspicions and mistrusts; and this is what we must do if, in the day of our sorrow, we have been petulant and unbelieving.

Let me pass on. According to our text, repentance puts man into the lowest place. He says, "I repent in dust and ashes." "Dust and ashes"—that signifies the dust-heap, or what in Scotland they call the "midden." Job had made dust and ashes his headquarters. Repentance puts us in a lowly seat. You have heard sometimes, I dare say, among the beautiful nothings of the modern school, the mention of "the dignity of human nature." Behold a throne for the "dignity of human nature." Yonder dust and ashes are for this proud royalty. The dust-heap is for human nature in its glory, when it has on its richest robes. I say that when man wears his

he is even then only fit for the midden; and every man of God that has been brought to true repentance, owns that it is so.

Next, note that all real repentance is joined with holy sorrow and self-loathing. I have read in the sermons of certain teachers that "Repentance is only a change of mind." That may be true; but what a change of mind it is! It is not such a change of mind as some of you underwent this morning when you said, "It is really too cold to go out," but afterwards you braved the snow, and came to the Tabernacle. Oh, no! repentance is a thorough and radical change of mind, and it is accompanied with real sorrow for sin and self-loathing. A repentance in which there is no sorrow for sin will ruin the soul. If thou canst look upon sin without sorrow, then thou hast never looked on Christ. A faith-look at Jesus breaks the heart, both for sin and from sin. Try thyself by this test.

But, next, repentance has comfort in it. It is to my mind rather extraordinary, that the Hebrew word, which is justly translated "repent." is also used in two or three places at least in the Old Testament to express comfort. Isaac, it is said, took Rebekah to his mother's tent, and was "comforted after his mother's death." Here the word is the same as that which is here rendered "repent." Isaac's mind was changed as to the death of his mother. As, then, there is in the Hebrew word just a tinge of comfort, so in repentance itself, with all its sorrow, there are traces of joy. Repentance is a bitter-sweet or a sweet-bitter.

The door of repentance opens into the halls of joy. Job's repentance in dust and ashes was

The Sign of His Deliverance.

God turned His wrath upon the three critics, but justified Job, and gave him the honorable office of intercessor on their behalf. Then "The Lord turned the captivity of Job when he prayed for his friends." "The Lord blessed the latter end of Job more than the beginning," and the turning-point was that sitting down in the dust and ashes. When you are brought as low as you can be, the next turn must be upward. Down with you, then! Off with the feathers of your pride, and the finery of your self-righteousness! Down with you among the useless and worthless things! From that point you will ascend. The more crushed, humbled, exhausted, and near death you are, the more prepared you are for God to raise you up.

Job was an unrivalled saint; none of us can compare with him; and if that perfect and upright man had to say, "I abhor myself," what will you and I say when we see God? We shall by and by behold Him on the judgment-seat; how shall we endure it? If you have no righteousness but your own, you will stand naked to your shame in the day when the Lord appeareth. You self-righteous men, dare you go before God in your own righteousness? If you dare, I marvel at your presumption. Job dared not. He could stand up boldly before his accusers, but when before God he was in another attitude. When it comes to dying and appearing before the Most High, you that have no righteousness but one of your own spinning, what will you do?

What shall you and I do? Brethren, we are not afraid; for there is a righteousness of God which is given to us by faith through Jesus Christ. God Himself cannot find any fault with His own righteousness; and if He gives me His own righteousness, even the righteousness of God which is by faith in Jesus Christ, which is to all and upon all them that believe, then I may hope to sit at last, not on the midden, but on the throne, rejoicing to find myself in Christ Jesus, crowned with a crown which I shall delight to cast at His feet.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

A DERANGED WOMAN'S MEMORY.*

"During the year, Mrs. Payne, an aged, afflicted woman, died. Her mind was somewhat deranged by a succession of heavy afflictions, yet she always evinced astonishing clearness and correctness in all religious truth. On asking her one day, 'Do you know Mr. R.? Mr. S.? Do you know me?' she said, 'No.' 'Do you know Jesus Christ?' 'I guess I do! I guess I do; I love Him! I ought to know Him! He died for a poor, guilty sinner like me.' She then gave vent to her feelings in cries, prayers and tears. Never was she bewildered about Christ and His salvation. Her affliction was of long duration, but her end was calm and peaceful as a summer evening."

Close of a Useful Life.

One of the last to die in the old hospital at Cincinnati, was the faithful nurse, Miss Van Alstin, who had watched over the sick nearly three years, and was so deeply interested that she left her earnings for the benefit of the Institution. Often she expressed fear of death, and at times doubted whether she was a child of God. One day our conversation took this turn: "Do you think a Christian should fear death?" "By no means; for to die is gain." "I've always had a dread of death." "So have many Christians; but when the last enemy comes, Jesus is with them, and they die in peace." "I've done so little in my life to glorify God!" "Are there not some things which give you pleasure?" "Yes; when I taught a class in a Sabbath-school in New York, that was one of the happiest parts of my life. Then, when I came to Ohio, and was in the nursery of the Orphan Asylum, the little children would come to me and say, 'You're my mother now; pray with me.' And I did, and God blessed me there. And the rest of my life has been spent among the sick and dying. Many a time at midnight I've kneeled by them and prayed."

The last months of her life were spent on a sick bed; she died of consumption. When near death, she wrote with a pencil these four lines, from a hymn which had been a great comfort to her in her illness:

"Jesus can make a dying bed
Feel soft as downy pillows are,
While on His breast I lean my head,
And breathe my life out sweetly there."

Her end was peace. She died happy in the Lord.

This slip of paper the dying nurse sent to another lady, dying of consumption in the next room. Thus one dear friend cheered the other, in view of crossing that mysterious stream we sometimes call the river of death. "I can trust Christ Jesus for time and eternity," was the expression of the last patient when dying.

Death of a Prodigal.

In 1854, William B., son of a minister of the gospel in South Carolina, was sick here many months, and died a sad death. He had been a profligate man, and though often urged to repent, kept on in his sins. He would say, "Ah! you may talk; when anybody's been as wicked as I have all their life, 'tain't so easy to repent."

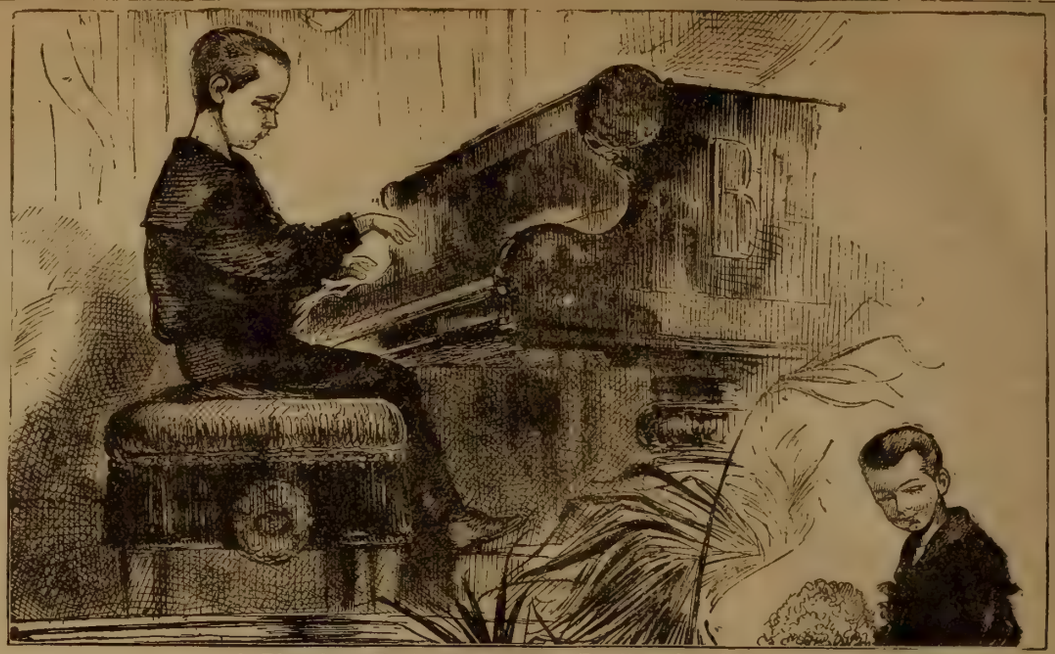
The Late Mr. W. W. Corcoran.



A Pianoforte Recital by the Boy Prodigy, Josef Hofmann.

He often deplored the life he had led, saying, "Ah, well! it's no use, it can't be helped, too late now!" His last words were, "Dark! all is dark; no hope! Too late! It's too late now!" Thus he died.

A Dying Soldier's Conversion.

On a Sabbath afternoon in April, 1862, Father Wright, of the Methodist Church, and four la dies accompanied me. By request of the soldiers, we sang the well-known hymn, "There is a fountain filled with blood," etc. Several men shed tears, and one man from Illinois wept aloud. On asking the cause, he said, "I'm the wickedest man in the army. I've broken every commandment except murder. Oh, what shall I do? The doctors have given me up. They say I can never get well."

We repeated to him the blessed invitations of the gospel, and reminded him that the "Blood of Jesus Christ, His Son, cleanseth us from all sin;" that He is able to save to the uttermost. "Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool." He said, "I am too wicked a man to be saved." Father Wright spoke tenderly, and urged him to call upon Jesus, as did the dying thief, and he would be saved. We then sang:

"Just as I am, without one plea!
But that Thy blood was shed for me!"

The struggle continued, and the weeping. Then I said, "Will you now call on Jesus to save you?" He said, "I will, and he did. Most of that night he continued praying, and found peace in believing. He lived some two weeks longer, and died in peace, saved through the blood of the Lamb. He was shot through the thigh, and suffered great pain, but bore it all with resignation, after he had found peace. Many other soldiers were deeply affected by this service, and gave us the assurance that they would live better lives.

THE LATE MR. CORCORAN.

(See Portrait.)

The venerable philanthropist and art patron, who died in Washington D. C. on February 24 had attained the advanced age of eighty-nine years, having been born at Georgetown, D. C. December 27, 1798. Mr. Corcoran spent his whole life in the District of Columbia, where his father settled shortly after the Revolutionary War, and became Mayor of the town. Young William was educated at the public school and college of Georgetown, and engaged in trade. In 1840 he formed a partnership in Washington with Mr. G. W. Riggs in the banking business. Henceforward his prosperity was continuous.

His financial services to the Government at the time of the Mexican War, when all other financiers avoided the loans, called out the thanks of Daniel Webester, then Secretary of State. He made a prodigious fortune, and during the latter years of his life devoted his time to the management of it and to its disposition in such ways as the owner believed would be a benefit to the public. No visitor to the national capital has failed to visit the Corcoran Art Gallery, at Pennsylvania Avenue and Seventeenth Street, over the door of which is the simple inscription "Dedicated to Art." This is a fine building filled with rich treasures of vast artistic and money value, which cost $350,000, and has on it an endowment of two million dollars, the gift of the munificent banker to the nation. The erection of the Gallery was begun in 1857.

Another and most touching expression of Mr. Corcoran's philanthropy, was the founding of the Louise Home for the sustenance of aged women left without means. The Home is named after Mr. Corcoran's only child, Louise, long since dead, whose memory he tenderly cherished.

Another instance of Mr. Corcoran's public spirit and liberality was his providing for the reinterment of the author of "Home, Sweet Home" and the erection of a monument over his grave.

It is stated with authority that Mr. Corcoran's gifts during his lifetime, which can be traced over and above the benefactions, which he succeeded in concealing, as he tried to conceal them all, amounted to over seven and a half millions, of which six millions were distributed in sums of over $5,000 each.

JOSEF HOFMANN.

(See Illustration.)

The precocious little genius for whose protection the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children has interposed, is but a little over ten years of age, yet has kept large and critical audiences in a state of delighted attention by his performances on the piano-forte. He is a native of Poland, having been born at Warsaw, June 20, 1877, but first attracted public notice in Germany, where critics of superior ability were electrified by his recitals. In the summer of last year his father took him to London, where he gave a series of concerts to large audiences, There Mr. Abbey, the New York manager, saw and heard him, and made a contract with his father for an Americen tour.

The boy was to give eighty-one performances in the United States, for which Mr. Abbey agreed to pay him $1,250 a week, the series to run from December, 1887, to April, 1888. The young prodigy gave fifty-three coneerts, and was then withdrawn from the stage at the request of Mr. Elbridge Gerry; physicians examined the boy, and representations were made to his father as to the effect of the excitement and the laudation bestowed upon one so young. The result was that Mr. Hofmann cancelled the engagement for the remaining concerts, and has decided to keep his son away from the piano, even as an amusement, for several years. It is stated that the cerebral irritation, induced by the succession of concerts, threatened his reason, if not his life. The withdrawal is, of course, a disappointment to the public, as the reports of the earlier concerts were of so surprising a nature as to excite curiosity and a general desire to hear so precocious a performer.

THE MINISTER'S PRODIGAL SON.

Some years ago the Rev. Edward Darlington was in charge of one of the two churches in a small Long Island village. He and his good wife led a quiet, retired life in the comfortably furnished parsonage; and it would have been a happy life, too, if it had not been for Paul, their only child. Paul, though trained from infancy, by word and example, in the ways of meekness and obedience, showed at times a temper which spurned control. He had come to reflect—and the oftener his thoughts ran that way, the more the idea took hold on his boyish fancy—that he was only the son of a poor village parson, while his playmates were New York gentlemen's sons, who lived with their parents in handsome villas in the summer, and during the fall and winter in stately houses in the city. They wore fine clothes and had plenty of pocket-money, while he, the "parson's son," had scarcely ever any pocket-money; and as for clothes—his jackets were usually threadbare and his trousers garnished with patches.

Paul was a long way from being contented with his condition and his station in life. He dreamed of fame and riches; and though he was only fifteen years old, and knew very little, indeed, of the ways of the great world beyond the boundaries of his rural home and the precincts of the village academy, he fancied he could, unaided and alone, make his way successfully through life.

"The world owes everyone a living, and it will yield it to the brave," he said to himself. "I want to get away from this quiet country place. I am old enough to look out for myself, and when I return I'll be a rich man, perhaps a famous man—who knows?"

These thoughts filled Paul's mind more and more, until he resolved to make the experiment of facing the world alone. His preparations were necessarily few, and they were soon completed. The last evening came. Paul retired to his room earlier than usual that night. The hour was, however, far advanced before he laid down to sleep. He was remarkably taciturn at breakfast next morning, and his eyes wore a distracted, far-off expression. He lowered them whenever his father or his mother looked at him. He went out guiltily, giving his parents no intimation of his intention.

It was twelve years before anything more was heard of him, though his parents spent more time and money than they could afford in trying to trace him. The boy went West. Sometimes fortune smiled upon him and made him happy and hopeful; sometimes she went by on the other side, and he sighed for the peace and comfort of home. Sometimes he dined on plenty; sometimes the dinner-table was a stranger. Sometimes his raiment was of rich material, and he had showy jewelry, rings and breastpins; at other times he had to go ragged. The world was a great deal larger, a great deal colder, and a great deal less inclined to encourage the wild dreams of youth than he had ever imagined. Years of experience robbed him of the arrogance of youth, and taught him the truth that the four-leafed shamrock of fortune grows no more luxuriantly abroad than at home, and the glitter of gold is just as bright, when seen by one's own hearthstone.

The Prodigal Son's Interview With the Lawyer.

Wearying at last of the struggle in which he made no permanent advance but only lost one month what he had gained in the month before, Paul resolved to go home. He had been sick, and as he lay helpless and neglected in a strange boarding-house, where the hired girl came into his room once or twice a day to ask if he wanted anything, and always forgot to bring him the things he asked for, he thought longingly of his mother and his home. Fever consumed him, but no water was brought to him, and no one seemed to care whether he lived or died. Yes; like the Prodigal, he came to himself, and would go home. He hoped to have returned in wealth and style, but he did not mind that now; he would go in his rags. As soon as he was well enough he set out, and he arrived at the old village just twelve years after leaving it.

He made his way to the parsonage, but to his surprise and dismay it was untenanted. Were his father and mother dead? The thought startled and thrilled him; he had never thought of such a possibility. After a few minutes of anxious deliberation he resolved to seek out the village lawyer, who was his father's friend, and learn from him where his father and mother were. It was with some trepidation that he knocked at the lawyer's door, but he was not disappointed there. The lawyer was in and would see him presently—he was engaged just then. In a short time Paul heard the lawyer conducting his client into the house place from his office and then calling to his clerk to bring Paul in.

The lawyer looked at him searchingly through his spectacles, but evidently did not know him, and apparently did not like him, for he did not invite him to be seated. "Do you know—can you tell me—" Paul began—"I have come to find Mr. Darlington, the minister." His gaze wandered around the room, taking in the familiar objects, the iron safe, the legal almanac, the row of law-books, and all the furniture he knew so well when as a boy he had sat there while his father talked with the lawyer. But what was this? On a chair close to him was a hat, and, resting against it, a walking stick that Paul knew to be his father's.

"Mr. Darlington is not living here now," said the lawyer, but he is here on business this morning. In fact, he is in the house now. Do you wish to see him?

A great load was lifted from Paul's heart. His father was still alive. "Yes," he cried, "let me see him; I am his son."

A few moments more and the lawyer who had hurried away returned, with the minister. The old man could not believe that his long lost son had really returned, but as he scanned the lines of his face conviction came, and holding out his arms like the father in the parable, fell on his neck and kissed him. It was a happy journey to the village where Mr. Darlington now lived, for the old man was looking forward to the joy of restoring the prodigal son to his mother. Words cannot depict the joy of that meeting. Neither of them would listen to the son's self-reproaches. He was restored to them, and that was enough. Their magnanimity touched the heart of the wanderer more than any reproaches could have done, and he was completely broken down. It was not, however, until the next day which was Sunday that he fully realized how great had been his wrong-doing and how terrible his sin, not only against his parents but against God. His father preached from the text: "This my son was dead and is alive again, was lost and is found" (Luke 15:24), and in listening with bowed head to the story of Divine love he saw how shameful and wicked a thing it is to sin against a God so tender and long-suffering, and he sought and found pardon through the Saviour.

MRS. TRANSOME'S PUPIL.

A SERIAL STORY.

Going Home.

On Sunday afternoons, when Transome and I had our half-hour together, we had very little to say to one another. We sat side by side, silent for the most part, and strangers that had seen us would have thought we cared nought for one another. Our lives were so dull, with no change in them, that there was nothing to tell, and Transome could never get his thoughts shaped about in words. All I knew from him was that his ward was just like mine, filled with old men, with all the life gone out of them. He was warmed and clothed and fed as well as the rest, but that was all. There was nothing for us to talk about.

Yet when we had our afternoon out, and went outside the poorhouse walls, then our tongues seemed unloosed. We had got permission to go out on the same day, and Transome was waiting for me in his poorhouse clothes when I went through the great black doors. It was a chilly day in December, but it did not rain when we met, and we scarcely thought of the weather. Transome seemed more himself than he had done for a long, long while; and he crept along brisker, and with a brighter face than usual. We were like two birds that had been caged, and let out into freedom again for a little time, only with broken wings, and a string that would pull us back into the cage again.

The poorhouse was on the same side of the town as our old home, and because we had nowhere else to go to, we turned towards that, though we knew it would be gone, and had no more a place save in our hearts. The north wind blew coldly against us as we toiled up the steep street leading to the brow of the hill; but we scarcely took notice of it. We were together once more, out of the dark shadow of the poorhouse walls.

But when we reached the top of the street, where the dingle used to be, and turned the corner of the last house, to see the spot where our cottage had once stood, think what it was to find that it was standing there still! Not one whit changed! There was the poplar-tree, with a few brown leaves clinging still to its topmost boughs, and the thatched roof, just as we had left them! No, I could not believe my own eyes. I had been fretting and mourning over it in my secret heart as pulled down and and destroyed; and now I saw it unchanged, not a beam, not a handful of thatch gone; only there was no smoke from the chimney, and the kitchen-shutter was not taken down. Transome lifted the latch of the wicket, and we walked down the old path together. We sat down on the little bench beside the door, and looked in wonder at one another till I could not see him through my tears.

"Ally, lass!" said Transome, "it's like one o' my dreams—thee and me comin' home to th' oud house! Is it true, think's ta? Grip my hand hard if thee thinks it's true."

"Ay, it's true!" I answered, "and the old master might have left us alone in it all this time instead of driving us to the poorhouse."

"Hush, hush, lass!" he said; "it is na' a' together him. God sent us there, and we mun never set oursen again Him. But maybe He's keepin' it for us till we're ready to come out o' th' house again."

"We'd come out at once," I said, "if we could only have the old house again at the old rent; I could win bread for thee and me. Let us leave the house at once and come back."

"Nay, Ally," he answered, shaking his head, "we're boun' to wait th' Lord's pleasure. Th' winter's frost and snow are to come yet; and we've got nayther bed nor chair nor table left. But i' th' spring, lass!"

We sat there all the afternoon, chilled to the bone; yet happier than we had been since the evening Tramsome came home with the bad news that we were to quit. A lass from one of the houses hard by came to us and told us how one of the biggest mills about there had failed shortly after we left that part of the town; and now, as trade had begun to fall off, no one had taken to the mill and set the looms at work again. Many of the houses in the dingle were empty, she said. That was why our old landlord had not pulled down the cottage and built more in its place.

But we were forced to go away at last by the nightfall, though we lingered till it was quite dark, now and again plucking up a weed or binding up a flower in the old garden, where we had so often worked together in the cool of the day. As we made our way slowly back to the poorhouse, I talked over our plans as if I were a young wife again. As for Transome, he spoke but few words, as usual, only muttering to himself from time to time, "I' th' spring, my lass—i' th' spring!"

It began to rain fast when we were more than half a mile from the poorhouse; yet Transome, who was weary, could not quicken his lame feet. He bade me hurry on and get under shelter; but I begged and prayed him so to let me stay beside him as long as I could, that he could not say me no. For the rain did not take away the new hope from my heart, or the new plans from my head; and I scarcely felt it for myself, only for him, whose coat was getting soaked through and through. He was shivering with the cold; but still there was a bright light in his eyes, and a smile upon his face, as he kept saying, "I' th' spring, Ally—i' th' spring-time!"

All that night I could not sleep, and the next morning I found that the heavy rain of the evening before had brought on many pains in my old limbs. I had no power to lift myself from the bed; though when the bell rang for prayers, and I thought of Transome going, and how he'd feel at not seeing me there, I wept sore for trouble and sorrow. I begged everybody that came near me to take a message to him, but I got no answer back from him. Ah! they were a long three days that I lay there, not able to stir hand or foot without a groan wrung from me, spite of myself. But on the fourth morning I was able to get out of bed, and crawl across the floor to the fireplace at the far end of the ward, and take my place among the old women cowering about it. I was stretching out my stiff hands toward the blaze to gather all the warmth I could, when all of a sudden the door at the other end of the long room was thrown open, and a shrill voice called out to me, a sharp, shrill voice that rang through me, "Alice Transome, yo're to go quick to the sick-ward, for yo're man's dying."

All my pains were gone in an instant—swallowed up by a greater pain. I started from my chair, hurried down the room, and across the yard to the sick-ward, thinking of nothing, knowing nothing, hearing and seeing nothing, only the dree words ringing through and through my head, "Yo're man's deein!" The doctor met me at the foot of the stairs, and I could only cry out the name, "Transome!" He shook his head, and said something, but my ears were dull of hearing, and his voice sounded smothered and low. I almost ran as soon as I saw the door of the place where he was lying, and I knocked at the door, which had no latch on the outside, earnestly, earnestly, as if some terrible thing was hunting me, and I had fled there for safety. But the terrible thing was in there before me; though I pushed in eagerly as soon as the door was opened.

The place was exactly the same as the ward I came from, and the ward he came from—a long, narrow room, with narrow beds on each side, and the same coarse blue quilts over them. But every person lying on these beds was ill as well as poverty-stricken. I saw Transome the first moment—I saw no one save him. He was alone, no one near him; for he was passing away quietly, and the nurses had much to do, and were glad to leave him to himself. Quite alone, lying with his eyelids closed, and drifting away tranquilly out of this troublesome life, as if he did not know that he was going—just as a child falls asleep without knowing it. So quiet and still he was, that when I stole on tiptoe to his side, like I used to steal to Willie's cradle, he did not open his eyes, or move the poor hands that lay outside the quilt. I laid my hands softly upon them, and the icy chill that ran through me forced me to cry aloud.

"Oh, Transome!" I said, "are you going to leave me—to leave me behind you in this dreadful place?"

At that his face quivered all over, and his lips moved, and his eyelids opened. A smile came across his face, full of content, and his poor glazed eyes brightened as he saw me bending over him.

"Ally, my lass! Ally!" he whispered. I knelt down beside him, and put my arm under his old gray head; and he kept on whispering, "Ally, my lass! my poor Ally!" till I couldn't bear it a minute longer.

"Oh!" I cried, "the Lord is dealing very hard with us."

"No, no," he answered, "He's dealin' softer wi' us nor wi' His own Son, 'at were crucified upo' the cross. Nobry i' th' world has borne harder nor that. I'm a weary, sinfu' old man; but He were young, and there was no sin in Him, yet they put Him to death upo' the cross. No! Thee munna threep agen th' Lord, Ally."

"If He'd only let me come, too!" I cried again, feeling as if God must hear my cry, and take me along with Transome.

"Ay! aw'd bide for thee a while if aw could, for sure," he said, tenderly; "aw promised to bide wi' thee till death parted us; but 'twere the poorhouse first, and now it's death. But thee'lt not be long after me, Ally."

"No," I said; but my throat was so dry and choked I could say no more. If Transome died, all was over for me. I was a helpless, friendless old woman, with nothing before me but to live and die in the poorhouse, yet I could not be sure that I should die soon.

"Ally," he whispered again," I've gie'en thee mony and mony a cross to bear. But thee'lt forgie me a' now."

"Thou never gave me a hard word," I said.

"Th' Lord knows," he went on, "at aw love thee more now nor when we were wed. Dost remember, lass? But tell me, quick, what were those words thee learned me th' neet afore we came into th' house? 'Faithful unto death.' Quick, Ally."

No one knows how hard it was for me to make my voice speak through my sobs; but quietly and softly I repeated the words, putting my lips close to his ear:

"Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life!"

"Gran' words," he whispered; "faithfu' unto death; crown o' life! Gran' words. Faithfu' unto death, Lord!"

His gray head fell heavier on my arm, and his eyelids dropped half over his eyes. His breath came feebler and feebler. I knew what it was. He tried to speak once more to me, but his poor tongue was stiff and cold. His fingers groped about a bit on the quilt, till I put my other hand into them. I would not stir or utter a cry, lest any of the strange women who were in the ward should come nigh us, and perhaps take me away from him. So quiet he was when he passed away forever, that even the sick man next to him, whom I could have touched with my hand without moving, did not know that Transome was dead. Only I knew.

Well, I cannot tell you any more. You have heard enough to know how Transome was faithful unto death. Maybe if I had been like him I should have been with him now in the presence of the Lord. But he has placed us here like children at school, who must stay till their tasks are learned by heart before they are let free into the holiday and the sunshine. I'd learned my lessons so as I might have forgotten them in the holiday time; and when Transome was called home from school the Lord left me here to get them better by heart.

All I saw of his funeral was the little plain hearse belonging to the poorhouse, with four of the poorhouse men riding outside it, ready to carry his coffin to the grave. After that I was like one dazed and bewildered; doing nothing of my own will and choice; but getting up and going to bed, eating and drinking, only when I was bid. Once I went to prayers seeking for Transome; but I never went again. The four bare white walls of the ward seemed nothing but a big grave, and I like one dead and buried in it; only it was a sort of living death, so dreadful that none but those who have felt it can know it. Nothing would ever change again. Summer and winter would be alike to me. I was there without pity, and without help; my heart dead within me. It seemed as if death itself had forgotten me, or would not have compassion on me.

It was one day in the spring that Transome had spoken of—"I' th' spring, Ally—i' th' spring time!" I was lying in my bed late on in the morning, for no one had bid me rise, though the sun was shining through the high windows, when the door near me was opened, and the matron and two gentlemen came through it. I had ceased to care to take any notice of visitors, for if they tried to comfort me, it was plain they knew nothing of my sorrow. So I closed my eyes wearily as they came in. But they stopped at the foot of my bed; and I thought maybe if I seem to be asleep they will pass on: for it troubled me for other folks to talk to me about Transome. But a voice, a strange voice, yet with a tone in it that somehow made me think of my school, said loud enough for me to hear:

"Surely this cannot be Mrs. Transome!"

"It's Alice Transome," answered the matron. "Her husband died four months ago, and she's never been herself since. She takes no notice of anybody, sir."

"She'll take notice of me," said the same strange, clear, pleasant voice, "I must make her know me; for I've come to pay a debt I owe her. Mrs. Transome, you have never forgotten your little scholar, Pippin?"

No, I had never forgotten him; yet I did not lift up my eyes all at once. I tried to recall his bonny face; but it was so mixed up with Willie's face, I could not. Then I felt a warm, strong hand take mine into its firm clasp; as firm as Transome's was when we were wed.

"It's Pippin!" said the voice, close to my ear. I made a great effort then to shake off the weight that had been crushing me down all those long months. I felt myself trembling all through me: and the warm hand clasped me more closely.

"Look at me!" said Pippin.

So I opened my eyes, and saw him standing beside my bed, a young, sunburnt man now, but with the same sunny hair and bright eyes that my little scholar had. I broke out into sobbing and weeping, so as I had never wept since Transome died.

"I am come to take you away from this place," he said, soothingly; "but you must not talk to me now. After dinner you shall get up and dress, and come away with father and me. Father is come home at last, Mrs. Transome!"

Then I looked, and saw behind him a man of middle age, whose hair was just going gray, and whose grave face bore the marks of bitter sufferings. But he looked kindly upon me as Pippin spoke, and said, "You were my boy's best friend when he had no one to care for him, and we will not leave you here." So they went away; and I lay quiet again, but feeling that the sun was shining still upon the world, and there was love and kindness in it yet, even for me.

That evening I had tea with them in a grand parlor in an inn in the town, and was waited upon as if I were a born lady. Pippin told me all his story, which is too long to tell here. How, like a child, the memory of me had died away from his mind, amid the many changes of his life. How, when he was a boy of sixteen, just leaving school, there came a rumor to him of his father's ship having been wrecked upon the coast of Africa nine years before, and how a white man was living among the black tribes there. It was no more than a rumor, but he could not rest until he had adventured himself to take help to that white man; and behold! it was his own father, Captain John Champion, who might never have escaped from that place, if his boy had not rescued him. They had only come back home a little while ago, and now, the memory of me having grown strong again, they had returned to our town to repay me for what I had done for him when a little child. Ah! if Transome had only lived to know it!

SELF.

By Mrs. M. Baxter.

S. S. Lesson for March 25, Matt. 16:21-25. Golden Text, Rom. 15: 3.*

The Motive Principle of Worldly Lives—Its Manifestation in Education, Philanthropy and Social Life—Pharisaism in all Ages - Self Pity—Clinging to Creature Comforts - The Claims of Heathendom Ignored—The Divine Altruism of the Saviour—The Condition of Discipleship—Self to be Held Always Ready for Immolation—Christ's Teaching as to Self—Paul's Self was Crucified—The Changed Aspect of Personal Trials.

"Even Christ pleased not Himself." He was the only Man who ever lived a life totally free from self. "Every man for himself," or, as Scripture renders it: "All seek their own" (Phil. 2: 21.) is the motive-principle which governs every man who has not yielded himself to Christ; it is

The Very Essence of the World.

"Men will praise thee when thou doest well to thyself." (Ps. 49: 18.) Politics, religion and social life, as they generally exist, are all animated with this same principle; everybody expects, and is expected, to do the best for himself. Children are educated to look after their own interests; men go into business to secure a fortune for themselves; people build a church or a mission to secure the interests of the denomination to which they belong; nations go to war in order to exalt themselves, or to attain territory, or commercial advantages for themselves. Again, men enter into an argument to prove themselves in the right; they play a game to show their skill; they furnish a house to secure their comfort; they pray to God to ease their conscience; and, from first to last, self is the object of all. In a little country town, the squire cannot dine with the merchant, nor the merchant with the shopkeeper, nor the shopkeeper with the dressmaker, nor the dressmaker with the servant, nor the servant with the scavenger, because self would be supposed to lose some of its contemptible superiority! But surely, in religion self has no such place? Alas! there are the self-righteous. Were there not, in our Lord's time, such as "trusted in themselves that they were righteous, and despised others"? (Luke 18: 9) some who, "being ignorant of God's righteousness (which is without a flaw), and going about to establish their own righteousness, have not submitted themselves unto the righteousness of God (Rom. 10: 3.) And are there not Pharisees still, who thank God that they are not as other men are? Was not Cain such an one? Did not he seek to get standing-ground with God without any attempt to get the question of sin settled? There are the self-holy. Did not even the righteous or justified Job rejoice in justified, no doubt, by faith; for even in the Old Testament the just lived by his faith (Heb. 2: 4). Job yet gloried in his own integrity, and counted on his own righteousness, and greatly admired himself. He says, "I will maintain mine own ways before Him" (Job 13: 15), and so he would be independent of God. Again, "My face is foul with weeping, and on mine eyelids is the shadow of death; not for any injustice in mine hands: also, my prayer is pure" (16: 16, 17). "Till I die I will not remove mine integrity from me. My righteousness I hold fast, and will not let it go: mine heart shall not reproach me so long as I live." (27: 5, 6.) What was this but the setting up of a self, a righteous, holy self, as something to trust in? If the restraining grace of God had left him for a moment to himself, where would have been his purity, integrity and righteousness? And there are thousands like him, rejoicing in their own holiness, and boasting in it.

A Righteous Self,

And then, even among Christians, how much we find of self pity, of being sorry for themselves, and nursing their own wrongs! Jonah was more ready to let the whole population of Nineveh perish than he was to endure the heat of the sun himself. There is something extremely revolting in his heartless selfishness. Yet how many of us are leaving hundreds of millions of heathen to perish, because we pity ourselves too much to leave comfortable homes and pleasant society, and a position where we are honored and respected! Jesus told His disciples that He "must suffer many things of the chief priests and scribes, and be killed, and be raised again the third day;" and Peter said, "Pity Thyself, Lord, this shall not be unto Thee." (Matt. 16: 21 margin.) "Pity thyself"! Self pity was as foreign to Jesus as sin was. He had not where to lay His head, He received not honor from men, and commissioned His disciples to live as He did. He came on earth to wage war against all the self which is in man, and to teach us to walk in Newness of Life.

In Him was no self-righteousness, for He disclaimed power to do anything of Himself. (John 5: 19, 30; 14: 10.) He fled from honor. (John 5: 34, 41; 6: 15.) He did not defend himself. "When He was reviled," He "reviled not again;" when He suffered, He threatened not, but committed Himself to Him that judgeth righteously. 1 Pet. 2: 23.) He sought not His own will, His own glory, His own comfort, that He might teach us the glory and beauty of a life lived out of self. Therefore, He answered Peter, "Get thee behind Me, Satan, for thou art an offence unto Me, for thou savorest not the things that be of God, but those that be of men. Then said Jesus unto His disciples, "If any man will come after Me, let him deny himself and take up his cross and follow Me." Not pity himself, not defend himself, not justify himself, not value himself; but deny himself; not make himself of importance, but let this mind be in him which was also in Christ Jesus, who "made Himself of no reputation. Not enrich himself, but sell all that he had and give to the poor, and he should have treasure in heaven. The world is full of self-assertion, self-importance, self-satisfaction, self-pity, self-righteousness, self-defence, self-indulgence. What of all this do we see in Jesus? His yoke—the yoke He bore and the yoke He puts on others—is that of a meek and lowly heart, where self is at a discount.

The whole teaching of Jesus is aimed at

The Destruction of Self.

Self will be first. Jesus teaches, "Whosoever will be great among men, let him be your minister; and whosoever will be chief among you, let him be your servant. Even as the Son of Man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister and to give His life a ransom for many." (Matt. 21: 26-28.) Self will defend self and have its rights. Jesus teaches, "I say unto you, that ye resist not evil" (Matt. 5: 39), and that His people are not to contend for a coat, nor to give blow for blow, nor to use resistance when compelled to go where they would not. Self naturally argues, but the Word of God teaches that "the servant of Christ must not strive." (II Tim. 2: 24.) Self is often a great economist, and has an eye to the future. Jesus says, "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth." (Matt. 6: 19.) Self loves to be noticed and praised. Jesus says, "Woe unto you when all men shall speak well of you." (Luke 6: 26.) Self is a great grumbler, the Word of God teaches us "in everything" to "give thanks" (1 Thes. 5: 18), and to give "thanks always for all things" (Eph. 5: 20), because "all things work together for good to them that love God." (Rom. 8: 28.) Self likes good society. Jesus teaches, "When thou makest a dinner or a supper, call not thy friends, nor thy brethren, neither thy kinsmen, nor thy rich neighbors (the poor may be invited) lest they also bid thee again, and a recompense be made thee. But when thou makest a feast, call the poor, the maimed, the lame, the blind, and thou shalt be blessed; for they cannot recompense thee; for thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just." Self loves a handsome equipage or a first-class railway carriage. Jesus, when illustrating the command, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself," shows us a rich man getting off his ass, and putting the poor man to ride in his place, and says, "Go and do thou likewise." But if

Self is our very Nature, our very personality, how are we to do violence to that which is our very being? Paul answers the question, "I am crucified with Christ; nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me, and the life which I now live in the flesh, I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me and gave Himself for me." When Paul was converted he gave himself up to Jesus, not to keep himself in his own hands, and give from time to time so much service, so much love, so much time, etc. He gave himself, out of his own hands, as much as though he had died on the Cross of Jesus, and he counted Jesus as his new self, "Not I, but Christ." The Holy Spirit made Jesus real to him, and thus if anyone hurt him, he did not pity himself, but turned it over to Jesus, so that in the Philippian prison he could sing praises when he was persecuted. When, at Lystra, the people would have worshipped him as a god, Paul ran in among them, and far from being flattered, he cried out, "Sirs, why do ye these things? We also are men, of like passions with you, and preach unto you that ye should turn from these vanities unto the living God." The Holy Spirit which possessed Paul, showed him everything in the light of God. It ceased to be with Paul a question of how things touched him, pained him, inconvenienced him, honored or dishonored him. The question was, How did they touch Jesus? And this was no life of intense tension, or of unnatural strain; he let the Holy Ghost have him fully, and thus the blessed Spirit would Glorify Jesus in Him.

Whenever a man is full of the Holy Ghost, the same fruits must follow. He has all the management, and He brings out the life and spirit of Christ. Where there is a constant contention within, as to how far to consider self, there the Holy Ghost is not allowed to have full sway, and self is disputing His rule. The Holy Ghost recognizes Jesus, but He does not recognize self. He teaches us how much more blessed is Christ's compassion than self-pity, God's Fatherly care than self-care, God's defence than self-defence, God's righteousness than self-righteousness, to please God than to be self-satisfied. O God, turn Thy hand upon us, and purge the leaven of self from us by the incoming and rule of Jesus Christ *Him*self.

Volume X. of the Christian Herald, Containing the numbers for 1887, with complete index, bound in cloth, may be had from this office; price, $2 50, including postage. A few volumes, of 1883, 1884, and 1885 are also for sale. We have none prior to 1883.

Rev. G. H. Pember's New Prophetic Work, entitled "Earth's Earliest Ages and Their Connection With Modern Spiritualism and Theosophy" is for sale at THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Office. Price $1.50 This volume of 500 pages draws a parallel between our time and the age before the Deluge, showing how closely in spirit and moral tone they resemble each other, and how many of the distinguishing features of the earlier age have reappeared among us in modern dress. Thus proving that it fulfils the conditions which were to indicate the time of Christ's Secood Advent (Matt. 24: 37-39).

"HE KNOWETH ALL."

The twilight falls, the night is near
I fold my work away,
And kneel to One who bends to hear
The story of the day.

The old, old story; yet I kneel
To tell it at Thy call;
And cares grow lighter as I feel
That Jesus knows them all.

Yes all! the morning and the night,
The joy, the grief, the loss,
The roughened path, the sunbeam bright,
The hourly thorn and cross.

Thou knowest all—I lean my head,
My weary eyelids close,
Content and glad awhile to tread
This path, since Jesus knows.

And He has loved me! all my heart
With answering love is stirred,
And every anguished pain and smart
Finds healing in the Word.

So here I lay me down to rest,
As mighty shadows fall,
And lean confiding on His breast
Who knows and pities all. Selected.

Mrs. Burnett's New Story.

"Since the magic pen dropped from the tired hand of Juliana Ewing, no more sweet and winning figure has stepped into the literature of childhood than is 'Sara Crewe.' Mrs. Burnett has, in this story, done work of a sweetness, truth, and delicacy almost beyond parallel, and quite beyond praise. 'Sara Crewe' will instantly find that warm corner of the popular heart which permanently shelters her noble little predecessor, 'Little Lord Fauntleroy.'"—Boston Advertiser.

SARA CREWE

"It is a story to linger over in the reading, it is so brightly, frankly, sweetly, and tenderly written, and to remember and return to. In creating her little gentlewoman 'Sara Crewe' so fresh, so simple, so natural, so genuine, and so indomitable, Mrs. Burnett has added another Child to English fiction. No one who reads this story can read it without feeling, or can doubt the loving genius of Mrs. Burnett."—R. H. STODDARD in N. Y. Mail & Express.

SARA CREWE

"Nothing better has ever been produced by Mrs. Burnett's pen."—Phila. Inquirer

"Everybody was in love with 'Little Lord Fauntleroy,' and I think all the world and the rest of mankind will be in love with 'Sara Crewe.' The tale is so tender, so wise, so human, that I wish every girl in America could read it."—LOUISE CHANDLER MOULTON in Boston Herald.

THE LATE REV. WARRAND CARLILE, Thirty-eight Years Missionary in Jamaica—Scenes in His Life.

THE REV. WARRAND CARLILE,

Thirty-eight Years a Missionary in Jamaica.

A Remarkable Life—His Pious Home—School and University Life—Enters Business—Christian Activity—Marriage—Ride with Carlyle and Irving—Studies for the Ministry—Life in Ireland—A Momentous Dream—Sets Sail for Jamaica—Work and Blessing—Among the Negroes—A Fire—Building a Church—Dangerous Riding—Failing Health and Death.

A TRULY remarkable life was that of the veteran missionary whose portrait appears on the preceding page. It was remarkable in its length, for he was nearly eighty-five years old when he died, but still more remarkable for the variety and extent of Christian labors which it comprised. It began in a Scottish manufacturing town in 1796, and closed in 1881 among the colored population of Jamaica, W. I., to whose welfare he had consecrated nearly forty of his years. It was Mr. Carlile's privilege to give nearly all his life to Christ's service. It too often happens that the Christian, at the end of his course, looking back over his life, has reason to lament that his early years were given up to sin and pleasure; but Mr. Carlile was saved from that loss by the blessing of God on his Christian Parentage.

He was the son of James Carlile, who, with his brother William, carried on the manufacture of sewing thread at Paisley, in Scotland, both men being noted for their eminent piety and large gifts to Bible and missionary societies. James Carlile, the father of Warrand, devoted a considerable portion of every day to the study of the Word of God, while engaged in the absorbing and prosperous business of the firm. For many years he met with the younger members of his family every Saturday morning, to read and explain a part of the Scripture, which he made as attractive to them as he could; and these weekly talks were a source of profit to both father and children (See Illustration No. 1). To Warrand especially they were blessed, for he was led, almost insensibly, in his tenderest years, to give himself to the Saviour; he himself could scarcely tell the time when he was not devoted to God. After completing the usual school education, he attended the Glasgow University for two years, and then became engaged in his father's business. He began to be an active Christian worker when hardly beyond the years of boyhood. He found scope for his activity in Sunday-school work at first, but when he became a man and was associated as a partner with his father, he turned his special attention to the workers employed in the factory. He had classes for them, and prayer-meetings with them, both in the mill and in his own house.

But the welfare of his own people did not engross the whole of Mr. Carlile's attention, or exhaust his Christian energy. He was a member of the Town Council, and the treasurer of the town for a time. This gave him which he regularly visited between the morning and afternoon services on Sundays, and frequently in the week when there were cases of special interest. He was a means of blessing to many of the prisoners, including two who were executed for stealing a horse. They were the last two to suffer the extreme penalty of the law in Scotland for any crime short of murder. He was thus engaged in a variety of Christian work for at least twenty years in his native town, and his name became famous there as a consecrated servant of Christ.

In the year 1820 he married Agnes Irving, daughter of Gavin Irving, of Annan, and youngest sister of the afterwards celebrated Edward Irving, who was at that time assistant to Dr. Chalmers, in Glasgow. The marriage was one of much happiness. Mrs. Carlile was in features like her brother, and her appearance attracted attention wherever she went. Her health, however, was not very good, even from her girlhood, and during her married life she was never strong. The winter before her death she was very ill, and was scarcely expected to recover. She became, during that illness, so enraptured with the study of the Prophets, especially of Isaiah and Revelation, that she felt it almost painful to return from her bright visions, to the commonplaces of life around her. Her return, however, was not for long, and after a married life of nine bright years, she passed into the deathless land.

To what extent Mr. Carlile came in contact with his famous brother-in-law we are not told in his biography, but an incidental reference in the reminiscences of Thomas Carlyle, "The Sage of Chelsea," shows that they were, at least on one occasion in familiar intercourse. Carlyle says that having, to go by Muirkirk in Ayrshire he and Irving, who was going back to Glasgow, set out together, Warrand Carlile going with them "with his fine riding-horse," which was of great service on the journey.

Warrand Carlile felt after his wife's death that life was quite changed for him. He consequently determined to relinquish his share in what had grown into a most prosperous business, and to Study for the Ministry.

He had been at college in his youth for two years. He now returned to complete two years more of the literary course, and then four years of theology. He took a great interest in his studies, especially mathematics and Hebrew. Subsequently he was licensed as a preacher by the Presbytery of Paisley, and at once went over to Ireland on a visit to his brother, the Rev. James Carlile, hoping that he would find a sphere of missionary work in that country. He was invited to take charge of a Presbyterian congregation at Carlow, fifty miles south of Dublin, in the midst of a Roman Catholic population. He went there and remained six years, laboring among a people attached to him, though few in number. The poverty of the peasantry, although not so extreme as in the west of Ireland, was often very great. Mr. Carlile was untiringly and impartially active in relieving distress in times of scarcity. During a summer of he took all the chief arrangements into his hands at the request of the local committee, got the supplies of food from Liverpool at a cheap rate, put up the boilers for preparing it, arranged the food that was to be cooked, had passages made for the orderly ingress and egress of the people, and presided in turn, with the priests and others, at the distribution. (See Illustration No. 3.) Thousands were relieved, and many of them ate eagerly, out of their tins, the food supplied them, before they left the building. He was thus a chief agent in saving the lives of many.

Mr. Carlile very soon felt that his work in Carlow was not to be his life work, and prayed earnestly to God for guidance. The Irish Presbyterian Church, with which he was connected, was then beginning its mission in India, and he was one of those suggested for this service. He was desirous to go. It was considered wiser, however, to send younger men. At length his prayer was answered, and light came in a very remarkable manner. One night he had a dream, in which he thought he saw the Lord Himself pointing him to the island of Jamaica as his place of service. This dream made so deep an impression on a mind predisposed for foreign service and only awaiting direction to a field, that it decided him, and he immediately sought a way of reaching it. He remembered that the Scottish Missionary Society, in which he had in Paisley taken a deep interest, had missions there. He waited not a single day, but wrote off in the forenoon to the Directors, offering himself at once for mission service in Jamaica. They wrote in a few days and accepted his offer, and he prepared speedily for his journey. His was begun at the age of forty-six, an age when many missionaries are retiring, and it continued in activity for thirty-eight years, till his death at the age of nearly eighty-five. Mr. and Mrs. Carlile (for the missionary had married again) and their family sailed from Greenock in the ship Isabella. After a moderately fine passage of fifty days, the vessel arrived in the harbor of Montego Bay, one of the most beautiful harbors in the island, on January 2, 1843. (See Illustration No. 5.)

His first sphere of service in the island was Hampden, where he was at once brought face to face with some of the most revolting of the old African superstitions. Thence he went to Mount Zion, where he was gladdened in seeing many trophies of the saving power of God among the negroes. It was then decided that his particular charge should be Brownsville, a town named from the Rev. Dr. William Brown, son of Dr. John Brown, of Haddington, for many years Secretary of the Scottish Missionary Society. It is in the heart of a mountainous district, full of deep gullies and steep hillsides, down which flow the mountain streams, sometimes in raging torrents, while all around, imparting a quaint picturesqueness to the landscape, are dotted the cottages of the negroes. When Mr. Carlile

Settled at Brownsville,

the people had been emancipated only a few years. Few of the grown-up people could read well, though many could read imperfectly. All but the children had been slaves; and the old slave-overseers were still there, some of them being elders of the Church. A marvellous social as well as religious change had taken place in the few previous years, for whereas marriage had scarcely been known among the slaves, nearly all were now married, though there lingered many remnants of old sins and abuses. Among this simple people Mr. Carlile settled down to begin his second life-work, little expecting that he would spend so many years in Jamaica. His life henceforward was one of devotion to the cause he had espoused, and his efforts to lead the newly emancipated men and women into the true liberty of Christ were unremitting while life lasted. It was a life of quiet, steady usefulness, attended with much discouragement, but also with much success. Some stirring incidents of his life and work are worth recording. Among others, Mr. Carlile describes which took place, by which the cottage he was living in was endangered. The alacrity with which the people came to his aid much affected him. He says: "We were constrained to take possession of our present residence sooner than we intended, and, indeed, before it was prepared for our reception, by an accident which might have proved very serious. I was sitting writing in this house, which I had converted into my study, when a sudden clamor arose among the workmen around me, and on running to the window I perceived that the kitchen connected with the cottage was on fire. We all ran at our utmost speed to assist in extinguishing the flames, or in saving the cottage. Fortunately we had a little water in the house, in which I instantly steeped one or two blankets. A ladder was procured, and in the course of five minutes I was on the top of the roof. (See Illustration No. 6). While I was sitting on the top of the house shouting out for water at the top of my voice, I perceived that the thatch of the cottage had caught fire, and now I never doubted but that all was over, and that in five minutes more our frail tenement would be reduced to embers. I was preparing to descend and endeavor to save some of the furniture, when two men, wiser than myself, brought the ladder to the place where the fire had begun. I then threw to them the moist blankets, and by immediately applying these the fire was extinguished and the house preserved. Every one who saw the perilous condition of the house was amazed that it was saved.

"While I was busy on the top of the house, some of the people, who were rapidly collecting to our assistance, emptied the house of every article of furniture. Open drawers and boxes were lying about in all directions, and everything we had was exposed to the people.

While thus tossed about without any one to look after them, I do not think that even the most trifling article was abstracted."

The Building of a Church was undertaken by Mr. Carlile to accommodate the increased congregations which had been gathered. The day at length came for raising the spire. The missionary relates: "When I told the carpenters that I intended rearing it without scaffolding, they shook their heads and declared it to be impossible. On the Monday morning after our Sacrament we assembled for worship, and having implored the Divine blessing, we proceeded to our work. The day was at first most unfavorable, as it blew strongly; but as I had already borrowed ropes from the neighboring estates, which could only be kept for a day, this being their busiest season, I resolved to proceed with the work. A goodly number of men were present to assist, to whom I was obliged to give the word of command like a sea-captain during a gale of wind. Just as I was proceeding to get the ropes fastened and the tackling prepared, I found, to my dismay, that the rope was too short for our purpose. I discovered that by placing the men who held the ropes on the top of the house, I could accomplish my purpose. One part of the spire we converted into a pole, by which we were enabled to raise up another. After a short time our anxieties were all at an end, and with a grateful heart we soon saw the building complete without injury or accident. The spire is octagonal, about sixty feet high, and constructed of the best and strongest Jamaica wood. (See Illustration No. 7.)

In 1863 Mr. Carlile visited his native country. He was full of vigor, and delivered many addresses on missionary work and triumphs, though at that time sixty-seven years of age. At the close of the year he returned to Jamaica, and continued to live there without any intermission until his death. Even in his indeed, "up to the last," says his son, "he continued full of activity." After his eightieth year he was accustomed to take long rides, and diligently to visit the sick. The roads were often difficult, and even dangerous, but he was not to be daunted. Sometimes along a narrow path on a mountain side (See Illustration, No. 8), the horse or mule had to cautiously pick its steps, while steep, almost precipitous, slopes on the one side extended far down into the dark gullies. He used often to hold meetings in those scattered districts, accessible only by the mountain paths. A year or two before his death he had rather a severe fall from his horse, which caused him suffering for a time, but generally he appears to have met with scarcely any accidents, being upheld by the unfailing Hand.

His Health Began to Fail

somewhat rapidly in April, 1881. Though still physically active, he became bewildered, imagining himself back in the scenes of the past, in his old home in Paisley, surrounded by those who had long since departed. At length, in August, he was seized with a fever, and after a few days he "fell asleep in Jesus" at the age of eighty-four years and nine months. His wife, who had been his companion and stay during all these years, watched over him tenderly to the last. During the illness the negroes surrounded the cottage, full of anxiety, as of children for a loving father. (See Illustration No. 9.) His last conscious words, spoken in a solemn tone, and with clasped hands, were, "Blessed be God, blessed be God, for that peace which the world cannot take away." His countenance after death was peaceful and seraphic, and multitudes of the people all around came, with tears in their eyes, to have a last look at their dear pastor, who had watched over many of them from childhood upwards, and over all of them for more than a generation. He was laid to rest close to the manse where he spent so many years. Here, on the hillside, under the deep shadow of a mango-tree, a stone marks his last resting-place until the coming of the Lord.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

A Hard Question Answered.—An Evangelist observes: "It is now six years since I came to Christ. I was asked by a friend to accompany him to a temperance meeting. I went, and there I was asked to take the pledge, and, to please my friend, I did so. I thought I was done with his importunities, but he would not let me be at peace. 'Would I come to a prayer-meeting?' he asked. Reluctantly I went, heedless, regardless of God. I entered the meeting without a thought of salvation, but ere I came out of it, it had pleased God by the Holy Spirit to bring me to Christ, The words of the apostle, 'How shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation?' filled me with alarm. I felt I was a poor, lost sinner. But God enabled me to answer the question. Seeing I could not escape, I fled for refuge to Christ, and found it in Him. I have now a joy which is unspeakable."

Curing the Missionaries' Languor.—Mr. Ludwig, of the U. P. Mission at Old Calabar, West Africa, relates: "In Africa we were often very much afflicted by a languor which is very difficult to bear, and for the time being renders one very useless. But we found that every Thursday and Sunday we were more cheerful, and had within us a joy for which we could in no way account. On these days we would say to each other, 'Surely there is someone at home praying for us.' And when we got home we found that it was on these very days that our friends had met especially to pray for us. This shows how every Christian can effectually help the foreign mission. Though all cannot go to preach to the heathen, yet all can pray for those who do go; and we read that 'The effectual, fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much.'"

A Spree Prevented by Death.—A Fine, Well-built, intelligent youth, seventeen years of age, had been sitting listening to the gospel, and remained to the prayer-meeting. The preacher pleaded hard that he would that night accept the salvation offered him by our Lord. He was deeply impressed, but would not yield. He said, "It only wants a few weeks to Christmas. I have saved up thirty shillings in the bank, and I intend to have a spree with it; but I'll start the New Year a Christian." He was reminded, "Now is the accepted time," but it was no use; hardening his heart, he went his way. Two days after he was seized with a violent cold; he went out with some companions was caught in a heavy storm, and came home drenched with rain. Next day, he was unable to leave his bed, and on the day following he died—it is to be feared totally unprepared. Under his pillow was found his bank-book; and the very money that had caused him to reject Christ, and with which he intended to have a spree, bought him a shroud, and helped to pay the expenses of laying him in a Christless grave.

True to His Colors.—Mr. M'Gregor, Late an officer in the army, says: "When I joined the army my regiment was quartered at Gibraltar. I went out there determined to witness for Christ. I felt weak and somewhat timorous, and did not know how I should get on. My father sent me a religious paper, which arrived before I did, and was put into the letter-rack along with the other officers' papers. As I was standing near, one of the officers took it up, and, looking at it, said, 'Hillo, M'Gregor, are you a Christian?' 'I am,' I replied. 'And you take in this paper?' 'I do; and if you wish to read it you are welcome to it.' I had not been long in the army when the Lord, through two missionaries who visited Gibraltar, appeared to call me to follow Him more fully. I seemed to constantly hear the words: 'All that thou commandest we shall do, and wherever Thou sendest us we will go.' I prayed God to take me, young and inexperienced as I was, from the evil which surrounded me. But by-and-by I did not seem to care for the world, and in the army they were always against me; but soon they began to see that I did not care for derision and opposition—I even esteemed it an honor to be permitted to suffer for the sake of the Gospel. But I thank God that soon He made the way plain for me to resign my commission and go to China to serve Him there."

A Day and a Night in a Cave.—"Three months ago, in Lewis, at a communion season, a young Christian man and his friend were walking home together from one of the services. At parting, the Christian said to the other, 'I am grieved to think how little I have got after having the Gospel so fairly and fully preached to me for four or five days. What have I got to satisfy my hungry soul?' The other, who made no profession of religion, made no reply, but went home full of what his friend had said; and the thought of his own salvation so pressed upan his mind, that he was constrained to lift his Bible, and turn his way to one of a number of small caves on the rocks by the seashore, and there, alone with his Bible and his God, he spent all that day and all that night searching for something on which his soul could rest, but found nothing until in the morning, there in that lonely cave among the rocks, his eyes fell on the words, 'For God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should have everlasting life.' He sprang to his feet with a shout of joy, and there on that verse he rested his weary soul."

A Great Secret Discovered.—Mr. Osborne remarked: "Six years ago I was summoned to the death-bed of my father. When I arrived I found he had been asking for me, and awaited me impatiently. I entered the sick-room, and had spoken to him for a while, when he asked to be lifted from his bed to the floor, and there, standing with one hand resting on my shoulder, and one on that of my mother, he solemnly said, 'Let us pray. It is probably the last time that we shall together send up our petitions to God.' I remember well how he used these words, 'Whom have I in heaven but Thee, and there is none on earth that I desire beside Thee, and goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life, and I will dwell in the house of the Lord for ever.' All that night these words kept ringing in my mind. I asked myself, What is it my father has that I have not? Next morning, as I was going away, my father asked me if I were a total abstainer. I was not, but promised to become one as soon as I got home. But although I did so, that gave me no rest; for weeks I was miserable, but one night in a Gospel meeting I heard the hymn, 'There is a fountain filled with blood,' etc. Then I saw what it was I wanted; and there and then I closed with Christ, was saved by His grace, and am now happy in Him."

Choked While Intoxicated.—Mr. Mitchell Re-lated: "I knew a woman who often came to our open-air meetings, and who was repeatedly spoken to about her soul by the workers. A short time ago she went to see some of her friends, In making merry they partook too freely of whisky, and, before she started for her home, she was helplessly intoxicated. When crossing the river in a ferryboat, her foot slipped and she fell into the water, from which she was rescued by the ferryman, but only just in time to save her life. Two policemen took her home, where, being completely sobered, she was asked by a Christian man who heard of the accident, 'If God had called you, where would your soul have gone?' Her answer was, 'God would not call me away in such a manner when He knew I was unprepared.' Next morning she went to procure more whisky, not touched in the least by her merciful escape from a watery grave, and soon she was as intoxicated as she had been on the previous night. But she had tasted no food, and was hungry; she set about preparing something, eating the while, As she was doing so, a piece stuck in her throat, and she died before help could come. Died under the influence of drink; died unprepared, after the fearful lesson of the previous day. 'He that being often reproved, hardeneth his neck, shall suddenly be destroyed, and that without remedy.'"

THE DECORATION OF THE SOUL.

Dr. Talmage's Sermon Preached last Sunday, March 18, 1888, at Fort Scott, Kansas.

"Put a ring on his hand." Luke 15 : 22.

A Ring for a Tramp—The Father's Recognition—God's Gift to the Forgiven Soul—I. The Ring of Adoption—A New York Waif in Philadelphia—Her Transformation—The Wardrobe of Heaven—Royal Privileges—II. A Marriage Ring—A Sacred Symbol—A Circle of Precious Memories—Christ the Husband of the Soul—No Divorce Possible—The Martyrdom of Margaret the Scotch Girl—III. I WILL not rehearse the familar story of the fast young man of the parable. You know what a splendid home he left. You know what a hard time he had. And you remember how, after that season of vagabondage and prodigality he resolved to go and weep out his sorrows on the bosom of parental forgiveness. Well, there is great excitement one day in front of the door of the old farm-house. The servants come rushing up and say: "What's the matter? What is the matter?" But before they quite arrive, the old man cries out: "Put

A Ring on his Hand."

What a seeming absurdity! What can such a wretched mendicant as this fellow that is tramping on toward the house want with a ring? Oh, he is the prodigal son. No more tending of the swine-trough. No more longing for the pods of the carob-tree. No more blistered feet. Off with the rags! On with the robe! Out with the ring! Even so does God receive every one of us when we come back. There are gold rings, and pearl rings, and carnelian rings, and diamond rings; but the richest ring that ever flashed on the vision is that which our Father puts upon a forgiven soul.

I know that the impression is abroad among some people, that religion bemeans and belittles a man; that it takes all the sparkle out of his soul; that he has to exchange a roystering independence for an ecclesiastical strait-jacket. Not so. When a man becomes a Christian, he does not go down, he starts upward. Religion multiplies one by ten thousand. Nay, the multiplier is an infinity. It is not a blotting out—it is a polishing, it is an arborescence, it is an efflorescence, it is an irradiation. When a man comes into the kingdom of God he is not sent into a menial service, but the Lord God Almighty from the palaces of heaven calls upon the messenger angels that wait upon the throne to fly and "put a ring on his hand." In Christ are the largest liberty, and brightest joy, and highest honor, and richest adornment. "Put a ring on his hand."

I remark, in the first place, that when Christ receives a soul into His love, He puts upon him

The Ring of Adoption.

In my church in Philadelphia, there came the representative of a benevolent society in New York. He brought with him eight or ten children of the street, that he had picked up, and he was trying to find for them Christian homes: and, as the little ones stood on the pulpit and sang, our hearts melted within us. At the close of the services a great-hearted, wealthy man came up and said: "I'll take this little bright-eyed girl, and I'll adopt her as one of my own children; and he took her by the hand, lifted her into his carriage, and went away.

The next day, while we were in the church, gathering up garments for the poor of New York, this little child came back with a bundle uuder her arm, and she said: "There's my old dress; perhaps some of the poor children would like to have it," while she herself was in bright and beautiful array, and those who more immediately examined her. said that she had a ring on her hand. It was a ring of adoption.

There are a great many persons who pride themselves on their ancestry, and they glory over the royal blood that pours through their arteries. In their line there was a lord, or a duke, or a prime minister, or a king. But when the Lord, our Father, puts upon us the ring of His adoption, we become the children of the Ruler of all nations. "Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God." It matters not how poor our garments may be in this world, or how scant our bread, or how mean the hut we live in; if we have that ring of Christ's adoption upon our hand, we are assured of eternal defences.

Adopted! Why, then, we are brothers and sisters to all the good of earth and heaven. We have the family name, the family dress, the family keys,

The Family Wardrobe.

The Father looks after us, robes us, defends us, blesses us. We have royal blood in our veins, and there are crowns in our line. If we are His children, then princes and princesses. It is only a question of time when we get our coronet. Adopted! Then we have the family secrets. "The secret of the Lord is with them that fear Him." Adopted! Then we have the family inheritance; in the day when our Father shall divide the riches of heaven, we shall take our share of the mansions and palaces and temples. Henceforth let us boast no more of an earthly ancestry. The insignia of eternal glory is our coat of arms. This ring of adoption puts upon us all honor and all privilege. Now we can take the words of Charles Wesley, that prince of hymn-makers, and sing:

"Come, let us join our friends above,
Who have obtained the prize,
And on the eagle wings of love
To joy celestial rise.

"Let all the saints terrestrial sing
With those to glory gone;
For all the servants of our King,
In heaven and earth are one."

I have been told that when any of the members of any of the great secret societies of this country are in a distant city, and are in any kind of trouble, and are set upon by enemies, they have only to give a certain signal, and the members of that organization will flock around for defence. And when any man belongs to this great Christian brotherhood, if he gets in trouble, in trial, in persecution, in temptation, he has only to show this ring of Christ's adoption, and all the armed cohorts of heaven will come to his rescue.

Still further, when Christ takes a soul into His love He puts upon it

A Marriage-ring.

Now, that is not a whim of mine: "And I will betroth thee unto Me forever; yea, I will betroth thee unto Me in righteousness, and in judgment, and in loving-kindness, and in mercies." (Hosea 2 : 19.) At the wedding altar the bridegroom puts a ring upon the hand of the bride, signifying love and faithfulness. Trouble may come upon the household, and the carpets may go, the pictures may go, the piano may go, everything else may go—the last that goes is that marriage-ring, for it is considered sacred. In the burial hour it is withdrawn from the hand and kept in a casket, and sometimes the box is opened on an anniversary day, and as you look at that ring you see under its arch a long procession of precious memories.

Within the Golden Circle of that ring there is room for a thousand sweet recollections to revolve, and you think of the great contrast between the hour when, at the close of the "Wedding March," under the flashing lights and amid the aroma of orange-blossoms, you set that ring on the round finger of the plump hand, and that other hour when, at the close of the exhaustive watching, when you knew that the soul had fled, you took from the hand, which gave back no responsive clasp, from that emaciated finger, the ring that she had worn so long and worn so well. On some anniversary day you take up that ring, and you repolish it until all the old lustre comes back, and you can see in it the flash of eyes that long ago ceased to weep. Oh, it is not an unmeaning thing when I tell you that when Christ receives a soul into His keeping He puts on it a marriage-ring. He endows you from that moment with all His wealth. You are one—Christ and the soul—one in sympathy, one in affection, one in hope.

There is no power in earth or hell to effect a divorcement after Christ and the soul are united. Other kings have turned out their companions when they got weary of them, and sent them adrift from the palace gate. Ahasuerus banished Vashti; Napoleon forsook Josephine: but Christ is forever. Having loved you once, he loves you to the end. Did they not try to divorce Margaret, the Scotch girl, from Jesus? They said: "You must give up your religion." She said: "I can't give up my religion." And so they took her down to the beach of the sea, and they drove in a stake at low-water mark, and they fastened her to it, expecting that as the tide came up her faith would fail. The tide began to rise, and came up higher and higher, and to the girdle, and to the lip, and in the last moment, just as the wave was washing her soul into glory, she shouted the praises of Jesus.

Oh, no; you cannot separate a soul from Christ. It is an everlasting marriage. Battle and storm and darkness cannot do it. Is it too much exultation for a man, who is but dust and ashes like myself, to cry out to-day: "I am persuaded that neither height nor depth nor principalities nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor any other creature, shall separate me from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus, my Lord"? Glory be to God that when Christ and the soul are married they are bound by a chain—a golden chain, if I might say so—a chain with one link, and that one link the golden ring of God's everlasting love.

I go a step further, and tell you that when Christ receives a soul He puts on him

The Ring of Festivity

You know that it has been the custom in all ages to bestow rings on very happy occasions. There is nothing more appropriate for a birthday gift than a ring. You delight to bestow such a gift upon your children at such a time. It means joy, hilarity, festivity. Well, when this old man of the text wanted to tell how glad he was that his boy had got back, he expressed it in this way, Actually, before he ordered sandals to be put on his bare feet; before he ordered the fatted calf to be killed to appease the boy's hunger, he commanded: "Put a ring on his hand."

Oh, it is a merry time when Christ and the soul are united! Joy of forgiveness! What a splendid thing it is to feel that all is right between me and God! What a glorious thing it is to have God just take up all the sins of my life and put them in one bundle, and then fling them into the depths of the sea, never to rise again, never to be talked of again! Pollution all gone. Darkness all illumined. God reconciled. The prodigal home! "Put a ring on his hand!"

Every day I find happy Christian people. I find some of them with no second coat, some of them in huts and tenement houses, not one earthly comfort afforded them; and yet they are as happy as happy can be. They sing "Rock of Ages" as no other people in the world sing it. They never wore any jewelry in their life but one gold ring, and that was the ring of God's undying affection. Oh, how happy religion makes us! Did it make you gloomy and sad? Did you go with your head cast down? I do not think you got religion, my brother. That is not the effect of religion. True

Religion is Joy.

"Her ways are ways of pleasantness and all her paths are peace." Why, religion lightens all our burdens. It smooths all our way. It interprets all our sorrows. It changes the jar of earthly discord for the peal of festal bells. In front of the flaming furnace of trial it sets the forge on which sceptres are hammered out. Would you not like to-day to come up from the swine-feeding and try this religion? All the joys of heaven would come out and meet you, and God would cry from the throne: "Put a ring on his hand."

You are not happy. I see it. There is no peace, and sometimes you laugh when you feel a great deal more like crying.

The World is a Cheat.

It first wears you down with its follies, then it kicks you out into darkness. It comes back from the massacre of a million souls to attempt the destruction of your soul to-day. No peace out of God, but here is the fountain that can slake the thirst. Here is the harbor where you can drop safe anchorage.

Would you not like, I ask you—not perfunctorily, but as one brother might talk to another—would you not like to have a pillow of rest to put your head on? And would you not like, when you retire at night, to feel that all is well, whether you wake up to-morrow morning at six o'clock, or sleep the sleep that knows no waking? Would you not like to exchange this awful uncertainty about the future for a glorious assurance of heaven? Accept of the Lord Jesus to-day, and all is well. If on your way home some peril should cross the street and dash your life out, it would not hurt you. You would rise up immediately. You would stand in the celestial streets. You would be amid the great throng that forever worship and are forever happy. If this day some sudden disease should come upon you, it would not frighten you. If you knew you were going, you could give a calm farewell to your beautiful home on earth, and know that you are going right into the companionship of those who have already got beyond the toiling and the weeping.

Life's Saturday Night.

You feel on Saturday night different from the way you feel any other night of the week. You come home from the bank, or the store, or the shop, and you say: "Well, now my week's work is done, and to-morrow is Sunday." It is a pleasant thought. There is refreshment and reconstruction in the very idea. Oh, how pleasant it will be, if, when we get through the day of our life, and we go and lie down in our bed of dust, we can realize: "Well, now the work is all done, and to-morrow is Sunday—an everlasting Sunday."

"Oh, when, thou city of my God,
Shall I thy courts ascend?
Where congregations ne'er break up,
And Sabbaths have no end?"

There are people in this house to-day who are very near the eternal world. If you are Christians, I bid you be of good cheer. Bear with you our congratulations to the bright city. Aged men, who will soon be gone, take with you our love for our kindred in the better land; and when you see them, tell them that we are soon coming. Only a few more sermons to preach and hear. Only a few more heartaches. Only a few more toils. Only a few more tears. And then, what an entrancing spectacle will open before us!

"Beautiful heaven, where all is light,
Beautiful angels clothed in white,
Beautiful strains that never tire,
Beautiful harps through all the choir;
There shall I join the chorus sweet,
Worshipping at the Saviour's feet."

I approach you now with a general invitation, not picking out here and there a man, or here and there a woman, or here and there a child; but giving you saying: "Come, for all things are now ready." We invite you to the warm heart of Christ, and the inclosure of the Christian Church. I know a great many think that the Church does not amount to much, that it is obsolete; that it did its work and is gone now, so far as all usefulness is concerned. It is the happiest place I have ever been in, except my own home.

An Unlimited Invitation,

I know there are some people who say they are Christians, who seem to get along without any help from others, and who culture solitary piety. They do not want any ordinances. I do not belong to that class. I cannot get along without them. There are so many things in this world that take my attention from God and Christ and heaven, that I want all the helps of all the symbols and of all the Christian associations; and I want around about me a solid phalanx of men who love God and keep His commandments. Are there any here who would like to enter into that association? Then by a simple, child-like faith, apply for admission into the visible Church, and you will be received. No questions asked about your past history or present surroundings.

Only One Test

—do you love Jesus? Baptism does not amount to anything, say a great many people, but the Lord Jesus declared: "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved," putting baptism and faith side by side. And an apostle declares: "Repent and be baptized, every one of you." I do not stickle for any particular mode of baptism, but I put great emphasis on the fact that you ought to be baptized. Yet no more emphasis than the Lord Jesus Christ, the Great Head of the Church, puts upon it.

The world is going to, after a while, lose a great many of its votaries. There are to be revivals of religion that will shake the earth. We give you warning. There is a great host coming in to stand under the banner of the Lord Jesus Christ. Will you be among them? Will you be among the gathered sheaves? Some of you have been thinking on this subject year after year. You have found out that this world is a poor portion. You want to be Christians. You have come of God; but there you stop, forgetful of the fact that to be almost saved is not to be saved at all. Oh, my brother, after having come so near to the door of mercy, if you turn back, you will never come at all. After you have heard of the goodness of God, if you turn away and die, it will not be because you did not have a good offer.

"God's spirit will not always strive
With hardened, self-destroying man;
Ye who persist His love to grieve
May never hear His voice again."

May God Almighty this hour move upon your soul and bring you back from the husks of the wilderness to the Father's house, and set you at the banquet, and "put a ring on your hand."

THE LATE HENRY BERGH.

THE tender-hearted, earnest man to whom the brute creation of New York owes an incalculable debt of gratitude, was removed from the scene of his disinterested labors, on March 12. Henry Bergh was the champion of the distressed, ill-treated animals of all kinds. No lawyer ever espoused the cause of a wealthy client with more ardor than Mr. Bergh fought the case of a tortured dog or a cruelly-treated horse. He looked for no recompense, accepted no salary, but he labored with a vigor and an enthusiasm unexcelled by well-salaried officials. His very name was a terror to a cruel driver, or an inconsiderate owner of horses. Even the animals to be slaughtered for food were not beyond Mr. Bergh's thoughtful sympathy. He introduced more merciful methods at the city abattoirs, and secured legislation compelling their adoption. Dog-fighting, cock-fighting, rat-baiting, which were all common, when he began his labors, have now practically ceased, their patrons being forced by his efforts to hold their exhibitions in secrecy, under the ban of the law. A life full of self-denying, arduous and successful toil, on which he must have looked back with satisfaction, has come to its close, and the untiring worker rests from his labors.

Henry Bergh was born in 1823, in the city of New York; he was therefore in his sixty-fifth year when he died. His father was a ship-builder, and Henry with his brother Edward were in partnership with him and carried on the business after their father's death. They were of German descent, their grandfather having been a ship carpenter on the banks of the Rhine, who emigrated to this country in his youth. In 1842 Henry Berg sold out his share of the ship-building business, and entered himself a law student at Columbia College. Before the time for his graduation came he quitted college, married, and set out on a foreign tour. Eventually he and his bride settled down in Germany near the ancient home of the Bergh family. They remained in Europe for several years travelling extensively among its interesting historic localities. At length they returned to America, and then, in 1862, Henry Bergh received from President Lincoln the appointment of Secretary of Legation at St. Petersburg. Subsequently he was made American Consul in the same city, and was able to render efficient service in that office. Ill health, however, compelled his retirement in 1864, and he leisurely returned home. He remained a few weeks in England, where he made the acquaintance of the Earl of Harrowby, the President of the Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. The facts he learned as to the society's work and the reforms it had effected, deeply impressed Mr. Bergh, and by the time the vessel on which he sailed reached Sandy Hook, he had resolved to make a similar society, in New York his life work.

The moral courage required for the undertaking was of the highest type. The sequel showed that Mr. Bergh possessed it to a degree hitherto unsuspected. He began his labor by seeking to arouse public opinion. He collected statistics with enormous difficulty, and then began lecturing and holding public meetings. He was ridiculed, called a fanatic and a visionary, but he was not discouraged. He succeeded in interesting a few men and women in his work, and at length, in 1866, after weeks of persistent lobbying as shrewd and crafty as if he were engineering a scheme to make himself a millionaire, he induced the Legislature at Albany to confide to an incorporated Society the powers of arrest and prosecution. Mr. Bergh was made President of the Society, and endowed it with a large share of his personal property. Shortly afterward Louis Bonard an eccentric Frenchman living in New York, bequeathed to the Society $150,000, and thus armed with ample funds Mr. Bergh went to work. At one time he directed his attacks to brutal dog-fighters, at another the hog slaughterers came under the ban of his displeasure. It made no difference in what station of life he found the offender. As soon as he had ascertained who was to blame he set in motion the machinery of his office and society. Assistant District-Attorney for life, and assistant to the Attorney-General, he was enabled to wield tremendous powers, and he never hesitated to make use of the opportunities thus afforded. He has more than once caused the suspension of the traffic on an important avenue, by removing horses from the street-cars when they were unfit for work, and arresting the drivers.

As a result of Mr. Bergh's labors, his Society has now four hundred officers at work in the State and its influence has spread throughout the country. Before he commenced his work there was not a State nor a Territory in the Union which had any law relating to the protection of animals from cruelty. Now thirty-four States have passed statutes bearing upon the subject. This excellent result was mainly due to a lecturing tour which Mr. Bergh undertook in 1873. During that tour he also availed himself of the opportunity of speaking before the Evangelical Alliance and the Episcopal Convention in furtherance of his pet projects. He was actually the means of having a new rule adopted by the Episcopal Convention, suggesting that Protestant Episcopal clergyman at least once a year preach a sermon on mercy to animals.

THE FATAL BLIZZARD IN NEW YORK.

A Day and a Night of Devastation—Wanderers in Snow and Darkness—Men Frozen Dead in the Streets — Traffic Suspended — Telegraphic Communication Cut Off—Telegraphing to Boston by Way of England—The Mercury Below Zero—Fifty Dollars for a Cab-Ride—Seventy-five Trains Snow-Bound.

THE storm which swept down upon New York City on the morning of March 12, will never be forgotten by any person who was in the city. The New York Herald, which pays special attention to all meteorological phenomena, states that it was the severest storm within the memory of living men, and that there is no record of any convulsion of nature bursting, as this did, upon New York, with a fury which arrested the resources of industry and civilization, paralyzed business, closed houses of amusement, interrupted traffic by steam or local transit, prevented telegraphic communication, and took over the great metropolis to its fierce, wanton will. The same journal goes on to say: "The day was one of suffering for many, business anxieties, embarrassments for some; fatal accidents, discomfort and interruption to all. There was a fierce, wild beauty in lower New York, its busy Broadway and that never ending roar, as silent and dead, but for the whirling gusts of banked and blinding snow, as An Avenue in Buried Pompeii.

St. Paul's, with its memories of colonial days, wore a beauty of its own in the snows, while the sombre Astor, with the many-columned Post Office, might have been creations of the fancy, so strange were the freaks of the storm. But for every purpose, except to listen and wait, New York was virtually a dead city, business as completely dead as though it were under the guns of an invading army. It was a city in chaos, bowing before the awful Power which taught us—as it is well, perhaps, we should sometimes learn the lesson—how weak and frail we are in the presence of infinity. The following narrative, compiled from the voluminous reports of the daily journals, will give a faint idea of the dreadful visitation:

The storm started at about Sunday midnight. A gentle rain had been plashing on the pavements for several hours. Gradually it turned into a wet snow, and the gutters ran slush. The wind began to rise, and the thermometer fell rapidly. Suddenly the whole city seemed to tremble as the storm swept down upon it. Signboards were torn from the fronts of buildings, roofs were stripped, windows blown out, wagons overturned, and street-cars halted. When day broke the city presented an amazing appearance. Through the wild clouds of snow that were driven along the streets, could be seen loaded wagons given up by their drivers. At every turn could be seen these Deserted Vehicles.

Their owners had fled for their lives, apparently regardless of what became of the property. Butchers' wagons piled high with meat, milk trucks crowded with cans, grocers' wagons, coal carts, street-cars, were scattered in the mountains of snow in all directions. There were thousands upon thousands of these abandoned wagons and carts, some overturned, some lying across the street, some half buried in the drifts. Here and there they formed enormous barricades, which caught the snow and rolled it up in solid barriers.

Long before daylight the horse-car lines gave up all attempts to carry passengers. The multitudes trudged through the storm to and crowded every train. Even these trains were few and far between. The snow and wind made it almost impossible to work the switches, and the brakes were rendered useless. Finally the whole Elevated railway system came to a dead standstill. Then ensued scenes of excitement and suffering. There was a solid blockade of trains on the Sixth Avenue road, from Fourth Street to Twenty-eighth Street. The passengers were half frozen. They could not reach the stations except by walking along the narrow edge of the tracks, which was frightfully dangerous in such a high wind. Many of the men took off their overcoats to shelter the half perished women, while others went to the car platforms and called upon persons in the street below to bring ladders, offering sums of five dollars to any man who would bring one in five minutes. Ladders were soon brought, and train after train was emptied by that means.

So terrible did the storm become that men lost their way in the streets. The heavens darkened, and a great roaring sound came from the thundering clouds.

As the afternoon wore away men and women were blown flat on the ground or picked up in the air and thrown against buildings. Hundreds of pedestrians were cut and bruised. Many were run over. The very mail wagons had to be abandoned, in spite of the desperate struggles of the horses. They were left in all sections of the city. On Eighth avenue a hearse was deserted by its driver. A broker who had a fortune depending on his getting down-town, offered a cab-driver $500 for his horse, cab, and harness. "No," said the driver, "it ain't mine; but I'll take you down-town for fifty dollars, if ye'll pay in advance." And the broker paid. Many others succeeded in getting short rides of a mile or two for $25.

The storm increased in fury on Monday evening and through the night, and the mercury fell to one degree below zero. All through the wild night and far into the morning, the police were at work saving exhausted pedestrians from

Death in the Snow.

One well-known merchant at daybreak was found dead on Seventh avenue. Another man's rigid corpse was picked up in Central Park. An unfortunate woman was frozen to death in a hallway. Two other corpses were found not far off. Men were picked up senseless in all directions.

All the electric lights were out, and no attempt to light the gas lamps was made. Drunken men and women who were simply tired by long and severe struggles in the drifts were stumbled over in every neighborhood. The ambulances were overturned again and again, although some of them had extra horses attached by ropes to the shafts. A ghastly procession of wounded men and women began to file into the wards of the hospitals. Broken skulls, fractured arms, thighs and legs, frozen hands and feet—these were the things that kept the whole corps of every hospital up all night. Men were found bareheaded and insane in the tempest.

All telephone and telegraphic communication was suspended. Outside the city the wires were all down. The only telegraphic system in operation was the cable under the Atlantic, and messages were actually sent over that route to Boston, Mass., each message travelling six thousand miles.

Brooklyn was in a frightful plight, being completely cut off from New York. There was an effort made to run cars on the big Bridge, but one train was derailed on the west side, and further work in that direction was given up. To walk across the bare and unsheltered promenade in the storm that shrieked through the ponderous steel rigging meant suffering, and perhaps death. Many persons succeeded in walking across the river on a huge ice floe which became jammed in the river against the piers. There were several narrow escapes of passengers by that route, for the floe broke up and the pieces drifted down to the bay with their living freight, and but for the swift steam-tugs which followed the pieces many lives would have been lost.

The Buried Trains

on the trunk lines were an appalling feature of the storm, the results of which are not revealed at the time of writing. No less than seventy-five trains were snow-bound within a circle of fifty miles from the city. How the passengers, especially the women and children, must have suffered from hunger and cold may be imagined. The great trunk lines were all buried. Now and then some pale and half dead wanderer struggled into the mountainous outskirts and told dreadful stories of whole train-loads of passengers imprisoned in the snow, without food or the slighest means of escape. Rescue parties in sleighs were sent out in all directions to relieve the snow-bound unfortunates. The railway companies battled heroically with the snow, in their efforts to push through their trains. Here and there engines were chained together and hurled against the drifts at full speed. The New York Central company upset one of its heaviest locomotives while trying to butt a hole through the snow packed in the Fourth avenue tunnel. How many have died in the drifts while trying to reach help from these blocked trains will not be known for days.

A SWISS PREACHER'S LOST TEXT.

A REMARKABLE occurrence, illustrating the providential dealings of God in preparing a message for a soul in need, is described in a narrative translated from the German by Rev. S. F. Smith, D. D., and published in the Watchword. It refers to an experience in the life of a clergyman at Basle, in Switzerland, who had preached the gospel for many years.

One Sabbath he went as usual to the house of God, and on the way prayed earnestly that the word that day might be blessed to the salvation of at least one soul. He took his place in the pulpit, and during the singing opened the great Bible, and sought for the passage which he had selected for the theme of his discourse. But he was utterly unable to recall his text. He turned the leaves hither and thither again and again, but all to no purpose. But what seemed to him very remarkable, every time he turned over the pages of the Bible, his eye fell upon the words, "The Son of Man is come to seek and to save that which was lost."

His anxiety increased. The singing was ended; still his text did not come back to him, nor the plan of the sermon which he had prepared. Then came the prayer; the reader can imagine with what a troubled heart he approached the throne of grace. In his secret soul he cried out to God, "O Lord, help!" He opened the Bible again, and again his eye fell on the passage, "The Son of Man is come to seek and to save that which was lost." He took courage, read the passage aloud, and preached a very impressive sermon.

Returning to his home, he thought over the singular occurrence, and was unable to see why God had thus dealt with him. Several days passed, and he did not hear that the sermon had produced any effect. On Thursday morning he was sitting at work in his study. A knock was heard at his door, and an unknown man entered, with tears in his eyes. "Sir," said he, "I can no longer forbear to thank you for saving my life."

The pastor, unable to understand what he meant, begged him to sit down and tell him his story, when he related the following:

"For several months past I have been the most wretched man in the world. I am very poor, and have a numerous family, and in order to feed them I have been obliged to run in debt. My debts I could not pay, and my creditors were unwilling to wait any longer. I had reached the last point of necessity. Finding no comfort I was often tempted to drown my senses in strong drink, and thus for a few hours to forget my trouble. At last I resolved to hang myself, and last Sabbath was the day I had appointed. I put a rope in my pocket, and started for the woods not far away. As I passed by the church the bell was ringing, and the door stood open. A death-like solemnity seized me. I tried to go forward, but the bell would not let me. The more I tried, the louder the bell sounded in my ears. Then the thought came to me, 'Perhaps it can do you no harm to step into the church before you take your own life, and take along with you a good word.' So I turned and went into the church.

"As soon as the singing was ended, you, sir, read the text, 'The Son of Man is come to seek and to save that which was lost.' Then it seemed as if a haze came before my eyes. I began to shake and tremble, and said to myself, 'I am one of the lost, and there is no salvation for me, neither here nor there.' But when you told of the Lord Jesus Christ, and how He graciously seeks for the lost, hope sprang even in my heart, and the longer you spoke the more I was sure that He could and would save me. When you said, 'Amen,' I was so full of joy that I returned home gladly, threw the rope into the fire, fell upon my knees, and gave my heart forever to the Lord Jesus. So you see by the grace of God you have saved my body and soul."

The venerable minister heard the narration with deep emotion, and then said, "So God makes even church bells His messengers and servants, to seek and to save the lost."

Then the two fell upon their knees together and gave thanks to God.

THE WONDERFUL BIRTHDAY OF 144,000 TRANSLATED ONES ON THURSDAY, MARCH 5, 1896.

By the Rev. M. Baxter.*

NEVER in the history of this world, since the Creation until the present month of March, 1888, has it been known or recognized that the fifth day of March is destined to be a momentous anniversary-day, ranking in importance next to Christmas Day or Good Friday, because, as the latter were respectively the Birthday and Crucifixion Day of Christ at His First Advent, so the fifth day of March, 1896, is foreshown by Daniel's Prophecies to be the day of Christ's Second Advent, and, consequently, the Birthday of the Manchild in Revelation 12:5—in other words, the formation and ascension of the Corporate body of the 144,000 watchful Christians to whom the Sun-clothed Woman (the Christian Church militant) is to give birth at Christ's Second Advent "in the air" at the distance of Sixty-nine Weeks of Literal Days after a future command to rebuild Jerusalem, as predicted in Daniel 9:25.

Now, as these Sixty-nine Weeks are stated by Gabriel in Daniel 9:24 (as learned expositors agree) to be "determined" or "divided off" from the commencing portion of the total period of 2,345 days, mentioned in the vision of Daniel 8:14, as 2,300 days, with 45 days afterwards added to it in Daniel 12:11, 12 (the excess of the 1,335 days beyond the 1,290 days)—therefore the Sixty-nine Weeks must begin at the same time as the 2,345 days, of which they are in fact the commencing section. And as the 2,345 days begin on November 8, 1894. inasmuch as they have to terminate with the End of this Age on April 11, 1901, therefore the Sixty-nine Weeks beginning simultaneously on November 8, 1894, will end on March 5, 1896.

The reason why April 11, 1901, is the End of this Age, as above stated, is because April 11, 1901, being is exactly 45 years distant from the last day of Passover Week in 1856, on which day the Crimean War Treaty of Peace was signed, which "cleansed the sanctuary" of the Holy Land from Turkish Mohammedan persecution at the end of the 2,300 days in their year-day fulfilment as 2,300 years (Daniel 8:14): and also because April 11, 1901, is exactly 2,345 years distant from the last day of Passover Week in Nisan B. C. 444-5, on which day King Artaxerxes in the 20th year of his reign gave "the Command to Nehemiah to rebuild Jerusalem" in the 2d chapter of Nehemiah, exactly Sixty-nine Weeks of years before Messiah, the Prince, being made a Covenant at His Crucifixion in Passover Week A. D. 39.

There are Sixty-nine Weeks of years from Artaxerxes' "Command to rebuild Jerusalem" B. C. 444-5 up to the Crucifixion at Messiah's First Advent in A. D. 39, and there will be Sixty-nine Weeks of days from a future "Command to rebuild Jerusalem" on November 8, 1894, up to March 5, 1896, when Messiah the Prince will be "made a Covenant" to His waiting and watching people at his Second Advent. Thus will be fulfilled both in year-days and in literal days. "From the going forth of the commandment to restore and build Jerusalem unto Messiah the Prince shall be seven weeks and threescore and two weeks, and after threescore and two weeks, shall Messiah be made a Covenant."

The writer of these remarks did not discover until March or April 1887 that the day of the signing of the Crimean War Treaty of Peace in April, 1856, which ended the 2,300 years, and commenced the remaining supplementary 45 years, was the Last Day of Passover Week according to the Jewish Calendar, and it is this discovery which enables us to be certain that the 45 years, starting on the Last Day of Passover Week in April, 1856, must necessarily end on the Last Day of Passover Week in April, 1901, which, according to Lindo's Jewish Calendar for 1901, will be April 11, 1901.

Previous to this discovery the writer had rested satisfied with the general fact that the 2,300 years ended with the Treaty of Peace which closed the Crimean War, without thinking of ascertaining what exact day it was in the spring of 1856, or what that day was according to the Jewish Calendar in reference to Passover Week. But it is evident that having ended with the Crucifixion of Christ in Passover Week in A. D. 39, must have begun in Passover Week, B. C., 444–5, therefore the 2,300 years, which began at the same time as the Sixty-nine Weeks of years, or 483 years, must likewise have begun in Passover Week B. C. 444–5, and consequently must have ended in Passover Week A. D. 1856, and so indeed they did at the signing of the Crimean War Treaty of Peace, in Passover Week, April, 1856.

The writer of these remarks had not fully discovered all these particulars by March 5, 1887, and therefore did not then know that the Second Coming of Messiah the Prince, according to Daniel 9:25, would be on March 5, 1896. Hence March 5, 1888, is the first periodical annual recurrence of the 5th day of March in the history of the human race in which any mortal man knows and recognizes it as the prospective anniversary day of the Second Advent of Christ. This knowledge now enables us to regard it with solemn reverence scarcely inferior to that with which we regard Christmas Day, or Good Friday, or Easter Day, because this fifth day of March will be the day in 1896 on which millions of deceased saints will arise from their graves, and 144,000 living, watchful Christians will be translated without dying to meet Christ in the air along with those resurrected saints.

We therefore begin this year to observe and commemorate every one of the eight remaining fifth days of March in 1888, 1889, 1890, 1891. 1892, 1893, 1894, 1895, with reverence and holy joy, as being the anticipative anniversary of Christ's Second Advent (in its earlier stage) and of the Resurrection and Translation of Christians on March 5, 1896.

Thus four days from the date of the present number of the Prophetic News (March 1) will be the antecedent anniversary of the GLORIOUS BIRTHDAY of 144,000 living Christians, on March 5, 1896, because on that day THE MANCHILD WILL BE BORN; on that eventful Day of days the Sun-clothed, Star-crowned Woman, representing the Living Christian Church militant on earth, will give birth to the Manchild (the chosen body of 144,000 Wise Virgins or Watchful Christians) who will forthwith be caught up to God and to His throne at the first Stage of Christ's Advent "in the air," as described in Rev. 12: 5, 14; 1: 5; 1 Thess. 4: 16, 17.

Each of those 144,000 will enjoy the peculiar prerogative of having THREE BIRTHDAYS—a peculiarity which will not attach to any other of the human race. Each of them will have been (1) born at their natural birth; (2) born again at their spiritul conversion, concerning which Christ said, "Except a man be born again he cannot enter the kingdom of God" (John 3); (3) born a third time when, at their translation at Christ's Advent, they become part of the Manchild, i. e., one of the corporate body of to whom the Woman, the Christian Church on earth, is then to GIVE BIRTH. Perhaps scarcely any two of those 144,000 will have (1) the same natural or (2) the same spiritual birthday, but all of them will have the SAME TRANSLATION BIRTHDAY.

The Sun-clothed Woman will be delivered of the Manchild suddenly and instantaneously, so that all the 144,000 will be caught up alive to heaven at almost one and the same minute at Christ's Advent in the air. "The trumpet shall sound, and the holy dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed" (1 Cor. 15. 51-2; 1 Thess. 4: 16). The Natal Day upon which this sublime and astounding TRANSLATION BIRTH will take place is clearly and conclusively foreshown by Daniel's Date to be and the HOUR is also foreshown to be about the Ninth Hour—the Hour of the daily Evening Sacrifice—about three o'clock in the afternoon in Jerusalem—the same hour in which "Christ our Passover was sacrificed for us," and gave up the ghost.

In the Prophetic News for last month (February) a page was given showing the different times of the nations that correspond with 3 P. M. in Jerusalem. In London it is 38 minutes past 12 o'clock noonday, and in New York 43 minutes past 7 o'clock in the morning.

About nine years ago, in 1879, the writer published in the Prophetic News, the great fundamental truth that there will be, according to the three passages in Daniel 8; 14; 9: 25; 12: 11-12, exactly 1,862 DAYS from the First Stage of Christ's future Advent in the air to its Second Stage at His descent on the earth upon the Mount of Olives.

Many expositors had long ago pointed out that the First Stage, when the Wise Virgins, who are ready, shall be caught up into the air without dying to meet Christ (as described in 1 Thess. 4: 16, 17; Rev. 12: 5; 14: 1-5), must be BEFORE the three and a half years of Antichrist's reign and persecution, and that the Second Stage is AFTER that three and a half years when Christ destroys Antichrist at the Battle of Armageddon, near Mount Olivet, as described in Zechariah 14, Ezekiel 39, Rev. 19.

But no expositor ever advanced beyond the general fact that at least three and a half years will intervene between of Christ's Second Advent, until the writer showed in his prophetic books, published in 1862-63, that the First Stage of Christ's Advent in the air to raise the deceased saints and translate 144,000 watchful Christians (1 Thess. 4: 16, 17; Rev. 12: 5; 14: 1-5) will be about FIVE YEARS before His descent on this earth at Mount Olivet at the battle of Armageddon.

One clear proof of this is that as the Manchild in Rev. 12: 5 (Christ Personal at His Ascension) was caught up to God's throne in A. D. 39, at the distance of 1862 years before the future End of this Age in 1901, so the Manchild (Christ Mystical—the corporate body of 144,000 living Christians) will be caught up to God's throne 1,862 days before the End of this Age on April 11, 1901. And March 5, 1896, will be exactly 1,862 days previous to April 11, 1901.

During the future Millennium of 1,000 years generations yet unborn will observe March 5 as a sacred holiday, and as the anniversary of the Second Advent of Christ and of the Translation of the 144,000, with a solemnity and rejoicing scarcely less than that with which they will observe and commemorate Christmas Day or Good Friday or Easter Day.

CURRENT EVENTS.

Mr. Randall's Tax and Tariff Reduction Bill, expected for some time, has at last been introduced in the House of Representatives. The estimated reductions under it will be $70,000,000 on internal revenue taxation and $25,000,000 on customs duties. The principle applied to the reduction of the tariff in this bill is stated to be the difference in cost of producing commodities in this and other countries where there are no climatic or other natural causes why they cannot be produced abundantly in this country. Mr. Randall does not propose, as it was expected he would, to abolish the whole Internal Revenue system. He limits himself to the repeal of the taxes on tobacco, fruit, brandy and weiss beer, and the reduction of the whisky tax from ninety to fifty cents a gallon. He also proposes to abolish dealers'. licenses, wholesale as well as retail. It is difficult to see how Republicans can consistently support Mr. Randall's bill though they would undoubtedly prefer it to that of Mr. Mills. Practically, however, Mr. Randall's bill is an admission of the principle on which Mr. Mills bases his measure, though Mr. Randall is far more conservative than his colleague from Texas.

The Admission of Utah as a State was Formally proposed in a bill introduced in the Senate on March 15 by Senator Butler. It provides for the election of a Constitutional Convention in August next to meet in December. If after organization the Convention shall adopt the constitution of the United States, they shall have the right to frame a State Constitution, which shall contain among other things an irrevocable ordinance providing that perfect toleration of religious sentiments shall be secured, and that no inhabitant of the State shall ever be molested in person or property on account of his mode of religious worship. If the constitution formed by this Convention shall be ratified by the people of the Territory, the President is required to issue a proclamation admitting the State into the Union. So clear and emphatic have been the warnings given to Congress against the admission of Utah that it may be hoped this bill will be rejected. Self-government once conceded to her, Congress would have no further power to prevent the continuance and legalization of polygamy.

The Approaching Meeting in Washington of the International Council of Women is arousing considerable interest in the Capital. The Council is called to celebrate the fortieth anniversary of the first public demand made for "women's rights," which was done in a convention held at Seneca Falls, N. Y., in 1848. Among the associations that will be represented are the following: American Woman Suffrage Association, National Temperance Hospital and Medical College Association, Knights of Labor Association for the Advancement of Women, Sorosis National Moral Education Society, Ladies of the Grand Army of the Republic, Women's National Indian Association, National Women's Christian Temperance Union, Women's State Fair Association, Indiana; Women's Centenary Association, and the Women's Baptist Missionary Society. Delegates will also attend from various foreign and international societies, among which are: The Red Cross Society, Edinburgh National Society for Women's Suffrage, Danish Women's Society, Finnish Women's Association, Norwegian Woman Suffrage Association, World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and several Women's Liberal Associations in England. Pundita Romabai will describe the condition of her sex in India, and an intelligent Chinese lady will speak of the women of China.

A New Treaty With China has been Negotiated with the object of settling the vexed immigration question. Its provisions, as published in the daily journals, indicate that China is ready to co-operate with the United States in stopping the migration of Chinamen to this country, and has already prohibited their embarkation from ports under the control of the Chinese government, It appears, however, that the bulk of immigrants come through Hong Kong, which, being under English control, is beyond the jurisdiction of the Chinese Government. The new treaty guarantees to the Chinese now in this country the rights and privileges which treaties, laws, and customs give to all foreigners, except to become citizens by naturalization. As to those Chinese now in this country who desire to go to China, and later return to the United States, the Chinese Government agrees, in the new treaty, that this reentry shall be limited to such of them as can, before their departure from the United States, legally establish the fact that they leave in the country a wife, child, or parent, and that they possess here $1,000 worth of property. But the leave to return with this condition must be used within a year from their departure. The treaty, if ratified by the Senate, will give to our Government all the power to regulate Chinese immigration which China can concede.

The Gigantic Strike of Miners in the Lehigh region of Pennsylvania, is now practically ended. At a meeting of District Assembly 87, at Hazleton, last week, it was "declared off." It is reported that this action was the only course left to pursue, for the men, finding themselves and their children on the verge of actual death from starvation, were going back to work in large numbers. It is six months ago since the strike was inaugurated. And the suffering and want which have reigned in the region since then have been beyond power of words to describe. The men stood out firmly as long as possible, but they had reached the extremity when it was either to work or die of starvation and exposure. They went back to work at the scale of wages which ruled before the strike.

The Remarkable Feature of the Storm which visited the Middle Atlantic States on March 12, and whose greatest fury was spent in New York and the Hudson Valley, on Long Island, in Connecticut, New Jersey and part of Pennsylvania, was the combination of high winds and heavy snow. Continually for thirty-six hours it blew a gale of blizzardous proportions. The snow-fall was exceptionally heavy, and the high wind drifted the snow so badly, in the cities and in the open country, that for once the wheels of commerce were effectually clogged and the great American metropolis was isolated from the country. There were no trains arriving or departing; no mails; no telegraphic intercourse. After two days of untold hardships the snow embargo was partially raised by herculean efforts on the part of the authorities and private corporations and citizens, and the busy world began to assume its wonted aspect. The more prominent features of the visitation are described on page 182 of this issue. Serious disasters on the Middle Atlantic coast followed in the wake of the blizzard. The lives lost in shipwrecks at the Delaware Breakwater number thirty. A New York pilot-boat, the W. H. Starbuck No. 6," is believed to have gone to the bottom of the sea with six souls on board, shortly after colliding with a British steamship, the Japanese 25 miles southeast of Barnegat and 95 miles from Sandy Hook during the gale. Grave fears are entertained for the safety of twelve other New York and Sandy Hook pilot-boats which were out in the terrible storm and have not yet been heard from. Each boat has on board, on an average, eight persons.

The Remains of the German Kaiser, While lying in state in the Berlin Cathedral, were viewed by upwards of 300,000 people, belonging to all classes of society. At the funeral on March 16, there was a gigantic military display as well as an unprecedented collection of royalties, and there was no lack of visible signs of grief. On the line of the funeral procession cenotaphs and obelisks were erected at distances of twenty-five feet. The Emperor Frederick was not able to take part in the funeral ceremony. He surveyed the procession from a window of the palace as it passed. The solemn funeral service was held in the Cathedral at noon, when the dead Emperor's grandson, as chief mourner, walked up the nave and took his place at the head of the coffin. Alongside of him were the King of Saxony, the King of Belgium, and the King of Roumania. Close by stood the Grand Duke of Baden, Princes Albrecht and Henry and other princes of the royal house of Prussia, the Prince Imperial of Austria, the Prince Imperial of Russia, the Grand Dukes Michael and Nicholas of Russia, the Prince of Wales, the Crown Prince of Italy, the Crown Prince of Denmark and the Crown Prince of Greece, all in the uniform of their respective countries. The princes of Bavaria, the Grand Duke of Hesse, and other notables and foreign representatives, including General Billot, of France, and his suite, formed the next rows in the nave. A sermon was preached by Dr. Koegel, the Court chaplain, and the choir sang music selected by the aged Kaiser for the occasion shortly before his death. The coffin was then taken up and carried by twelve stalwart officers to the hearse, and, followed by the procession of illustrious personages, was taken to the mausoleum prepared for it at Charlottenburg.

General Boulanger has been Deprived of his present command for breach of discipline, and a decree to that effect has been approved by President Carnot. The official journal states that General Boulanger came to Paris on February 24, again on March 2, and again on March 10, without permission from the War Office. The last two times, it says, he was in disguise wearing dark spectacles and affecting lameness. The paper dwells on the serious nature of such breaches of discipline by a general officer. It is the popular opinion, however, that the conduct of the Government is prompted by jealousy and spite, and several demonstrations have taken place which show a dangerous tendency on the part of the rougher classes to support the General by force if necessary.

The Wedding of Prince Oscar of Sweden and Miss Ebba Munck (whose portraits were published in this journal on March 8) took place at Bournemouth, England, on the 15th inst. The Queen of Sweden, Princess Carl and Eugene of Sweden, the Crown Princes of Denmark, and the Duchess of Albany were present. Pastor Bestrow, of Stockholm performed the marriage ceremony. The wedding was solemnized with the Swedish Lutheran service in an English Episcopal chapel, and has called forth protests from some of the high church clergymen. Prince Oscar, who, now that he has resigned his royal privileges and station, to marry the woman of his choice, is known as Prince Bernadotte, came to the wedding in the uniform of a Commander in the Swedish Navy. The marriage service was essentially like the English Protestant service. When it came to the ring, both held it, he in the right hand, she in the left, while they repeated the promises usual in such cases. The happy couple went to the Isle of Wight for the honeymoon.

A Terrible Calamity is Reported From Dakota. The Methodist Episcopal University at the town of Mitchell, has been destroyed by fire, and professors, students, and servants had to make their escape from the upper windows of the doomed building. One of the students was so seriously injured that he died within two hours; three others, among them Professor O. H. Taylor, sustained such severe injuries that they were not expected to live; and eight more are badly injured. Fortunately a snow-drift broke the force of the fall of some of the inmates, otherwise the calamity would have been still greater. One of the professors, Mr. Duncan, had a miraculous escape. He was driven to the roof by the flames. There was a deep snow on the roof, and it was bitter cold. He had secured a clothes-line, and fastening this to the waterspout he slid down through the flames. Both of his feet were frozen and he was scorched in the descent.

An Annuitant in Illinois has Recovered his lost health through his financial arrangement. Some time ago a citizen possessed of a small property lost his wife, and after her death fell into a condition of melancholia. He was still further depressed by money losses, as in his depressed condition he was imposed upon in business by unprincipled men. The attention of the county attorney was called to the case, and the man was taken care of. Finally he executed a deed transferring his property to the county, in return for which the county officers undertook to provide for him for life. He appeared to feel relief when the arrangement was complete, and since then has gradually recovered his health and spirits. He is relieved from all apprehension as to old age or sickness, having confidence in the integrity and capacity of the county to provide for his future. It may be hoped that he is equally at rest about his safety after the county has completed its contract by burying him. He will be still more dependent then, but if recognizing his helplessness in spiritual as he did in temporal matters, he has trusted his all with Jesus, he is safe. (II. Tim. 1 : 12.)

A Valetudinarian's Methodical Life is Described in the obituary column of a Boston journal. It states that a merchant of that city, who has died at the age of eighty-one, devoted the bulk of his life from his youth to the care of his health. He made that subject his continual study, and he devoted himself to it with a wonderful assiduity. He rode just so far each day, when the weather was fair, and at such an hour. He had a great variety of clothing, which he regulated with precision by the thermometer, sometimes changing his dress many times in a day, and selected for his overclothes when he rode out the very garments which the mercury indicated. He had a weathercock put upon his stable, within fair view from his bedroom and sitting-room: and that and his thermometer, and all possible signs of the weather, he was watching constantly, and found in these occupations an absorbing way of employing all his time. It is possible that his life may have been prolonged a few years by all this thought and care; but it is marvellous that any man conscious of possessing an immortal soul should have negiected its interests to give his supreme attention to his body, which must eventually die in spite of all his care. (Mat. 6 : 25.)

A Man Who Stole a Saw Mill has Astonished Baltimore, Md., by his audacity. A press despatch from that city states that in East Baltimore was an unused saw-mill belonging to a judge. The chief value of the mill consisted in the machinery, the building not being worth much. On March 5 a handsome, well-dressed stranger arrived, and examined the mill and the surrounding premises. He then summoned a man who does hauling, and informed him that he had decided to dispose of the machinery and "the old shanty," and wanted it removed at once. The man hired extra help and another dray and had the machinery packed the same afternoon, while the handsome stranger went to the junk dealers to arrange for a sale. Eventually he found a purchaser, and the machinery was carted to his place, and seven hundred dollars was handed over as purchase money. The stranger put the money in his pocket, and invited the carter to come to his hotel after the machinery was unloaded, dine with him, and receive the pay for his work. The carter, however, was unable to find the stranger at the time named, and the police, who were put on his tracked, have been similarly unsuccessful. The judge who owned the mill was presiding in the City Court when the theft took place, and when informed of his loss, was so amazed at the audacity of the thief that he burst into laughter. In a day when even property so cumbrous as the machinery of a mill is not safe from thieves, there can be no excuse for forgetting the injunction of the Saviour. (Matt. 6 : 19, 20.)

A Man Lost in Central Park, New York, Tells a thrilling story of his experience. He started on March 12 about noon, as usual, from his home in the up-town district to report at the Telegraph Headquarters where he was employed as an operator. He took his usual route across the corner of the Park at Seventy-third Street. The snow was deep, but he was wrapped up well, and did not mind the cold. He continued walking for nearly an hour, and began to wonder how it was he had not reached the east side of the Park, when he noticed that the location was unfamiliar to him. The snow was so deep that he frequently got in up to his waist, and his fingers began to show signs of frostbite. "Then," said he, "I got thoroughly frightened, and wandered about, floundering, rolling, and tumbling, rubbing my frozen fingers and ears till I was almost crazy. Not a familiar object in sight—nothing but snow, snow, snow! Oh! it was awful, I thought my time had come. When almost exhausted I stumbled up against a signboard. With my benumbed fingers I scraped the snow off and managed to read the directions to the nearest exit. At last —it seemed ages to me—I reached Fifth Avenue and fell on the sidewalk exhausted. I don't remember much more, except that I reached the office somehow, and they thawed me out. To a man in such peril the directions on the signboard were sufficient; he did not need that any one should urge him to follow them. Sinners in danger of perishing are not so wise. Not only do they ignore the directions to safety, but they are deaf to warnings and entreaties. (II Chron. 36 : 16)

Minute Mineral Missiles are Harassing Pedestrians on the avenues of New York which are used by the Elevated roads. Druggists and surgeons are visited by increasing numbers of persons who want some foreign object removed from the eye. Frequently the aid of experienced oculists is required before the painful intruder is extracted and the irritation and inflammation allayed. A member of the staff of a scientific and medical journal has been investigating the cause of this sudden increase in ocular affections. He was seen recently flourishing a large magnet about as he walked on the sidewalk, near the Elevated track. Being asked what he was doing, he explained that he was testing the floating matter in the air. He hung the magnet under the track of the elevated road, and when a few minutes later he took it down, it was coated with minute particles of iron dust. This dust, he believes to be the cause of the eye troubles. The swift passing trains grind off showers of iron particles, which often fall or are blown into the eyes of pedestrians. The microscope shows that the particles have jagged fringes, and many of them have barbs like a fish hook. When lodged in the eye they cause irritation, which is increased by rubbing, and they may lead to permanent injury if not removed by a skilled oculist. This adds another element of danger to life in the city. We have been told that germs of diphtheria, fevers, small-pox and other diseases float in the air; it appears now that our eyes are also threatened with flying darts. All these, however, are less to be dreaded, and do less harm, than the moral evil of the tainted atmosphere of vicious resorts, into which young men go voluntarily to see life. (Prov. 4 : 14, 15.)

The Kindness of a Farmer's Daughter in New Jersey promises to have a romantic issue. A despatch from New Brunswick, dated March 14, states that a farm-hand, employed on a farm four miles out of that city, has fallen heir to a large property in Scotland. Last October he was tramping through the State, in search of work. He was so utterly wearied and exhausted when he reached the farm where he now is, that he was in despair. Having applied for work, and being refused as usual, the tramp muttered, as he left the premises, "If I cannot get shelter to-night, I will kill myself." The words were overheard by the farmer's daughter, who interceded for the tramp, and induced her father to employ him. The man turned out well, and was evidently well educated and intelligent. He said that he belonged to a wealthy Scotch family, but had forfeited his claims on them. He fell in love with his employer's daughter, to whom he owed his engagement, and she reciprocated his affection. He was led to inform his family of his reformed habits and his changed prospects. In reply, he was notified that he and his brothers were joint heirs of a large estate, and that his share will be remitted to him. When the money arrives it is to be invested in the purchase of a farm, and he and the farmer's daughter are to marry and settle there. That the tramp should have turned out to be an heir, is a surprise to all, including his affianced wife. A similar surprise awaits the world when it is found that men and women whom it has despised, are heirs of God and joint heirs with Christ. (Matt. 25 : 37, 40.

BRIEF NOTES.

Revival services in the Methodist churches at St. John, N. B., have resulted in nearly 400 conversions.

The issue of a new version of the Bible in Spanish is projected. It is proposed to form a committee from the various missionary societies in Mexico to co-operate with the American Bible Society in preparing the book.

At the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church to be held in May next in New York, delegates are expected from Germany, Italy, Sweden, India, China, Japan, and Africa.

Mr. D. L. Moody will, it is expected, take a brief period of rest at Northfield, at the conclusion of his work in Iowa, having decided to postpone the campaign on the Pacific coast to another year.

An effort is being made to gain the consent of the trustees of Columbia College to a scheme for founding an annex for women, affiliated to the college as Girton is to Cambridge in England.

An address exposing the errors of Evolution will be delivered by Mrs. Viola Gilbert, on Sunday next (March 25) at three o'clock in meeting room No. 24, of Cooper Union, New York.

A third foreign missionary is being supported this year by the students of Presbyterian College, Montreal. He is at Santo; the other two are respectively at Erromanga and Epate in the New Hebrides.

The Providence, R. I., Young Men's Christian Association has succeeded in raising funds for a handsome and commodious building, the erection of which will now be commenced.

The American Baptist Home Missionary Society is entitled, under a recent decision of Judge Haskell concerning the will of the late Governor Coburn, of Maine, to a legacy of $250,000, of which $150,000 is to be held in trust for the support of schools among the freedmen.

The evangelistic Services in Cooper Union, conducted by Mr. Charles Herald, are growing in interest and usefulness. The audiences gathered there are mainly of non-churchgoers. The inquiry-room on several Sunday nights recently has been thronged with anxious persons.

Rev. Thomas Harrison is now conducting revival services at the Central Methodist Church, Seventh Avenue and Fourteenth Street, New York. Over eight hundred persons made a profession of faith at the services which he held in the Jane Street church.

The State Convention of Colored Baptists in Tennessee has passed a resolution excluding from fellowship and from the pulpits of the State any minister who "fought Prohibition" in the recent campaign.

The ceremony of burning a $50,000 mortgage was recently witnessed by a large congregation in Bethany Presbyterian church, Philadelphia. The document having been redeemed, was brought into the church on a large tin waiter, a lighted match was applied to it, and it was soon reduced to ashes.

HALF-WAY AND ALL THE WAY.

A New Sermon by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

"And Terah took Abram his son, and Lot the son of Haran, his son's son, and Sarai his daughter-in-law, his son Abram's wife; and they went forth with them from Ur of the Chaldees, to go into the land of Canaan; and they came unto Haran, and dwelt there." Genesis 11: 31.

"And Abram took Sarai his wife, and Lot his brother's son, and all their substance that they had gathered, and the souls that they had gotten in Haran; and they went forth to go into the land of Canaan; and into the land of Canaan they came." Genesis 12: 5.

AFTER the flood, when men began to multiply and increase in the earth, it was not very long before they began to turn aside from the living and true God. At first, the sons of Noah walked in the light of divine knowledge, though even among them was found an evil seed. When scattered over the earth after the confusion of tongues at Babel, the earth's hoar fathers carried with them a measure of the knowledge of God which they had received from their sires; but after a while, the light grew dim, men began to worship the sun and the moon, and they adored fire as the mystic symbol of the mysterious and spiritual Lord. They sought out many inventions; and having once begun to quit their allegiance to the one God, they very rapidly travelled along the down-grade till they worshipped strange gods.

A long period passed without a voice from God. Man seemed left to himself, and in danger of being given up to idols. The nations wandered each a different way, but all the downward road. Yet grace had not ended its reign; and therefore, before the lamp of God had wholly gone out, the Lord determined to reveal Himself, and establish His worship in the world.

He Would Select a Family to be His peculiar servants; He would manifest Himself to the father of that family, and would make with him a covenant. He would reveal to him the great things which He intended to do in the fullness of time, and He would bid Him hand down the revelation to His children from generation to generation. This family should grow into a nation, and to that nation should be committed the oracles of God. Out of that nation should come prophets and priests and heroes, who should believe in God and maintain the true faith against all comers, even until the Son of God Himself should come to manifest the glory of God.

In the wise sovereignty of His choice, the Lord chose Abram and his house. It was needful that the elect family should be led apart and from Ur of the Chaldees, and all its associations of idolatry, and he must even leave his kindred and his father's house, and walk before the Lord in separation unto prompt obedience and complete consecration. Thus in his separation unto God would be fulfilled the gracious purpose of the Most High. The Lord's end and aim was to keep His truth alive in the world by means of a people who should be set apart for that service; and it was therefore essential that the person chosen to be the head of that family, the founder of that nation, should come right away from all connection with the corrupt world, and walk apart with God.

At this moment God is working in much the same manner in the midst of the world by His Church. A Church is an assembly called out. An ecclesia is not any and every "assembly:" a mixed crowd of unauthorized persons, having no special right to come together, would not be an ecclesia, or Church. The true Church consists of men who are called and faithful and chosen. They are redeemed from among men, and called out from among their fellows by effectual grace. God the Holy Spirit continues to call out, and bring to the Lord Jesus those who are chosen of God according to the good pleasure of His will. Practically, conversion is the result of the call, "Get thee out from thy country." It is a repetition of that searching word, "Come ye out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing." The Church is a repetition of the camp of Abram in the midst of Canaan. It is the Lord's portion among men, and it keeps His oracles.

In gathering instruction from the call and outcoming of Abram, I shall handle the matter by making three remarks. First, this call is often only half obeyed. In our first text we find the command of God very partially carried out. Secondly, this call is of a very special character, and I shall endeavor to show the manner in which it comes to us at this time. Thirdly, this call, when it is really obeyed, puts the obedient upon a special footing: they are henceforth peculiarly the Lord's.

I. In the first place, this call is Often Only Half Obeyed.

It came to Abram when he dwelt in Ur of the Chaldees; but though he so far hearkened to it as to set out for Canaan, yet we read that "they came to Haran, and dwelt there." We do not know how the call came to Abram, whether by a voice which he heard with his ears, or by a mysterious impulse upon his mind, or by a dream or vision; but somehow or other, it was laid home to Abram's heart and conscience that he must go forth upon a journey he knew not whither; he must journey into another land, and no more dwell in city or town or village, but become a sojourner with his God, a tent-dweller, a stranger in a strange land.

His first step would naturally be to tell his friends that he must needs leave them, for the living God had called him to go to the land of Canaan. At once his difficulties began. His kindred could not bear to part with him. If they had distinctly opposed him, and said, "It is absurd; your talk is insanity; yet if you must be gone, go your way and welcome;" then he would have gone in sadness, but assuredly he would not have hesitated. A man possessed of Abram's wondrous faith would have torn himself away with great firmness, although with deep regret at the sorrow which he caused. Had they opposed him, his course would have been plain. But he had to meet with a much more Insidious Evil.

Abram's friends consented to his zeal. Whether they agreed in his reverence for Jehovah or not, they felt that they could not cut themselves off from Abram, and therefore they resolved to go with him. The word to Abram was express, "Get thee out from thy kindred, and from thy father's house;" but how was this to be done when his kindred and his father's house clung to him, and yielded to him? Very naturally his loving spirit could see no other way but to bid them all come with him, and yield themselves to God. The father of the clan leads the way, and it is rather his migration than that of Abram. What was Abram to do? Instead of meeting opposition from his family, his own father is leading the way in the journey to Canaan. Did not this make his obedience easier? We shall see. Was not this happy union of the household, this undivided assent to the Lord's bidding, a great cause for rejoicing? It certainly appeared so; but all is not gold that glitters. What we think will help, may at length hinder. What looks like a work of grace, may turn out to be only the movements of unrenewed nature. Like the mixed multitude which came out of Egypt with Israel, we may have about us professed friends who may become our worst foes, in the secret of God's truth and grace.

In Abram's case the dreaded separation is spared: they start together for Canaan. So far, so good; at least, it looks so. The travelling is wearisome, and many are the murmurings. The huge caravan has not gone very far before the proposal is made that they should be satisfied with the move which they had made, and remain at Haran. True, it was not Canaan, but it might do as well. Did not the family reason: "We shall stay here. We have yielded a great many points to Abram in coming away from Ur. But we cannot yield to all his demands. We have proved our love to him and our reverence for the Lord, by coming thus far, and now we ask for a fair compromise. Abram

Must not be Bigoted.

Surely he will not be so foolish as to believe in verbal inspiration, and insist upon Canaan, when Haran quite meets the spirit of the command. There is no doubt that Haran answers every purpose, and we mean to stay here, and Abram must stay with us"? Abram and the rest settled down at Haran. He was conquered, not by open foes, but by compromising friends. My brethren, take ye good heed unto yourselves, that ye suffer not your feet to be entangled by the men of your own household. He that would follow the Lamb whithersoever he goeth, must not know his own kindred when he comes to the parting of the ways.

Let me describe the consequences of tarrying at any half-way house. To obey the Lord partially is to disobey Him. If the Lord bids Abram go to Canaan, he cannot fulfil that command by going to Haran. Haran was not mentioned in the call. You cannot keep God's command by doing something else which pleases you better. The essence of obedience lies in its exactness. Although something else may seem to you to be quite as good as the thing commanded, what has that to do with it? This is what God bids you, and to refuse the thing commanded, professing to substitute a better thing, is gross presumption. You may not think it so, but so it is, that half obedience is whole disobedience. Moreover, increases our responsibility, because it is a plain confession that we know the Lord's will, though we do it not. Abram had received the call, and knew that he had done so, else why had he come to Haran? He admitted, by going as far as Haran, that he ought to go the whole way to Canaan; and so, by his own action he left himself without excuse. Thus, you see, there was failure in obedience, and increase of responsibility. The result of this to Abram was the absence of privilege. God spoke not to His servant in Haran: neither dream nor vision nor voice came to him in the place of hesitancy.

Meanwhile, Abram was rendering an affliction needful. His father Terah must die, that the cord which held Abram might be broken. If the called one will not come out while the old man lives, Death must do his work, and remove the cause of disobedience. If Abram fears to weep at parting with a living father, he must weep over his grave. One way or another the Lord will cause His chosen to obey Him. Oh, that we would be tender of heart, and not be as the horse or as the mule, which have no understanding! Whips and rods would seldom be heard of if we were more promptly obedient.
